It is, too, the emblem of the marriage covenant and conjugal fidelity. So Jesus: "I am married unto you." "Come hither, and let me show you the bride, the Lamb's wife." Look at the ring on her hand.

Let us wear it ever in remembrance of Him.—American Messenger.

"NO TIME."

I once took dinner at the house of a very intelligent man, until that day a stranger to me. He was at home on all subjects of conversation: the news of the day, past and present history, mechanics and recent inventions. I thought as I heard him entertain a company composed of laymen, clergymen and ladies, "how fortunate he is to have received a superior education in early life, and to have leisure to continue his reading and study."

He showed me his new house just built, and seemed especially proud of one room, well lighted, and fitted with tables, books, pictures and easy chairs. "This is my children's study," said he; "here they learn their lessons with no one to disturb them, and they disturb no one. I spare no expense to make it an attractive room, and feel rewarded by their enjoyment of it."

As I looked at the comfortable chairs I remarked, "These seats are very unlike the stools and benches without backs upon which we sat in school."

"Madam, I never went to school a day in my life," was the astonishing reply.

Boys, what do you think of that? I afterward learned that this accomplished, intelligent gentleman, exerting an influence in the city where he lived, whose society was sought by men of culture and renown, was a poor boy who had always worked for his living, and though never in school, had never known a vacation.

I wish some young men I know, who are behind the counter or learning trades, who have said in my hearing, "I am anxious for an education, but have no time," could see the gentleman I have been describing; it might shame them out of their folly. He had no short business hours, evening classes, lectures, or public libraries, or associates to help him. He did not tell me of any cigars, fancy neckties, Police Gazettes, or of kid gloves he bought during the years in which he obtained his education. His mind was upon something better.—American Messenger.

WANTING TO CONFESS.

Not many years ago, as a lady was sitting in the veranda of her Burmese house, a jungle boy came bounding through the opening in the hedge which served as a gateway, and approaching her, inquired with eagerness:

"Does Jesus Christ live here?"

He was a boy about twelve years of age, his hair matted with filth, and bristling in every direction like the quills of a porcupine, and a dirty cloth of plaided cotton disposed in a slovenly manner about his person. "Does Jesus Christ live here?" he asked, as he hastened up the steps of the veranda, and crouched at the lady's feet.

"What do you want of Jesus Christ?" she asked.

"I want to see Him; I want to confess to Him."

"Why, what have you been doing that you want to confess?"

"Does He live here?" he continued, with great emphasis: "I want to know that. Doing? why, I tell lies, I steal, I do everything bad. I am afraid of going to hell, and I want to see Jesus Christ, for I heard one of the Loogyees say that He can save us from hell. Does He live here? O, tell me where I can find Jesus Christ."

"But He does not save people from hell if they continue to do wickedly."

"I want to stop doing wickedly," said the boy; "but I can't stop; I don't know how to stop. The evil thoughts are in me, and the bad deeds come of evil thoughts. What can I do?"

"Nothing but come to Christ, poor boy, like all the rest of us," the lady softly murmured; but she spoke this last in English; so the boy only raised his head with a vacant "Ba ha-lia?"

"You cannot see Jesus Christ now," she added, and was answered by a sharp, quick cry of despair. "But I am His humble friend and follower," said the lady, at which the face of the little listener brightened, and she continued: "He has commissioned me to teach all those who wish to escape from hell how to do so."

The joyful eagerness depicted in the boy's countenance was beyond description. "Tell me, O tell me! Only ask your Master, the Lord Jesus Christ, to save me, and I will be your servant for life! Do not be angry! Do not send me away! I want to be saved! Save me from hell!"

The next day this little boy was introduced to the little bamboo school house in the character of the wild Karen boy; and such a greedy seeker after truth and holiness had been seldom seen. Every day he came to the white teachers to learn something more concerning the Lord Jesus and the way of salvation, and every day his feelings enlarged, and his face gradually lost its look of indescribable stupidity. He was at length baptized, and commemorated the love of that Saviour he had so earnestly sought. He lived awhile to testify his sincerity, and died in joyful hope. He had "confessed;" and had found a deliverer from those sins from which he could not free himself. The lady died also, and she and the wild Karen boy have met in the presence of their common Redeemer.—Moravian.

THE Pope recently, as a penance, went up the "Stairs of Pilato" on his knees. An English paper says: "Of course all the high functionaries were obliged to follow, and it was a rare sight to see the throng, old and young, and slim and fat, kneeling their way up, stair by stair, with the Pope at their head—the dark ages lingering at the end of the nineteenth century."

THE Czar of Russia has decreed that all parents forcing their children to marry, or to enter monasteries or convents, shall be liable to a punishment of from four months' to one year's imprisonment, besides any punishment that may be inflicted by the religious authorities.

LORD CHATHAM, who was almost as remarkable for his manners as for his eloquence and public spirit, has thus defined good breeding: "Benovolence in trifles, or a preference of others to ourselves in the little daily occurrences of life."

FARM AND GARDEN.

To Make and Pack Butter for Winter Use.

Among the hundreds of thousands of tubs of butter which are yearly sent to market, the extra quality A No. 1 is a rara avis. Housekeepers who taste of a hundred tubs are one suits their fancy fully understand this statement.

To make good, deliciously-flavored butter, which will keep the year round perfectly, requires more brains and cultivation than Bridget usually possesses. First of all, the milk must be skimmed at the right time. The best butter makers do not wait till the milk has clabbered, but skim it when it is the least bit sour to the taste, which is easily ascertained. When milk sours before it is skimmed, the cream appears thicker, but in reality it is not. Sannet tried the experiment with two equal quantities of milk. The one which was skimmed just before souring—that is, in thirty hours—made thirty pounds of butter; the other, allowed to stand sixty hours, yielded twenty-seven pounds. When a milk room has an even temperature, say sixty degrees, all the cream that is desirable for butter will rise in thirty to thirty-six hours. It never should stand an hour longer. The cream after this period is deprived of the delicious flavor and aroma so essential to the taste of good butter. Of one thing we are certain, from various experiments: the sooner the cream can be made to rise, the better is its keeping qualities. All travelers inform us that in London and Paris the butter far exceeds ours. One of the chief points with their dairy women is to skim the milk at the right time. The most celebrated butter in the New York market is from Orange county, and they adhere strictly to the thirty-six hour rule. Cream must be sour to make butter; this is a fixed fact in our mind. In winter, when the cream foams and bubbles in the churn, and refuses to come to butter, it is because it has not experienced a change. The weather has been too cold to allow of it, and we add a tablespoonful of powdered alum to produce the desired results. The cream which boiled and raged like a mad creature is subdued, and in a few moments the welcome splash announces the butter.

This summer has been cold, damp and moldy in its tendency. Cream is easily affected by the atmosphere. Our dairy consists of one lovely Alderney, Juno by name. Sweet as June roses is her milk, golden as its butter cups her cream. But it must stand a week before enough is collected to churn. Juno supplies a family of six with milk and cream and butter, though she is but three years old last June, and is farrow this year. Something must be done to keep that cream fresh. On due deliberation, we decide that if a tablespoonful of powdered saltpetre must be added to every four pounds of butter put down for winter use, why not put one tablespoonful of it into the first cream we put in the pot, and stir it well up with every fresh addition? It is done, and the results are most happy. We seek medical information. Are its effects injurious? Not at all; taken in large quantities, like epsom salts, it is poisonous, but, like most poisons, efficacious in infinitesimal doses. All corned beef, hams, etc., are pickled with its aid. It cannot hurt our butter; so we continue the process, and our cream retains its fine aroma. The buttermilk is pronounced by connoisseurs delicious. We beg our readers who are preparing butter for winter use to put saltpetre in the cream as it collects. We make all our table butter from this one cow; its flavor and color are unsurpassed by Philadelphia butter, and we add no coloring matter now, while we know that the far-famed "Continental" butter is colored with annotto. In winter we color with orange carrots, grated, or with yolks of eggs, preferring the latter. The churns of the present day are a great aid in working out the buttermilk; still, butter-paddles are needed; few women have hands or wrists strong enough to refuse their aid. We think that butter-paddles might be manufactured like a large fork, or in imitation of four fingers and a thumb, which would greatly hasten the flow of the buttermilk. Cannot some Yankee youth benefit by our suggestion? When the butter is waxen in texture, as all Aldernoy butter is after a little molding, and it ceases to color the water which drips from the ice (we never wash butter; the sugar of milk is soluble and the water takes away the sweetness of the butter—that is our experience,) then we work it into cakes, which are placed in a stone jar containing a brine made thus:

To one gallon of water add three quarts of fine salt, one pound of saltpetre, one pound of white sugar. Boil and skim well, strain through a cloth, and when cold, turn upon the butter.

This brine has kept butter for us the year round. We are now using butter for cooking purposes made last September, put down in a firkin, with a tablespoonful of powdered and sifted saltpetre and of sugar to every four pounds, and it is better than much of the butter which will be marketed this year. It has no odor or taste which would indicate its age. It has been kept in an ice house since June, entirely covered with brine.

We consider butter made in September and October much more desirable for table use in winter than that made in June. The reason is obvious: it has not had to endure the summer's heat. We are decidedly particular in butter. Few hotels supply an article to our taste. We could not agree with the sailor returned from a three-years' cruise, who was sent among the farmers to to buy a tub of butter. He tasted and tasted of the best butter the country afforded—none had the desired flavor. At length, at a poor hovel, he found a tub with the proper twang, that suited, was purchased, and brought home, but his mother pronounced it "fit only for soap grease!" Such might be the verdict upon many of the tons of butter sent cityward. If proper precautions are taken, all might feast upon good butter. Care is the requisite and some brains. With them, all butter can be A No. 1, and bring the highest price.—Hearth and Home.

PHILISTINISM. — A correspondent writes to the Independent, trying to explain "Philistinism." It is strange that he does not succeed with such a striking example of that ism before him.

Philistinism believes in its stomach, and is not particularly conscious of its soul. It worships "big things"— success, large fortunes, noisy notoriety and the general yell of the hour. Excellencies which it does not see it does not believe in. The quiet mining of unseen powers are unknown to it. "The Philistine" goes in for brag, for noise, for "flaming placards," for mass meetings, for demonstrations, for big organs, for blanket newspapers, the auction of pews and enormous fortunes in dry goods and groceries. He has faith in the outside. The "Son of Light" is his opposite in all this, has a quiet contempt, sometimes an outspoken one, for the "Philistine's" gods. Stewart, Vanderbilt and the New York Ledger are, to him, not particularly heroic. A little sheet we get monthly—Packard's Monthly, so-called—is the organ of young Philistinism in New York. The Independent is the undoubted organ of the old Philistines, who have grown gray in the service.—Churchman.

THE BEST COOKING STOVE

FOR WOOD NOW IN USE.

THE FASHION.

We call especial attention to this Stove, which has been produced at great expense, combining all the new and important improvements; also to the extra height of the Oven under the fire chamber, the Patent Air Chamber Front Doors, and Patent White Enameled Iron Knobs, the improvements in the covers and centre plates, all of which have been covered by Letters Patent, and are used in no other Stove. They are warranted to stand fire, or others sent free of charge in all cases. We have all sizes of this justly celebrated Stove, both

PLAIN AND EXTENDED BACKS,

the Extended Back with cast iron Enameled Reservoir and Faucet, Tin Warming Closet, Gridiron Cover, etc. The part of the top supporting the Reservoir is raised so that the fire is above the top plate, instead of below, as is the case in most of the Stoves now used, and the heat is forced directly against the whole surface of the bottom of the Reservoir. The Reservoir being detached from the pipe, can be removed at pleasure, thereby forming a six-hole Stove—the best in use, as the back holes will heat as well or better than the middle ones. WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE, Staunton, Virginia.

The College of the Baltimore Conference, M. E Church South.

Rev William A. Harris, President, with thirteen professors, teachers, etc.

Will begin its next session SEPTEMBER 20, 1869, and close June 30, 1870.

Than this no College for young ladies in the South ranks higher. It is attended by pupils from various Southern States. System of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Society is refined, scenery beautiful and health unsurpassed. A marked feature in this institution is the rapid promotion of the physical health and vigor of its pupils. Young ladies who come here from the South, with feeble constitutions, are entirely restored to health.

Charges for the scholastic year:
Board and tuition in the Collegiate Course, $225
Music and other extra studies, moderate.

Refer to Bishops Pierce, Wightman, Early, Doggett McTyeire, Dr. Thomas O. Summers, Dr. L. Pierce, Hon. H. H. Hall, Hon. Alex. H. Stevens, Georgia, Hon. J. S. Thompson, Mississippi, Mrs. General John B. Floyd, Faculty of University of Virginia, R. M. College.

Young ladies from the South received at any time during the summer months.

FIVE HUNDRED SOUTHERN METHODIST PREACHERS,

Who are both the agents and owners of this sheet.

A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

CENTENARY COLLEGE, Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited a fair degree of animation since our last issue. The wholesale trade, especially dry goods, boots and shoes, clothing, etc., has shown increased activity, under a lively demand from Texas and the interior, while stocks of all kinds are ample and well assorted, offering both in styles and prices unusual inducements to country merchants. The demand for both Louisiana and Cuba sugar has improved, but very little of any moment has been reported in molasses, and the movement in Western produce has been of inconsiderable extent, and mostly confined to the local trade. The arrival of wheat, noticed in our last issue, is held above the limits of pending orders, and is yet unsold.

The weather has been cloudy and windy, with indications of rain, and our accounts from the interior are by no means reassuring—if anything less so than last week—but still indicate that, although the yield will fall short of the amount generally anticipated a fortnight since, yet it will nevertheless be in excess of last year's, and probably as large as there will be force to pick. We remarked in our last report that, taking a view of the whole field, we had been compelled to materially reduce our estimates of the probable receipts at this port, to 850,000 or 900,000 bales, since which nothing has occurred to materially modify these figures. We regret to say that our accounts from the sugar districts, also, are discouraging, although we have still little doubt the crop will be of liberal yield.

The river is about at a stand, being ten feet five inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 17th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales..	2970
Lake		33
Mobile		636
Texas		26
Total		3665

On Saturday the sales embraced 1,190 bales, at 28 to 28¼c. for low middling, 28⅝c. for strict middling, 29¼ to 29½c. for middling, and 29¾c. for strict middling. On Monday the market opened with a fair inquiry, but buyers claimed concessions of ¼c., to which factors would not submit, and the morning passed with very little movement. Later, however, the latter found themselves compelled to give way, and 1,177 bales changed hands at prices indicating a decline of ½c. in low middling, and ¾c. in middling. On Tuesday very little was done during the early part of the day, factors being unwilling to meet the demand at further concessions, but still asking above the views of buyers. Later in the day, however, the unfavorable tenor of the New York and Liverpool telegrams compelled the former to accept lower rates, and a fair business, summing up 1,022 bales, was done at irregular prices, showing a further decline of ¾ to 1c. per pound. In fact exceptional sales were made at a still greater reduction. Strict good ordinary selling as low as 26¼c., and low middling down to 26¾c., but not to a sufficient extent to serve as a basis for quotations.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 3,389 bales, taken for France, Great Britain and the North.

The receipts proper since Friday evening comprise 3,003 bales, against 3,090 during the corresponding period last week, and 6,643 last year. Receipts proper since the 1st instant, 12,348 bales, against 24,825 last year.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	—	to —
Good ordinary	26	to 26½
Low middling	27	to 27¼
Middling	—	to —
Strict middling	—	to —

COLUMBUS DISTRICT MEETING.

The District Meeting for Columbus district, Mobile Conference, will be held at Columbus, Mississippi, October 7, commencing at half-past seven o'clock P. M., with an introductory sermon by Rev. Jas. A. Peeb'es.

The brethren whose names appear below are requested to act as chairmen of committees, and to prepare brief essays on the subjects assigned to them respectively:

Rev. E. Hardy—Church polity.

Rev. William Murrah, D. D.—Our mission to the colored people.

Hon. S. A. Brown—Sunday schools.

Col. J. W. Taylor—Church literature.

Dr. W. L. Lipscomb—Revivals.

John T. Terry, Esq.—Duties of a steward.

Rev. J. F. Tarrant—Local preachers.

Rev. J. Y. Ramsey—Pastoral duties.

Pastors will be prepared with short written reports, statistical and general, of their respective charges. Bishop Paine is expected to preside over the meeting.

T. C. Wier, P. E.

MARIANNA DISTRICT MEETING.

Change of Time.—Owing to the unhealthfulness of Gordon I am compelled to change the time of holding our district meeting there. It will be held October 14-17.

Preachers, both traveling and local, will be expected to hand in a report of their labors on the first day of the meeting. The opening sermon will be preached by the Rev. William A. Sampey, on Thursday, at eleven o'clock A. M. Members, on arriving, will apply to Rev. L. Patterson to find their homes.

READVILLE SEMINARY.

This is a private institution, with its number of pupils limited, and is authorized by the Legislature of Louisiana to confer degrees, diplomas and literary honors. It was in successful operation from 1843 until interrupted by the events of the war in 1862, and reopened January, 1867.

Teachers of a high grade of talent and merit are in charge of the different departments—English, Ancient and Modern Languages, Music, Painting, etc.

Pupils charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session. All pupils received with the understanding that they are to remain and attend the examination at the close of the session in which they enter, and no deduction made on the bills for absence, except in cases of protracted illness, when the loss may be divided between the institution and the patron.

In her outfit each pupil should be provided with toilet boxes, towels, napkins, sheets, pillow cases and blankets or comforts. She should also bring knife, fork, spoon, cup and napkin ring.

All articles and clothing brought to the Seminary should be distinctly marked, lists of which should be permanently placed on some part of the trunk convenient for reference. The scholastic year commences October 1 and ends in July.

EXPENSE.

Board and tuition per year	$275 00
The Modern Languages at small extra charge.
Music, per year	75 00

Payments due a half session in advance.

Monthly reports of the studies, health and general deportment of the pupils are sent to the parents or guardians at a distance.

The main Seminary building, recently destroyed by fire, will be replaced by one of ample accommodations, now in process of construction, which will be ready for the reception of pupils at the opening of the next session.

For other information desirable in reference to the school apply to

SEMINARY FOR YOUNG LADIES,

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

E. A. GRANT, LL. D., PRINCIPAL.

This institution occupies the large and elegant building lately known as Grant & Butler's School. The grounds are situated on Sixth street, between Walnut and Chestnut streets, and extend back to Centre street. They are elevated several feet above the street, thus making the large and beautiful lawn a most desirable place for healthful outdoor exercise.

The building, furniture and apparatus of the school are among the most complete and valuable in the West.

Experienced teachers, residing in the institution, will devote their time to the moral, intellectual and physical improvement of the pupils.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

NEW YORK.

New York, Sept. 29.—A better feeling prevails in the gold market to day.

The clearing proceeding in the hands of the committee appointed by the Gold Board to facilitate the arrangement of Friday's business is progressing satisfactorily.

Stocks have advanced ten per cent. Gold is quoted at 130.

Numerous cotton orders sent South have been cancelled.

Sterling is unsettled.

New York, Sept. 29.—Noon.—The Gold Bank is paying checks, and many settlements are being made privately.

The present price of gold is 131½. The banks announce that they will remain open for the transaction of business hey and official hours.

The failures of Meigs Sons, Fuller, Treat & Cox are officially announced.

New York, Sept. 29.—Lockwood & Co., the heaviest broking house on Broadway, has stopped paying checks. The proceeding looks "rough."

New York, Sept. 29.—The day's business closes uncertain and variable, with violent fluctuations. Official sales of gold are still suspended, the committee being at a dead lock.

The Gold Bank has failed, and a receiver has been appointed. Other banks will probably outride the storm.

New York, Sept. 30.—The feeling this morning is feverish, but hopeful. Capitalists are investing at low figures. The depreciation in railway stocks, since Thursday, may be represented by $130,000,000.

Money is active, sterling steady and cotton declining.

The following dispatch was received at the opening of business:

Liverpool, Sept. 30.—Cotton has a downward tendency. The quotation for December shipments is 1td. Picayune.

PANIC IN THE NEW YORK MONEY MARKET.

We copy as follows from the Louisville Courier Journal:

THE BULLS WORSTED.

New York, September 21.

To-day has witnessed the rupture of the bull clique in gold, amid scenes of excitement and confusion seldom if ever witnessed. Business has been nearly suspended, and merchants have gathered in knots to watch the gold indicators or rushed to the Gold Board to witness developments and look after interests that were involved in the struggle. The streets in the neighborhood were blocked up by an eager and excited crowd, upon whose faces were depicted frantic rage, or reckless with blank despair or gleeful hope, just as the turn of affairs affected individuals.

The opening quotation was 150, at which a number of the shorts came forward and settled. From this figure there was a rapid rise, and 162½ was reached at twenty minutes to twelve. Other parties who were short now settled at 155. It was then stated that Brown Bros. had borrowed $5,000,000 gold from the government, and, as if to sustain the report, a million was immediately sold for account of that firm. Then Jay Cooke offered whole blocks of three millions each, at which the bulls took the alarm, and commenced selling at the best rate. It was then announced that the Treasury would sell $4,000,000 to-morrow, when a regular panic set in, attended with a decline to 133.

WRATH OF THE OPERATORS.

To add to the wrath of the operators, neither bulls nor bears appear to have made much money. Mr. Boutwell is accused of having gone back on the leaders of the bull clique, and they sacrificed their brokers, who in turn sacrificed their customers, and the howls of indignation which these things provoked would have put bedlam to shame.

FAILURES.

Among the principal failures reported were the following: A. G. Speyor, Belden & Co., P. H. Williams, Galway, Hunter & Co., Chas. McClure & Co., S. M. Waller & Co., William Heath & Co., and W. Smith asked till to-morrow to make up their accounts. It should be stated with reference to most of the above that their transactions in gold have been so large, and business has got so much in arrears at the Gold Exchange Bank, that the bank was unable to settle the balances due from them to brokers. This caused great confusion, and many brokers were unable to make up their currency account at other banks.

NARROW ESCAPES.

Mr. Speyer announced his failure himself, and stated that the gold he had bought to-day was on verbal orders from J. Fisk, Jr., from whom he had neglected to obtain any margins, and he could not take his purchases. At this he was compelled to make a hasty retreat from the board. The crowd soon after made a rush upon the office of Smith, Gould, Martin & Co., and only the active efforts of the police prevented its being gutted. They seized Fisk and threatened to hang him, but he was rescued with no more damage than a black eye. The crowd continued in the street until a late hour, and the presence of a large body of police was necessary to preserve order.

EXCHANGE.

The effect upon exchange on Europe was most marked. Good sterling bills declined to 99, or more than 10 per cent. below par, and francs sold at six for one dollar, or about 15 per cent. discount.

BOUTWELL DENOUNCED.

Mr. Boutwell is severely denounced, in all strictly mercantile circles, by both Republicans and Democrats. His refusal to sell gold last night, and his selling to-morrow, after the bears had been forced to settle, and the market had begun to decline, is counted as good enough evidence that he was in the bull clique, whose operations have brought the business of the whole country to a standstill. It is probable that the whole matter will be investigated by the Chamber of Commerce. It was proposed at one time to call a meeting of merchants to denounce him, and demand his removal, but other counsels prevailed.

ANOTHER FEATURE.

It was noted that when gold was higher it was impossible to sell small amounts at the quoted rates. The highest price paid over the counter was 152, and but little was done over 118.

DEFECTION IN THE BULL CLIQUE.

Another account of the movement this morning is this: It was yesterday discovered that two or three mere boys of the combination which have been working for a rise secretly sold their gold, and, in addition, large amounts on speculative account, thinking that their defection would thwart the purposes of the remainder of the combination, and that a decline would follow. That for this defection the remainder of the combination determined to punish them, and that the rise this morning was in pursuance of that determination. To show the mammoth scale on which this speculation has been conducted, it is but necessary to refer to the gold clearings at the Gold Exchange Bank. The return shows that on Wednesday $321,524,000 of gold were bought and sold. Thursday's business was much larger than this, and the transactions to-day larger than on either of the preceding days.

The money market was wholly unsettled. On call loans of government collaterals 7 per cent. in coin was the nominal rate, while on railway shares the market price is less than par. The rate was from one-eighth to one-half of one cent per day on stocks above par.

Governments fluctuated between 117½ and 120 for 1867s, and closed dull.

Railway shares, etc., were without special interest. Most of them gave way under the money pressure. The most decided feature was New York Central, which declined to 173, when Commodore Vanderbilt appeared on the street and bought all that was offered, upon which it advanced to 185, falling back 4 or 5 per cent. after he returned.

Loss of the Honduras Steamer.

At nine o'clock on Thursday morning last, after proceeding to sea, the Trade Wind commenced leaking. She nevertheless continued on her voyage, Captain J. T. Morrill endeavoring to keep her free. Nevertheless, the leak continued to gain on her, and it was found necessary to put the ship back to the bar. All hands were now employed at the pumps in keeping her afloat, which was done for twenty-four hours after the leak was discovered. On Friday morning the vessel was discovered to be sinking fast. The captain, crew and passengers now took to the boat at eleven A. M. Shortly after the Trade Wind went down. She was then in the Gulf, within seventy miles of Southwest Pass. The Trade Wind probably accomplished some forty or fifty miles back on her return before she went down. The event came so slowly and steadily that at no time was there any confusion on board of the doomed steamer up to the moment of sinking.

The final denouement having been witnessed, and the passengers and crew having taken to the four boats that were attached to the vessel, these at once headed for the bar. The boats kept together until night, when they were separated during the darkness. The mate's boat was spoken on Saturday; neither the captain's two boats nor the fourth remaining boat were afterward seen. The pilot's boat reached the bar, or the neighborhood of the ships, on Sunday, and the crew have since been brought to this city on one of the Morgan line of steamships. The fact that this boat succeeded in reaching the land so quickly was due to the fact that the boat in which the five men sailed was a very light one, and that the men rowed without intermission, and to the great seaman qualities of Henry Arnobl, the Honduras pilot.

Arnold says he has not much fears for the safety of any of the boats.

The only dangers to be apprehended arose from the tremendous blow of wind which might have carried the boats out into the Gulf—from the absence of sufficient water, and of any provisions but such as would produce thirst. It is, however, very probable that some or all three of the boats may have been picked up by the steamships which sailed from here on Saturday.

All of the passengers were in the life-boat commanded by the captain and another which was in tow, and there were also with him seven of the crew.

Captain E. A. Yorke, manager of the Associated Towboat Company, dispatched the towboats Equator and Wabash Monday morning from the passes, in search of the missing boats of the Trade Wind.—New Orleans Times, September 28.

Safety of Two of the Missing Boats.—We have been courteously favored with a copy of the following telegram:

Southwest Pass, Sept. 29, 7 20 A. M.—To G. W. Hynson & Co.: Captain Morrill, Mr. Briggs, and thirteen others, were picked up in two boats, by steamship Clinton, yesterday afternoon, near Ship Shoals, and on their way to town. Nothing heard of the second mate's boat.—Picayune.

The Preparations for the Ecumenical Council.

The Pall Mall Gazette says:

The preparatory congregations of the council have elaborated two propositions, which, I am positively assured, the fathers of the council will be required to approve, and to promise all their efforts to carry them to a successful issue. The first proposition relates to the Peter-penny, the collection of which is to be so organized as to produce annually a sum sufficient to pay the interest of three-quarters of the Pontifical debt, the fourth quarter being undertaken by the Italian government. The second proposition demands the maintenance by the Catholic world of a Pontifical army of six thousand men so long as the Holy See shall remain in its present exceptional state—that is, severed from the Romagnas and the Umbria. The proposition declares that this force is necessary for the maintenance of order in Rome and the patrimony of St. Peter, and that the Holy See is without the means of supporting it until the lost provinces are restored.

The congregations of cardinals has again debated the question of the admission of the representatives of the Catholic powers, and now recommends that they shall be allowed to attend as "spectators." Any propositions they may wish to make must be addressed to Cardinal Antonelli, who will lay them before the council.

The Pope expresses his conviction that he has a mission to replace the principles of the Revolution of 1789 by those of the Syllabus, which the council is to pronounce canonical law. He will resist any opposition to this design, or to the adoption of the Cogula of infallibility, and lately a Roman bishop was told by one of his physicians that the rejection of these propositions might have the most serious, even fatal, consequences to his holiness.

As to the accommodation for the sittings of the council, we are told that the right transept of the grand shrine of St. Peter's and the side chapels of St Michael and the Annunciation, are set apart as the council chambers.

From the papal platform will extend right and left an amphitheatre of seven rows of stalls for the bishops, to which an eighth row may be added, if necessary. The two amphitheatres, including the eighth row of seats, will accommodate about seven hundred and fifty bishops, and probably this will be the extreme number of prelates who will come to claim seats at the council. The seats are to be covered with serge. They are considered to be rather narrow, so that obese prelates will be somewhat squeezed in them. Each stall has a writing desk in front, with a spittoon underneath. At the foot of the amphitheatres seats are to be arranged for the Pope's theologians. The open space between the two amphitheatres will be occupied by the orator's tribune and the altar on which will be exposed the holy sacrament, in order to remind the assembly of its sacred character as a general council of the church, and not a mere profane Parliament.

When the preparations will be completed, the Pope will bless them according to the formula of the ritual. There now remains to finish the amphitheatres—to cover them and the platform with tapestry, to place the tribune and the altar, to construct the galleries for the stenographers and the Bishops' theologians, and to decorate with tapestries and distemper paintings the inclosures of the transept.

Arrangements are making with regard to lodgings, a steam transport service for the conveyance of pilgrims, and, finally, for the striking off of commemorative medals! So far all is couleur de rose. But there is another side of the question; for, says the Pall Mall Gazette correspondent:

The council is not only distasteful to the Mazzinians; it is warmly opposed by many of the Italian episcopacy. Monsignor Charvaz has resigned the archbishopric of Genoa rather than consent to attend. This resignation has been accepted by the Pope, and the ex-prelate has retired to Savoy, to reside with his family. The Court of Florence, if we are to believe the Italian journals, is not disposed to make such a quiet end to its objections, and General Menabrea is reported to have sent an envoy here to try to effect some understanding with the Pope about them. I have not been able to verify this statement, but I can confidently predict that such a mission would be of no avail, as the present temper of the Vatican is very hostile to Italy.

TUSKEGEE FEMALE COLLEGE.

Mr Editor: Let me beg you to state through your columns that the prospects of the Tuskegee Female College are more flattering than at any time since the close of the war. We have opened with about eighty pupils. The music department is fuller than usual; boarding department rapidly filling up with a very excellent class of young ladies. We hope to do a good work for the church and for the glory of God. Fraternally yours,

George W. F. Price.

TO THE MOBILE CONFERENCE.

The presiding elders of the Mobile Conference will please forward me the names of the lay delegates to said Conference.

Preachers who propose bringing their wives to Conference will please inform me.

Will be glad to see brethren from other Conferences, and if they will give us due notice we will make their stay as pleasant as possible.

CAMP MEETINGS.

A camp meeting will be held at Salem church, Pascagoula circuit, Mobile district, Mobile Conference, commencing on the evening of the 22d of October. Ministers are requested to attend.

There will be a camp meeting, on the primitive Methodist style, at Flurry church, West Pascagoula circuit, Mobile district, Mobile Conference, commencing on Friday night before the fifth Sabbath in October. Everybody is invited, and ministers especially.

There will be a camp meeting held at Lower Peach Tree, on the Alabama river, commencing on the 7th of October next. Students especially invited.

A camp meeting will be held at Bethlehem, four miles north of Fayette C. H., Fayette circuit, commencing on Friday night before the fourth Sabbath in October next.

No. 112 Camp Street, New Orleans.

Mr. Editor: You occasionally call attention to books sold by the Rev. R. J. Harp, agent of the Southern Methodist Publishing House, at 112 Camp street. Few of your readers know what Brother Harp's book store is, for few of them have been in there. It is one of the most neatly arranged and best conducted houses in the Crescent City; and I do not hesitate to say that its shelves are the best filled of any book store there; that is to say, filled with the best books. Brother Harp discards all trash; his literature is of the purest kind. He has taken great pains to keep on hand not only our own church publications, but also the most excellent productions of modern Christian thought. He includes in his category of Christian literature not only treatises on doctrine and devotion, but also whatever in science, art and history takes its standing point from distinctly Christian grounds, or proceeds from a definite recognition of Christ in the philosophy and providence of nature. I observed on his shelves Lange's Commentary on the New Testament, F. W. Robertson's Sermons, Dr. Arnold's History of Rome, the Bampton Lectures, by Monsel, and Bernard, and Liddon; and many other works that are not to be found in the popular book stores—works, too, that are of the very highest usefulness and interest, both to the student and to the general reader. Brother Harp keeps on hand, or at his command, all school books most generally used, and is very accommodating in getting any unusual book that may be asked for. He is an exceedingly prompt and judicious business man; and he is certainly doing the church great service, and deserves the support of all who deal in books. So far as cheapness is concerned I am sure the advantage will be found in dealing with Brother Harp. He is in communication with London houses also, and can supply any English print desired. And let it be understood that all the business done there is so much help to our Publishing House, and the great cause of Christian literature in our church. And surely there is an obligation upon us to drive back the tide of profane literature and so-called philosophy that comes in from a worldly press and an infidel mind. A book store, Mr. Editor, is a thing of power—it is part of the press.

Brother Harp occupies the first floor; it is easy and pleasant to walk in there.

What is done in the second and third stories of 112 Camp street the Advocate shows every week.

TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.

Murfreesboro, Tenn., Sept. 17, 1869.

Mr. Editor: The Tennessee Conference is now in session at Murfreesboro, Tennessee. The secretary, Dr. R. A. Young, reports that the attendance is larger than ever before. The lay representatives are here in full sympathy and harmony with the preachers. Bishop Paine is in the chair, in fine health. Bishop Early is expected. Dr. William H. Anderson, the newly elected president of Florence Wesleyan University, was with us the first day. His admirable remarks in reference to the reopening of the halls of our university under encouraging auspices, and his earnest gospel-sermon, won many hearts among our brethren, many of whom never met our worthy brother of the Louisville Conference before.

Dr. A. H. Redford made an interesting exhibit of the financial condition of our Publishing House, showing great prosperity in our publishing department. The net profits of the fiscal year are $44,000—enough to pay the entire indebtedness of the Publishing House; but it has been deemed advisable to increase our capital, to secure greater prosperity.

Dr. E. E. Wiley, president of Emory and Henry College, Holston Conference, is here modestly presenting the claims of that excellent college in Virginia.

The vote has just been taken upon the question of a division of our Conference territory, laying the report on the table which favored appointing a committee to confer with committees of other Conferences on the subject of division, showing the Conference to be decidedly opposed to changing the boundaries of our Conference. We had a splendid speech from Rev. S. P. Whitten, Bible agent, strongly opposing State line boundaries.

Dr. McFerrin is present in feeble health, but improving.

S. M. Cherry.

Assessments for the Mobile District.

To the Preachers of the Mobile District—Dear Brethren: The following is the assessment made by the Joint Board of Finance for this district. These amounts must be collected, if possible, for the needs of the ministers, widows and orphans concerned will be urgent. Let no efforts be spared.

For Conference collection, $700; for Bishop's collection, $250. Of these amounts I have made the following apportionment:

	Conf. Coll.	Bps Coll.
Franklin street....	$210 00	$70 00
St. Francis street...	210 00	70 00
St. Paul's.....	40 00	15 00
Whistler	25 00	10 00
Citronelle	40 00	15 00
Cottage Hill.....	40 00	15 00
Eastern Shore.....	30 00	12 00
Pascagoula.....	50 00	20 00
Ocean Springs.....	30 00	12 00
St. Stephen's.....	25 00	10 00

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Starkville, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: There have been some very successful meetings in this section recently—one at Smyrna church, which resulted in the conversion of quite a number; one at Choctaw ageney, where there were between twenty and thirty conversions, and twenty-one additions to the church. At both places the presence of the Spirit was manifest in His quickening and reviving influences upon the church.

R. J. Jones.

Florence Wesleyan University.

On the 8th of September this grand old institution opened her doors and commenced the annual session for 1869-70, under auspices the most cheering and hopeful.

Present on her inaugural day were those venerable in years, ripe in learning, and high in the affections and esteem of all.

The address of the occasion was delivered by the Rev. Dr. W. H. Anderson, the noble president elect, whose ability and experience place him in the front rank of teachers. His address was cogent, forcible, practical, elegant and eloquent.

* * * Prof. B. F. Meek, late of Tuscaloosa, who is to fill the chair of ancient languages, being next introduced, delivered a beautiful, classic and eloquent extemporaneous speech. Prof. S. P. Rice, so long and so acceptably connected with this university, was then introduced as professor of mathematics. Bishop Paine, the first president of La Grange College, on the mountain, and who had opened the exercises here with a most fervent and appropriate prayer, then gave a short and pointed speech. The words of wisdom which he uttered were refreshing; the reminiscences of the early struggles of the college thrilled and charmed us all. He was its first, its present and its future friend, and will work and pray for its success. Chancellor Keys and Judge Wood being then introduced by Dr. Anderson as professors of the law departments, made their acknowledgment, through Judge James S. Clark, who gave us the law of the occasion. At the close of the exercises a most sumptuous picnic was spread in the grove for the large assembly present. Now the university is under way, with an able and efficient faculty. Her endowment, nearly $50,000, is well secured.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

ROMANISM.—NO. 2.

After closing our conversation in relation to prayer addressed to the blessed Virgin, I said: "Bishop, your doctrine of the real presence of Christ, flesh and blood, spirit and divinity, in the holy communion, so that each several celebration is a new manifestation of God in the flesh, and 'new sacrifice and shedding of the blood of Christ,' is a great difficulty to the Protestant mind." He responded: "Yes; but the church (meaning the Roman) takes the words just as she finds them; believes that the words, 'This is my body, and this is my blood,' are to be literally understood; that there is no spiritual signification involved or to be understood beyond the literal and ordinary import of the words." I replied: "Protestants think that they are to be spiritually understood, and the apostles so understood them, because they were accustomed to figurative language in the holy Scriptures. God, for example, is called 'a rock,' 'a sun,' 'a high tower.' Not that He is literally any of these, but because these material things express the idea of some of the revealed characteristics and developments of God. So Joseph said to the butler: 'The three branches (of the vine) are three days;' and to the baker: 'The three baskets are three days'—that is, of course, as the butler and the baker and all must understand, represent three days. So Daniel said certain beasts, as the lion, the bear and the leopard, 'are kings'—most clearly represent kings, and not literally the kings themselves. And, further, Christ himself used much figurative language, in His parables and elsewhere, that could not be literally understood; that the apostles, thus accustomed to figurative language, would understand this expression, 'This is my body,' to mean, this represents my body, and not that they were eating and drinking Christ's body and blood; that they were not cannibals, and would have shrunk with horror from such an act."

The Bishop replied: "It is a great mystery, but no greater than many others which we all devoutly believe." I answered: "I was aware of their line of argument in that direction, but that I thought it sophistical. For example," said I, "you say 'we must and do admit the eternal and unoriginated being of God, the creation of matter and spirit, the inspiration of the Scriptures, and the regeneration of the human soul—all mysterious, inexplicable and incomprehensible.'—Then why not the literal statement, 'This is my body?' Because this is not an analogous case. The great mysteries to which your writers call attention, as matters believed by all assuming the Christian name, are matters which lie outside the field of human investigation. We cannot reason about them at all. We have simply to accept what God has been pleased to reveal. But this is not the case in relation to bread and wine. No substances were more familiar; that Protestants could not believe that the apostles believed that the bread and wine, just the same as they had been eating in the Passover supper, was really their Master's body and blood. There He sat before them intact, in all His corporeal integrity, not yet scourged, crowned with thorns or nailed to the cross, not a drop of His blood shed. How was it possible for them to believe that when Christ handed them bread to eat that it was His flesh, and when He handed them a cup of wine that it was His blood?" Said I: "Bread is one of the most common and least mysterious of things.—When the priest consecrates it, and, as he affirms, transubstantiates it from bread and wine into flesh and blood—into God indeed—it still looks like bread, feels like bread, smells like bread and tastes like bread. We Protestants cannot believe that it is anything more. Certainly it is consecrated to a holy use, and it is intended to represent the broken body and shed blood of Christ; but that is all."

The Bishop replied that our senses were imperfect; that they sometimes deceived us; that we could not implicitly rely upon them. I answered that if his statement about the senses was true, or proved anything, that it proved too much; that it was only by our senses we knew there were any such words in the Bible as "This is my body and this is my blood," or that we knew there was any such book even as the Bible itself, and, in short, any real world at all; that we must rely upon our senses, or all knowledge and all investigation in relation to material things must be set down among the things impossible. He closed by appealing to tradition and the authority of the church.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

CHOCTAW CORNER, ALA., Sept. 9, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: While writing on other business, allow me to say that a revival of religion is going on, in the bounds of the Choctaw Corner circuit, that promises to become general, and do much for the cause of Christ in this interesting field of labor. I hope soon to be able to give you, in the shape of facts and figures, a more substantial and encouraging account.

Yours truly,

GEORGE F. ELLIS.

ATLANTA CT., LA. CONFERENCE, September 15, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: I have another glorious meeting to report for the comfort of those who love the prosperity of Zion.

Our third Quarterly Meeting was held at Atlanta, and lasted from Saturday, the 4th, till Thursday, the 9th instant. We had no presiding elder, but the Lord was with us from beginning to end. Ten or twelve made a profession of religion, church members greatly blessed, and nineteen persons added to the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Brother T. S. Collier was with us, and did effectual service.

Yours, etc., J. F. WYNN.

GEORGETOWN CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Again it is our privilege to record the dealings of a gracious covenant-keeping God with His people in this charge.

On the 11th ultimo we commenced a meeting at Bethesda, closing yesterday. The Lord was with us in reviving influences and converting power. The church was greatly refreshed. Sinners were awakened and converted. Ten were added to the church, and about an equal number converted, which, in view of the fact that there was but little material outside of the church to operate upon, is truly encouraging. We rejoice to know that the good work goes on, widening and deepening in its evangelizing influences; and our prayer is that it may pervade and permeate all classes of society until the tabernacle of God shall be filled with men, and He shall dwell with them and be their God, and they shall be His people.

Yours in Christ,

R. B. WHITTINGTON.

CAMDEN, ALA., Sept. 14, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: On the Camden district, Montgomery Conference, we are having some refreshing times. The third Quarterly Meeting for Black's Bend circuit, held at Reaves' school house, was protracted. The church was greatly revived, a goodly number were converted, and twenty-six were received into full connection.

Brother Armstrong, the preacher on this circuit, has just closed a good meeting at Mount Carmel.—The church was wonderfully blessed. Though a number were converted, the influence did not extend much beyond the membership. Only two joined the church.

Brother Gillis commenced a meeting in Camden with the week of prayer, which he carried on, in spite of the opposition of the devil, the world and bigoted sectarians, for three weeks. Six members were received into full connection and one by certificate.

At a meeting recently held by Brother Hudson, at McKinzie's, on the Oak Hill circuit, the Lord revealed himself in power. The church rejoiced and praised God, sinners were converted, and about ten were added to the church.

The preacher of the Evergreen circuit closed a meeting on the 19th ultimo, at Moore's church, at which seven were converted and twelve were added to the church. Other good meetings have been held on that work.

Other parts of the district have not been reported to me within the last month. I am now on my fourth round. ANSON WEST.

GADSDEN CT., MONTGOMERY CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: It will be remembered that Cedar Hill is the place where Brother Stimpson promised, last winter, to hold class meetings during the year. I do not know how many meetings he has held; but one thing I do know—that is, the Lord has wonderfully blessed the people of Cedar Hill with a gracious revival of religion. Our third Quarterly Meeting was held there, embracing the fourth Sunday in August. I was too sick to be present at the beginning of the meeting. Brother Slaughter, presiding elder, was there, however, in the spirit of the Master, aided by the local brethren of the circuit, and two or three visiting brethren. Brother Clifton, from Van Buren, and Brother Ramsay, from Gadsden, were there, abundant in labors and strong in faith.

The meeting continued eleven days, and I assure you it was no surface work. It was deep, thorough and powerful. The people were ripe for a revival. Consequently the meetings were good from the beginning. The congregations were large and attentive. The preaching was unctious. Convictions were pungent and conversions bright. Old men were converted, young people were brought in by the score, and the strong ones were made to tremble and cry for mercy, and the cry was heard and answered. Frequently the congregations were melted to tears during the reading of the introductory lesson or the singing of the introductory hymn. Sometimes it seemed as if "all the Lord's people would become prophets." "Their faith gave character to their works, while their works gave quantity to their faith." We had seventy or seventy-five conversions, and sixty-five accessions to the church.

Other points on the circuit have been blessed. All praise to the great Head of the Church.

P. K. PINKLEY.

THE BEULAH CAMP MEETING, MANSFIELD, LA., Sept. 23, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: We have just returned from the Beulah camp meeting. We got there late on Saturday evening, and found that Brother Franklin, presiding elder, had borne the burden of the meeting for two days—had looked for preachers till he was well nigh desperate.—When we arrived everything had assumed the appearance and proportions of a camp meeting. The seats and pulpit were covered over with a large board shed. The tents, some of boards and some of cloth, were arranged on two sides of the encampment. The camp fires were burning and the people were moving hither and thither; and as we listened at some distance in the grove we heard singing and praying and shouting, and it occurred to us that if Brother Parvin knew that this was going on here in the Louisiana Conference, Arkansas would not hold him another year.

On Saturday night there were some thirty-five penitents at the altar for the prayers of the church, some of whom were converted.—Sabbath was a day of great religious interest. There was preaching at eight A. M. and at eleven A. M. At three P. M. the sacrament of the Lord's supper was administered to a large number of earnest communicants. At night the preacher commenced services in the usual way, but while offering the first prayer he got happy, began to shout, went into the altar and fell on the straw, shouting: Glory, glory, etc. One after another followed suit, till a large number of persons were shouting and praising God. The preacher in charge, as if at his wit's end, said: "What shall we do?" There being no room left for a sermon, penitents were called and the altar was literally filled. Much has been said about "old style camp meetings,"—but we thought this rather new.

On Monday night the scene was indescribable. Imagine from sixty to seventy penitents in and about the altar crying for mercy, with perhaps not less than one hundred unrestrained voices singing familiar camp meeting songs, and mingling their prayers and shouts with the praises of the newly converted.—Many affecting things were heard from parents whose children were converted, and so of others; but we cannot enumerate.

The result of the meeting was fifty-three accessions, fifty-two baptisms and about the same number of conversions.

Eighty-six dollars were collected for missions, and Brother Franklin was stirring the interests of the ADVOCATE.

Revivals are common in all the churches in these parts. I don't think that I have ever seen so much religious interest manifested. We would remind the irreligious that while the "waters are troubled" is the most favorable time for them.

JOHN PIPES.

Macon District Meeting, Mobile Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The District Meeting for the Macon district was held at Gainesville, Alabama, commencing September 9. Its deliberations were presided over by the efficient presiding elder of the district, Rev. S. H. Cox. The Mobile Conference contains no man within her borders more devoted to the interests of the church and to the cause of religion than this eminent Christian gentleman.

The various interests of the church came in review before the meeting, and were thoroughly discussed by its members, both lay and clerical, in a spirit of brotherly love and kindness, the paramount desire seeming to be to adopt those measures and inaugurate that policy best adapted to promote the interests of the church and advance the cause of Christianity. Interesting essays were read by several members of the Conference, which, if it were practicable, we would like to notice in detail.

The committees appointed by the Conference reported upon the various subjects intrusted to them.—Prominent among the reports of the committees was the one upon Sabbath schools. We were glad to see, from the interest manifested in the reading of this report, that the preachers and laymen of the district are fully alive to the importance of cultivating this nursery of the church.

As there is agitation in some quarters as to the propriety of making State lines the boundaries of Conferences, the meeting appointed a committee to report on this subject. They reported adversely to the proposed change, and their report was unanimously adopted by the meeting. It is here perhaps proper to state that more than two thirds of the district is situated in that part of Mississippi which belongs to the Mobile Conference.

The meeting resolved to do one thing which we think was eminently right and proper—to build or purchase at Macon, the central part of the district, a district parsonage. We believe the district is able to do this, and hope it will respond to and carry out the resolution of the meeting in this regard.

The Rev. Thomas Taylor, superintendent of the colored work South, was present during the session.—We think, from what we saw and heard of Brother Taylor, that the church has made a happy selection, and that he is eminently suited for the work assigned him, and which he is so successfully carrying out.

Altogether the meeting was one of interest, and, we hope, of profit to the church and to the cause of Christianity.

The Conference unanimously adopted resolutions of thanks to the citizens of Gainesville for the generous hospitality extended to its members during the session. We could name a score of generous, noble-hearted men and women, residents of this town, with whom it is a pleasure and a profit to meet and associate.

Gainesville, we believe, is one of the oldest towns in west Alabama, and before the era of railroads was the principal trading and shipping point for the surrounding country and several counties in east Mississippi. We were pleased to note, while there, evidences of its former vitality. T. P. BELL,

CHURCH POLITY.

And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord.—First Cor., 12: 5.

One grand peculiarity and sublime excellency of Methodism is that, while it adheres to and is controlled by the divine constitution of doctrines found in God's word, it also adapts itself, in its practical workings, to the times, circumstances and wants of each and all unto whom it proclaims this word. It legitimately adapts itself to the successful proclamation and elucidation of truth, with equal ease, to the civilized and savage, the frontiersman and cityman, the man of letters and the unlettered African, ever unchangeably changing, ever various in its oneness.

The divine conception of itineracy, as evinced in the commission, "Go ye into all the world," and practically applied in the sending of the seventy, "two and two, before his face into every city and place whither he himself would come," after having been buried in the rubbish of ages, was resurrected through the agency of Wesley, and by him reapplied to church machinery; and though ever one, its plurality of adaptation has been equal to all necessities. This, with its unprecedented success, makes it a wonder of the world. Sublime the thought; "The world is my field!" More sublime the act to let go all and enter this field. None but the divine spirit of love could inspire the thought; none but God impel to the work!

"Who is able for these things?" exclaim we. He who said "Go!" said "Lo! I am with you alway." This Eternal One within maketh us equal to the task, giving light to the mind and love to the heart, courage to the will and nerve to the soul. The true itinerant is the living embodiment of the hero, the philosopher and the saint—a hero in his work, a philosopher in his ratiocinations, and a saint in his aspirations. Until the conquest of the world by Christ is a realized fact, may itineracy be the grand centre and controlling lever of Methodist machinery. It is not a change of tactics to simply change the order of battle. The same great principle obtains, whether in the skirmish or the set battle, whether on the plain or among the mountains. Under all circumstances we must act with reference to the object to be attained, the number and character of the equipped force, and the means of supply. Our object is the speedy conversion of the world to God.

"The harvest is white, but the laborers are few;" and while our supplies are bountiful if properly gathered and well garnered, still there is nothing to waste, either in muscle, mind or grace. The battle waxes hot, the great Captain heads the charging lines; the God-bannered hosts move forward. They are hundreds of thousands, some giants, some "babes in Christ." They need not only the inward fire and living Head, but the eye-seen General, the ear-heard Captain shouting: To the battle. To effect this we must put our great commanders into greater nearness and community with the members.

In our division we have twenty-six Annual Conferences, about two thousand pastors, two hundred and fifty presiding elders and ten Bishops. Can we not so arrange it that some of the friction will be removed, some of the expenses curtailed, pastors increased and our general supervisors brought more in contact with the people? To effect either or all of these would be well. I think it can be done.

1. Merge the Quarterly Meeting Conference into the monthly church meeting and the District Conference meetings. Give the local interests attended to in the Quarterly Meeting Conference to the church meeting, and the more general work of the Quarterly Meeting Conference to the District Conference.

2. Merge the presiding elder and Bishop into one office. The pastors will supervise the monthly meetings, and from these will be elected semi-annually delegates to the semi-annual District Conference, which is to be supervised by the Bishop. Let each Annual Conference be divided into about fifteen District Conferences, so that each Bishop will hold during the year about thirty District Conferences and one Annual Conference. Let each Annual Conference be composed of the itinerant preachers and delegates from the District Conferences. Let each Annual Conference have its Bishop's parsonage. Let neither pastor nor Bishop be eligible to the same work for but four years in succession, and not again until four years have elapsed in some other field. Let both pastors and Bishops be liable to removal annually, if thought necessary. Let the Bishops' annual meeting determine the work of the Bishops for the ensuing year. Let the Bishop presiding at an Annual Conference appoint his cabinet officers for the next ensuing Conference. To do this we will increase the number of Annual Conferences to about thirty, and consequently the Bishops to thirty effective. We will increase the number of real pastors about two hundred and thirty. We will do away with the friction and the expense of one "wheel." We will bring into each community annually a Bishop, with his superior talent and grace to edify. Thus all these ends are accomplished. We have a large increase of direct pastors, still a real decrease in expense and friction, and bring the Conference superintendent directly to the people. Deo adjuvante, non timendum.

DYING OF RESPECTABILITY.—Dr. Scott, of New York, while preaching one Sunday on the prophet Balaam, came to speak of earnestness, zeal and enthusiasm in the cause of God, and while referring to the objections to "excitement," which are often made, he remarked:

"A man who, in the midst of his family, receives a bill larger than he expected, may walk up and down the room and tear his hair, and rave in his excitement and no one blame the extravagance of his conduct. Men in the stock market may be wild with excitement as the prices are going up or down and they are making or losing money, and this is only a reasonable diligence in the pursuit of business! But the moment a man wakes up to the necessity of seeking the kingdom of God, or the church begins to be earnest about the salvation of souls perishing in sin at her gates, we are told that this is enthusiasm, fanaticism, madness! The fact is, brethren, we are dying of respectability! Afraid to be in earnest in the great work of the soul's salvation, lest we be reproached for our zeal and earnestness, as if it were possible for us to be too much in earnest when the immortal interests of ourselves and our fellow-men are at stake. Our churches are DYING OF RESPECTABILITY."

Oh! for the voice of one crying in the wilderness to awake such people from their repose, and warn the careless multitudes to flee from the wrath to come. O, God, send help to the workers in this evil time.

Brother on Self-Examination.

One of the first matters of self-examination is conduct. Conduct lies within our knowledge, and is therefore much easier to be examined by us than the other parts of our life. Conduct is, or should be, open to every man's scrutiny. Upon that every man can reason. It is true that conduct depends for moral character upon the motives from which it springs—that is, upon the faculties which produce it—and hence many have supposed that the first step of self-examination should be to inspect the source of moral conduct; but that is not philosophical. In the external and worldly knowledge we first find out what are facts, and then we generalize from facts to principles, and ascertain what the principles are. Self-examination should begin with the outward conduct. It gradually will work deeper, and come to the motive from which the conduct springs.

In examining our conduct, or that part of our life which embodies itself into action, there should be some classification. Of course the duties which we owe to ourselves will form one distinct line of investigation. Our own personal habits ought to be a matter of study. What they are no one knows so little as we ourselves. Every man in the street knows you better than you know yourself. There is not a person that lives with you who can not tell you things about yourself that you will not believe, but which are perfectly true. We are continually denying that we have habits which we have been practicing all our life. Here is a man who has lived forty or fifty years; and a chance slug sentence or word lances him, and reveals to him a trait which he always possessed. For forty or fifty years he has been fooling himself about a matter as plain as the nose on his face.

One reason why we know so little of ourselves is, that we are, by our self-love, by our sensitiveness, and by our vanity, kept from looking at things with a clear, open eye. We ought to know what is the condition of every part of our bodily nature. We ought to acquaint ourselves with the temperance or intemperance of our desires. We ought to understand distinctly our habits in relation to health and all its economies. We ought, as a religious duty, to study our habits in regard to personal neatness and order. And it should be understood that neatness and order are not the same thing. Neatness has respect to a man's person, and order has respect to things about him. One may be neat, and destitute of order; or he may be orderly and very nasty. We ought, also, to understand what our habits are in respect to industry. In short, we ought to be aware, from day to day, of what we are really doing with our bodies, which are more wonderful than any jewel that human hands ever wrought. The human frame, all its economies, its many relations to health and activity and usefulness—these, though not as important as a man's soul and its connection with moral laws and duties, nevertheless are not unimportant, ought not to be thought of lightly, and cannot be let go in any true self-examination.

We should also keep ourselves informed of conduct in its relations to sympathy and affection. Are we acting upon men by our selfish instincts, our animal natures and our executive forces? or are we acting upon them by our affections, our moral sentiments and our understanding? What is the part of ourselves that we are using in our intercourse with our fellowmen?

We imagine with wonder the passage of a comet through space, flaming and sparkling along strange paths, and glowing upon stars innumerable as it goes; but that is not half as wonderful as the passage of the human heart, flaming and sparkling and glowing with ten thousand effects shot out upon every man we meet as we move through life. Planets are cold and dead, and all their radiance falls without effect; but the human soul, as it passes up and down the ways of experience, is producing ten thousand effects at every single movement, many of which we know nothing about.

Our conduct, as it stands connected with the active flow of daily business life, should be a matter of careful consideration. Did you ever sit down and make an inventory of what you do, in order to come to a distinct understanding with reference to your use of time? You probably know all about your possessions. You know every bond, if you have bonds; you know every mortgage, if you have mortgages; you know every dollar that is deposited, if you have deposits of money; you know every piece of property, if you own real estate; you know all your debts and credits. These things you look at both in detail and in the sum. But God has given us our chief treasure in the use of time. And how many of us understand that matter? How many of us have ever taken a cursory view of one single year, saying, "I am anxious to know, on the whole, how I have carried myself from month to month. Of the time that is given me, how much do I use well, how much do I use indifferently, and how much do I squander?" There is not one man in a hundred who has ever thought of these things.

There are a great many persons who examine themselves as to motives, but how many persons examine themselves in the matter of speech? Do you know what your habits are about talking? Do you talk a great deal too much? Do you say a great many things heedlessly? Do you indulge a great deal in outswelling words of pride? Are your words like sparks of fire, or are they like drops of oil? Do you make life sweet with your tongue wherever you go, or is your tongue like the tongue of a serpent, carrying terror whenever your mouth opens and it comes forth? How often do you think of your speech? Do you know anything about it? I venture to say that every person in your neighborhood knows more about it than you do.

Did you ever think what a volume your talk would make if it were printed. If everything that some persons say in a single day were printed, what a volume it would make! And if all that they say in a year were printed, what a library it would make! I pity the man who should have to read the one or the other. And yet all their sayings from day to day, and from year to year, are flying in every direction, producing their effects on those on whom they fall. The exaggerations, the over-colorings, the misrepresentations, the lies (for we all lie continually) which escape us when we are speaking about ourselves, about our children, about our property, about our neighbors, about everything that we have to do with—what must be their influence upon the world? Still, how few there are that know anything about the use of their tongue, which is forever on the move! A man might as well undertake to keep an account of what goes out of his chimney, of smoke, and gas, and cinders, as to keep an account of what goes out of his mouth of wondrous influences for life or for death. And therefore how vastly important it is that we should examine ourselves in the matter of speech!

How many of us examine the daily habits of life in regard to truth or untruth, in regard to honor, and in regard to what is just? Very few, I think.

How many of us examine ourselves with reference to the use of our ears? If there is one thing that has been repeated over and over again, it is the caution about hearing. How many persons there are that use their ears, not to hear what they do not want to hear, or what it might do them good to hear! How many there are that use their ears as a bolting-cloth, only to catch the bran and let the flour go! How many there are that hear everything that is keen and pungent and salient in scandal, and nothing that is favorable, commendable, praiseworthy of men! How many persons are, in regard to hearing, like sentinels, who, when set to take care of things that are good, are always asleep, but, who, when set to take care of things that are bad, never go to sleep! How many persons are there that form any conception of what the character of their life is in this matter?

One man goes home and sits down, and his companion says to him, "My dear, what have you heard to-day?" and he commences to descant on the things that he has heard; and it would seem as if he had been carried by God's providence into so many pleasant ways, as if he had heard so many pleasant things, that he had been signally blessed. Another man goes home and sits down, and when he is asked, "What have you heard to-day?" says, "Heard? I have heard some queer things?" And he goes on and tells something that he has heard about His man to his discredit; something derogatory to that woman's character; something that implicates his next-door neighbor; some story that a man should never hear, or, having heard, should never repeat—things that one would suppose he must have gone through a pandemonium to hear. How many men take account of their habits of hearing? I think it is important that a man should examine himself for the purpose of coming to some knowledge of his conduct in this regard.

How many persons know what their habits are, and which way their life is tending, in regard to self-indulgence? Self-indulgence and self-denial are the fine antitheses of human life. Prosperity, praise and success naturally tend toward self-indulgence. It is only grace that ever tends toward self-denial. I do not by self-denial mean simply denying ourselves of great outward things on extraordinary occasions. We shall do that easy enough, if we practice self-denial in the million little things which occur in our daily life. Our self-denials lie just where our duties do. If it is difficult for you to speak, overcome that difficulty, and in that way you will practice self-denial. If it is hard for you to be benevolent, correct your avarice, and make it give away the things that you would hoard; and thus you will practice self-denial. Are you proud? Then practice self-denial by being humble. Are you envious? Then the way for you to be self-denying is to cultivate generosity in your consideration of other men's conditions as compared with your own. Are you narrow? Then to you self-denial means being large in your circumstances. How many men know what is the play of their conduct in the direction of self-indulgence or self-denial during any day of their life?

How many of us have been accustomed to examine ourselves to know which part is growing, which part is standing still, and which part is receding, morally? One of these things is true: we are going up the stream, we are going down the stream, or we are caught fast in the stream. We are either anchored, or else drifting one way or the other, in regard to our whole moral state. How many persons take any pains to ascertain which of these things is true about themselves? How many examine into the relative condition of the elements of their life? Are you constantly gaining advantage over things that formerly had advantage over you? Are you getting control of your selfishness, your pride, your vanity and your jealousy? Are you consciously increasing in the love of things that is right, and true, and noble, and divine, and eternal? Which way is your life going?

How many of us examine ourselves in reference to our uses of property? Is the love of gain growing stronger in us? Are we more and more employing wealth as an instrument of self-advancement? or do we make it more and more a means of benefiting others? Here is a sphere of examination that is very important.

I know that many persons suppose that in old times when men examined themselves they had days of fasting and prayer. If anybody wants to fast, he may; but he need not unless he wants to. It is a matter that is entirely optional to him. The New Testament puts a slight upon fasting. The Old Testament seems to favor it but in one single instance; but it is doubtful whether it really favors it at all. It is neither an Old Testament institution nor a New Testament practice.

A man may fast if he has a mind to; but these formal examinations, accompanied by ceremonies of this kind, are apt to be so abstract and philosophical that they scarcely touch our real life in any single point.

Though I have thus far spoken of conduct, I would not have you think that our examination should stop upon this. We ought to examine character as well. It may seem as if this looking at conduct was superficial. So it is; but at the best our self-examination and self-knowledge will be superficial and imperfect. Only God can know perfectly what the character or conduct is. When men have had training that will enable them to examine their own faculties they may look inward, but they should do it with due restraint and caution. For the most part the wisest of this world are ignorant concerning these things. There are very few that can look in upon their thoughts and feelings with any considerable degree of profit. And I think that, as a general rule, the best thing for persons to do who attempt to examine themselves inwardly, is to take the divine law which commands us to love God with all our heart, and soul, and mind, and strength, and our neighbors as ourselves, and ask, "What is the drift of my disposition as compared with that law?" If you go much more minutely into your heart you will confuse yourself, mystify the whole matter, and get more darkness than light.—Herald of Health.

TWO RELIGIONS IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.—"We should say, in brief, that one was the religion of the Bible, the other the religion of the church. * * * The cast of their minds—i. e., of the two parties holding these religions—is radically opposite, and we cannot find a phrase which points out the characteristic and central element of each side so well as that which describes the one as preaching the Bible and the other as preaching the church. The immediate instinct of the one, whenever any religious practice or question may present itself to the judgment, is to think of the Bible; the other of the church."—Contemporary Review.

A MIGHTY AGITATION.

The Atlantic cable brings us the news of a great uprising of the people of Prussia, in the form of a mass meeting to protest against nuns, convents and convents, and to petition the government for the abolition of the one, and the expulsion of the others. And the entire Catholic world seems to be in a state of great excitement regarding a series of outrages perpetrated in various convents, some of which have recently come to light, such as the immuring within stone walls of a nun for over twenty years, on account of a non-compliance with some of the requirements of the order.

The people seem thoroughly aroused at these fearful crimes, and demand nothing less than national action in the suppression of these cruelties. And the Austrian government seems to have taken the initiative in this movement, and is now adopting measures that will probably soon result in the entire extinction of these establishments in a land that has hitherto been their stronghold.

It would, indeed, seem that the gods have made these people mad that their destruction might be imminent; and recent revelations have so unfolded their dark misdeeds to the world, that the unsheathed sword of justice would appear to be in hot pursuit of them. The signs of the times, throughout Catholic Europe, indicate a complete disenthralment of the people from the clutches of the Catholic hierarchy. It would seem that the Pope himself has a clearer insight into the real condition of things than many of his subordinates, for he is said to have sent some sharp reproofs to some of his prelates in Germany to be less reckless in irritating the faithful. But a mighty agitation is now commencing among the lay Catholics of Europe, and Germany especially, and their activity is mainly directed against the reactionary ultramontanism that is ever ready to hem the course of every progressive movement, and to take the first possible step in retrogression.

There is just now, in view of the approaching Ecumenical Council, a most significant lay movement for reform in that church; there are doubtless millions of intelligent Catholics that would desire to remain within the bosom of their church if such a condition can be made sufferable; but the most reliable reports from Rome indicate the adoption of dogmas that will bury Catholicism still more deeply in idolatry and especially in mariolatry, and these liberal members of the church have therefore more fears of a backward than hopes of a forward movement. These fears have aroused the nations of South Germany to the extent of inducing some of them to propose a league in advance against the tyrannical movements of the church in its opposition to the State.

These liberal laymen are endeavoring to influence the Catholic clergy of Germany to join this movement and control it in the interest of the German church, even to the extent of breaking away from the mother church of Rome, but it is very doubtful whether there can be found among the clergy men of sufficient courage to raise decided voices in this cause. There is to be a convocation of German bishops during the present month to consult about the special interests of the German church, but few intelligent men place any hope in their action. In the meanwhile the movement of the laity is assuming greater proportions every day, and extending its influence to all parts of the country.

The Prussian provinces of the Rhine are the stronghold of Catholicism, and the "Rome of the north" is to be found in Treves, of "holy coat" renown. The Bishop of Treves has just been favored with an address from a large number of citizens of Coblence, while the Archbishop of Cologne, the seat of the famous cathedral, has had a similar missive sent to him from Bonn, and this movement is extending to the smaller towns on the Rhine. Now when we reflect that this is not a movement of Protestants against Catholics, but an agitation in the very bosom of the church itself, we can form some idea of its significance. The Catholic laity are accustomed to observe blind obedience toward all the institutions and officers of the church, and the feeling must be very deeply seated that could induce them to depart so far from their inherited and intuitive custom.

This same Archbishop of Cologne recently paid a visit to Bonn, a part of whose university is a Catholic school of theology, and his presence gave rise to a decided division among the students, on account of his ultra conservative opinions and practice. A torchlight procession was arranged in honor of his eminence, but a very strong party of students protested against it, and held aloof from it; and these future priests were bold enough to say in a published address that in the bosom of the growing clergy a power is maturing that is not willing to suffer in silence the interference of a few ultramontane zealots in the life or the doctrines of the church, nor inclined to be frightened by childish insinuations nor hights of long phrases. Thus the majority of the Catholic students of Bonn to a man with the citizens who had presented the famous address signed by a score of the university teachers, lawyers, physicians and municipal authorities of the town. So the ecclesiastical lord met with a very poor time in Bonn all around.

In the Grand Duchy of Baden, according to the most recent accounts, "Catholic unions" are everywhere being formed to repel ultramontane aggression; and in Breslau a brilliant ovation was recently offered to the chief prefect, as an antidote for an insult heaped upon him by priestly powers. An address of confidence contained thousands of signatures, to many of which was attached the addition of "Catholic." But, as it would seem, in accordance with the old saying, that extremes meet, nowhere is this agitation greater than in Austria, where, but a few short years ago, priests and convents ruled supreme. Accustomed to authority and the exercise of unlimited power, Austrian prelates have found it extremely difficult to adapt themselves to the new order of things, and submit to the decrees of civil rule. Among the most assuming of these clerical lords was the Bishop of Linz, a grand old town on the Danube, with its lordly castle, and still more lordly convent. He absolutely refused to bow to civil control, and he was accordingly arrested, tried, convicted and committed to prison. As this whole proceeding was more to show the clergy the intentions of the State, than anything else, the Emperor immediately pardoned the Bishop; but the latter, desirous of becoming a martyr, resolved to suffer the indignity of fine and imprisonment, in the hope of rousing up the church to a sense of its fallen condition.

But neither he nor his compeers seem to receive much sympathy. The abuses of the church have been too great, even for an ignorant Catholic laity, which seems now prepared to rise and throw off the terrible incubus; while the nation at large demands the suppression of the convents, and the expulsion of the Jesuits.—Northwestern Advocate

ANECDOTES OF EDWARDS.

The great theologian was extremely absent-minded, carrying about with him everywhere the atmosphere of the study—treading on clouds and breathing rarefied air—in the world, but not of it. A country parishioner, at a loss for topics of conversation, once asked him how many cows he possessed. "Really I do not know," he replied: "but Mrs. E. could tell you. She attends to all such matters." Now, Mrs. Edwards was fully as pious as her husband—almost a religious devotee. She was oftener in her closet than in her dairy; yet she knew how many cows paid tribute to the house of Edwards, which fact would seem to prove that a woman may be eminently spiritual and eminently practical at the same time.

The lofty abstraction of Mr. Edwards caused frequent domestic disarrangement, sometimes playing strange pranks with his costume, especially with his wig; while his profound ignorance of ordinary worldly affairs gave rise to many ludicrous incidents. One of the old family stories runs thus:

Mr. Edwards having preached for a poor country parson, found to his dismay on Monday morning that there was no man or boy about the premises to bring up his horse for him. On his confessing that he knew little about such things, his hostess, on "hospitable cares intent," went to the pasture, caught and bridled the staid, clerical steed, and led it up to the gate. Then, as she was about to put on the saddle, the great minister came out and gallantly protested against her performing any further groom service, saying he thought he could manage the rest for himself. So she went about her household affairs.

The good man was a long time wrestling with the mysteries of that saddle; but just as the lady was going again to his assistance he came in to get his saddle-bags and take his leave. "Ah! Mr. Edwards, how have you succeeded?" she asked. "Very well, madam, I thank you," he replied; "but it was unusual employment for me, and I was a little awkward. I had some difficulty in properly adjusting the straps and buckles; and there is still a superfluous piece of leather, the office of which I cannot divine. But it hangs over the neck of the animal, and will not incommode me at all."

The lady, somewhat curious, stepped to the gate to find Mr. Edwards had put on the saddle to crupper, the pommel pointing backwards; perhaps with a vague idea that, as he was going back to Northampton, that was the way to do it. The superfluous piece of leather was the crupper.

EARLY MARRIAGES.—At no period, perhaps, in their life, do young men need the inspiration of virtuous love, and the sympathy of a companion in their self-denying toil, as when they enter the battle for their own support. Early marriages are permanent moralities, and deferred marriages are temptations to wickedness. And yet every year it becomes more and more difficult, concurring with the reigning ideas of society, for young men to enter upon that matrimonial state which is the proper guard of their virtue, as well as the source of their courage and enterprise. The battle of life is almost always at the beginning. Then it is that man needs wedlock. But a wicked and ridiculous public sentiment puts a man who is in society, or out of society, for that matter, largely on the ground of condition, and not of disposition and character. The man who has means wherewith he can, visibly, live amply, is in good society as a general rule. The man who has virtue and sterling manliness, but has nothing withal external to show, is not usually considered in good society. Ambitious young men will not, therefore, marry until they can meet their expenses; but that is deferring for years the indispensable virtue. Society is bad where two cannot live cheaper than one! and young men are under bad influences who, when in the very morning of life, are better fitted than at any later period to grow together with one who is their equal and mate, are debarred from marrying through scores of years from mere prudential considerations, and the life is sacrificed to the pocket. They are tempted to substitute ambition for love, when at last, over the ashes and expiring embers of their early romance, they select their wife. It is said that men who wait till they are forty or forty-five years of age select prudently.—Alas, for the wife who was not first a sweetheart!

FARM AND GARDEN.

KEEPING GRAPES.—The Rural New Yorker says: "Simply gather when ripe and put for a few weeks where the air, under shelter, without artificial heat, has access to them, say in a chamber, or any outroom with the windows open. The object is to dry the stems. Then there will be no evaporation, and consequently no mold, or but little at the worst, as the grape itself loses but little moisture, its thick skin holding it. Then put in dry wooden boxes, covering the boxes. Lay dry leaves or cotton in the bottom, and cover with the same for a second tier of grapes. Two are enough, or at most three. This way is varied somewhat. By it we keep our Clintou's nice and winy till May; March and April find them prime. Put boxes in a cellar where the temperature is uniform and cool, with the medium between the dry and damp, such as will keep fruit generally.

Another Mode.—Take boxes the size of candle boxes; nail pieces across the ends to lay slats on; put in the bottom a newspaper. Have ready a dish of hot sealing wax, and dip the ends of stems in this. Put a layer in the box carefully, then a paper, then put in your slats, then a paper, then grapes again, and so on till full, not more than three layers in a box. Nail up tight; keep in a cool, dry place until cold weather, then place in a dry cellar. Grapes in this way will keep till March.

MEDICINAL PROPERTIES OF CELERY.—I have known many men, and women too, who from various causes had become so much affected with nervousness that when they stretched out their hand they shook like aspen leaves on windy days, and by a daily moderate use of the blanched footstalks of celery leaves as a salad they became as strong and steady in limbs as other people. I have known others so very nervous that the least annoyance put them in a state of agitation, and who were almost in constant perplexity and fear, who were also effectually cured by a daily moderate use of blanched celery as a salad at meal times. I have known others cured by using celery for palpitation of the heart. Everybody engaged in labor weakening to the nerves should use celery daily in season, and onions in its stead when not in season.—Correspondent Prairie Farmer.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise.

OUTSTANDING MONEYS.

We fear lest in the abundance of good things in which our brethren are now rejoicing they forgot that religion has a body as well as a soul. We are receiving a good many reports of District Meetings and of revivals, and are prepared to rejoice with those who rejoice; and, on the other hand, we hope that our brethren are ready "to weep with those who weep." We are not receiving either new subscribers nor money in any degree that indicates spiritual prosperity anywhere.

Moreover, we respectfully request those of the preachers who have money belonging to us to favor us with a remittance. Send it registered or in a post office order. We live by daily bread.

TO AGENTS.

It will greatly simplify matters if brethren who have funds in hand which they propose to pay over at Conference, will send them forward at once. We wish to enjoy preaching at Conference, and not be compelled to occupy the whole time in collecting bills.

Camp and Protracted Meetings,

The interest that has recently marked these special means does not abate. Everywhere the glory of the Lord is rising in beauty and power. All of our Israel is stirring and getting ready to follow the mysterious cloud of the Holy Spirit. News from Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana show that most gracious outpourings have been vouchsafed at points widely apart on the same day by that Holy One who works according to His own will. These inspiring evidences of the vitality of our church and ministry should be to us the occasion of profound gratitude to God, and of earnest, constant prayer. There are places that have suffered a long drought of the Holy Spirit; everything is sere and withered; the hearts and lips of the old and the young are parched; and their cry is, Oh, that we might taste of that stream that makes glad the City of God! Like a farmer who waits for rain and watches the cloud that is now refreshing his neighbor's land, but threatens to pass away without visiting him, so do we wait and look.

THE New Orleans District Meeting will be held in the Carondelet street church of this city, on the first Saturday and Sunday in November—6th and 7th.

J. C. KEENER, P. E.

SUPPLY AND DEMAND.

—Not of cotton, but of preachers. Our standpoint may not be the best to judge of the relation there is between the pulpits of the South and the men there are on hand to fill them. But it is evident that the war has driven a considerable number of valuable ministers from the itinerancy to various local employments, who have not reappeared since the peace. They are still struggling with the debts and financial complications which that event superinduced. The same trouble which drove men out of the pulpit kept young men from entering it; so that the usual supply was cut off during the years of actual war and those which immediately succeeded. The poverty of the people was or seemed to be so deep as to put the maintenance of churches out of the question. The result of all which is that now, when our crops promise an abundant support for this vital interest, there is a scarcity of men fitted for the work of preaching.

We may at least speak for Louisiana. A great change has come over her so far as ability to support preachers is concerned. Circuits which last year would or could do nothing in the way of support, are this year asking earnestly for a preacher. We know of some single appointments on such works which now offer to maintain a man. Our Bishops would do well to note this. We want several transfers for both the sugar and the cotton regions of this Conference. We hear of no young men who are coming up. They have been driven to the farm and the counting room, until the zeal for God's work has been chilled in them.

A dearth of preachers is a calamity as great as any we have yet suffered. Every support which can resist those influences which are viciously at work breaking down society is now doubly important, and should be strengthened. We used to think the judiciary one of the great bulwarks of the country; but it is so no longer, if we may credit the testimony of those who seek justice at the courts. With the disregard of the Constitution there seems to be a general giving way among all classes of public men. If we would find honest men we must search for them among those who ask for no office or favor from the government or the State. Wherever the "salt" of this people is, it is surely not in office. In this state of affairs we cannot spare one church, one Sabbath school or one minister—no person who either reads or teaches or obeys the Ten Commandments. Our own belief is, that as a class no men have done more to uphold the laws of honesty, of purity, and of obedience to God and man, than the itinerant Methodist ministry. They have been present at the laying of the foundations of society all through the South and West, and they have ever placed the Bible at the bottom of the structure. They are still the unflinching advocates of the truth as it is in Jesus. No class of men have been freer from extravagances of theory or action, or truer as patriots to the fortunes of the people among whom they were bred and born. No class of men have done so much work at so slight a cost as they. After a century of labor they show no fortunes amassed or incorporations that threaten the welfare of the community by the weight and power of their accumulations. Without vows of poverty, they encounter the world literally as their Master did before them, seeking not the goods but the souls of men.

Every one who wishes well to his country cannot, therefore, look with indifference upon any falling off in the supply of these godly servants of Christ. Much more do we, who believe that by them, to a very great degree, is the kingdom of Christ to be advanced, look most earnestly in the direction of the revival meetings now progressing for a fresh supply of young men who shall be called to the work of the ministry. It should be a specific object kept in view by all who partake of those glorious outpourings of the Spirit to pray that the Lord would send forth more laborers into His vineyard.

Southern Methodist Germans in Texas.

The communication from the Rev. F. Vordenbaeumen, which we give below, comes opportunely. He is one of our most efficient and influential German preachers. After the proceedings of the German District Meeting, which we published two weeks since, the whole Southern Church will be glad to read the reassuring statements of Brother V. As to the matter of "missionary money," Dr. McFerrin can speak for himself; but our German friends in Texas suffered probably as little from the events of 1860-64 as any other part of the church. We had hoped to make a collection among them for the "poor saints" in this "Jerusalem." We have the eloquent messenger already; he has a good cause; the spirit of an apostle stirs him; and he pants to go out into Asia Minor—the broad regions of Texas. It is with no little sorrow that we now hear that the "poor saints" are out there also. We have always had most invigorating accounts of the quantity of cotton that a single German Methodist there can make and pick out with no help, save it may be, that of his hardy sons and daughters. It seemed to us to be a sort of refuge where, if things got worse, one might go with the certainty of finding plenty of beef and bread, and a genuine "old style" article of German Methodism; and in fact that picture is so deeply fixed in our imagination that we think we shall send Brother Pauly over anyhow.

"OUR GERMANS IN TEXAS."

MR. EDITOR: Under this superscription you published recently certain resolutions adopted at our German District Meeting, prefaced by some very pertinent remarks. I am obliged to you for the remarks; but, sir, let me request you, do not pour out the child with the bath. "Our Germans in Texas," that is, a large majority of them, of whom I am a member, are as true to the Church South, our mother church, as you or any other Christian gentleman can be. It would, indeed, seem that some of said resolutions did not indicate what I now avow; but my avowal is nevertheless founded in truth. We, the majority of "our Germans," may have erred in acquiescing to certain odious enactments; but we deemed it, under the circumstances, a necessary evil. Secession was at the time making headway among us. An abundant influx of missionary money from a certain quarter had put the ball of ecclesiastical commotion in motion. Then suddenly, when least looked for, came the "episcopal diplomacies" promising good times to come. I admit that I at the time believed that a speedy reunion of the two Methodisms was feasible. Hence our efforts to initiate measures by means of which we could prevent a split among us. As matters now stand, believe me that "our Germans in Texas" are unflinchingly true to the church of our choice.

We are warmly attached to our American brethren in Texas. They have laudably built up and supported our missions thus far. I am sure they will not hereafter forsake us. But I think the church at large should, through its domestic missionary board, take charge of us, instead of as now being solely dependent on the one Texas Conference for maintenance. I wish you would bring this to Dr. McFerrin. If "our Germans in Texas," with our brethren in New Orleans, were organized into a mission Conference, under the guardianship of the missionary secretary, I have no doubt that we would then be enabled to extend our operations throughout all the Southern States. If we fail, others will begin to do it.

Yours affectionately,

F. VORDENBAEUMEN.

NEW BRAUNFELS, TEXAS, Sept. 20, 1869.

SOME people carry their hearts in their heads; very many carry their heads in their hearts. The difficulty is to keep them apart, and yet both actively working together.

PAPER MONEY VARIATIONS.

On September 23d the telegram was received that in the New York money market gold was at 160, and in fifteen minutes afterward that it had fallen to 138. This is one way of stating the fact that greenbacks had fallen to 160, and in a quarter of an hour had gone up to 138.—This so-called advance in gold began on Wednesday, the 22d, and continued throughout Thursday, and on Friday culminated in a financial panic. Our readers may gather some idea of the extent of these inflations and contractions, which partake much more of the nature of hydrogen than that of any known metal, from the estimate that in those three days over $1,000,000,000 in gold were sold and bought, the price running up and down thirty per cent.

There could be no greater evidence of the fictitious character of the currency of the country than this record of three days' work in the city of New York. This was not a change in the quotation of some fancy stock, but in what is gravely declared to be the true measure of all values—money. The stupendous fiction of making a cowry shell or a piece of engraved paper to be equal to either one dollar, ten thousand or five hundred thousand dollars in gold, when at the same time not one dollar in gold or silver can be demanded for it at the government counter, must be subject to all changes to which the human imagination is liable. This fiction at present enters more or less into all transactions of barter and sale, producing unsoundness and a corresponding want of confidence in all kinds of business. What merchant knows where he is when in an hour the profits of a year's trade can be destroyed by the dial hand of the New York gold room? Yet all these gold operations have really little or no gold in them. They are but huge paper transactions with gold margins. The gambling is not in gold, but in United States paper. The greatest gambler of all is the Secretary of the Treasury. It was for his accommodation mainly that the gold room was started. He is the great broker who uses the revenue of the country—so much of it as is in gold—to raise or to depress the "legal tender" issues of the government; so that we have the marvelous spectacle of a government entering the markets of the country as a competitor with every branch of home industry, and attempting to quicken or impede at will the flow of commerce. There can be no question that if the Secretary would go into the tobacco market he could control it, and that to contend with him and the backing of the vaults of the United States Treasury would be madness in any one. So, too, he might make a very serious affair of the shoe and leather business, or of the immense trade that is going on in plaster, phosphates and other manures—that is, if the Treasury "ring" should take a notion to operate in those values. He does not directly enter one of these branches of commerce and production, but indirectly he enters all of them. He does not interfere with the goods on the shelf, only with the money in the till. The Treasurer is like any other man; he uses the power which he finds at his command. The people have put it in his power to destroy the savings and the toil of a year in one hour. To maintain the arbitrary value of greenbacks the whole country stands a fair chance of bankruptcy. That this huge bubble of Treasury notes will burst is as certain as that mere credit is not gold, nor indeed anything beyond soap and water, the moment that it ceases to represent gold. Let our people stand from under. The hysterical heavings of the New York gold market during the past ten days look like the first symptoms of a greenback collapse. We subjoin an item:

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.—There are fresh symptoms of another panic, such as occurred on Friday last.

Stocks are declining heavily, and distrust and confusion are apparent on all sides.

The Gold Board have not resumed operations.

The counter price for gold is 130, and tending downward.

A failure of the Gold Bank is threatened.

Government bonds have declined.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

We call special attention to the Southern Methodist High School, which commences October 4, under the auspices of the several Methodist congregations of this city, in the basement of the Dryades street church. Mr. D. I. Rast, an experienced teacher, is the principal. He will be assisted in the German department by the Rev. J. B. A. Ahrens. The object of the school is to prepare young men for college, as well as to furnish suitable instruction for primary classes. We have many families in the city who wish for a decidedly Protestant school; and who are unable or unwilling to send their children away from home. They will find in this one what they are seeking. Having sent to Mr. Rast the past year, we speak confidently. The names of the gentlemen who indorse the enterprise are a sufficient guarantee of its merits and claims upon the patronage of our people. See advertisement.

TRINITY HIGH SCHOOL, AT PASS CHRISTIAN.—The Rev. William Cameron, A. M., specially under the auspices of the Presbyterian Church, opens his school at the Pass on the first Monday in October. The course of study will embrace all branches of an education—mathematical, English and classical—usually taught in the best schools in the country. We are glad to see a Protestant school planted on that lake shore. It is needed. We need schools all over the South to stem the tide of European Jesuits that has set in and threatens the very foundations of this Republic. See advertisement for particulars.

MESSRS. WALSH, SMITH & CO., GENERAL COMMISSION MERCHANTS, MOBILE. This house imports coffee direct, and are agents for various phosphates, land plaster, etc. See advertisement. When recently in the canebrake of Alabama we learned that cotton planters were at last waking up to the fact that every pound of cotton or other product sold is a pound of the best of the soil carted off; that the time had come when something must be returned to the land if the farmer would not wholly destroy its value. We heard marvelous statements of the results of an application of phosphe Peruvian guano to poor lands. It was proved by actual experiment that one-half the labor and one-half the land yielded as much when fertilized as the whole produced under the old method of farming. The planter, therefore, has the choice of putting one half the cost of a crop either in the shape of manageable phosphates or unmanageable negroes. The true policy certainly is fewer negroes and less land, if by them and the fertilizers an equal amount of cotton can be raised. We hope Messrs. Walsh, Smith & Co. will do a good business, for the sake of themselves and Alabama.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY.—Contents. The City of Brass; The Egotist in Life; Parlor Singing; The Foe in the Household; Garibaldi; Hunting in the British Isles; German Songs; The Brick Moon; Earthquakes of the American Continent; An August Pastoral; Pennsylvania Dutch; Wettstein; The Increase of Human Life; At Rydal; A Dredging Excursion in the Gulf Stream.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.—The first three numbers of this monthly are to hand. It is published at Charleston, South Carolina. Subscription price, $3 50. Address F. G. De Fontaine, Charleston, South Carolina.

We are so thoroughly Southern that we may be somewhat incapacitated for judging the literary productions of our own people. But we are impressed with the merits of the three numbers of this publication. The table of contents in each is unusually rich, and if the publishers can sustain the work at its present standard of excellence, they need have no doubt of the largest success. We shall give our readers a taste of its variety and spice next week, in an article translated from the Sanscrit, by one of its contributors. The contents of the last number are: The Political Crisis; Reminiscences of Public Men; Among the Ruins; An Irish Story; Our Early Authors and Artists; Rambling in Rome; Stories from the Sanscrit; China Music; Mental Delights of Early Life; Shoulder to Shoulder; Bearding the Lion; Confederate Blockade Runners; Editorial Workshop; Department of Science, Art and Discovery; Passes en Passant; Olla Podrida; Funny Graphs; Serious Illness of Miss S. Carolina; Odds and Ends for the Public at Large. The magazine has an efficient agent in Colonel W. S. Dogan, whom we had the pleasure of seeing in this office.

THE ST. LOUIS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE comes this week greatly enlarged. It has a broad, strong, fresh look, and is full of excellent reading. It evidently has the advantage of good editing and good backing. Its agents are diligent, and they are moving in a wide-awake region, where there are many white men to the square mile, and where every man takes a newspaper. As one gets into a latitude where the winter is long, and there is of necessity a good deal of indoor fireside life, the Advocate becomes a member of the household, and no decent religious family will venture to keep house without one. Sometimes two or three different ones are taken. It may be somewhat owing to this fact that the northwest part of our church is moving forward so grandly. We wish our St. Louis confrere success, ample and quick, in the shape of several thousand new subscribers.

TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.

We are indebted to the Nashville Advocate for the following items of the session of this Conference. It must have been a joyous reunion of godly men.

The fifty sixth session of the Tennessee Conference was held in Murfreesboro, September 15-22. Bishop Paine presided. Fifty-one years ago he was admitted into the Tennessee Conference, of which he remained a member till his appointment to the episcopate in 1846. He is therefore at home in this body. We need not add that he is greatly loved and revered by the members. Only one who joined the Conference when he did, besides himself, now survives, the venerable Dr. Maddin, who was present at this session. Dr. Young, of course, was elected secretary, and Messrs. Jackson, Moody and Vick, lay delegate, assistants. There were fifty-two lay representatives entitled to seats in the Conference, and most of them were in attendance, and rendered valuable assistance in the business of the session. Such men as Judge Wood, Colonel House, General Palmer, Jones, of Pulaski, Dibrell, Cook, Holder and Harris, (who were elected delegates to the General Conference,) Morgan, Vick, Webb and others, are a great acquisition in any deliberative body. The Conference was honored with the attendance of several distinguished visitors, among whom we may notice the book agent, who was received with great kindness, and his advocacy of Publishing House interests listened to with marked attention. Dr. Anderson, president of Florence Wesleyan University, made a fine address in the interest of that promising institution, which was received with marked favor. So was a speech of Dr. Wiley, in the interest of Emory and Henry College. The doctor's visit, including his speech and sermon, and his sermons on Sunday in Nashville, will not soon be forgotten. They are spoken of with great satisfaction. The Rev. J. K. Stringfield, also of the Holston Conference, accompanied the doctor, both to Murfreesboro and Nashville, and preached in both places. Dr. Munsey was also in attendance, though in infirm health. He delivered a discourse on Sunday morning to an immense audience, which we will not attempt to describe—it was perfectly sui generis, and fully sustained the high reputation of this wonderful orator. His theme was the eternity and immutability of God.

* * * * *

We trust Dr. Munsey's health will improve, so that he may be able to visit every part of the connection, not merely to gratify the curiosity of the people, who wish to hear him, but to promote the interests of Foreign missions, which he has been sent forth to advocate, and which lie very near his heart. His address to the Conference, on this subject, produced a most powerful effect.

From the minutes, furnished us by the courteous secretaries, we gather the following items:

Admitted on trial, T. B. Fisher, S. A. Ellis, I. G. Gross, L. E. Whitten, W. J. Hale, J. W. Hill, W. M. Doyle, R. T. Roland, A. Brown.

Died, T. N. Lankford, W. Randle.

Number of members, forty-one thousand nine hundred and seventeen white; four hundred and ten colored; four hundred and thirty-six local preachers. Baptized, two thousand two hundred and forty-five adults, eight hundred and fifty-four infants—sadly imperfect reports.

Contributed for domestic missions, $2,601 60; foreign, $1,565 35.—Collected for superannuated preachers, widows and orphans, $2,605 61—nearly all that was required.

The next session is to be in Pulaski.

DELEGATES TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.—Ministers: John B McFerrin, A. L. P. Green, John W Hanner, Robert A Young, S. P. Whitten, R. P. Rawson, E. E. Pitts, Adam S. Riggs. Alternates: Thomas Maddin, Joseph B. West, John F Hughes. Laymen: Hon. John F House, Hon. William B. Wood, Major T. M. N. Jones, William F. Holder, General Joseph B. Palmer, General George G. Dibrell, Colonel Watson M. Cook, Colonel J. W Harris. Alternates: Colonel A. S Colyar, Dr M. C. Baldridge, W. L J. Wilkes, Dr. J. J. Dement and T. B. Miles.

MISSOURI CONFERENCE.

Prof. Stark left Chillicothe, September 18—the Missouri Conference being in session, under the presidency of Bishop Pierce, who, we are sorry to learn, was quite sick, so as to have to leave the chair on Saturday, and was unable to fill his appointment to preach on Friday night. The delegates to the General Conference are: William M. Rush, C. I Vandeventer, W. M Leftwich, B. H. Spencer, A. Monroe, ministers—alternates: J. H. Pritchett, J D Vineil, T. E. Thompson, J. O. Swinney, D. K. Pittman, Charles D. Epperson, James H Birch, laymen—alternates: Allen H. Voories, James L. Davis.

ST. LOUIS CONFERENCE.

White members, 18,538; increase, 1,764; colored, 187; decrease, 31; local preachers, 202; increase, 77 Baptized—infants, 760; adults, 1,208—a sorry showing. Why do not our ministers report their baptisms? Sunday schools, 181; teachers, 567, scholars, 9 698. Necessary for superannuated preachers, etc., $9 900; raised for them, $1,959 13. For domestic missions, $3,758 15; foreign missions, $196 50. Next session at Bonneville.

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS CONFERENCE.

Delegates to the General Conference—Clerical: M R Jones, R. Smithson. Reserves: J. W. Wescott, D. T Sherman. Lay: Dr. W. B. Ballard, John Alsopp. Reserves: J. M Charlton, I. M. A Drake.

Next Conference to be held at Kinmundy, Illinois.

Increase of church membership the past year, 1,630.—Nashville Advocate.

The Colored Church Paper.

The Colored Conferences desiring an organ, and having been requested to undertake the publication, I have consented to do so, whenever sufficient subscribers have been obtained to defray actual expenses—say one thousand subscribers.

The object of the paper will be to promote the moral and religious, and the mental and physical well-being of the colored people, and to aid in carrying out the policy, present and prospective, of the Southern Methodist General Conference in reference to those of them in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

TERMS.—One dollar a year in advance, the money to be refunded if the paper should not be published. The preachers, white as well as colored, will please act as agents. Address

S. WATSON,
Memphis, Tennessee.

A REMARKABLE trial has lately taken place in Paris, the culprits being a priest and a layman, who were engaged in the business of securing the saying of masses in behalf of the dead. There are very large orders sent in to the priests in Paris by the friends of deceased persons for the purpose of liberating their souls from purgatory. But it would take much more than all the time of the ecclesiastics of the city to say these masses; and accordingly it is the custom to hire priests in small country places to supplement this lack of service. These men undertook to act as agents between the city and country clergy, and would take orders to any extent for masses; but they seem to have pocketed the money, and cheated all parties, leaving the souls of the dead also to suffer. During eight months the accused agreed to have seventy-two thousand six hundred and seventy-nine masses said, and there is no proof that the engagements were met. This scandalous affair has brought new discredit on the Catholic religion in France.

ANY man who can bound out of bed as soon as he wakes of a mid-winter's morning is worth something; no fear of his not making his way through the world creditably, because he has the elements of a promptitude, decision and energy which guarantee success.—Dr Hall.

ENVY pursues its victim through life. It ceases to gnaw only when the grave worm, its brother reptile, begins.

THE conscientious person may often make mistakes, but he is on the sure road to excellency at last.

MARRIED.

In Evansville, Indiana, the Rev. ROBERT J. HARP, of the Louisiana Conference, to Miss AGNES M. PENNINGTON.

OBITUARIES.

REV. W. H. CARTER, a member of the Mobile Conference, after a painful and protracted illness from pulmonary consumption, died at his home in Clarke county, Alabama, on the 12th of August, 1869.

As might have been expected by his friends, his end was tranquil, peaceful and triumphant. It was the end of a good man, in whose life and labors were exemplified in an eminent degree that purity of heart and that rectitude of life and conduct so essentially necessary to the enjoyment of the favor of God here, and the Christian's rest hereafter. But I forbear to say more of this dear brother, as the materials for a more extended notice will be furnished to his Conference at its ensuing session. GEO. F. ELLIS.

Died, in Covington county, Mississippi, July 13, 1869, Sister SARAH AINSWORTH, consort of Brother J. B. Ainsworth, and daughter of William and Edia Laflin. She was born in Covington county, Mississippi, June 6, 1834, and departed this life July 13, 1869, aged thirty-five years, one month and seven days.

Sister Ainsworth was an exemplary member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. At the early age of ten years she gave herself up to Christ. Although she withdrew herself from the world so young, none ever found fault with her Christian walk.

One so good, so pure and so lovely was destined ere long to attract the attention of the true and the noble. In November, 1851, she was wedded to Brother Oliver Byrd, a brave and gallant youth, who yielded his life as a sacrifice on the altar of his country in the eventful struggle of July 22, 1864, near Atlanta, Georgia. He left to her care and keeping three fatherless babes. One had gone with its father to the spirit land.

On the 29th of October, 1865, she formed an alliance with her second husband, with whom she lived in peace and tranquillity until death removed her from earth to heaven. She leaves two sweet children by her last husband, and many relatives and friends to mourn her loss. Her last moments were spent in exhorting all around her to meet her in heaven.

J. M. WEEMS.

Died, at his residence in Carroll county, Mississippi, August 11, 1869, Dr. JOSEPH J. DAVIS, son of Lewis and Mary Davis. He was born at Laurel Hill, West Feliciana parish, Louisiana, June 11, 1813.

He was a graduate of Augusta College, Kentucky, then under the care and management of the great and good Bishop Bascom. Afterward he studied medicine and graduated in the Philadelphia Medical College. He practiced the profession of his choice a number of years in Madison county, Mississippi. After that he moved to Carroll county, and, being of feeble constitution, retired from the active duties of his profession until the breaking out of the war. All or nearly all of our physicians being in the army, and many of the families of our soldiers being left helpless, this good man would visit them and administer to their wants, without any compensation or expectation of the same, and frequently when he was barely able to travel.

He first married Miss Cage, a noble, good woman, who lived only a short time. He married his second and now bereaved companion, Miss Emily M. Lane, daughter of S. T. Lane, Esq., June 21, 1853, and by her has six living children left to mourn a father's loss, and without a father's love and care to shape their course through this unfriendly world.

Dr. Davis had been in declining health for a number of years. Being a very prudent man, and by taking great care of his sheltered constitution, he lived, we have no doubt, much longer than one of less care would have done.

The fatal hour at last arrived. He asked a friend if he thought his time had come. Being answered in the affirmative, and at the same time feeling his own ft ckering pulse, he raised his arms toward heaven and repeated that beautiful hymn:

"Father, I stretch my hands to thee,
No other help I know;
If thou withdraw thyself from me,
Ah! whither shall I go?"

His heart-stricken companion then embraced him, saying: "Oh! how can I give you up, my dear husband?" To which he, in an audible voice, calmly replied: "My wife, put your trust in God. Write it on a piece of paper, and put a seal to it, with my name on the seal. Put your trust in God. Keep it where you can always see it." His sister, Mrs. Lane, in his last moments asked him to say something to her, that she might remember him. "Raise your children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Previous to this she seemed anxious to know the future fate of her only brother, then dying. He, with an eye dimmed in death, but now for the moment animated, said: "Write, Victory, victory over death, hell and the grave, and keep it, my sister, to remember me."

Dr. Davis had been a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South for a number of years, and it has never been our lot to know a more sincere, humble, devoted Christian. He was a gentleman of culture and refinement, and truly one of the most conscientious men we ever saw in all his dealings with his fellow-man; and being a true and devoted follower of his Lord and Master, who could help but love him while he lived, and who could help but weep at the loss of such a friend, such a neighbor, such a brother, such a father, such a husband? But we weep not as those who have no hope. "Our loss is his eternal gain."

While around his dying bed, several days previous to his death, we felt more like we were in the company of an angel than a mortal, dying man; and we also thought that the greatest treasure this earth can give is the consciousness of knowing that we have done right.

Since death is an inevitable consequence, we thank God that it has been our happy privilege to witness the triumphant death of this Christian brother, for by it we have seen fully demonstrated and exemplified the teachings and doctrine of our divine and blessed Saviour.

JOHN R. APPLEWHITE.

The following is the action of the Quarterly Conference for the Winona circuit, Methodist Episcopal Church South, August 21, 1869:

WHEREAS, Our beloved brother, Dr. Joseph Davis, who was for many years a member of our body as class leader; and

WHEREAS, In the providence of God, after protracted illness and much suffering, he has been called out of this world; therefore,

Resolved, That in the death of Dr. Davis the church has lost one of its most ardent and substantial friends, and the world one of the finest illustrations of the Christian religion.

Resolved, That while we grieve to lose so good and useful a man, we bow to the will of our Heavenly Father, and feel assured that to our departed brother to die was gain.

Resolved, That we cherish fondly the memory of his deeply Christian spirit and exemplary life.

Resolved, That we extend to his bereaved wife and little ones our most hearty sympathy; and while we commend them in earnest prayer to the Divine Father, we will not be unmindful of our duty to extend to them the affectionate and watchful care of the church.

Resolved, That Dr. John R. Applewhite and the Rev. John A. Ellis be a committee to prepare a suitable obituary of the deceased, and forward for publication in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Resolved, That a copy of these proceedings be handed Sister Davis, and a copy furnished the editor for publication in the Wesonon Democrat.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

SOUTHERN METHODIST HIGH SCHOOL,
NEW ORLEANS.

The exercises of the first session of this institution will commence on MONDAY, the 4th day of October next, in the basement of the German Methodist Church, Dryades street, between Felicity and Enterpe.

In founding this institution our purpose is to supply the desideration long felt in this city, viz: an acknowledged Protestant School of a high order, in which boys and young men can be thoroughly prepared either for college or the active business of life.

The government of the School will be strict and firm, yet mild and parental in its administration. Thoroughness in the preparation of lessons will be uniformly required of all pupils.

The sons of ministers engaged wholly in the work of their Church will be received at half price; and young men preparing for the ministry without charge.

A Preparatory Department and an Evening School are attached.

In the selection of Teachers the greatest care will be exercised, not only in regard to their mental qualifications, but also in reference to their ability to impart instruction to their pupils.

For further information apply at the School.

THE "NOVELTY"

Is the only Wringer that has the

PATENT FLANGE COG-WHEELS
ON BOTH ENDS OF THE ROLLS.

The cogs on one end of a roll are set relatively between those on the other end of the same roll, virtually forming a

DOUBLE GEAR,

and thereby nearly doubling the purchase.—(The importance of setting gears in this position is not generally understood.)

Notwithstanding the rolls can separate freely at either end, the Cog-wheels cannot be thrown out of gear on both ends of the Wringer at the same time, unless the pressure is taken off.

The "NOVELTY" is fastened to a tub or box by a patent Curved Clamp, which has an equal bearing on a tub the whole length of the Wringer. Other Wringers are merely fastened to a stave at each end, and are thus liable to wrench the staves from their proper position and ruin the tub.

The Cog-wheels, Thumb-screws, etc., are nicely galvanized.

Buy the "NOVELTY," or at least take it on trial with any or all others, and keep the best. For sale everywhere.

FRESH TESTIMONIALS.

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

THE ASTONISHING FAMILY MEDICINE.

Saved from Death!—Read!

MONTGOMERY, ALA., June 28, 1869.

MESSRS. J. DARBY & CO., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: Yours of the 23d is before me, and has attention. It gives me pleasure to say that my belief is that your "Fluid," under the supervision of a kind Providence, saved the life of my youngest child, some six years ago, the child being wasted to a skeleton by the effects of teething, and an affection of the bowels therewith. I had never seen any one reduced so low to recover.

"Physic" had been tried in vain, until the physicians stated it was useless. A friend recommended your "Fluid," or Ozone, which he stated was one of the component parts of it. I did so, and the effect was like magic, plainly discernible in one hour in its good effects, producing quiet and sleep almost at once, where irritation and sleepless restlessness had previously possessed the child to nearly entire exhaustion.

I at first administered it in a small way, two and three drops in a spoonful of water, and increased it to six and ten drops. It completely checked the bowels, and had the happiest effect, the child rapidly recovering.

I have tried your "Fluid" on animals, with the same effect—both horses and cows—mingling more or less in water, and letting them drink.

I have no hesitation in saying I believe it a specific for Chronic Diarrhea, or any violent affection of the bowels.

I would not be without it in my family under any consideration. Yours truly,

WILLIAM FOWLER.

Mr. Fowler is a member of the celebrated Banking House of Fowler & Somerville, Montgomery, Alabama.

AND AGAIN!

Read the following letter from Mr. Frank Saunders, a well known citizen, and brother-in-law of the beloved Bishop Paine, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

189 BROADWAY, N. Y., July 29, 1869.

MESSRS. J. DARBY & CO., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: About the 10th of June last one of my children was taken with Scarlet Fever, in its most malignant form, and as soon as I could I procured your valuable disinfectant, "Darby's Prophylactic Fluid." Although it was several days after the appearance of the disease before I began using the Fluid, still, by a free use of it, the disease was not only confined to the one case, but the malignity of that case somewhat mitigated.

During the use of the Fluid as a disinfectant in my family it was also tried in a case of headache, and one of toothache, the results in each case being instantaneous relief. It was afterward tried in a case of Erysipelas, with almost equal success.

It is due to the merits of this compound, also, to state that the case of Erysipelas in question, being located in the feet, the Fluid, in its application, was brought in frequent contact with a troublesome cancer on one of the feet; to the utter discomfiture of said cancer, for, upon subsequent examination, it had disappeared, and though it was sought for diligently, it could not be found.

I hand you this, hoping it may be the means of inducing others of earth's poor sufferers to test for themselves, as I did, the great merits of this great remedy.

Very respectfully yours,

FRANK SAUNDERS.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE SAILOR BOY.

BY ONE OF THE AUTHORS OF "CHILD WORLD."

O sailor boy! this is the day;
We count each hour and each minute;
Our hearts are as light and as gay
As the ship that brings you in it.
The house is merry with flowers;
The hearth is blazing with light;
We live through the glorified hours,
And laugh, to think of to-night.

The minutes and hours slip on;
Alas! they have passed into days;
The beautiful rapture is gone,
And only a weary hope stays—
A hope that weeps in our eyes,
As silently, by and by,
Each blossom we gather dies,
And with each a hope must die.

O sailor boy! when will you come
To turn all our grief to jetting?
O sailor boy! sail to your home,
Our hearts are so tired with waiting;
Your mother's step is so sad,
Her heart is heavy with pain;
Oh, darling! she would be glad
To see your sweet face again!

And when we were eager with joy,
Adorning the room in our bliss,
And saying fond things of our boy,
Disputing who'd got the first kiss,
List'ning for steps on the path,
Smiling with tremulous lips—
The wicked storm in its wrath
Was slaying our ship of ships!

Our darling was dragg'd on the wave,
(Oh had we dreamt of it only!)
The sea is a wonderful grave,
So wide, and deep, and lonely.
With a wild and dreadful shock—
The wicked storm was so proud—
It drove the ship on a rock,
And changed her sail to a shroud!

And when he could never come back,
And our hearts were ready to break,
And even the baby wore black
For his dear sailor-brother's sake,
There came a hope and a cry,
A joy that was almost pain,
And our darling, who did not die,
Was clasped in our arms again!

—Good Words.

AN INFANT CHOIR.

There is a large infant school in London (in District W., not to make it blush by more defining,) where about an hour a week is spent in a performance of a somewhat novel kind. The tiny scholars number, on the average, as nearly as possible, two hundred, and they sit close, row upon row, head over head, on a properly-built orchestra. ("Gallery" is the name given to this in school parlance, but it is the same thing.) Not one of these children is more than seven years of age; many are mere babies a little over two; the mass are young "betwixts and betweens," ranging from four to five. It is quite dazzling to come all at once upon this compact mass of fair round heads, of smiling mouths, of bright, lively-looking eyes. It is a maze of movement—confined, as much as it is, to regular-placed pink white discs—out of which feature is distinguishable, and in which there seems uncommon likeness between all the little cheeks and chin-choppers, and but one mold for every wee button nose. It is only after a minute or two that form is developed. We can tell then high foreheads from low foreheads, noble outlines from outlines of too base type, red cheeks from pale cheeks, black eyes from blue eyes, faces as promising as angels' from faces from which the divine has all been stamped away. We can tell, too, the children of neat mothers from the children of slatterns; the child who is as yet "mother's" only one, with its sleeves tied up daintily with bows of riband, from the dusky garmented little mannikin, who is one of eight or ten, and who bears upon his face, as well as upon his corduroy, the stains of the streets that are his playground, his battle-field, his solitude and his refectory. It is quite evident, also, who are energetic little folks and who are indolent; who have a spark in them of true fire, and who will tread their way out coldly on a gray plain. But at the moment these characteristics have been noted the signal is given for the beginning of a song, and we have to use our ears as well as our eyes, since there is interest at once enough for all.

The little folks are singing Little Bopeep. So many millions of little folks have sung Little Bopeep (though it is scarcely a melody chosen by orthodox dominies for school,) that this would not be worth mention were it not that, at the words "Little Bopeep fell fast asleep," every one of the two hundred little heads droops snugly on the left shoulder, and every one of the four hundred eyes is closed. Then at the words, "She dreamt she heard them bleating," every little mouth begins to baa, baaing loudly, hasing low, till the little performers seem turned into veritable lambkins, and the wisest ewe would be deceived; and at the words, "Then up she took her little crook," each tiny index finger bends to mimic it, and catches at an imaginary sheep's leg, stepping it as it is attempting to run friskily away. The second song sung is the Song of Sixpence. In this, when the marvelous pie is opened, not twenty-four, but two hundred little chickbirds sing; leaving off the tune to whistle, chirrup, chirp and warble, as heartily—at any rate—as the original two dozen, if these had been really let out, uncooked, from their historical pastry-cage. When the queen eats bread and honey, so do the two hundred—vigorously, and with enjoyment; when the maid hangs out clothes, the two hundred hang clothes out too; and when that one impudent little blackbird deprives the young lady of her nose, they peck theirs off with such intention and aplomb the wonder is that they are not gone from their young faces in reality.

Then the young mites sing Sea-saw; not the rural one alluding to Miss Margery Daw, but that of cosmopolitan tendencies, embracing the great Mogul and the little Bashaw. They link all their little arms together in their low, close row; they rock themselves backward and forward in time to their song; and, when "The Bashaw sets up a great roar, and never leaves singing hee-haw, hee-haw," they enter into the amusement of his highness so energetically, and kick their legs up so high to do it, they get tipped over, even like the Great Mogul they mock at, and finish the tune out, many of them, on their supple little backs. Closely upon this, before they have hardly had time, laughingly, to pick themselves up, follows Oh dear! what can the matter be? and the little choristers apply themselves to it, when they are bidden, with undiminished relish. "Oh dear!" they cry, with four hundred little fists rubbed lamentingly into four hundred little eyes. "Oh dear! what can the matter be?"—and they cry it so lustily they make each other laugh; and when they come to the line "Johnny's so long at the fair," (he has been sent there to buy a wax dolly, in place of anything requiring more adult comprehension,) they make known how much they are afraid something has happened to him by sobbing and wailing and wringing their hands, till they want their pinafores to dap up their tears, and they enjoy the joke so much they ask to have it encored. After this has been done, they turn at a word into the most earnest little laundresses. To the tune of There is nae luck about the house, they sing:

Rub a dub dub, rub a dub dub,
Rub a dub dub away!
If you wish to have clean clothes,
Why, that's the only way!—

and four hundred little hands dip with a will into soap suds and hot water, and keep industriously washing in imaginary wooden tubs. In another moment they have changed again. "Dance the thumbkins, dance!" is now their melody, and every little pair of bare arms (most of them) is lifted up, and every wee thumb is raised as much as it can be higher still. It is an extraordinary sight, certainly. The rows of little arms are up and down, as the time takes them; and up and down again; and up and down quicker; and jumping, turning, twisting, stopping, in exact copy of the bigger pair that leads them on.—When the song turns to "Dance, the foremen, dance," (meaning the forefingers,) the little singers are so tiny it is a puzzle to more than half of them to make the needful change. When the song says, "Dance, the middlemen, dance," there is an effort to crumple up the other fingers and hold them prisoners with the Lilliputian thumbs; but when the song says, "Dance, the longmen, dance," and after, "Dance, the littlemen, dance," the attempt to disentangle those dainty little digits is abandoned utterly, and the reiteration, "Dance, the thumbkin, foreman, middleman, longman, littleman" (where each finger should be raised at the moment of his naming,) seems so magic to the little people, from its nimbleness and its rapidity, they drop their small arms down, heaten, and, instead of imitating, laugh. They are up again, though, at the refrain, "Dance them all together! Dance them all together! Together! Together!" and they are working up and down like little muscular machines, rather than soft young limblets capable of being tired.

It would never do to give a catalogue of all the songs these little choristers sing. Although they could go through every one of them without flagging, we would much rather not. We stay a few minutes more, whilst they all turn into windmills (crossing their little arms, and twirling them as near round as bones and joints will let them;) and into water-wheels (flying one fist over and over the other, too swiftly for us, ungiddily, to look at;) and whilst they become pendulums, and ducks, and bees, and ponies, and bluebottles, and cows, and donkeys; and then we kiss our fingers (French fashion) to them, and they kiss their fingers (French fashion) to us, and we shut the doors upon their noise and prettiness, and we are beyond it and are gone. The echo and the flash of it come back to us, though, as we walk away. What measurable good does it do? is our question. Under what schedule is the progress made in this trifling put?

Oh dear! is obliged to be our answer—none. Government inspectors do not recognize it; government grants do not take it into account. Then ought it to be allowed? Ought the management to waste the time upon it? If it is no good, let it be swept away!—if it has no purpose, let it be taken out and be killed! But after a while our feelings undergo a change. We think of a tiny two year old (a pretty little, gold-haired, blue-eyed thing) who had walked gravely from her seat in the front form and insinuated herself on to the teacher's knee. She was so young and tender she had no speech yet nor language; nothing but a pair of round, wondering eyes. She could not ask to be taken up; she did not plead—neither by a mute pull at teacher's dress nor by a coaxing or a roguish smile. She had simply gone, full of thorough trust and love, knowing she would be taken, sure of the sympathy, utterly void of any fear of a repulse. When she was in the lap, she had sat there contentedly, tranquilly; with no overbrimming joy, it is true, but passing her little fingers over the dress of the teacher, and touching the ornaments of it, and emptying out the pockets, and quietly possessing herself of their contents, with such security of acceptance, such certainty of being allowed, it had been quite a charming thing to see. And we come to the conclusion that this mere growth of trust, this mere exercise of confidence, is something, even if it is all. Take the heart of this little child as a sample of the others, and they could not be impressed, as this one's was impressed, thoroughly in vain. The little people will grow some day into men and women, and then the memory will cling to them of these simple nursery songs, and when they are teaching themselves to succeeding little toddlers—who shall look into their eyes and climb upon their knees—they will have their own childhood recalled to them, and will, surely, not be the worse for the recalling.—Once a Week.

SCIENTIFIC.

SPECTRUM ANALYSIS.

Beyond all comparison, the most brilliant and startling conquest which the human mind has yet made over the domain of nature, consists in that groupe of discoveries which is described by the term, Spectrum Analysis. It provokes amazement in every aspect. In the first place, the developments have been made with a rapidity that is almost astounding; the whole thing has been done in ten years. Dr. Wollaston discovered, in the year 1802 that, by looking carefully at the solar spectrum with a spy-glass, dark lines could be seen crossing it. In 1815 Fraunhofer, a German optician, rediscovered and made a map of several hundreds of them, and from that time they were called, after him, Fraunhofer's lines. But few supposed that there was the slightest possible significance in them; they were regarded as mere optical curiosities, having no higher use than to serve as landmarks for measuring the spaces of the colored spectrum. But in 1859 the two German chemists, Kirchoff and Bunsen, made the capital discovery that each chemical element, when burning in a flame, gave out a light that had its peculiar marks or lines, so that these lines could become a means of detecting the element. A totally new mode of chemical analysis was thus hit upon, far more delicate than anything hitherto known, and a method, moreover, which was capable of becoming a revelator of the constitution of the universe. Chemistry, at a single stroke, was fused with astronomy, and the universal agent, light, became the powerful servant of the laboratory.

At the very first step several new elements were discovered, the existence of which had never before been suspected. Examining with the spectrum the ash of some mineral waters, Prof. Bunsen thought he saw some lines which did not belong to substances already known. He then boiled down forty-four tons of Durkheim spring water, and got a couple of hundred grains of residue, from which he extracted two new metals, cæsium and rubidium, which resemble potassium. This rubidium has been since found in the ash of oak, of beet-root, of tobacco, coffee, tea and cocoa.

The spectrum analysis, however, is not a mere instrument of original chemical research; it has a "practical" applicability. The "Bessemer process," as it is called, is a method of converting cast iron directly into steel. Cast iron contains more carbon than steel, and it is converted into steel by burning this carbon out of the molten, white hot mass by a blast of atmospheric air. In this operation five tons of cast iron are converted in twenty minutes into five tons of cast steel. But the success of the process depends upon being able to stop it at just the right time. If continued ten seconds too long, or stopped ten seconds too quickly, the batch is spoiled. The flame, of course, is an index of the advance of the combustion, and, by watching it with the spectroscope, the appearance and disappearance of the lines indicate the exact moment at which the operation is to be arrested.

The spectroscope promises also to become a very valuable instrument in medico-legal investigations into the evidences of criminality. Blood-stains may be detected by it with extreme delicacy. Mr. Sorby has shown that the one thousandth part of a grain of the red coloring matter of a blood-stain may be detected with the greatest certainty.

But it is in its celestial applications that the spectroscope has performed its most wonderful achievements. The constitution of the sun, for example, which, ten years ago, was a matter of the purest conjecture, is now a matter of definite and positive knowledge. We know what it is composed of—its chemical constituents—not as completely, but with the same certainty, as we know the chemical constitution of the earth. Sixteen of the elements, with which we are familiar upon earth, are proved also to exist in the atmosphere of the sun. They are the following: sodium, calcium, barium, magnesium, iron, chromium, nickel, copper, zinc, strontium, cadmium, cobalt, hydrogen, manganese, aluminum, titanium.

The stars have been also subjected to spectroscopic study with equal success. They are shown to resemble our sun, their light coming from white-hot matter in their atmospheres. About eighty lines in the spectrum of the light from Aldebaran have been mapped, and it has been ascertained that the atmosphere of this star contains sodium, magnesium, hydrogen, bismuth, tellurium, antimony and mercury. Sirius contains sodium, magnesium, iron and hydrogen. About sixty other stars have been examined, and all seem to have some chemical element known on earth.—Appleton's Journal.

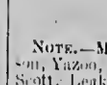
J. W. BLACKMAN'S



COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
Cor. Canal and Carondelet Sts.
NEW ORLEANS.

Open day and evening the entire year. Penmanship, Book-keeping, Mathematics and Languages are practically taught by experienced professors. Persons from twelve to fifty years of age attend. The instruction is private to each student. Persons who have neglected their education can here speedily qualify themselves for good situations in business. Some from the country may obtain board in the family of the principal.

Prof. R. B. Montgomery, of this college, has always won the highest premiums for Penmanship and Penal drawing, over all competitors, at all the State Fairs held in this city.

A liberal deduction made when three or more enter together. The principal has been a practical teacher in New Orleans since 1851. For Circulars, giving terms, etc., address

THE BEST COOKING STOVE

FOR WOOD NOW IN USE.

THE FASHION,

We call especial attention to this Stove, which has been produced at great expense, and combining all the new and important improvements; also to the extra height of the Oven under the fire chamber, the Patent Air Chamber Front Doors, and Patent White Enameled Iron Knobs, the improvements in the covers and centre pieces all of which have been covered by Letters Patent and are used in no other Stove. They are warranted to stand fire, or others sent free of charge in their place. We have all sizes of the justly celebrated Stove, both

PLAIN AND EXTENDED BACKS,

the Extended Back with cast iron Enameled Reservoir and Faucet, Tin Warming Closet, Gridiron Cover, etc. The part of the top supporting the Reservoir is raised so that the fire is above the top plate, instead of below, as is the case in most of the Stoves now used, and the heat is forced directly against the whole surface of the bottom of the Reservoir. The Reservoir being detached from the pipe, can be removed at pleasure, thereby forming a six-hole Stove—the back holes will heat as well or better than the middle ones. For sale by G. W. W. GOODWYN, which can be seen at 62 Camp street. The advantages possessed by this Stove over all the other Coal Cooking Stoves are so numerous, and so patent to every sensible observer, that it is only necessary to examine it in order to be convinced of its superiority.

All of the above Stoves are fitted with extra care, Oven Doors lined with tin, and furnished with William Resor's Patent Air Chamber, sliding front doors, patent centres, covers and White Enameled Knobs.

The operation of every Stove guaranteed.

Directions for putting up and using same accompany each Stove.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution in the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge of its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have again to notice a fair degree of activity in most branches of the wholesale trade. Our leading staple, also, has shown considerable animation, although the movement has been checked by the disturbance in the exchange market, caused by the course of gold and bills at New York. Prices, at the same time, have shown more firmness, and buyers were unable to operate at the inside figures of last Friday, but toward the close they fell back to their previous position. Very little has been done in sugar and molasses, and the movement in Western produce has been confined to a limited local and jobbing business.

Our accounts with regard to the cotton crop are more discouraging, and it becomes doubtful if the falling off in Georgia, Florida, Alabama, and considerable portions of Arkansas and Mississippi, will be more than made up by the increase in the rest of the cotton districts. Our accounts with regard to sugar, also, are decidedly discouraging.

The river remains about at a stand, being two feet below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the 24th ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi ..... bales..	7368
Lake	36
Mobile	542
Texas	61
Total	8007

On Saturday operations were restricted during the early part of the day by a difference between the views of buyers and sellers, as well as by extreme difficulty in negotiating foreign exchange, but at a later hour, under the influence of favorable telegrams from Liverpool, the demand became more animated, and 2,350 bales changed hands at irregular prices, with the advantage on the side of the factor; low middling closing at 25¾ to 26c., and middling at 26¼ to 26¾c. On Monday the movement was again checked by the unsettled state of exchange, but the inquiry was more general, and the indications were that with the ample supply offering, a large amount would have been done could buyers have obtained a concession of ¼c., which factors refused to admit. The sales were consequently confined to 1,825 bales, while prices were fully maintained. On Tuesday the market opened with a good inquiry, and more stringent pretensions on the part of factors, but after the receipt of the gold telegrams from New York, at meridian, buyers found they could operate at easier rates, the demand became more animated, and the business summed up 2,210 bales, mostly at prices ¼c. under Monday's figures. The movement was materially restricted by the difficulty of passing foreign exchange, and the sales were principally for the North.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 6,385 bales, taken for the North, France and Great Britain.

The receipts proper since Friday evening comprise 7,404 bales, against 3,003 during the corresponding period last week, and 9,061 last year. Receipts proper since the 1st instant, 29,803 bales, against 40,360 last year.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	— to —
Good ordinary	24½ to 25
Low middling	25½ to 25¾
Middling	— to 26¾
Strict middling	26¼ to 27

SUGAR.—The stock of Louisiana sugar is very small, and the demand is restricted in consequence. Job or resales are being made at 12½c. per pound for good common, 12½c. for fair, 13¼ to 13½c. for fully fair, and 14½c. for prime. City refinery sugar is selling at 15½ to 16¼c. per pound for yellow clarified, and 16½ to 17c. for white.

MOLASSES.—There is little or no plantation molasses on the landing.

MONETARY.—Gold opened at 134 to 135, and after selling as low as 132½ closed at 133 to 134.

Operations in silver have been of moderate extent, the only sales reported being $1,500 in American half dollars at 132½ and 133, and $850 at 129 to 132½. American half dollars are quoted nominally at 131½ to 132½, and Mexican dollars 3 to 3¼ premium in gold.

We have heard of but little movement in stocks, the only sales reported being 100 shares Bank of Louisiana at $1, and 10 shares Carrollton Railroad at $89 50, and 100 Canal Bank at $47.

READVILLE SEMINARY.

This is a private institution, with its number of pupils limited, and as authorized by the Legislature of Louisiana to confer degrees, diplomas and literary honors. It was in successful operation from 1843 until interrupted by the events of the war in 1862; and reopened January, 1867.

Teachers of a high grade of talent and merit are in charge of the different departments—English, Ancient and Modern Languages, Music, Painting, etc.

Pupils charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session. All pupils received with the understanding that they are to remain and attend the examination at the close of the session in which they enter, and no deduction made on the bills for absence, except in cases of protracted illness, when the loss may be divided between the institution and the patron.

In her outfit each pupil should be provided with toilet boxes, towels, napkins, she is, pillow cases and blankets or comforts. She should also bring knife, fork, spoon, cup and napkin ring.

All articles and clothing brought to the Seminary should be distinctly marked, lists of which should be permanently placed on some part of the trunk convenient for reference. The scholastic year commences October 1 and ends in July.

EXPENSE.

Board and tuition per year..... $275 00
The Modern Languages a small extra charge.
Music, per year..... 75 00

Payment is due a half session in advance.

Monthly reports of the studies, health and general deportment of the pupils are sent to the parents or guardians at a distance.

The main Seminary building, recently destroyed by fire, will be replaced by one of ample accommodations, now in process of construction, which will be ready for the reception of pupils at the opening of the next session.

E. A. GRANT, LL. D., PRINCIPAL.

This institution occupies the large and elegant building lately known as Grant & Butler's School. The grounds are situated on sixth street, between Walnut and Chestnut streets, and extend back to Centre street. They are elevated several feet above the street, thus making the large and beautiful lawn a most desirable place for healthful outdoor exercise.

The building, furniture and apparatus of the school are among the most complete and valuable in the West.

Experienced teachers, residing in the institution, will devote their time to the moral, intellectual and physical improvement of the pupils.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3.—Letters from Cuba, received here yesterday, confirm previous accounts of insubordination and treachery in the Cuban army.

General Cespedes and General Quesada are untiring in their endeavors to harmonize the conflicting elements, but without success. The Americans are anxious to get away. They report that every promise made them before leaving New York has been violated, and the representations of the state of affairs on the island are entirely false. The Americans who have escaped describe the condition of their comrades as most piteous. They are compelled to take the front of all contests, and receive no quarter from the Spaniards. The wounded who, in the exigency of battle, are left upon the field, are invariably murdered. To this is to be added the almost daily assassinations of their comrades by those whose independence and liberty they were induced to volunteer to assist in securing.

Several engagements have taken place, in all of which the Spaniards have been defeated, and in each of which Americans have lost largely. These fights are stated to have been unimportant in their result as affecting the conclusion of the war.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, Oct. 5.—The Evening Post says, referring to the Sun's attack on Grant and Corbin, who married Grant's sister, in connection with Corbin's taking to Washington a certified and indorsed check for $100,000 in gold, which he did not bring back, that Corbin, who is severely sick, is preparing a statement in reply.

Fisk and Jay Gould have notified Corbin that unless he settles the differences on gold and stocks ordered by himself and associates, amounting to half a million, that legal proceedings will be commenced.

The sheriff has attached Fisk's Opera House, valued at $1,000,000.

The Tribune says: Letters have been received here from many Americans in the field, and thus far no word has been written by them indicative of a desire to leave the island until the war shall have resulted in victory for the Cuban cause.

MISCELLANEOUS.

WILMINGTON, Oct. 4.—The privateer Hornet, alias Cuba, appeared off Smithville, on Saturday evening, flying the Cuban colors. It has been definitely ascertained that she has two hundred men and thirty officers aboard; a majority of the latter are ex Confederates. Her armament consists of eight heavy guns. She yesterday anchored inside the bar and sent the engineer and purser to the city to secure a supply of coal, that which was taken aboard off New York not being adapted to quick movement.

Suspicions being soon aroused, the officers, after engaging a supply of coal, returned to the vessel.—Without making arrangements to get the coal aboard, they left this city last night, about twelve o'clock, for Smithville, thirty five miles below this city, in small rowboats. Collector of Customs Rumley chartered the steam tug Alpha, this morning at four o'clock, and having placed in his hands a United States deputy marshal's warrant, issued by the United States commissioner, placed him aboard with a part of the customs force, with orders to detain the privateer until further orders. Colonel Frank, commanding the United States troops at this port, is expected to co-operate with the deputy marshal, and to use force, if necessary. The Alpha has not returned, but further intelligence, by telegraph, reports that on her arrival the officers who visited the city were bold and spoke quite confident, saying that there was no process by which the privateer could be detained. The event creates much excitement and comment.

The privateer Cuba was, this evening seized at Smithville by the United States deputy marshal, and brought and anchored about half a mile below this city.

A number of the officers are now in this city. They are pointed in their declarations that there is no pretext under which she can be detained by the authorities any longer than it is necessary to have an investigation in regard to her armament and crew. The Cuba is a formidable vessel, and is represented as having great speed. She is now short of coal and provisions, and her machinery considerably deranged.

The following is a complete list of her officers: Commodore, Edward Higgins; Commander, Thomas S. Dorain; Lieutenant Commander, David A. Tilfaw; Navigating Officer, Lieutenant C. W. Reed.

RICHMOND, VA., Oct. 5.—The Legislature convened to-day with a full attendance. In the House a temporary organization was effected, with William McLaughlin, of Rockbridge, as speaker, and H. G. Jones, of Albermarle, as clerk. They adjourned until to-morrow, when permanent officers will be elected.

Bowden Wells, Republican, protested against any officers, temporary or permanent, taking their seats who had not taken the ironclad oath.

The Senate met, with Lieutenant Governor Lewis in the chair. No organization has as yet been completed; but it will be as it was decided at the caucus last night. Davis, old incumbent, as clerk; West Harrison, the old incumbent, as sergeant at arms; Minor, of London, as first, and Abraham Hall (colored) as second doorkeeper.

NASHVILLE, Oct. 4.—The General Assembly convened at twelve o'clock. The House was called to order by the Secretary of State, the former principal clerk having been elected public printer at the last session. Eighty members answered to their names and were sworn in.

As no organization of the General Assembly was effected, the election of United States Senator goes over until the 19th instant, under an act of Congress relating to such election.

There is an evident determination on the part of Middle and West Tennessee members not to let any offices fall to East Tennessee, and the members from that section are correspondingly stubborn.

MISSING BOAT PICKED UP.

The following telegram which has been kindly furnished us by Mr. Hynson, gives the gratifying information of the last of the Trade Wind's boats having been picked up:

PENSACOLA, Oct. 6.—To G. W. Hynson, New Orleans: Schooner Abbie E Campbell, Captain Dennison, picked up Trade Wind's boats with second mate and three men; landed them at this place.

C. L. LEBARON.

COTTON FOR GOLD.

We notice that the subject of selling cotton for gold has attracted the attention of the Chamber of Commerce. At their meeting on Tuesday a resolution was adopted, calling for a meeting of the merchants to discuss the propriety of such a course. The whole subject should be thoroughly and candidly investigated in all its lights and bearings, and the sense of our mercantile community sent forth to the planter. The various points of political economy, the laws of commerce and finance involved, are more perfectly understood by the more intelligent of our merchants, and their interests are so bound up with the planting community that they will no doubt be impartial judges. No political points whatever are involved in this question, and it is very unlikely that any respectable portion of the Northern people would for a moment attempt to interpose. On the contrary, the recent financial earthquake has warned the whole country of the dangers to be apprehended from a paper currency. The New York Shipping List, a paper of high standing, comments in this manner on the subject:

"The late convulsion, it is to be hoped, will tend to strengthen the teachings of those who have never omitted an occasion to urge a prompt return to specie payments. It will, at all events, serve to impress upon business men generally the fact that the present currency system is but an organized opportunity for the wealthy to enrich themselves at the cost of other people; that it doubles the risk of all kinds of business, and that it diminishes transactions by the uncertainty that must attend them. A sudden derangement of values in all kinds of business throughout the country, at the arbitrary will of a few individuals, is a calamity of such wide dimensions as to insure mischief to some, however much caution may be generally exercised in keeping out of its reach. There is but one remedy for the odious speculation which an irredeemable paper currency engenders, viz: a return to the true standard of values. So long as gold remains an article of merchandise simply, speculation therein is unavoidable and uncontrollable, and all the newspaper homilies upon the necessity for a better code of morals will go for naught"——

But the subject must finally rest with the planters, and some manner of laying the whole matter before them should be adopted, and should it be convenient, we would recommend to the Chamber to issue an address to the planters of the South, gotten up by able men, in which the whole subject shall be carefully and impartially discussed, with all the light afforded by the ablest financiers.—Picayune.

THE TRADE WIND DISASTER.

LETTER FROM CHIEF JUSTICE CORNER.

The following letter has been addressed to the New Orleans Picayune:

CITY HOTEL, NEW ORLEANS,
September 30, 1869.

As one of the passengers by the late Belize packet Trade Wind, which foundered at sea about noon on the 24th instant, I feel it incumbent on me publicly to acknowledge the generous hospitality and sympathy which, in common with all others in the boats, I received at the hands of Captain Beckett, of the Morgan line steamship Clinton, and all the officers of that ship, when we were picked up by them, on Tuesday afternoon, a considerable distance to the westward of the passes of the Mississippi, to which we had drifted after being driven off shore as we were approaching the bar on the forenoon of Sunday, by the norther that set in on that day. Nothing could exceed the alacrity and courtesy with which every assistance was rendered us as soon as the state of the case was understood, or the kindness with which our wants were supplied and everything possible done to alleviate our sufferings, which, after five days and nights of unrest, privation and incessant exposure to heat, cold, thirst, and a raging sea in open boats, were not slight, for which services all payment was almost indignantly refused, and I can, therefore, only offer the expression of deep gratitude which I feel and shall ever entertain for the kindness we so experienced.

I ought not to conclude this letter without speaking in admiring and grateful terms of the conduct of Captain Morrill, of the Trade Wind, to whose staunch and thoroughly seamanlike qualities and wonderful skill all with him, I am convinced, (under God,) owe their lives, for having no one in the boat capable of rendering him efficient assistance in navigating her, he had to be almost unremittingly at the helm, seldom able to snatch a few moments of rest, and during the greater part of the time steering the boat through raging seas such as I never before witnessed, and in which I could previously scarcely have believed it possible that any boat could live; but which are accurately described by, and vividly recalled to my memory the words of the one hundred and seventh Psalm, twenty-third verse: "They that go down to the sea in ships and occupy their business in great waters; these men see the works of the lord and His wonders in the deep, for at His word the stormy wind ariseth which lifteth up the waves thereof; they are carried up to the heaven and down again to the deep. Their soul melteth away because of the trouble. They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man, and are at their wits' end. So when they cry unto the Lord in their trouble, He delivereth them out of their distress, for He maketh the storm to cease so that the waves thereof are still. Then are they glad because they are at rest, and so He bringeth them unto the haven where they would be. Oh, that men could praise the Lord for His goodness, and declare the wonders that He doeth for the children of men."

Trusting that you will be able to find space in your journal for this communication, I am, sir, very respectfully yours,

RICHARD JAMES CORNER,
Chief Justice of British Honduras.

SPAIN.—HER KINGS.

The following interesting historical anecdotes are taken from the Edinburg Review, and are from works on Spain, under Charles II:

Charles V had his funeral rites celebrated before him. Philip II, shortly before he died, called for a skull, and placed his crown upon it. Philip IV went and lay in the nich destined for him in the Pantheon. So, too, a visionary sepulchral fancy animated the decaying brain of Charles II. He, the last decrepid relic of a great race, would descend into their mausoleum, and open their coffins, and look face to face on the chiefs of his race, who had worn the crown before him.

It has been said that Charles V was a warrior and a King; Philip II only a King; Philip III and Philip IV not even Kings, and Charles II not even a man. This successive degeneration of the race, still preserving the family likeness, is one of the most curious facts in history, and there can be no doubt that it was caused by the influence of the traditional habit of the sovereign, the inflexible rules of Spanish etiquette and the unchangeable monotony of royal life. But what is still more curious, is, that the Bourbon Kings of Spain became intellectually and socially the exact image of their predecessors. * * *

The consequence of being forced to do everything by rote, day by day produced a distinct set of mental weaknesses, which degenerated at last into absolute imbecility. Philip IV was said to act as though he were made of wood; sometimes at last he would not speak for weeks together and never smiled; even when he spoke it was said there seemed to be nothing movable about him but his lips and tongue.

The Oriental style of the Spaniards came from incessant contact with the Moors. The Arab guttural in the Spaniard is a singular fact in the history of language. In the days of Charles II the ladies took their meals squatting on the ground like Arab women, and apart from the men; Spanish women still in churches sit on the ground in Oriental fashion, and Oriental fatalism, procrastination, pride, indolence, habits of thought, contempt of books, book learning and statistics have deeply entered into the mental constitution of the Spaniard and characterize him nearly as much now as in the days of Charles II.

ST. JAMES.

St. James is the Elijah of the New Testament. Compare that grand account of the wild Tishbite, coming from the wilderness through the famine-stricken land to meet and to menace Ahab the King with the wrath of God for his cruel crime, with this passage in the fifth chapter, in which he denounces the selfish and the thoughtless rich: "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for the miseries which are come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten," etc.

Almost we hear, as we read it, the mighty desert voice of Elijah. We see in the Epistle of St. James, while breathing Christian air, the landscape of the Old Testament. And this sort of double sensation of the Jewish past, and of the early Christian present, which comes to us while reading this peculiar letter, is just the sort of impression which ought to delight an historian. Passing from this, look at St. James as the ethical preacher. His hatred of evil is not so much a general one, like that of St. John. He speaks to particulars. He is the prophet of the practical. He comes home to daily common life. He attacks vulgar sins, and calls them by their names. There is no finely shaded casuistry, no covering of evil with a veneer of excuse, no misty moral atmosphere. He lives in the daylight. He cannot endure a sham, an hypocrisy, a pretense of outward goodness when the heart and life are foul. He tears away the covering, and probes home clean to the wound beneath. He strips the jeweled robe off Dœssa, and displays her deformity to the horror of men. He adduces examples, he uses short and telling illustrations, to make his meaning obvious. He has the clearest head of all the apostles. He does not penetrate into the lofty sphere into which St. Paul sometimes ascends, or the still loftier region where walked the spirit of St John; but, in his own region, he is superior to both these great teachers.

We want, in these slipshod days, some one of St. James' temper. Religion wears easily too sentimental an air, has drawn art to her side, and is so decked out that men are half forgetting the awful vision of the Cross, proclaiming alike the suffering which is linked to love, and the stern aspect with which we must look at sin. We are shown, on the one side, religion—under the mask of holy contemplation—the exaggerated or the one-sided representation of the doctrine of St. John. We are shown religion under the mask of freedom—the doctrine of the liberty of St. Paul exaggerated into irreverent license of thought. We are shown religion as imprudent impulsiveness—the exaggerated caricature of the character of St. Peter. We want, in order to rectify these exaggerations, some man of St. James' temper; a cool, prudent, clear-headed, practical moralist—above all, a just man. It is asking much, for, of all qualities difficult to attain, and when attained, to use, justice is that which requires the most harmonious arrangement in the nature of the man.

And when we have got our just man, we want him to have boldness enough to speak the truth—not the truth which is one-sided, leaning too much either to mercy or severity—but the truth which springs from justice—which arises naturally in the heart of the man who, because his own character has all its qualities justly harmonized, can see where, in life around him, men have failed, or when have sinned, from exaggeration or from defect. Such a man was St. James, and it was well for the infant church that he was at its head. To none so well as to him—possessing such a character as we have indicated—could have been so well entrusted the presidency of that first great council and the decision of the first great religious social controversy.—People's Magazine.

The Conference Boundary Question.

We extract an item from the editorial correspondence of the Memphis Christian Advocate, which is important in this matter:

Immediately before my arrival the Conference considered and settled a question of general interest—one which has engaged much attention during the last year. The committee appointed a year ago to report to this session "an equitable line of division" of the Conference, met several months since, and their report was soon afterward published in the Nashville Christian Advocate, also in our paper. The report represented that "from various communications laid before the committee, and other trustworthy sources of information, it was ascertained that * * * the idea of making Conference boundaries conform to State lines seemed to prevail generally, * * * and that in all future changes of Conference boundaries it will exert a controlling influence;" and after declaring the committee "wholly unable to designate any line of division of the Tennessee Conference" at that time, they recommended the adoption of the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That we recommend that the Tennessee, Memphis, Mississippi, Louisiana, Mobile, and Montgomery, and any other Conferences interested, at their next session, appoint a committee from each Conference, consisting of two clerical and two lay members, to be taken from the delegates elected to the General Conference, who shall meet at Memphis, Tennessee, two days before the assembling of the General Conference, and agree, if they can, upon the lines and boundaries of these several Conferences, and the new ones, and submit their agreement to the General Conference for adoption.

This report was discussed at some length; but the most able, convincing and impressive argument against its adoption was made by the Rev. S. P. Whitten. An overwhelming opposition to the report was developed, and a motion to lay on the table received almost, if not quite, a unanimous vote. Thus the Tennessee Conference has put itself unequivocally on the side of opposition to "the idea of making Conference boundaries conform to State lines."

Progress of the Work in Indiana.

J Ditzler, writing to the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, under date of September 11, says:

I am happy to inform you that all is working well. The Indiana Conference may be considered a fixed fact. Half of the churches have voted, and so far it has been unanimous for the movement. The circuit in Ripley county and one in the south part of the State, near the place where our Conference meets, Owensboro, Kentucky, September 22, are the only ones of large membership remaining. Of these two, the large society at Westport, from all I saw of it in August, will vote unanimously, and I have every reason to believe the rest will follow.

On Friday night last Brother Harvey and I went to Waldron. We had a large congregation, though no society there. The next night we preached in Paultown, Decatur county, and here we met Brother McKee, the pastor; we have known him for more than three years. He met us cordially, and from there we returned to Mr. Cooper's pleasant residence in his carriage. Our cause meets with earnest favor among the best and most influential of the citizens. The outside influence in our favor is truly encouraging. On the Sabbath, having to explain so many things, the various ecclesiastical politics, etc., I had to preach two hours each time, three sermons, making six hours of speaking to large and most attentive congregations; at two of these societies we took the vote and it was unanimous. At Union chapel it will be taken next Sabbath. We stopped with Hon. William Majors, formerly Senator from Decatur county. We went to Galbreth's last night—preached—vote unanimous, and now I am stopping at the Hon. T. G. Lee's, where I will remain until Friday, preaching at Clifford each night. All we want here is energetic, pious and earnest preachers. We want some at least of those who come to aid those here who thoroughly acquaint themselves with the issues of the day, study the differences between the two churches, and the genius and spirit of each, and who can expand these principles and make them to be felt. The people say, only give us preaching; we will support; sacrifices we will have to make, and toil we must, but it is to save souls and build up our Zion. Brother Harvey attended me everywhere. I met Brother Reed, an earnest, old-fashioned singer of Zion, stayed with him and greatly enjoyed his company; he is a minister of some years. We have, Mr. Editor, only to expand our principles and the great object of our church, to the masses, to win them to our cause. We may easily have a Conference here in two years, numbering sixty or seventy preachers, with a corresponding membership. Look at Ohio; the same can be done there. Let the church meet the pressing demands of the day and God will enlarge her borders and strengthen her stakes.

Missouri Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South.

The Missouri Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South commenced its thirty-fourth session in Chillicothe, Missouri, September 15, 1869, Bishop Pierce presiding. J. D. Vincil was elected secretary, and E. G. Hendricks as assistant secretary.

ELECTION OF DELEGATES TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.—On the first ballot the following were elected: W. M. Rush, C. I. Vandeventer, B. H. Spencer and W. M. Leftwich. On the next ballot A. Monroe was elected. J. H. Pritchett and P. M. Pinckard were elected alternates.

ELECTION OF LAY DELEGATES TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.—At two o'clock P. M. the lay delegates to this Conference met for the election of lay delegates to the General Conference. Bishop Pierce opened the Conference, and announced the law in the case; but being under the necessity of meeting the presiding elders, he resigned the chair to Judge James H. Birch.

The following were elected delegates: J. O. Swinney, of Glasgow; James H. Birch, of Plattsburg; T. E. Thompson, of Palmyra; David K. Pittman, of St. Charles, and C. G. Epperson, of Macon City.

The following were elected alternates: Allen H. Vories, of St. Joseph, and J. L. Davis, of Gallatin.

CULTIVATION OF FLAX.—Mr. Peter Storm, who lives just outside the town limits, has a field of sixty five acres planted in flax, which is growing finely and will give a large yield of seed and straw. Mr. Storm has contracted to sell all of his flax straw at $40 per ton to the San Lorenzo Paper Mills, and other parties have agreed to take all the seed raised, at four cents per pound. One acre of land will yield from two and a half to three tons of straw, and about one thousand eight hundred pounds of flax seed. Thus it will be seen that flax raising is much more profitable than wheat growing. From the experience of old flax growers in this section, it is found that the foot hills or rolling land are better for the culture of flax than the deep rich soil of the lower portions of the valley. There is a good deal of land in this vicinity which is high and free from weeds—mustard, etc.—which lies idle for the reason that wheat cannot be grown profitably on it. Land of this description is well adapted to flax, and our farmers would do well to take advantage of this fact. Pajaronian.

HARVEST TIME.

The lengthening shadows leaving the green tea
Creep down the rugged rocks, and stoop to kiss
the sea;
Then hurriedly climb up again, and turn to flee
Back to the purple hill.
Up the broad path the reapers homeward go—
The little gleaners wander to and fro;
And from the valley, lying just below,
Echoes the tinkling rill.

The lindens, leaning over the green lane,
Are hung with samples of the golden grain
Caught from the fullness of the laden wain,
As it bore home its prize.
Their clustering leaves press the bright light away,
And so beneath reigns twilight all the day,
Save when some straying sunbeam, like a fay,
Peeps in with laughing eyes.

Beyond the harvest fields the rolling land
Slopes to the sea; toward the level strand
The waves riding proudly in to greet the sand,
Each bows its silvered crest.
Then rearing up, sweeps out again to sea,
Chanting upon their way sweet melody;
And so they rise and fall unceasingly,
And never are at rest.

Wrapped in a peaceful stillness nature lies,
As if, while gazing on the quiet skies,
She had looked past their depths and met God's eyes,
And in that gaze grown calm;
As if awed by the solemn sight she lay,
Or, fallen asleep, was dreaming time away,
Singing unconsciously, by night and day,
A reverential psalm.

Half veiled in golden light of shimmering air
The landscape stretches wonderfully fair,
No trace of paling beauty anywhere;
Nature is in her prime.
In richest robes the hills and woods appear,
The lakes and springs lie motionless and clear,
Ruled by the fairest queen of all the year,
Beautiful harvest time.

The silver river, winding through the lea,
The singing birds on every greenwood tree,
The music of the never silent sea,
The deep and silent wood,
Are never changing witnesses that He
Who made all these fair things so graciously
Is mighty in His love; and prayerfully
I whisper: "God is good."

Hushed for the night is labor's busy hum,
The patient oxen from the home croft come,
Their yoke unloosened, and their day's work done,
Down to the little spring.
In from the sea the fragrant breezes roam,
Bearing the scent of sea flowers freshly blown
And murmuring of their wild freedom home;
They gladden everything.

Like little lambkins hastening to the fold,
And seeking shelter from the night and cold,
Drift the white cloudlets to the gates of gold,
And enter one by one;
All day ranging about the quiet sky,
God's great wide pasture ground, stretched out on high,
They've wandered, and now weary homeward hie
Where gleams the sinking sun.

Into its rainbow-curtained setting place
The golden orb rides down with stately grace,
Slow sailing in the clouds its radiant face;
And lo! at its command
Longer the shadows fall on rock and tree,
From my sight fades the harvest plane and sea,
And twilight clasps its pale arms lovingly
About the peaceful land.

ROMANISM.—NO. 3.

I said: "Bishop, it strikes the Protestant mind as something singular that if Romanism is an embodiment of the most perfect expression of the love and wisdom of God, that its practical effects have not been better, and that it has not only been sadly defective, but positively despotic, persecuting and cruel." I then called his attention to the persecutions of the Albigenses, the Waldenses, the persecutions in France, and particularly the horrible and world-notorious massacre of St. Bartholomew, the persecutions in Ireland, the fires of Smithfield, England, and the horrors of the Inquisition in Flanders, Portugal and Spain.

He said these things had been exaggerated, and these persecutions and cruelties had been the work of civil rulers, who were often only nominally Catholics.

I replied that I believed it was historically notorious that those Catholic rulers who had been most renowned for their persecuting cruelties and inhuman atrocities were most under the influence of priestly advisers—Philip of Spain, Louis Fourteenth of France, and Mary of England, for example.

He said that Protestants had persecuted too, and cited examples.

I replied that Protestants admitted that those bearing their name had persecuted; but Protestants do not claim infallibility nor immutability; so we said those churches and rulers claiming to be Protestant, who had persecuted, had done wrong; that we condemned and repudiated their persecutions. But the Church of Rome claimed to be infallible and immutable, and therefore had the whole responsibility of these persecuting horrors permanently fixed upon her. I told him that it looked strange to Protestants that the best form of the best religion in the world had done so little for the people where it had long been dominant, and cited Spain, Portugal, Mexico and all South America; that I understood that these nations had made little progress in two hundred years; that their agriculture, commerce, manufactures, education and public morals were at a low ebb as contrasted with England, Scotland, Prussia, and the United States.

He replied that the church was not responsible for the results of ignorant and despotic rulers, and bad government generally.

I answered that it was generally understood that the priest exercised a controlling influence over Catholic communities, and over the rulers as well. But if this was a mistake in regard to other national communities, it could be no mistake in regard to what were known as and called the States of the Church in Italy. There Romanism had had a fair and full opportunity to show its character, and to work out its national social and moral results. There the head of the Church was the head of the State, and had been for a thousand years. All the offices of government were filled by ecclesiastics, and social and domestic life had been under their control. Education, in all its branches and institutions, had been controlled and managed by them exclusively for ages. And yet, leaving out something which had been done in a few cities in the direction of the fine arts, Italian civilization was the lowest in Europe—poor agriculture, poor manufactures, general ignorance among the masses, illegitimacy common, the highways infested with bandits, and the people oppressed with taxation. I said Protestants could not understand this, nor reconcile the high and exclusive claims of Romanism with these patent and deplorable results; that if Romanism was what it claimed to be, the true and only exponent of the religion of Christ, that all the best elements of Christian civilization ought to be best developed where Romanism ruled supreme; that we thought as this was not the case, but that the contrary was true, that it was a most damaging, and to our minds unanswerable, argument against the high pretensions of Rome.

He replied he was not sure that what we called progress was best.

I asked him if he meant to say that the state of things that existed in the Catholic countries I had named was better than the condition of the Protestant countries I had named?

He replied: "No, not that; but that much of our progress was not best."

So on this point we said no more.

VICES.—A recent medical writer states that vices of the American character may briefly be summed up as follows: 1 An inordinate passion for riches. 2 Overwork of mind and body in the pursuit of business. 3 Undue hurry and excitement in all the affairs of life. 4 Intemperance in eating, drinking and smoking. 5 A general disregard of the true rules of life and health.

SLANDER.—Look on slanderers as direct enemies to civil society; as persons without honor, honesty or humanity. Whoever entertains you with the faults of others, designs to serve you in a similar manner.

THE greatest of men live unseen to view, while thousands are not qualified to express their influence.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

SHUBUTA, MISS., Sept. 30, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: You can say to the friends of Zion that the good Lord is reviving His work greatly on the Clark circuit, Meridian district, Mobile Conference. More than one hundred have been added to the church since the 1st of July. The churches have been graciously revived, and the work is now in a prosperous condition. To God be all the glory.

WINNSBORO, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE, September 24, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: As I write we are engaged in holding a meeting at Magnolia church, which eclipses anything that has been seen in this country since before the war. Up to this date we have taken into the church thirty persons, and had a goodly number of converts, with such an interest manifested throughout the entire community as I never saw before in this country. To God be all the glory. We had thought that it was a thing incredible that God should revive His work in this part of His vineyard; but His arm has gotten Him the victory.

T. H. MCCLENNON.

YAZOO CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: God has graciously visited His people within the bounds of Yazoo circuit, Mississippi Conference. Since the 25th of July we have held five protracted meetings. At the other four the presence of the Lord was felt. The best meeting we had was under an arbor. At this place we expect, before a great while, to have a church.

At all revivals there is more or less of superficial work, and we would not exempt ours, but we believe that many were powerfully convicted, and some of them soundly converted. Many of the members of the church were revived, backsliders were reclaimed, and a number added to the church, many of them men and women of influence and stability. Thirty-seven persons have been received into the church—one of these rejoined; and twenty-five are now candidates for church membership—two of these have been members before. Several of the new members have established family altars. During our fourth protracted meeting I sent you one new subscriber to the ADVOCATE. I now send eleven more. Is not this a good sign? Is not this rewarding the messenger? Fraternally yours,

A. B. STEWART.

ANTANGAVILLE, ALA., Sept. 25, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: Antangaville and Ivy Creek is one of the stations in the Montgomery Conference, and co-operates two agricultural fairs with the respective names above stated.

We have just closed a ten days' meeting at the latter place, which resulted in ten accessions to the church, and eight conversions. The church was benefited greatly, and put back of meat in the strength of which they may go for the next forty days; and many, we trust, received seed in good soil, that in course of time will yield its fruits. For there was an unabated interest to the close of the services, both by the congregation and the mourners at the altar. The accessions were, with two exceptions, young persons, and members of the Sabbath school. We would have continued it longer had it not been for sickness in our family. We had no help at all but the church, which is the best help a man ever had in a protracted meeting, if it will work. I found more piety in my church than I expected existed there. May God yet bless us more abundantly.

Your brother in Christ,

WM. A. EDWARDS.

WETUMPKA STA., MONTGOMERY CONF., September 26, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: I have read with much interest, in your valuable paper, accounts of glorious revivals in many parts of our church. I would be happy, indeed, to inform you of one in this city; but alas! the sweeping fire has not yet reached us.

We concluded a meeting of three weeks, a few days since, without one accession or a single conversion. It was not for want of good scriptural, eloquent preaching, for my presiding elder, W. S. Turner, was with me, and he understands how to speak the right word in the right place.

Our principal object was to get the church awakened and revived. In this we were not entirely unsuccessful. The church has been without a pastor for three months, and consequently the members were rather lukewarm in their religious feelings. Though some were not revived, yet many were graciously blessed. I have wondered why we, too, could not be blessed like many of our churches. We prayed earnestly, and preached as best we could. But dark and lowering clouds still remained in our skies. Ever and anon a beautiful ray of light would burst through those clouds, but soon it would be obscured.

Our church here has suffered much during the past few years. Many of her strongest pillars are gone. Some of her once bright lights are now shining in other parts of our beloved Zion. I am persuaded there are some here yet that will never bow the knee to Baal. "Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines, the labor of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat, the flocks shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stall, yet will they rejoice in the Lord."

I cannot better give vent to my feelings than by using St. Paul's language: "Brethren, pray for us."

ROBERT NABUS, P. C.

DEMOPOLIS DISTRICT, MOBILE CONFERENCE

SUMMERFIELD, ALA., Sept. 16, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: Having just completed the third round on the district—Demopolis district, Mobile Conference—with a single eye to the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom, I propose to furnish you with a few items relative to the state of the church and the prosperity of the cause in our midst. And in the first place, the country is more hopeful; in fact the first gleam of prosperity since the dark clouds of war settled down upon the land—like the fall of death, is just beginning to streak the eastern horizon. Up to this time every department of business throughout this Southern land seems to have been groaning beneath the universal curse of blight and failure. Merchants, planters, men in professional life, teachers, yea even preachers, as far as money or even support was concerned, seemed alike doomed to sow the wind, and those who gathered up a little means from the heaps of rubbish all around, only saved it to see it turn to dust again before their eyes, and were compelled to take their station side by side with the poorest of the poor. No one at a distance has any idea of the poverty and deep humiliation which the ravages of war and the change of our labor system have brought upon us. But the wheel of fortune, I doubt not, has found its lowest point, and has begun to ascend. The present crop will yield a handsome profit, not that it is so large, or even larger than last year, but the people are mainly out of debt, and the provision crop is much larger. Consequently there will be a good deal of surplus money in the country this winter; and there being no negroes to buy, land will go up, and money will be easy, and once more a general tide of prosperity will begin to flow in upon this unhappy land; and I pray God it may turn to the good of the country and the prosperity of the church. Almost every appointment within the bounds of this district has been visited this summer by gracious revival influences. The first in point of time, of a series of meetings held recently, was one at Union town. Josiah Barker, the pastor, had abundant and efficient help at this meeting in the persons of E. V. Levert and T. F. Mangum. The meeting moved on most delightfully without let or hindrance for two weeks, and resulted in the ingathering into the church of about thirty, some of whom are heads of families, and all prominent members of the community, and hopeful additions to the church. One of these accessions I may be allowed to mention, on account of his father's high position in the church. I mean the son of Bishop Wightman, who is located near Uniontown, in the practice of medicine. God grant to make him a useful member of the church, and a comfort to his father, and I doubt not that every Methodist who reads this will say: Amen.

The next meeting in order was at Demopolis. This meeting was appointed for the District Meeting, and expectation was high, for we expected Bishop Pierce; but, alas! when tidings came that the Bishop "was about a great work, and could not come down, the mercury suddenly went down, almost out of sight." Considering our disappointment and some other drawbacks, we had a good meeting nevertheless. Brother Mangum, the pastor, continued it, with the help of several others, for ten days, and at the close added to his communion ten or a dozen, some of these also heads of families. Demopolis has always been a hard place on some accounts, but I consider the church here now on a better basis than ever before since my connection with it.

The next meeting I attended was at Marian Junction, an entirely new place, there being no church there, and no preaching until the present year. This appointment is one of five constituting a new circuit, and undertaken this year as a kind of experiment. The results of this meeting will be the establishment of a very respectable church at this point, and making the circuit no longer an experiment, but a fixed fact.

Another circuit, lower down in the district, Choctaw Corner, has had some good meetings. Rembert Hills has also been visited at one or more appointments, with revivals and ingatherings of precious souls. Orrville, also, has been the scene of the outpouring of the Spirit, and souls have been converted to God within its bounds, by the score within the last few weeks. Peach tree is another appointment not to be overlooked. Here, however, I suppose the brethren are holding off a little, and gathering up their forces for the coming camp meeting, where last year the slain of the Lord were many, and nearly a hundred added to the church as the result of one meeting. May the ingatherings this year be numbered not by scores, but by hundreds. And as somebody, as you say, Mr. Editor, has in bad taste invited the preachers, I now take the occasion to invite everybody. Before I close let me say a word for the schools at this place, Summerfield. The prospects are decidedly good. Some have already come in, and every house in Summerfield is occupied, and others are in demand.

FARM AND GARDEN.

WORK FOR THE MONTH.

October is usually a beautiful month for cotton picking, and the work should be pushed forward vigorously. When cotton is high priced, as at present, quality is a very important matter—nice hand picking in picking, ginning and packing will pay handsomely. The corn crop, in most parts of the South, will be short—let it be housed, as soon as dry, that none may rot in the fields. To make up for deficiency of corn crop, we would urge upon our readers to sow largely of small grain. Oats would do better sown in September, but they may still succeed well if sown at once. Break the ground well and cover with turning shovel; a little guano will make a very great difference in the yield. We pray, also, that ample breadth of land be given to the wheat crop; or, rather, we should have said, let an ample quantity of manure be given to it; for a few acres, well manured and well prepared, can be relied on with more certainty than a large number poorly prepared and manured.—Plow deep, but have a care especially that the upper layer of the soil be thoroughly pulverized. As all know, the wheat plant sends out numerous small fibrous roots. These slender fibres cannot force their way through hard, cloddy masses, whereas, the object of nature, in the arrangement of roots, is to make every part of the soil tributary to the growth of the plant. The manure ought, therefore, for a like reason, to be thoroughly incorporated with the soil, particularly the upper layers, for it is in these that the roots especially ramify. In this vicinity the largest yields have followed the application of cotton seed with guano and dissolved bones. The wheat plant delights in nitrogenous manures, and, growing in the rainy season of the year, is less apt than other crops to suffer from the free application of such manures. Experiments have quite clearly shown that, with a given quantity of manure, it is best to make two applications of it, one in the fall, another in the spring in form of a top dressing. Another point which may now be regarded as well established by experiment, is, that drilled wheat, highly manured and of rank growth, will not fall down like the broadcasted under similar circumstances. The stem of the former, from better exposure to light and air, is not so soft and succulent as that of the latter. Experiments have not yet determined what the width of the drill should be. One thing we feel quite assured of, that a sufficient width to permit workings to destroy the weeds will be of very great advantage to the crop. Every one knows how much our wheat fields are infested with weeds in early spring, and there is no reason why the wheat plant should not suffer from these disputing the soil with it, as well as corn or cotton under like circumstances. Except along the coasts and warmer parts of the South, the grain should be in the ground before the last of October. We hope our agricultural societies will undertake experiments to decide the best time for sowing in different latitudes. Get the best seed, with a coarse sieve get out all the cockle, cheat and defective grains, put the balance in a pretty strong solution of bluestone and skim off everything that floats, and after soaking sow in faith, that the giver of all things may bestow upon you a bountiful harvest.—Southern Cultivator.

PREVENTIVE FOR CHEAT AND COCKEREL IN WHEAT.—I will give you a preventive for cheat and cockerel in wheat. We have been troubled very much with these pests in this section since the war. Last fall I sowed some white wheat that I was very anxious to keep in seed of, but it was very badly adulterated with both cheat and cockerel. I first set in to finger-pick a sufficient quantity for my seed to sow five acres, but found that the old hand sieve and finger-picking was such a slow process, that after I got about three-fourths of a bushel clean I concluded to sow that, and risk getting my seed from that in the future. There was some smut also in the seed, so I concluded to soak with bluestone, as a preventive for smut. With the hands I had it took six bushels of wheat to sow for a day's work, so on Saturday evening about sunset I took the six bushels of wheat, and put one pound of bluestone in a large trough, and filled with water, and took off every grain of wheat and cheat that rose to the top, and let it remain there until Monday morning. The wheat was in soak something like thirty-six hours; and in taking the wheat out I noticed that the cockerel was rotten, and I was satisfied that it would not come up, so I adopted that plan for the balance of my crop, which was about thirty acres; and am happy to inform you that I have not seen a sprig of cheat or cockerel in my wheat, to speak of that way, this year. My neighbors, as well as myself, are satisfied that the soaking with the quantity of bluestone, for the length of time above stated, prevented the growth of the cheat and cockerel, as well as the smut, etc.

I have adopted the Dickson sweep, and plant corn on Mr. Dickson's plan, and am well satisfied that it is the best way of making it.—S. B. Britt in Southern Cultivator.

TO KILL NUT GRASS.—I will tell you how to "kill nut grass without killing the land." On the plantation where I lived in 1840, there was a large pen which was filled in the fall with straw and leaves from six to eight feet deep, on which the cattle of the place were penned during the winter. In the spring the manure was hauled into the fields and directly nut grass sprang up in thick spots within the pen. I had it hoed every morning until the pen was refilled in the fall. In the following spring, when the pen had again been emptied, I noticed the grass springing up, but the spots were fewer and thinner. I started my boy again to hoe it every morning, and by fall had it entirely extirpated.—P. W. A. in Southern Cultivator.

A LITTLE GIRL five years of age, on being asked what is faith, artlessly replied: "It is doing just what God wants us to do, and ask no questions about it." This covers the whole field; perfect trust, combined with implicit obedience.

THE greatest temptation the devil has for the Christian is comfort.

China Grove Camp Meeting, Dale Co., Alabama.

Mr. Editor: The second meeting was held at this camp ground, commencing on Friday night, September 10, and closing on Wednesday morning, September 15. At the first service the congregation was large, the sermon good, stirring, elevating and inspiring, and our hearts were filled with joy and our faith was increased and intensified. God was with us. Without entering into specifications concerning the preaching during the meeting; suffice it to say that it was good, better and best. It would afford me pleasure to call attention to some of the sermons replete with power and grandeur; but I will not seem to be invidious. Eternity will disclose the full measure of reward to those ministers who have made the word of God their study, so as to become master workmen, honoring God and advancing and establishing the kingdom of Jesus in the hearts of men. Thank God and the church for a pure gospel ministry in this country.

On the first night of the meeting the congregation was larger than it was last year, and increased from service to service, till on Sabbath, at eleven A. M., it was estimated to number four thousand persons, exceeding the congregation last year by at least five hundred persons.

The ascertained result of the meeting in conversions was sixty-five whites and ten colored. The believers present were also abundantly blessed. It was a sight that angels were pleased to behold. At eleven A. M. on Monday there was such a manifestation of divine power that we were disposed to believe that a full troop of holy angels were in our midst, and the rustling of their golden wings could almost be heard. Flash after flash of glory fell in wondrous power upon the church and congregation. Some of us got nearer to heaven right there than ever before. Glory beamed in hundreds of joyful countenances, and rapturous shouts fell from their lips. Intolerable burdens were lifted from many quivering hearts, and dark clouds were brushed from many obscured visions. Jesus appeared the fairest among ten thousand, and altogether lovely. In the love of Jesus we all found unity—preachers and people—so that we felt the interest of one touching and affecting the interest of all, Jesus being the centre.

This second meeting has made the China Grove camp ground an established one. On Tuesday morning the tent-holders held a meeting, and resolved to hold a camp meeting at this place for five years to come, commencing on Friday night before the second Sabbath in September, from year to year. Several other brethren and friends pledged themselves to build tents by the next meeting.

Now, Mr. Editor, if you desire to attend a camp meeting that is a camp meeting, just remember the time, and "come over" and see for yourself.

Twenty-six Methodist and six Baptist ministers were in attendance.

Vicksburg District Conference.

Mr. Editor: This Conference convened at Rocky Spring, September 9, 1869, and continued in session three days. J. G. Jones, presiding elder of the district, presided over its deliberations, and J. A. B. Jones acted as secretary.

All the pastoral charges in the district were represented except Vicksburg. After an appropriate sermon by Rev. W. F. Tilem, of Fayette, the Conference organized in due form, and proceeded to business. The usual committees were filled by adding two members to each chairman previously appointed. This being done, the remaining part of the first day's session was taken up in hearing verbal reports from each delegation on the state of the churches represented by them. This was an interesting and, we trust, very profitable service. The president drew out full reports of the state of the church in the district by asking a series of plain questions in reference to the usual size of congregations, the establishment of and attendance on weekly prayer meetings, the probable proportion of heads of families who have family prayer regularly, evening and morning; whether our general rules on the use of ardent spirits, attendance on worldly amusements, etc., were violated more than usual by our members. While in these sifting reports from true hearted men we found much to comfort and cheer our hearts, some very humiliating facts were brought out, especially the neglect of family worship and attendance on our weekly prayer meetings. Why professing Christians should hinder their own spiritual progress and jeopardize their personal salvation, and that of their families, by willfully neglecting these most important means of grace, is an unsolved mystery to those who feel it both their duty and interest to pursue an opposite course.

The second and third days were industriously employed in hearing and discussing reports and resolutions. Rev. W. H. Watkins, D. D., chairman of the Committee on the best means for Promoting the Purity and Extension of the Church, presented an original and very appropriate report, which was unanimously adopted, and the author requested to prepare a copy for publication in the New Orleans Christian Advocate at his earliest convenience.

Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, the chairman of the Committee on Education, not being present, and sending us no report, the other two members of the committee presented a preamble setting forth the fact "that it is both our duty and privilege, as a numerous, intelligent and influential church, to take an active and systematic part in the religious and literary education of the youth of our country," to which was appended two resolutions. The first, "Requesting and urging the membership and patrons of our church to patronize our own schools wherever practicable;" and the second, "That we believe it is just and right, where the qualifications are equal, to employ the members of our church in preference to others as principals and teachers in the seminaries of learning belonging to or under the patronage of our Annual Conference." These resolutions were fully debated, and unanimously adopted.

Major Thomas Reed, of Fayette, presented a very encouraging and suggestive report on the subject of Sabbath schools, which advocated the importance of confining them to the biblical instruction of the children, the extension of our Sabbath school literature, the holding of Sabbath school conventions, etc.

Brother Hayward Foote, of Claiborne, presented a report on church finances, especially in regard to the scriptural support of the ministry. He takes the ground that the pastor's whole time, week-days as well as Sundays, should be devoted, in one way or another, to the interests of the church; but before this can be done the church must assure him a competent support for himself and family. Brother Foote so transposed and remodeled this old, hackneyed subject as to make it peculiarly interesting and impressive.

Rev. F. M. Featherston presented a short report on ministerial education, which resulted in the formation of a Ministerial Educational Association in this district, auxiliary to the Ministerial Educational Association connected with the Mississippi Conference. A constitution was adopted and officers elected. The object is to assist needy young men who feel called of God to the work of the ministry in acquiring a suitable education.

Rev. H. M. Booth presented a short but telling report on the necessity and best method of circulating our church literature. We should circulate it because it contains the eternal truths of the Bible, because we should preoccupy the minds of our people with these truths to prevent their being led away with fatal errors, and because if we do not supply them with our literature they will be supplied from anti-Methodistic sources. The church must devise some more efficient plan than we now have for the general diffusion of our denominational books, tracts and periodicals. A resolution highly approving Brother Booth's industry and success in distributing our church publications, and requesting his continuance therein, passed unanimously.

Rev. D. A. J. Parker brought in an admirable report on the administration of church discipline, in which he takes the ground that our general rules and special enactments are founded on the undeniable word of God, and that no conscientious member of the church will feel at liberty to violate them; but all who come into our church fellowship do it voluntarily, and hence the inconsistency of those who, after having promised to observe and keep our rules, take the liberty, and in some instances almost claim the right, to violate them. The way for the church to enforce her godly discipline is to do it, step by step, as the book directs. Then no one can justly complain of being wrongfully dealt with.

The following delegates were elected to the Annual Conference: Thomas Reed, J. F. Rives, R. D. Howe, Rev. J. B. Holloman. Alternates: Hayward Foote, George Barnes, S. L. Guice, A. M. Cameron.

After a free and deliberate discussion the following resolution was adopted as a merited rebuke to sectarian bigotry and unchristian illiberality, viz:

Resolved, That self-respect, as well as the dictates of Christian liberality, require us to withhold the use of our pulpits from ministers of those denominations who will not extend to our ministers the same courtesy.

The following were appointed a committee to select a time and place, and arrange a programme for holding a district Sabbath school convention, viz: Thomas Reed, George Barnes, William Gutcher, William J. Linn and S. L. Guice.

The next District Conference to be at Port Gibson, subject to the call of the presiding officer.

The undersigned were appointed to prepare a synopsis for publication. The usual resolutions of thanks to the community and officers were very cordially passed. The unusual development of useful lay talent at this meeting was observed with great delight. The congregations attendant on preaching were unusually large, attentive and solemn. Several additions to the church.

WOMEN OF CHINA.

Shanghai, China, Aug. 14, 1869.

The mother of Che, son of the Emperor Yn, of the Hea dynasty, successor of the Emperor Sung, was a woman of the Tusan country. She gave birth to five sons, Che, Sing, Nyung, Qua, Kyer. Che is said to have wept much when a child. The Emperor Yu was absent much of his time, draining the waters which had covered the earth and caused a famine in the land. Three times he is said to have passed the door of his own house while employed in this work, but he would not enter. His wife alone instructed and taught her children, until Cho was fully grown. He gave heed to her instruction, and followed her advice, and the consequence was he had a good name. He succeeded his father to the throne, and maintained his father's good name, and did not allow it to be in the least marred. The literati say: "The wife of the Emperor Yu instructed her children with good firmness and ability." The book of odes says: "They who govern their sons and daughters well, their good example will be felt and followed by all their posterity."

HISTORY OF THE MOTHER OF SIH.

The mother of Sih was named Kyang Na, and was the daughter of the King of the Saw country. The history of the birth and preservation of Sih was said to have been most wonderful, but it is not believed by the thinking and more reasonable portion of the Chinese. She often prayed to the spirits that she did not desire a son, and when she gave birth to one, looking upon him as worthless, she cast him out in a filthy by-way. The cows and horses, as they passed, avoided putting their feet upon him. She then cast him into the woods, and the men who came to cut wood put branches over and under him, to protect him from the weather. Seeing this did not avail her purpose, she cast him on the ice, hoping to destroy him, but the birds of the air came and covered him with their wings. His mother was astonished at all this, brought him home and called his name Sih, meaning cast away. The disposition and temper of his mother was most agreeable, and with undivided attention she engaged in agriculture. As Sih grew up she taught him how to plant trees, the mulberry and the flax. The natural disposition of Sih was benevolence, and his intellect was brilliant. He received the instruction of his mother with all willingness. In consequence of this obedience he became famous in history.

The Emperor Yu appointed him to be the chief officer of all agricultural works in the country of Edo, and changed his name to Herche. When the Emperor Yu died, and the Emperor Sung ascended the throne, he commanded Sih, saying: "While the people are perishing for food it becomes you, as the officer of all agricultural works, to plant at the appointed time all kinds of grain, and dispense to the people." From generation to generation his posterity held this office until the Chow dynasty, which was 1021 B. C. Emperor Vung and Voo, father and son, the posterity of Sih, succeeded to the throne of China 1121 B. C. The literati say: "The mother of Sih was of an exceedingly quiet disposition, and was well able to instruct her son." The book of odes says: "The mother of Sih was a woman of superior mind, and her virtue was immovable. The heavens also trusted in her." The book says in another place: "As the Emperor Vung and Herche were able to bring together a portion of the heavens, so were they able to give to all the people grain to eat." The Chow dynasty continued over eight hundred years.

HISTORY OF THE WIFE OF TAE WONG, WHOSE NAME WAS TAE KYANG.

Tae Kyang was the mother of Wong Ke, and a woman of the Yerle country. She had three sons, Taepuk, Taeing Yung and Woug Ke. She was chaste, agreeable, and an observer of the most exact rules of propriety, and without any fault. Tae Wong, in removing from one place to another, would always consult with his wife, Tae Kyang. The literati says: "Tae Kyang was of a high order of mind, and her virtue was an example to many." The book of odes says: "All persons should come and give praise to Tae Wong and his wife, Tae Kyung." From generation to generation the posterity of Sih were unwilling to become Emperor, but chose rather to be high officers. It was said Tae Wong desired to be Emperor, but at the time of the Emperor Tsoo Kyar, who was a tyrant of the Shang dynasty, Tae Wong was a wise and prudent officer, serving the Emperor. From generation to generation, through the whole of the Shang dynasty, his posterity had no desire to be rulers of the Empire, as has been falsely stated. "Taepuk, the eldest son, being unwilling to act as ruler, should he be supplanted and his younger brother placed in his stead?" This was simply tradition, and to this day has not been corrected. Taepuk was a man of superior ability, but his father did not wish him to fill his office, for he knew full well that he, being a man of high ability and of superior mind, would soon take possession of the whole country. The son, hearing of the decision of his father, reported that he would be absent among the hills for a time in search of valuable medicine, and thus made his exit from the country. Accordingly, in the Chow dynasty, his line of ancestry is in comparison as a small thread. Emperor Voo, the first Emperor of the Chow dynasty, ascended the throne at an advanced age, and the glory of the Empire, at that time, was complete. All the renown and glory of the Chow dynasty is due to the wisdom and excellence of Tae Wong, who lived about one hundred and twenty years before the Chow dynasty, who was a most energetic officer, and desired no higher distinction. Tae Kyang, his wife being chaste, agreeable, and a strict observer of the rules of propriety, was unwilling to receive praise, or to be observed by any one. Among all women her virtue was most exalted and highly spoken of. Taepuk, her eldest son, escaped to the south of the Yangtsz Kiang, among the barbarians of the south, the name by which all the people in the province of Kiangsu are known. To this day his image is worshiped by thousands of the people, but more especially near Soochow. There is a temple dedicated to him a few doors from where I am now writing.

DIRECTIONS FOR PRESERVING FRUITS AND VEGETABLES.

As we are receiving many inquiries concerning the preservation of fruits, etc., we give the following directions in full, furnished by a correspondent of the Farm Journal. Our readers will do well to save this article for future reference:

The following suggestions for canning and preserving fruits and vegetables have been carefully tested by experience, and approved as simple and reliable. If the fruit be fresh and healthy when put up it may be safely relied on to keep in its natural condition for a long time, and almost as fresh as when first gathered. An important part of the success in canning and preserving fruit consists in selecting that which is fresh, sound and healthy. This done, secure good tin cans, or, if you can get them, glass jars and bottles, and when filled, be sure that the air is entirely expelled, and that they are perfectly sealed or soldered. Glass jars are to be preferred, at all times, to tin cans. Be careful to preserve the fruit as nearly whole and unbroken in the process as possible. Fruit and vegetables will always keep better if fresh and unbroken than if bruised.

The rules for preserving fruits are simple and few, and can be successfully observed by any one. There need be no failure if reasonable care and attention are exercised. There are two ways of expelling the air from jars or cans, either of which will answer. The first is to heat the fruit after putting it into cans or jars, and the other to pour the hot fruit into them, which itself will expel the air. The first method is usually preferred. It preserves the form and beauty of the fruit, which is likely to become bruised and broken by pouring it, hot, into the jars. Great care should be taken in canning cherries, currants and all small fruits, to do so without breaking or bruising them. When broken the juice escapes and prevents a clear syrup. Too much cooking has the same effect.

To prevent breakage, when glass jars or bottles are used, they should be immersed in warm water before filling with hot fruit; or wetting a towel in cold water and folding it around the jar, before pouring in the hot fruit, will answer the same purpose.

All fruit and vegetables should be packed in as closely as they permit. In heating the jars, pieces of wood should be laid in the bottom of the boiler to keep them off the hot surface, and as soon as the fruit is sufficiently heated or cooked they should be sealed or soldered, and set away. Before setting them away be sure that they are perfectly air-tight. The least air will spoil the fruit.

A good general rule, in canning fruit, is to use one pound of sugar with four pounds of fruit, and enough water to keep it from burning. Tin cans should be soldered, or sealed with sealing wax, or cement made of equal parts of rosin, beeswax and tallow. Sealing wax is best for such cans as have grooved rims.

To Preserve Strawberries, Raspberries, Blackberries, Gooseberries, Cherries and Currants.—Strawberries, being very juicy, require but little water. Fill the jars as soon as possible without crushing the fruit, place in a boiler of cold water—let the water heat, not boil—when reduced one-third of their bulk remove from the boiler, empty every third jar into the other two, replace in the boiler, boil three or four minutes, and fill with hot syrup, using only sufficient water to dissolve the sugar, let the steam escape, and seal as directed for other fruits.

Or use three quarters of a pound of sugar to one pound of fruit, sugar the berries, and let them stand ten minutes, put in a preserving kettle, and let them boil three or four minutes. Prepare the jars as directed, and seal quickly while the contents are hot.

Apples.—Take well flavored apples—pare, quarter and boil till tender, but not to break in pieces. Add sugar to the taste, and let the whole boil up once or twice. Fill the jars, and seal.

Another Recipe.—Halve and core ripe and tender apples, fill the jar, pour in syrup till the jar is half full, place in a boiler of cold water, boil ten minutes—if there is a vacuum, fill the jar or can with hot syrup—after standing a short time to settle, seal as before directed.

Peaches.—Secure fine ripe peaches; pare them; part them in halves, and take out the stones; put them in water as soon as pared, to retain the color; fill the jars with peaches, pack as closely as possible; add syrup till the jar or can is half full. Place in a vessel of cold water and boil, (see recipe for time,) and seal according to general directions.

Another Recipe.—After preparing the peaches as above, fill the jars first with peaches, then with pure water; boil ten minutes and seal up hot. When wanted for use, pour off the water; put the peaches in a dish and sprinkle with sugar an hour before wanted, same as for fresh peaches.

Quinces.—This fruit should be sliced and boiled in water till tender, then fill the jars or cans, add the hot syrup, and seal as directed.

Pears.—Pears, like peaches and quinces, should be put in cold water immediately after paring, to preserve the color. Let them boil till tender. Fill the jars, and fill with hot syrup; seal immediately.

Another Recipe.—Take good preserving pears, pare and quarter them. Boil in a small quantity of water till tender. Take about one-fourth the quantity of quinces, and prepare in the same way, then put both together, with as much sugar as will sweeten to the taste, into a preserving kettle and let them boil three or four minutes. When hot, pour into the jars; reference should be made to the time table.

Plums.—Make a syrup, using half a pound of sugar to a pound of fruit. Take off the skins; boil the plums in this syrup ten minutes, or until the fruit is tender, fill the jars, and seal hot.

Plums may also be cooked in jars, and by many are preferred. Fill the jars with plums, and half full of syrup, place in a boiler of cold water, boil ten minutes, and seal.

Tomatoes.—Scald and remove the skins, place in the jars or cans, reduce and treat as directed for strawberries. Boil from ten to fifteen minutes, fill up and seal.

Another Recipe.—Take off the skins, put in a preserving kettle, or other convenient vessel, without salt; and boil a quarter of an hour, fill the jars, and seal hot.

To Can Whole.—Scald and remove the skin, place in the jars until full. Boil twenty minutes, and at the same time boil some tomatoes in a dish or pan; when ready to seal, fill up the jars or cans with tomatoes and juice from this dish, and seal boiling hot. Tomatoes should be cooked and canned in nothing but their own juice.

Preserving Vegetables.—To preserve vegetables it is absolutely important to take nothing but that which is fresh from the vine or stalk. If at all withered or decayed, success is impossible.

Corn.—Cut from the cob, put the corn in the jars or cans with the milk of the corn. Very young and tender corn has been preserved by boiling one hour. But corn generally should be boiled four hours.

Another Recipe.—Cook the corn on the cob, as much as when it is prepared for eating; then cut it off and press it tightly into the jars; boil one hour, seal and set away in a dry, cool, dark place. Jars or cans should be temporarily closed while boiling.

It requires a much longer time to expel all the air from vegetables than from fruit. This fact, not being understood, has caused much failure in attempts to preserve them. Farm Journal.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this poper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a Post Office Order, DRAFT, or by express. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise.

OUTSTANDING MONEYS.

We fear lest in the abundance of good things in which our brethren are now rejoicing they forget that religion has a body as well as a soul. We are receiving a good many reports of District Meetings and of revivals, and are prepared to rejoice with those who rejoice; and, on the other hand, we hope that our brethren are ready "to weep with those who weep." We are not receiving either new subscribers nor money in any degree that indicates spiritual prosperity anywhere.

Moreover, we respectfully request those of the preachers who have money belonging to us to favor us with a remittance. Send it registered or in a post office order. We live by daily bread.

TO AGENTS.

It will greatly simplify matters if brethren who have funds in hand which they propose to pay over at Conference, will send them forward at once. We wish to enjoy preaching at Conference, and not be compelled to occupy the whole time in collecting bills.

COLORED CONFERENCES.

THE ALABAMA COLORED CONFERENCE OF THE M. E CHURCH SOUTH.—This Conference will meet in Talladega, Alabama, November 25. All the colored preachers in the State of Alabama, who are the duly authorized pastors of congregations in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, are requested to be present and participate in the organization of the Conference. Colored preachers duly recommended by Quarterly Conferences are also invited to be present. This call embraces those colored (presiding elders and pastors who, though living in Alabama, are now embraced in the territory of the Memphis Colored Conference.

All who respond to this call, if not accompanied by a presiding elder, should bring suitable testimonials of personal and official character.

Statistics of the number of church buildings, members and Sunday schools, should be as complete as possible.

The ministers, traveling and local, of the Mobile and Montgomery Conferences, and the Alabama portion of the Tennessee Conference, are requested to circulate this information and to furnish those concerned whatever information and documents may be necessary to the organization of the Conference.

LIFE OF BISHOP McKENDREE.

LIFE AND TIMES OF WILLIAM McKENDREE, BISHOP OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH By Robert Paine, D D, Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.—Volume I Nashville, Tennessee: Southern Methodist Publishing House. 1869. 12mo, pp. 491.

In 1851 the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, during its session at Columbus, Georgia, united with Bishop Soule in a request that Bishop Paine should prepare for publication the valuable papers left in the hands of the senior Bishop by Bishop McKendree. The present work is the first volume of the Bishop's response to that request.

This biography of our "first native American Bishop" is replete with facts and themes of intense and weighty interest—such as may be supposed to cluster about the person of a Bishop whose life and career embraced the eventful period immediately succeeding Bishop Asbury. The action, power and success of the first episcopoch (if we may make a word) of Methodism in the United States were so great that it was more a period for collecting material than for building and arranging it. Bishop McKendree was elected to the superintendency some seven or eight days just preceding the passage of the law which established a delegated General Conference as the supreme ecclesiastical council of the church. All radical changes in government have to pass through an adjusting and testing period. The changing and conserving elements require time to regulate their forces to the new order of things. Those who have succeeded in effecting modifications of long established methods are apt to suppose that more might have been done safely in the same direction; and, on the other hand, those who were for the old order of things are unduly suspicious and fearful of new agitations. The waves of legislation require time to subside, as do natural elements, whenever they reach in their depth to the foundations of either the State or the Church. It was during such a period of contending but subsiding forces that the providence of God placed William McKendree at the helm of American Methodism. We agree entirely with the author in the very high estimate he places upon the legislative and administrative worth of the Bishop: "He combined in a high degree the prescience and strong common sense required in a legislator, and evinced also the highest ecclesiastical statesmanship in his administrative acts." It is only in the materials which the life of one in the midst of the action furnishes that the history of the constitution of the church can be studied to advantage. The various shapes and tentative struggles by which all important conclusions are arrived at by human wisdom are very necessary to a proper understanding of their true meaning. It is in this light that this work is so valuable. It is a capital treatise upon the genius and constitution of Methodism, presented in the original force of its birth. And as such every one of our ministers and members should read it.

The church is more than repaid for its long waiting by the opportune moment at which this valuable work has at last appeared—just at the juncture when both Methodisms, Northern and Southern, have adopted constitutional changes only less in importance than those of 1808. A large infusion of the lay element into the supreme governing body of a church, which has existed for one hundred years without any such element, must be regarded as no ordinary event in the history of its life. Not that there is anything new or untried in such an ecclesiastical organization, for it is as old as Calvin or Luther, and as familiar as congregational or presbyterial forms of church constitution are to us, or were to Mr. Wesley himself when he excluded all laymen from his conferences. But the point to which all eyes will be directed is whether Methodism will continue to be as compact, as effective and as active with the new factor as she has heretofore been. The wisdom of the two divisions of American Methodism has come independently to the deliberate conclusion that such a change is demanded, and that it promises to bring a new power into the organization. This is no ordinary ground of assurance that such will be the case, and we gladly avail ourself of it. But in the meanwhile, we need to know whence we came to ascertain exactly where we are. And every delegate to the next General Conference would do well to study this admirable log-book of our constitution—the diary of Bishop McKendree.

The author has reproduced very faithfully, we doubt not, the clear, beautiful and delicate lines which made up the person and character of the Bishop. When a very small boy we remember sitting to tea with this venerable man at the house of Dr. Henry Wilkins, of Baltimore. Mrs. Wilkins, the Bishop and "mother" were the only ones at the table. The impression made upon a child of five years of age is not worth much, but it was that of a very elegant old gentleman, with piercing, beautiful eyes, a very pearly skin, and a very penetrating, soft voice. He wore knee-breeches with buckles, and was dressed in a suit of black. The dignity and sweetness of his address made an ineffaceable impression upon a child, who, though small, had two eyes that could see quite well. That early picture comes forth in unusual distinctness while reading this life. Indeed the work is full of very nice touches which enables the reader to realize one of the noblest, strongest and best balanced personages to be found on the pages of any history.

The atmosphere, if we may so call it, of the narrative is full of exciting incident. Great men formed and great men kept company with the Bishop. We need only mention the names of Asbury and Soule; so that with the direct movement of this work we have also a considerable amount of collateral information about the best and grandest men who ever adorned a Christian church; a great deal in it that contributes toward a fuller estimate of the apostles of Methodism in this country.

We think that the publishers would do well to give it forth in the best binding that can be found. The type, paper and presswork are all that could be asked.

We conclude this notice by a specimen of the accurate and pleasant way in which Bishop Paine has executed his delightful task:

With the journal of Bishop Asbury and the diary of McKendree before the writer, he is more than ever impressed with the sentiment that all great practical, useful men are remarkable for method and pains taking. The truly great man attends to little as well as great things. See this diary—how neatly kept! as legible now, after the lapse of half a century, as if written an hour since; every day filled up with the name of the person with whom he stayed, the distance traveled, the meeting house in which he preached, (his text given perfectly,) where the Conferences were held, how long, etc. And when it is remembered that he was almost constantly in the saddle, frequently starting before day and traveling until dark, often in dirty and uncomfortable taverns, never having more than a day's rest in the month, and consequently without the quietude or facilities of keeping a regular journal, it is astonishing that he was able, from year to year, to commit so many facts to paper in so regular and consecutive a manner. The love of order was a striking trait of Bishop McKendree's character; so that while he seemed constantly intent upon great and important matters, he was never known to neglect the minute affairs of life. * * * * *

It displayed itself in the systematic arrangement of all his business. He was a man of method. He could not preach, debate or converse satisfactorily without regard to it. His plan of traveling and preaching on the way must always be pre arranged. His traveling equipage, whether he went on horseback or in a carriage, was ever most carefully adjusted. His horse was never neglected, nor could he retire to rest after having been exhausted by a long and wearisome day's journey, until he knew he had received the best possible attention. As "a righteous man regardeth the life of his beast," so this good man regarded the comfort of his horse. This was strikingly displayed in the provision made by his will for the support of his faithful "old Gray."

His clothes were packed in his saddle bags, or carriage trunk, by his own hands—for who could do it so neatly? His papers were folded, labeled, and put up as he only could do it. In his dress and address you perceived in a moment the neatness, simplicity and courteousness of a gentleman who respected both himself and his company too highly to seem careless of his appearance. And while he was far from being stiff or unsocial in his manners, there was always about him a dignified and respectful demeanor, mingled with affability, which bespoke his character and his position. His presence always commanded respect, and his manners won the confidence of strangers; so that even those who loved to ridicule preachers felt constrained to treat him civilly; and children, reading his feelings in his face, would instinctively smile, climb upon his knees, and nestle in his bosom. There was an indescribable persuasiveness in his manner, whether in the pulpit or in the social circle. When animated, there was a kind of illumination of his features, reminding one of the gleaming of lightning behind a thin cloud. Before his tongue uttered the words, his eyes and mildly radiant face had already half told what was coming. His sense of propriety was such that he was rarely known to say or do anything of questionable fitness. His delicacy and sensibility were remarkable. The same mental peculiarity which dictated order in everything relating to business matters, dress, etc., induced him to be careful of his words—so that "proper words in proper places," best defines his sermons and conversations. Hence, too, the ease with which he could adapt his style and manner to the capacities and circumstances of his hearers.

FATHER HYACINTHE.

By a cable dispatch it is announced that this eloquent divine of the Roman Church has publicly in advance repudiated the doctrines which the Ecumenical Council has been assembled to indorse, that he has left his convent, and retired to his home. He is a monk of the Carmelite order. By his preaching in Paris he became distinguished as a pulpit orator, and for some years, in the judgment of both the people and the scholars of France, he has been ranked as the first preacher in the church. This reputation is world-wide. His mind is as broad as it is polished, and he may be considered as the true front of a body of Protestants that is again springing up in the Roman Church. He leads off in denouncing the ultramontane doctrines which the Jesuits are determined to incorporate into the Catholic faith—personal infallibility and supremacy of the Pope. This order is the embodiment of ambition. To rule the church and the world is the one passion to which all its dark policy subserves.—Checked during the last century, it has, by its prodigious capacity for accumulating property and its military drill, in the short period of seventy years, recovered its original influence at Rome. Never since the Reformation has it had greater control of the policy and the faith of the entire Catholic world. Following up the advantage which its services to the See during the eventful period of 1848 in Italy gave it, this order has outstripped all others, and may be said now to rule absolutely the Roman Church. It hurries to stamp the entire body of Catholicism with its image and superscription. The formal adoption of the dogma of the immaculate conception was its work; the Ecumenical Council is its projection. Never has audacity carried the church to a higher pinnacle, or tempted it to greater presumption than in this convening of its Bishops and Cardinals to accept and declare that the Bishop of Rome is personally an infallible creature, that he cannot fall or err, and that if he were to "cast himself down" the angels have charge concerning him, to bear him up in their hands, lest at any time he should dash his foot against a stone.

No wonder that Father Hyacinthe, seeing the depth of this gulf and feeling in advance the horror of this blasphemy, cries out; and, as a warning to the faithful in the Church of Rome, flies from the contemplated deed. He meets so great a temptation with the decision which it demands, and by action protests against him who, "as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." For what is so characteristic of God as infallibility? and with what greater solemnity of a proud and depraved nature can blasphemy be uttered than by this single human assumption of this exalted attribute of the Divine Being? The distinguished Carmelite does well to announce that he cannot partake of this sin, and in the just alarm of a pure and reverential mind, flies from its approach. He had already declared that the Catholic Church was not encouraging the distribution and perusal of the Holy Scriptures as it should; that the prosperity of the English people and the state of English society was to be traced to the diffusion of the Bible among the people. The present step is in the same direction, and shows that in the bosom of the Roman Church there has sprung up a party of liberal Catholics, who cannot and will not leave the faith of the Christian martyrs and apostles. There can be but little doubt that this important fact will find a greater utterance, and that one of the effects of the Ecumenical Council will be to call out action and expression from those in the Roman Church who are opposed to the peculiar dogmas and policy of the Jesuits. There will be created a via media between Catholics and Protestants—a sort of liberal Catholicism, which will probably coalesce with the Catholic High Church element of the Protestant Church. The letter of Father Hyacinthe was published in the Paris papers on the 21st of September. It has not yet appeared in this country. So soon as we can lay our hands upon it we will give it full room in the columns of the ADVOCATE.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

REMBERT HILLS CT., MOBILE CON. September 20, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me to say to the lovers of Christ that the Lord has graciously revived His work on this circuit Nearly all the appointments have experienced times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Forty-seven have been added to the church, and the membership greatly blessed.

JOHN C. HREKABEE.

WINNSBORO CT., LOUISIANA CONF., September 28, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed a meeting at Magnolia church, of nine days, at which it pleased the Lord to abundantly revive His work. At this place we have just completed a new church of good size and material; and God was pleased to accept the offering of both the altar and the sacrifice on the altar.

We had thirty six accessions to the church and upward of twenty conversions, and, best of all, the membership abundantly revived. A deep religious feeling prevails throughout the settlement, uprooting every branch of bitterness and cementing the membership in one lump of love. To God be all the glory. THOS. H. McCLENDON.

CENTRE CT., CHEROKEE CO., ALA., September 30, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: You may say to the friends of Zion that the good Lord is reviving His work in our midst. During the week of prayer and up to this time about fifty souls have been converted, and forty-one joined the church. Bros. Joel Weems and Allen Weems, local elders, have done successful labor during the past part of this revival season.—The work is still going on in our midst.

The Lord has converted souls at nearly every appointment on this circuit. At Centre we had Brother T. Moody with us one day. He preached to us with power. His labor was not in vain. A part of the last week we had Brother T. G. Slaughter, presiding elder of the Gadsden district, with us. He preached with power. God blessed his labors in the conversion of souls. The church is in a live condition. To God be all the glory.

The Colored Church Paper.

The Colored Conferences desiring an organ, and having been requested to undertake the publication, I have consented to do so, whenever sufficient subscribers have been obtained to defray actual expenses—say one thousand subscribers.

The object of the paper will be to promote the moral and religious, and the mental and physical well-being of the colored people, and to aid in carrying out the policy, present and prospective, of the Southern Methodist General Conference in reference to those of them in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

TERMS.—One dollar a year in advance, the money to be refunded if the paper should not be published. The preachers, white as well as colored, will please act as agents.

BISHOP MARVIN.

"After the excessive labors of Bishop Marvin on the Pacific coast, we are not surprised to hear of his illness. We fear our California brethren are working the Bishop beyond his strength. They must take better care of him."—Richmond Christian Advocate.

We gave our brethren just such a warning six months ago. But the fact is, to our good Bishop's own zeal his overwork is mainly to be attributed. The zeal of the Lord's house hath almost literally consumed him. The divine blessing has attended his labors, and the fruits of his self sacrificing toils will remain. This is his consolation, and ours.

Bishop Marvin reached this city on Saturday evening last, by the overland route from Oregon. We are happy to report the Bishop's health greatly improved, though he looks thin and pale.—San Francisco Spectator.

OBITUARIES.

STARKVILLE DISTRICT MEETING, MISSISSIPPI.

The Committee on Obituaries would respectfully call the attention of this District Meeting to the memory of Rev. Brother Jesse Bates, who died at his residence near Newport, Attala county, Mississippi, on the 12th of October, 1868.

Brother Bates, we are informed, left satisfactory evidence with his friends that all was well with him, and that he has gone to his reward. Brother Bates was about sixty-five years of age. He had been a professor of religion and an active official member of the church for many years. His first connection with the church was among the Lutherans; but after his removal from South Carolina he joined the Methodist Church, in the year 1839. The Methodist Church licensed him to preach soon after, and he continued in labor as a local preacher, much to the satisfaction and, we trust, greatly to the profit of the church, until removed by death.

Your committee recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That we deeply mourn the loss of our brother, and regret the absence of his counsels in this body; and that this be forwarded to the editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and that he be requested to give to his memory such notice as his Christian virtues demand.

James Applewhite,
Parton Randell,
Committee.

John Flowers, of Choctaw county, Mississippi, died on board the vessel Mexico, at Havana, March 17, 1869. The deceased was born in North Carolina, October 5, 1813. He was married to Miss Eliza Ingraham in June, 1841.

Brother Flowers had gone to Honduras, thinking to find a country where he could do better for himself and family than in this trouble'd land. He was returning on the Mexico, via Havana. To a friend he said the country did not suit him, and, unless compelled, he would never leave his home to seek a fortune in Honduras. Four days before his death he had a chill. After this he suffered much.

Brother Flowers became religious in early life. For many years he had been a prominent and useful member of the Methodist Church. He excelled in singing, and in this contributed much to the pleasure and edification of the congregations with whom he worshiped. He was a liberal supporter of the ministry and of the various enterprises of the church. In short, he was a zealous, consistent Christian man, known throughout the country around him as a pillar in the church of God. He held an office in the church, but such was the esteem in which he was held that the Quarterly Conference of the Winona circuit, in which he resided, thought it meet they should order the writing of a suitable tribute to his memory. And it is at their instance I write this, and request its publication.

Brother Flowers was a valued citizen, a good neighbor, and a successful planter. Extensively known, the intelligence of his death caused a general sadness. All felt that the country had sustained a loss.—Such was the confidence reposed in his integrity of character and soundness of judgment, that many persons were waiting to know his conclusions about Honduras, determined to take the hazard of breaking up in this and removing to that country, should he recommend such a course.

A devoted husband and a fond parent, Brother Flowers was particularly happy in his family. To his affectionate wife, three dutious daughters and a promising little son the loss is beyond calculation. But God is good. In their grief, therefore, let no murmuring thoughts arise.—Though "His path is in the great waters and His footsteps are not known," yet His ways are right, and all things work together for good to them that love Him.

A MAN SEVENTY YEARS OLD

I have had Catarrh over thirty years.

I have tried doctors and medicines almost without number, my strength constantly failing under their treatment, and without any relief from any one, until I commenced using Dr. Wolcott's Annihilator for Catarrh. I gladly know how to express my gratitude for the wonderful benefit I have derived from its use. I owe my very life to Dr. Wolcott's Remedy; of this fact I am fully convinced. When I commenced using the Annihilator I only weighed 119 lbs.; my weight now is 149 pounds. This increase in solid flesh for a man of my years is the best proof of the efficacy of Wolcott's Annihilator, as I am now in my seventieth year.

SAMUEL SCHENDLER,
240 Washington st., Hoboken, N. J.,
August 6, 1869.

My father is proprietor of the Peconic House, Greenpoint, L. I. I had rheumatism over five years. A portion of this time I was unable to walk. My legs, my arms and my body also have been contracted and drawn up shorter, and became crooked in consequence of the severity of this disease. I have poured out money without stint to doctors and for medicines without any earthly benefit or use, until I felt almost completely discouraged and disheartened. My pain and sufferings were beyond all description, and no language that I can use can portray the agony I have endured. I saw Dr. Wolcott's advertisement day after day and month after month, but could not believe his Pain Paint could reach my case, although I heard many people give the strongest testimony in its favor. I finally was induced to purchase a quart or an $8 bottle of his Pain Paint. This small amount did wonders for me. It removed the most of my pain, but not my stiffness. I continued purchasing and using until I bought five quarts, and I can say without hesitation that I am entirely cured. I can use my limbs and every part of my body with as much freedom and strength as I ever did in my life. Wolcott's Pain Paint, I can say from experience, is the best remedy and the greatest invention ever offered to suffering humanity. Instead of its being a dear remedy at $8 a quart, it is really worth more than $100 a quart.

All who come to the office treated free of cost, and no dosing the stomach. Small bottles sold at all drug stores. All remittances should be by post office orders or registered letters or by express. SOUTHERN METHODIST HIGH SCHOOL,

NEW ORLEANS.

The exercises of the first session of this institution will commence on MONDAY, the 4th day of October next, in the basement of the German Methodist Church, Dryades street, between Felicity and Euterpe.

In founding this institution our purpose is to supply the desideratum long felt in this city, viz: an acknowledged Protestant School of a high order, in which boys and young men can be thoroughly prepared either for college or the active business of life.

The government of the School will be strict and firm, yet mild and parental in its administration. Thoroughness in the preparation of lessons will be uniformly required of all pupils.

The sons of ministers engaged wholly in the work of their Church will be received at half price; and young men preparing for the ministry without charge.

A Preparatory Department and an Evening School are attached.

In the selection of Teachers the greatest care will be exercised, not only in regard to their mental qualifications, but also in reference to their ability to impart instruction to their pupils.

For further information apply at the School.

The cogs on one end of a roll are set relatively between those on the other end of the same roll, virtually forming a

DOUBLE GEAR,

and thereby nearly doubling the purchase.—(The importance of setting gears in this position is not generally understood.)

Notwithstanding the rolls can separate freely at either end, the Cog wheels cannot be thrown out of gear on both ends of the Wringer at the same time, unless the pressure is taken off.

The "NOVELTY" is fastened to a tub or box by a patent Curved Clamp, which has an equal bearing on a tub the whole length of the Wringer. Other Wringers are merely fastened to a stave at each end, and are thus liable to wrench the staves from their proper position and ruin the tub.

The Cog-wheels, Thumb screws, etc., are nicely galvanized.

Buy the "NOVELTY," or at least take it on trial with any or all others, and keep the best. For sale everywhere.

FRESH TESTIMONIALS.

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

THE ASTONISHING FAMILY MEDICINE.

Saved from Death!—Read!

Montgomery, Ala., June 29, 1869.

Messrs. J. Darby & Co., 161 William St., N. Y.—Gents: Yours of the 23d is before me, and has attention. It gives me pleasure to say that my belief is that your "Fluid," under the supervision of a kind Providence, saved the life of my youngest child, some six years ago, the child being wasted to a skeleton by the effects of teething, and an affection of the bowels therewith. I had never seen any one reduced so low to recover.

"Physic" had been tried in vain, until the physicians stated it was useless. A friend recommended your "Fluid," or Ozone, which he stated was one of the component parts of it. I did so, and the effect was like magic, plainly discernible in one hour in its good effects, producing quiet and sleep almost at once, where irritation and sleepless restlessness had previously possessed the child to nearly entire exhaustion.

I at first administered it in a small way, two and three drops in a spoonful of water, and increased it to six and ten drops. It completely checked the bowels, and had the happiest effect, the child rapidly recovering.

I have tried your "Fluid" on animals, with the same effect—both horses and cows—mingling more or less in water, and letting them drink.

I have no hesitation in saying I believe it a specific for Chronic Diarrhœa, or any violent affection of the bowels.

I would not be without it in my family under any consideration. Yours truly,

WILLIAM FOWLER.

Mr. Fowler is a member of the celebrated Banking House of Fowler & Somerville, Montgomery, Alabama.

AND AGAIN!

Read the following letter from Mr. Frank Saunders, a well known citizen, and brother-in-law of the beloved Bishop Paine, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

189 Broadway, N. Y., July 29, 1869.

Messrs. J. Darby & Co., 161 William St., N. Y.—Gents:—About the 10th of June last one of my children was taken with Scarlet Fever, in its most malignant form, and as soon as I could I procured your valuable disinfectant, "Darby's Prophylactic Fluid." Although it was several days after the appearance of the disease before I began using the Fluid, still, by a free use of it, the disease was not only confined to the one case, but the malignity of that case somewhat mitigated.

During the use of the Fluid as a disinfectant in my family it was also tried in a case of headache, and one of toothache, the results in each case being instantaneous relief. It was afterward tried in a case of Erysipelas, with almost equal success.

It is due to the merits of this compound, also, to state that the case of Erysipelas in question, being located in the feet, the Fluid, in its application, was brought in frequent contact with a troublesome corn on one of the feet, to the utter discomfiture of said corn, for, upon subsequent examination, it had disappeared, and though it was sought for diligently, it could not be found.

I hand you this, hoping it may be the means of inducing others of earth's poor sufferers to test for themselves, as I did, the great merits of this great remedy.

Very respectfully yours,

FRANK SAUNDERS.

The Birth and Death of Friendship.

Now, as the delightful salaam was being given and received by the mole Hiranyaca and his friends the pigeons, there drew near a hawk named Shikra, who, witnessing the endearing conduct of the friends, could not conceal his astonishment. Having gained the rat hole, he cried out and said, "Oh! Hiranyaca, pundit rat, what a noble person thou art! Thy hospitality is royal, and thy dignity becoming, perceiving which, I greatly desire to secure thy friendship! It is my delight, also, according to my ability, to do good and bless a friend!" Having said which he wiped his beak, and carefully laid his feathers

The rat, hearing the strange voice, took counsel of his fears, and nestling closely to the inner door, ventured to ask:

"Who art thou?"

"Only a hawk," answered Shikra, "only a friendly hawk." "Ha, ha," cried Hiranyaca, "a hawk—a h-a-w-k," and his tones assumed a peculiar and wise cadence; "and being a hawk," continued the rat, with a muffled laugh, "I cannot think of contracting a friendship with thee. If a man who has faithfully served his country and race, and attains honor and fame, takes to his side a wise companion, such a companion partakes of his merit, but thou wilt make a dinner of me, and devour me up, flesh, blood and bones; how, then, can I consent to an intimacy? The intimacy would be too one-sided, and I find myself unprepared to change my present agreeable home and mode of life for even a prominent place in thy stomach. The friendship of a devourer is one of the greatest causes of danger.—Where confidence is reposed faults are apt to be overlooked or to appear as virtues. Yet I would not proscribe thee rudely, for I remember how a beautiful, tender fawn was saved by a hawk from destruction by a jackal."

"And how was that?" said the hawk.

Having heard which, Hiranyaca answered: "Away in the Magadha country there is a well known forest called Champaca Vati, in which blessed retreat an antelope and a hawk long resided in quiet friendship. They roved where they desired, and feasted on the best of the country. Safe in each other's love, they enjoyed the respect of all their neighbors, and oven received the salutations of travelers. The antelope, having roved at will, and feasting in contentment so long, grew sleek and fat, forgot that such a thing as an enemy could live in the world. One day as she was pleasantly loping along, an ugly natured jackal fixed his wanton eyes upon her, and coveted her tender flesh and young, innocent blood. 'Ah,' thought he, shrugging his shoulders and smacking his lips, 'if I could but feast on yonder fawn, how happy I should be! How can I secure the creature? What a sleek coat, betokening healthy blood, and what clean limbs, and what lovely eyes and neck, not to speak of her fat, delicious quarters. Good fortune help me! I may gain my object by assuming the character of a friend and scenting my words. Fawns are very unsuspecting, and a little flattery and caution will prove an attractive bait.' Having said which, the jackal approached and thus spake: 'A good morrow, my friend; how excellent thou art in health, and how delightedly thou art enjoying this lovely day!'

"'Who art thou?' cationsly asked the antelope.

"'A proper, a very proper question,' said the cunning jackal. Having said which, he answered: 'I'm nothing but a jackal, living here like a dead person, with no one to love, caress or care for. Your lovely presence cheers my loneliness, and bids me hope, and if I may but secure your friendship I shall commence a new life—a real life, and will worship at your feet your constant servant.'

"They walked side by side, toward the home of the antelope. The many-rayed sun was sinking, and his last beams were breaking over the mountain tops, and falling in graceful and delicious fragments upon the variously colored plains as they gained the champaca tree under whose branches dwelt the antelope's friend, the hawk.

"The hawk's surprise was great, and with much firmness said to the fawn, 'Who is this companion of thine?'

"'A friendly jackal,' answered the antelope. 'My chosen friend and comrade.'

"The hawk, hearing this, drew his countenance, and having sighed said, 'O, my dearest friend, you have acted unwisely; it is very wrong to place confidence with so little acquaintance; friendship so suddenly ripened must suddenly die.'

"Taking breath, he continued 'It is written that one should learn the tribe, the temper and the intention of a stranger before opening to him your house. A smooth tongue and graceful manner, with kindest attentions, may be but the seemings of reality, and intended to deceive.'

"Let me tell you how by means of a cat the vulture Jaradgabah was slain.

"On a mountain, near the Ganges there grew a large tree, in the hollow trunk of which feeble, dim of sight, fearful of danger and gray with age lived a vulture named Jaradgabah. It was a difficult way for him. His pantries were never well stocked, and he barely secured a livelihood for his children, by the proper prey which he captured from time to time for himself. Being old, he was composing himself for the next birth, and longed for the happy day.

"Now there prowled about that region a very ill-natured cat named Longears, who used to devour the young birds, and with great wit secrete herself from observation, and always succeeded in escaping danger.

"One day the young birdies saw her approaching with noiseless pace, and they immediately set up an alarm. Their cries resounded far and wide, and echoed through the mountain fastnesses. The old vulture in the hollow trunk, hearing the uproar, said, 'Who cometh, who cometh?' and walked to the entrance. The cat, seeing the fury of the vulture, trembled with fear, and mewed out in a very plaintive tone to herself, 'Alas! alas! I am lost; there can be no safe retreat from such a fiery and powerful enemy. What shall I do? Oh, dear me! oh, dear me! I must put on my wisdom cap, and instead of showing fear, appear humble and wise. This is my last chance, and so here goes, luck or woe, rise or sink! Was ever cat in such a strait?'

"Upon which resolve she, stroking her ears down and arranging her whiskers, also putting great modesty in her eyes, approached the vulture, and with a most flattering bow said:

"'Mighty and most noble sir, I beg to be your humble and obedient servant;' and down went the long ears, and modestly waved the bushy tail.

"'What art thou?' said the vulture sternly.

"'But a very humble cat, good sir,' said she, with another humble bow.

"'Well, then, cat,' said the vulture, 'leave my premises, and get thyself far away, or thou shalt be made to suffer for thy temerity.'

"'Give me a moment's hearing,' said the cat, 'and upon this, if I deserve punishment, then inflict it, but hear me.'

"'Thus I find it written,' continued the cat, 'it is everywhere established among all classes, that he alone can judge whether another is worthy of punishment or praise, who can detect thoughts and read dispositions.'

"'Say what thou wilt,' responded the vulture.

"Hearing which, the much assuming cat said: 'My home is near the Ganges, in whose sacred waters I perform my daily vows. I observe the tasks and austerities of a devout person, and correct my appetite by eating neither fish nor flesh, (here she cast her eyes among the young birds above,) and hearing of your great wisdom and justice, I have come to honor and learn from you in your delightful retreat. And can so eminent and virtuous a being prepare to beat and chastise a stranger? Thus sings the poet: as the tree complains not of the woodman who, ax in hand, stands beneath its shade, so should the offices of hospitality and friendship be extended to an enemy who stands before our door. Four things are always found in the houses of the virtuous: a bed to lie on, food to eat, water to purify and quench thirst, and welcome words, and these are freely given. If the stranger meets cold air on approaching the dwelling, he turns away, carrying the fragrance of a good act with him, and leaving a festering crime in the heart of the owner. The moon does not refuse to shine upon the meanest caste, (sudra,) so in like manner do the good bless the ignorant and wayfaring.'

"Hearing which, the vulture said, 'Ah, but thou art a cat, claws and teeth; and bring a cat, loving tender flesh, I cannot consent for thee to dwell here with these young birds. On their account I say to thee, Be gone, cat!'

"Then the cat, stroking her ears and bowing to the ground, said, 'True in the concrete, oh! vulture, but false in the abstract! I have studied the shastras, and have thus destroyed my natural appetite for flesh. I am a devotee, and in spite of the many opinions in the sacred books, have attained unto perfect loveliness of disposition, meekness of action and truthfulness of speech. The man who is the same to all, who hears all things with undisturbed mind, and who harbors no wicked passion, is certainly near heaven, and may expect to get there in the end. And the true friend is he who opens his hand in need, and exhibits constancy in sorrow and death. There is a friendship like that which exists between the fowl and the man who eats it. Look at their relative positions. The friendship of the one endures only long enough to eat up the other. Why should I eat innocent birds? Do I not know that pain is great in dying? and this truth has confirmed me in my resolution to live and let live. Will you, my noble vulture, not adopt the same?

"'And again,' stroking her ears 'why should a person do a deadly thing, and stain his conscience with crime, when the woods and fields abound with fruits and vegetables of all descriptions? An appetite that cannot be gratified with these is unnatural and sinful.'

"The vulture, hearing such excellent teaching from the cat, destroyed his fears, and received him kindly into his house. Days passed sweetly and calmly, and the cat began to long for a dinner of birds. Watching her opportunity, she sprang upon them, carried them off and feasted to her heart's content. While she was stripping their feathers and sucking their life, their plaintive cries filled the air. They appealed for help to every one, and soon aroused the community, and the inquiry was started, 'What's the matter? where's the cat?' Hearing which, and fearing for her life, the deceitful, unworthy cat left fast as her legs could carry her, for parts unknown. The mother birds were inconsolable, and rent the air with their frantic cries.

"Seeing the vulture sitting so demure (for he was pained at the trick of the cat) they suspected him of the bloody deed, and seizing the scattered bones of their young, attacked him, and in a short time killed him outright.

"Having finished the instructive story, the hawk said: 'I have caused you to know the true story of the deceitful cat and innocent vulture, and, therefore, I said you have acted unwisely; it is wrong to place confidence with so little acquaintance; friendship so suddenly ripened must suddenly perish.'

"On hearing the story and the excellent moral, the jackal became very angry, for he knew that he was well represented by the cat.

"Having sneezed, and blown off his temper, addressing the hawk he said: 'Before I saw or knew anything about you, friend hawk, I saw and loved this antelope, and we each pleased the other, and contracted a friendship that continually increases. Let me teach you a verse,' said the jackal; 'to a wise and virtuous man the whole world of beings is related; high and low, rich and poor, every man is my brother and I am his friend, and since your dear fawn has fallen in love with me, why may you not also give me confidence, and secure my happiness and friendship?'

"'Yes,' said the antelope, 'let us debate no longer; let true harmony and friendship unite us, and let us enjoy life in one home, and compose one family.'

"The hawk liked not the speech of the antelope; and correctly reading the nature of the jackal, said: 'As you desire, dear antelope, since it is your pleasure to adopt this animal into our family, let it be so.'

"The sun rose next morning and called forth the slumberers, but the hawk was nowhere to be found, having in the night started for another part of the country."—The Nineteenth Century.

LORD BYRON.

The Tribune, in one of its editorials on the subject, cites from the Temple Bar magazine, London, an article on "Byron's Married Life," which alludes to Lushington's opinion. "What," says the Tribune, "could have induced an advocate in the ecclesiastical court to give an opinion so apparently at variance with all ecclesiastical usages? We leave the writer in Temple Bar to reply: 'There is but one answer. Dr. Lushington must have assumed the existence of a fact from which inevitably followed the same consequence that Lord Thurlow pointed out to the House of Lords when he prevailed with them to give, what had never been allowed before, the right of marrying again to a woman seeking divorce for the cause of her husband's adultery. As a general rule, the right was given to a man whose wife had committed adultery, because he could not take her again, and was denied to a woman whose husband had been guilty of the same offense, because they might be reconciled. In the particular instance before the House of Lords, the husband had been guilty with his wife's sister. The wife could not without guilt return to him, and therefore she was permitted to marry again. When Dr. Lushington declares reconciliation to be impossible and that if attempted he could take no part in the attempt professionally or otherwise, he must be understood to mean that "duty both to God and man" forbade Lady Byron to return to her husband. This," continues the Tribune, "is a guarded passage, but its meaning is clear enough now that Mrs. Stowe has given us the clue. Lady Byron could not return to her husband for the same reason that a wife could not return to a husband who had committed adultery with her sister; adultery with a wife's sister, by English law, is incest. So long as Byron was afraid of provoking his wife to make a full disclosure, he was ready enough in a romantic sort of way to shoulder a load of indefinite blame, and to paint his partner and victim as a suffering angel:

"'To others' share let female errors fall;
For she had not ev'n one—the worst of all.'

It was easy for him to deny all knowledge of the specific offense for which he was discarded, and the world then would suspect nothing more than the fashionable infidelities of which he never made a secret. 'But the true cause,' says the article from which we have quoted, 'was always present to his mind, and if it were of the class to which Dr. Lushington's opinion points, his consciousness would prompt the answer that he gave. * * * * It seems impossible to avoid the conclusion that the cause had never been explained to him—that he knew the cause—and did not dare to ask for explanation.'"

A MAN is apt to think that his personal freedom involves the right to make his fellow men do just as he pleases.

THE BEST COOKING STOVE

FOR WOOD NOW IN USE.

THE FASHION.

We call especial attention to this Stove, which has been produced at great expense, combining all the new and important improvements; also to the extra height of the Oven under the fire chamber, the Patent Air Chamber Front Doors, and Patent White Enameled Iron Knobs, the improvements in the covers and centre pieces all of which have been covered by Letters Patent and are used in no other Stove. They are warranted to stand fire, or others sent free of charge in all cases. We have all sizes of this justly celebrated Stove, both

PLAIN AND EXTENDED BACKS,

the Extended Back with cast iron Enameled Reservoir and Faucet, Tin Warming Closet, Gridiron Cover, etc. The part of the top supporting the Reservoir is raised so that the flue is above the top plate, instead of below, as is the case in most of the Stoves now used, and the heat is forced directly against the whole surface of the bottom of the Reservoir. The Reservoir being detached from the pipe, can be removed at pleasure, thereby forming a six-hole Stove—the best in use, as the back holes will heat as well or better than the middle ones. For sale by G. W. W. GOODWYN, 62 Camp street.

ALSO, THE MOST

Complete and Perfect Cooking Stove

FOR BITUMINOUS COAL OR COKE

ever invented, in the estimation of all who have yet seen it. Patented in 1869.

THE MONITOR,

which can be seen at 62 Camp street. The advantage possessed by this Stove over all the other Coal Cooking Stoves are so numerous, and so patent to every sensible observer, that it is only necessary to examine it in order to be convinced of its superiority.

All of the above Stoves are fitted with extra came, Oven Doors lined with tin, and furnished with William Resor's Patent Air Chamber, sliding front doors, patent centres, covers and White Enameled Knobs.

The operation of every Stove guaranteed. Directions for putting up and using same accompany each Stove.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE, Staunton, Virginia.

The College of the Baltimore Conference, M E Church South.

Rev William A. Harris, President, with thirteen professors, teachers, etc.

Will begin its next session SEPTEMBER 20, 1869, and close June 30, 1870.

Than this no College for young ladies in the South ranks higher. It is attended by pupils from various Southern States. System of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Society is refined, scenery beautiful and health unsurpassed. A marked feature in this institution is the rapid promotion of the physical health and vigor of its pupils. Young ladies who come here from the South, with feeble constitutions, are entirely restored to health.

Charges for the scholastic year:
Board and tuition in the Collegiate Course, $225
Music and other extra studies, moderate.

Refer to Bishops Pierce, Wightman, Early, Doggett McTyeire, Dr. Thomas O. Summers, Dr. L. Pierce, Hon. B. H. Hill, Hon Alex. H Stevens, Georgia, Hon. J. S. Thompson, Mississippi, Mrs. General John H. Floyd, Faculty of University of Virginia, R. M. College.

Under the care of

FIVE HUNDRED SOUTHERN METHODIST PREACHERS,

Who are both the agents and owners of this sheet.

A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

SQUARES,	1 MO.	3 MOS.	6 MOS.	12 MOS.

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

The Thirty-second annual course of instruction in this Department will commence on Monday the 15th of November, 1869 and terminate on the second Saturday of March, 1870. Preliminary Lectures on Clinical Medicine and Surgery will be delivered in the amphitheatre of the Charity Hospital, beginning on the 18th of October, without any charge to students. The Anatomical rooms will be opened at the same time.

The members of the Faculty are Visiting Physicians and Surgeons to the Charity Hospital, and give instruction daily at the bedside of the sick. The practical advantages thus offered to students are unrivaled.

FEES.—For all the Lectures, $140; Matriculation, $5; Practical Anatomy, $10; Graduation, $30. Payment required in advance.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

Most branches of the wholesale trade have exhibited increased animation since our last report. The stocks, at the same time, are ample and well assorted, and freely offered at satisfactory prices. Very little has been done in sugar and molasses, and the movement in Western produce has been confined to a limited local and jobbing business.

We have nothing of marked importance to note in our accounts from the country, and presume that picking is progressing satisfactorily in nearly every quarter.—Nothing, however, has occurred to give a more cheering prospect to the crop, which very few are now willing to estimate at over 2,500,000 bales. Nor have we any more favorable intelligence with regard to sugar, the yield of which promises no increase over last year.

The river has fallen six inches since our last report, and is now ten feet two inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the 1st instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi ....bales..	10713
Lake	51
Alabama and Tennessee	391
Mobile	315
Florida	20
Total.....	11560

On Saturday the movement commenced with increased spirit, and although the supply was only moderate, very few of Friday's receipts being ready, and other causes conspiring to check operations, yet the sales summed up 4,400 bales, at prices showing no improvement of fully ¼c., low middling closing at 24¼c. In fact there were some sales of strict at a fraction higher, but not in sufficient amount to serve as a basis for quotations. On Monday the movement was materially checked by advancing freights and a scant supply of freight room, and in some degree also by a decline in exchange, but still, as the demand was quite general, 3,500 bales changed hands at an average improvement of ⅛c., prices having advanced during the morning ¼c., but subsequently ruled more in favor of buyers. On Tuesday the market opened with by no means a liberal supply, and the movement checked by an unwillingness on the part of buyers to go on unless at some concessions, which factors would not admit. Later in the day, however, parties came together more freely, and as the demand was general and quite animated the business proved to be much the heaviest of the season, amounting to 6,100 bales. Prices showed some irregularity, but closed rather more in favor of factors. Low middling sold as low as 24⅛c., and strict low middling, good staple, as high as 24¾c., but neither could be regarded as furnishing a fair basis for quotations.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 14,000 bales, taken for the North, France and Great Britain.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 52,967 bales, against 60,152 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 35,537 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is a decrease of 4,472 bales to Great Britain, 3,026 to France, and an increase of 293 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary.....	— to —
Good ordinary	— to 23¾

SUGAR.—The stock of Louisiana sugar is very small, and the demand is restricted in consequence. Job or resales are being made at 12¼c. per pound for good common, 12¾c. for fair, 13½ to 14c. for fully fair, 14¼c. for prime, 15c. for choice, and 16½c. for white.

MONETARY.—Gold opened at 130¼ to 130¾, (against 129⅛ at New York,) and closed at 130¾ to 131.

Operations in silver have been of moderate extent, the only sales reported being $1,500 in American half dollars at 129½ to 130⅛.

We have heard of but little movement in stocks, the only sales reported being 400 shares Ship Island Canal at $1 60, and 40 shares Bank of New Orleans at $41 25.

READVILLE SEMINARY.

This is a private institution, with its number of pupils limited, and is authorized by the Legislature of Louisiana to confer degrees, diplomas and literary honors. It was in successful operation from 1843 until interrupted by the events of the war in 1862, and reopened January, 1867.

Teachers of a high grade of talent and merit are in charge of the different departments—English, Ancient and Modern Languages, Music, Painting, etc.

Pupils charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session. All pupils received with the understanding that they are to remain and attend the examination at the close of the session in which they enter, and no deduction made on the bills for absence, except in cases of protracted illness, when the loss may be divided between the institution and the patron.

In her outfit each pupil should be provided with toilet boxes, towels, napkins, sheets, pillow cases and blankets or comforts. She should also bring knife, fork, spoon, cup and napkin ring.

All articles and clothing brought to the Seminary should be distinctly marked, lists of which should be permanently placed on some part of the trunk convenient for reference. The scholastic year commences October 1 and ends in July.

EXPENSE.

Board and tuition per year	$175 00
The Modern Languages a small extra charge.
Music, per year.....	75 00

Payments due a half session in advance.

Monthly reports of the studies, health and general deportment of the pupils are sent to the parents or guardians at a distance.

The main Seminary building, recently destroyed by fire, will be replaced by one of ample accommodations, now in process of construction, which will be ready for the reception of pupils at the opening of the next session.

E. A. GRANT, LL. D., PRINCIPAL.

This institution occupies the large and elegant building lately known as Grant & Barker's School. The grounds are situated on Sixth street, between Walnut and Chestnut streets, and extend back to Centre street. They are elevated several feet above the street, thus making the large and beautiful lawn a most desirable place for healthful outdoor exercise.

The building, furniture and apparatus of the school are among the most complete and valuable in the West.

Experienced teachers, residing in the institution, will devote their time to the moral, intellectual and physical improvement of the pupils.

WASHINGTON.

THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 8.—By the President of the United States—a proclamation:

The year which is drawing to a close has been free from pestilence. Health has prevailed throughout the land, and abundant crops reward the labor of the husbandman. Commerce and manufactures have fully prosecuted their peaceful paths. The mines and forests have yielded liberally. The nation has increased in wealth and in strength. Peace has prevailed, and its blessings have advanced every interest of the people, in every part of the Union. Harmony and fraternal intercourse is restored, and is obliterating the sparks of the past conflict and estrangement. Burdens have been lightened, means increased, and civil and religious liberty are secured to every inhabitant of the land, whose soil is trod by none but freemen. It becomes a people thus favored to make acknowledgment, to the Supreme Author from whom such blessings flow, of their gratitude and their dependence, to render praise and thanksgiving for the same, and devoutly to implore a continuance of God's mercy.

Therefore I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do recommend that Thursday, the 18th day of November next, be observed as a day of thanksgiving and of peace and prayer to Almighty God, the creator and ruler of the universe; and secondly, I do further recommend to all the people of the United States to assemble on that day in their accustomed places of public worship and to unite in the homage and praise due to the bountiful Father of all mercy, and in fervent prayers for the continuance of the merciful blessings He has vouchsafed to us as a people.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed this the 5th day of October, A. D. 1869, and of the independence of the United States of America the ninety-fourth. U. S. GRANT.

By the President:

HAMILTON FISH,
Secretary of State.

THE DEATH OF EX PRESIDENT PIERCE

The following was made public this afternoon:

WASHINGTON, Oct 8, 1869.—The painful duty devolves upon the President of announcing to the people of the United States the death of one of his honored predecessors, Franklin Pierce, which occurred at Concord, early this morning.

Eminent in the public councils, and universally beloved in public and private life, his death will be mourned with a sorrow befitting the loss which this country sustains by his decease.

As a mark of respect to his memory, it is ordered that the Executive Mansion and the several departments at Washington be draped in mourning, and that all business be suspended on the day of the funeral. It is further ordered that the War and Navy Departments cause suitable military and naval honors to be paid on this occasion to the memory of the illustrious citizen who has passed from among us.

U. S. GRANT.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—Pennsylvania elections—44 counties heard from; the remaining 22 counties must average a Democratic gain of over 200 to elect Packer.

Geary's majority in 36 counties is nearly 5,000. The vote among 30 counties must average each 157 gain to elect Packer. Contest very close, with the chances in favor of Geary.

Geary's majority will probably reach 4,000.

The Legislature is Republican.

Nothing definite has been received from Ohio beyond the fact that a Legislature has been elected that will defeat the sanction of that State to the fifteenth amendment.

Iowa has gone Republican.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 13.—The chairman of the Republican Committee has returns from all but nine counties. His figures show Geary's election by 4,000 majority.

Senator Sherman telegraphs from Ohio: Fifty-six counties heard from; they show a loss of 6,000 on last year's vote—leaving a margin of 11,000. Sherman thinks Hayes will be elected by 5,000 majority.

The chairman of the Ohio Republican Executive Committee telegraphs that Hayes is elected by 8,000 to 10,000 majority. The Legislature is close, but I think it will be Republican.

EUROPE.

LONDON, Oct. 13.—Lord Derby has been insensible for several hours.

LONDON, Oct. 13.—The Times has an article on the present condition of affairs in Spain, in which it states that they have little sympathy and less faith in Spanish republicanism.

The failure of the present government causes an unnecessary prolongation of the present anomalous condition of affairs, though there is now no King forthcoming; the better plan is to continue the remedy already adopted in the suspension of constitutional guarantees, and leave matters as they are.

It regards the Regency as a half way house—less objectionable than a monarchy and less dangerous than a republic. Prim leans to this policy.

PARIS, Oct. 13.—There are several public reunions announced, at which disturbances are feared, but the government will enforce the law for suppressing meetings calculated to disturb the peace.

MADRID, Oct. 13.—Prim reviewed the city troops to-day. Government officials declare the rebellion subsiding. The Republicans say the rebellion is increasing. Interrupted communication prevents reliable information, but insurrection undoubtedly extends throughout the country.

ITALY.—The government offers no opposition to the attendance of the Italian bishops at the Ecumenical Council.

ROME.—The Figaro says that M Dupanloup, Bishop of Orleans, will defend liberal ideas before the Ecumenical Council, and that fifty American bishops give him their support.

The Paris Patrie contradicts a report that the French troops are to retire from Rome on the 15th of November.

PERE HYACINTHE comes over only on a ten months' visit—not to remain in America, as has been inferred. We suppose he wishes to hold aloof from the agitations his letter has excited, leaving the members of the General Council, so far as he is concerned, to form their own unbiased judgment upon his appeal to that body. This would be but in keeping with the character of the great preacher.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NASHVILLE, Oct. 6.—The fight for the Senatorship is more exciting than ever. Johnson has his headquarters at the Maxwell House, the two finest rooms in the establishment—the bridal chambers—being appropriated to his use. He electioneers with as much vim and vigor as he ever did in his palmiest days. After legislative hours members begin to drop in, and in the evening it is not uncommon to see a score of Senators and Representatives seated round a long table, while the ex-President, with animation and earnestness, lays down the law and defends his policy.

Etheridge holds forth at the City Hotel. He exerts remarkable conversational and persuasive powers, albeit he is often very indiscreet in his utterances. His slurs about East Tennessee have lost him votes from that section. Johnson is certainly the more wily and politic of the two. Each has hosts of zealous friends, who are working as if the fate of the Republic depended on the result.

Each member of the Legislature had placed on his desk to-day a package containing Johnson's messages to Congress, including his principal vetoes. It is hardly probable that this appeal to ancient history will make any votes one way or the other. Viewing the whole matter from an impartial standpoint, it may be stated that Andy is still in the lead and is likely to retain his advantage.

HARTFORD, CONN., Oct. 6.—The Courant, of to-morrow, will contain the following card from Mrs. Stowe:

To the Editors of the Courant:

Mrs. Stowe desires the friends of justice and fair dealing to publish for her this announcement, that she has kept silence heretofore in regard to the criticism on her article on Lady Byron for two reasons: First, because she regarded the public mind as in too excited a state to consider the matter dispassionately; and secondly, because she has expected the development of additional proofs in England, some of which are of great importance, and have already come to hand. Mrs. Stowe is preparing a review of the whole matter, with further facts and more documents, including several letters of Lady Byron to her attesting the vigor and soundness of her mind at the time referred to, and also Mrs. Stowe's own letters to Lady Byron at the same time, which were returned to her by the executors soon after that lady's death. She will also give the public a full account of the circumstances and reasons which led her to feel it to be her duty to make this disclosure—as a duty alike to justice, gratitude and personal friendship.

JEFFERSON, TEXAS, Oct. 8.—All the prisoners recently on trial for the murder of Smith and two negroes, in October, 1868, except five, were released to-day. The five retained in the stockade are Colonel L. P. Alford, Oscar Gray, Matt. Taylor, C. L. Pitcher and Dr. J. A. Richardson. The findings of the commission in regard to them have not yet transpired.

EASTPORT, ME., Oct. 9.—A fearful hurricane has prevailed here to-day. Wharves, vessels and fish houses are smashed—most of the fishing vessels are in pieces. Twenty-four vessels are ashore in Rumney's Bay, and many lives are lost. The loss cannot be less than $5,000,000. A large part of the town is a perfect wreck.

LEWISTOWN, ME., Oct. 9.—A great freshet here. The farmers in the valleys barely escaped with their lives, carrying their children in their arms.

THE TRADE WIND DISASTER.

NARRATIVE OF THE SECOND MATE.

Mr. George Thomas, second mate of the steamship Trade Wind, which sunk about seventy miles southeast of Southwest Pass recently, gives the following interesting account of his adventures for seven days, without water, in an open boat, his rescue, etc.:

After the discovery of the leak and the determination to abandon the vessel, the captain told me to take the gig. The most of the crew and passengers were then in the other boats. The gig was not overloaded, and I put in her what things I thought were wanted. We got into her and pulled off from the ship. I then went back to the vessel to get a sail. After getting the sail the captain told me to throw the lifeboat overboard, and the first mate assisting, we launched the lifeboat and hailed her out and got two more men into her. We got what water and bread we could. The rest of the boats were at that time moored and had their stores in them. We then kept off until the vessel sunk. There were in the boat at that time myself, Frank Dillon and Abner Reeis. The captain took the latitude at twelve o'clock. We then started, the captain giving us the course and distance, seventy miles northwest by north. We kept together that evening, and about four o'clock I pulled up and took Thomas Tomios from the captain's boat, making four of us.

We staid together until dark; I then proposed to the captain that we would divide the men among the other boats and leave the lifeboat. The captain said no, but that when we were tired of rowing he would give us a tow. He towed us, and we rowed all Friday night. The pilot left us during the night and made for the bar. We saw him no more. The captain brought us in tow Friday night and Saturday. On Saturday night the wind died away and the captain cast us off, telling us that when the breeze came on he would take hold of us again. He gave us the course and we started for the Pass. On Sunday morning the captain was about six miles astern and the mate in the other boat four miles ahead; saw shipping at the Pass, about ten miles off.

The norther then struck us, and drove us off. We spoke to the captain, and told him we were out of water. He said he was out too. He gave us about a pint of water on Saturday. On Sunday morning we had no water, but bread and ham plenty. The captain said he could not take us; his boat had sprung a leak. We kept the boat's head to sea, and drove before the wind until Wednesday—three full days. On Sunday night our provisions were wet and destroyed. It rained on Wednesday, and we caught about a quart of fresh water. On Wednesday night the wind shifted to the southeast. We rowed for some time, but finally lost an oar, and were rendered almost helpless. We slept and rested two at a time. We caught, during the time, a small shark and two or three fish. These were our provisions. On Wednesday saw the smoke of a steamer to the northwest, as we supposed. We suffered severely from thirst, but little from hunger. We drank considerable salt water, without any ill effects.

On Friday, at eleven or twelve o'clock, we reached the schooner ——, Captain Dennison, master, from Galveston to Pensacola. She was lying at anchor. We saw her in the morning, and drifted down to her, driven by the wind and tide, which we aided with the little strength we had, and with the aid of the one oar left. We would have passed her without being able to come alongside, but the captain saw us, and sent his boat to our assistance. We were taken on board, kindly cared for, and taken to Pensacola, from whence we came to this city. At Pensacola we learned that the remainder of the crew and passengers were all safe; and so our adventure ended. The three men with me never lost heart, nor did their courage droop for a moment; every man was prompt and ready for his watch; and we always kept the two chances in view—first, to reach the north shore, guided at night by the stars, and in the day by the sun; second, to get picked up by a passing vessel. We were very weak, and nearly exhausted with sores, commencing to break out over our hands and bodies, but soon recovered; and we are now ready for another cruise.

The Tennessee Colored Conference.

This body held its third session in Capers chapel, Nashville, September 29 to October 3. Bishop Paine presided. He organized this Conference—the first of its kind—in Jackson, Tennessee, November, 1867. Last year it met in Memphis—and as the most of its membership is embraced within the limits of the Memphis Conference, it is called the Colored Memphis Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. T. N. Stuart and J. W. Lane, members, were the secretaries. The Revs. J. H. Brooks, McKamie and Taylor were present, assisting in minute business. These brethren have taken much interest in the colored churches, and have materially aided in their organization and development. Before the close Bishop McTyeire arrived from Kentucky, and took part in the proceedings. On Sunday, at eleven A. M., Bishop Paine preached and ordained twenty-eight deacons; in the afternoon, six elders; at night, after votes of thanks duly rendered, the appointments were read out, and Conference adjourned, to meet next year in Brownsville, Tennessee.

The congregations were large and well behaved. Besides the multitudes of colored people who attended, several of our leading white citizens and friends were present from time to time, and were most favorably impressed. The General Conference plan of organizing our colored membership into a separate ecclesiastical jurisdiction looks hopeful from the standpoint of an Annual Conference in working order. The Bishops are much encouraged with this experiment, now in its third year. They will go forward carefully, but hopefully. Of course difficulties are in the way—but where shall we not find them? We are persuaded, more than ever persuaded, that the best hope of the colored people lies in the success of this plan. The preachers have been firm and stable in their trusts and charges to a degree that ought to give confidence to those who need it. The members have increased. They have found favor with the people. They are building churches, and putting the district, circuit and station work into permanent form. The moral and educational qualifications for orders are being raised and rigidly insisted on. Let our preachers and people everywhere read the list of appointments below, and they will be directed thereby how to bestow help and co-operation wisely and well. Help them in their Sunday schools—help them to build houses of worship—help them as they have need.—Dr. Watson was present part of the time, giving useful assistance, and obtaining a large list of subscribers for the Colored Christian Advocate—their organ—which he will soon begin to publish.

THE SWEET QUININE IMPOSTURE.—Its Author Expelled.—At the recent annual meeting of the National Apothecaries' Convention of the United States, at Chicago, the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, A member of this association has put forth a nostrum called "sweet quinine," which contains no quinia, and is therefore a fraudulent imposture; therefore,

Resolved, That Mr. Frederick Stearns has, in his so called "sweet quinine," and in the advertisement concerning it, violated the sense of moral rectitude of this association, and has violated its constitution and the general purposes of its organization.

Resolved, That for these offenses Mr. Frederick Stearns be expelled from this association.

Poor Stearns! He will be famous as the first and last of the series.

THE most important event of the week is the announcement made by Father Hyacinthe that he leaves his monastic order and withdraws from his allegiance to Pope and council. Father Hyacinthe has become the most famous preacher of his day and the popular orator of the Madeleine and Notre Dame, and his "defection" may bring with it the most important consequences to Romanism in France. This is not the first time that he has been called to consider the step, and last year he was summoned to Rome to answer for some of his liberal utterances. The telegraph now tells us that he will be excommunicated.

LOUISVILLE CONFERENCE.—We have not yet received reports from the session of this body, which began at Owensboro, September 22. On September 25 the following were elected delegates to the General Conference: Clerical—A. H. Redford, N. H Lee, E. W. Sehon, David Morton; Reserves—W. H. Anderson, T. C. Frogge. Lay—J. T. Lithgow, W. B. Mocken, B. F. Biggs, J. C. Walker; Reserves—Dr. Darnett, C. F. Harvey, Prof. Scott, Judge W. P. Fowler.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

IN ONE of his late sermons, the rector of St. Albans Protestant Episcopal church, in this city, affirmed that the Episcopalian and Roman Catholic belief is positively alike, although the members do not commune together, owing to intrigues at the Court of Rome at the time of the Reformation. The preacher boldly asserted that the churches referred to are but actually one, and that the members are all Roman Catholics; and he hoped to see the day when both should be united under the latter name and unite in communion.—Independent.

A FAVORABLE NOTORIETY.—The good reputation and extended use of Brown's Bronchial Troches for coughs, colds and throat diseases have caused the Troches to be extensively imitated. SATURDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1869.

WAITING.

Mors janua vitæ.

I have waited till spring's first breath came over the rippling streams,
And kissed the opening flowers as it lightly skimmed along;
Till the woodland lilies waved all white in the morning beams;
And the deep dells echoed again to the sound of the wild bird's song.

I have waited till summer came forth all wreathed in a thousand flowers,
Shedding a luscious balm over the meadows, and glades, and hills,
Twining the daffodil sweet with the rose in her fragrant bowers,
And fringing with verdant moss the sides of the bubbling rills.

I have waited till autumn has gone from the woods' waning sigh,
Leaving the half dead trees of their emerald tresses all shorn;
When the branches revealed in the night the stars in the far-off sky,
Or shook in a tremulous chill at the sob of the early morn.

I have waited through dreary December's hours of darkness and gloom,
Till the old year, weary and worn, had passed away to his rest;
Till his midnight knell had rung in the dark with a tongue of doom,
And floated above the snow that lay like a shroud on his breast.

I have waited a dreary time on the verge of the border land,
Consumed by languishing pain, and shadowed by grief profound;
Living again in the thrill of the grasp of a long-loved hand,
Lingering over the tones of a voice of the tenderest sound.

I wait in the balmy hours of the twilight soft and still,
Watching the crimson flecks in an azured western sky;
Lulled by the vesper chimes from the church on the far-off hill,
Borne on the softest wings of the night wind's tenderest sigh.

I linger here on the verge of this shadowy border land,
How long, Lord, yet to stay, from the land I have seen afar?
Thine own time, Lord, then lead me up with a gentle hand!
And open thou wide the gates that have stood so long ajar!

ROMANISM.—NO. 4.

Continuing my conversation with the Bishop, I said: "Bishop, your doctrine of a purgatory is to Protestants a great objection to your church. We think if our sins are pardoned, our hearts renewed, and we live and die in the path of duty, that we enter at once into rest. We believe that we are saved by grace through faith; that it is Christ's atoning and meritorious blood that washes our sins away, and not purifying, purgatorial fires."

He replied that the doctrine of a purgatory was a very comfortable one; that none of us were as good as we ought to be, or ready for the holy presence of God.

I replied that he must excuse me for differing from him; that to me it was not comfortable to think I must pass through the tortures and pains of purgatory; in fact it was a most appalling thought, and if I believed it I should shrink from death with unutterable horror and alarm; that I did not see how, in view of this doctrine, Paul could say it was "far better to depart and be with Christ," or how to die could be considered "gain," or how it could be written: "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." I asked the Bishop if they did not hold that the priest, by offering the sacrifice of the mass and praying for the souls of the dead, could deliver souls from purgatorial pains and bondage?

I understood him to say that that was the doctrine of the church.

I answered that Protestants so understood them to teach, and that we thought if Roman priests believed that they could deliver souls out of the dreadful pains of purgatory by offering the sacrifice of the mass and repeating some Latin prayers, and yet would not do it, but could take their ease and pleasure, and wait a long year until a poor family could scrape together and save money enough to pay the priest's charge for the job, that he must be a most unfeeling and heartless man. But if he did not believe that he possessed the power—that it was a work beyond his strength—then we thought the priest a great knave to be bumbugging ignorant people and cheating the poor out of their money; that we left them to take which ever horn of the dilemma they preferred.

He said something in relation to the faith exercised by the friends of the departed, and the expression of that faith through the offerings they made, in the shape of fees to the priest.

As we neared the place of the Bishop's destination I said, in parting: "Bishop, I am a Protestant." "So I perceive," said he. I said I had asked him many questions, because I wished information, and I knew from his position he was competent to impart it; that I had stated my objections to the views of the church freely and plainly, but that I had not intended to be impertinent or offensively obtrude myself upon him. I hoped I had not been disagreeable.

With great blandness and affability of manner he replied: "Certainly not;" that he was pleased to have had the interview. He then, in a manner that seemed to me a combination of the explanatory and apologetic, said: "I believe many things which you do not. They seem difficult, if not impossible, to you, because you have never been taught to believe them; but they do not seem difficult to me, because I have been taught to believe them, and have been accustomed to believe them from my earliest youth. Do you know," said he, "that I was seventeen years old before I ever heard of a Protestant? In my seventeenth year I came home on a visit from the college. My father presented me with a gold watch, and said: 'My son, this watch was made in Geneva, Switzerland, by a Protestant.' I said: 'Protestant? What is that?'"

This struck me as a wonderful admission. The idea that a young man belonging to a good family, enjoying collegiate advantages, and seventeen years old, never hearing of Luther or the Reformation, or those great wars that grew out of it, that shook the thrones of Europe, and put a new face upon the politics of the world, was most strange, and showed most plainly the priests had eschewed and most carefully weeded from their school histories all facts that they did not wish their youths and students to know. Here our interview closed, and I parted with the Bishop to see him no more until we meet before the Judge of all. W.

Tobias Gibson and Rev. B. M. Drake.

MR. EDITOR: In the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, bearing date of August 28, I saw a communication referring to the erection of the Gibson monument in 1857.

It might, perhaps, have been best that the memory of that event should have slept, as do the ashes of many who were most deeply interested on the occasion. As, however, the former has been awakened, and the voices of the departed cannot reach us from the "enbodess shore," I think it expedient that the living should speak for them, and, as far as circumstances will permit, explain to the author of that article, and its readers, why Dr. Drake took no part in the celebration alluded to.

Most of his best beloved friends, who were cotemporary with him, and best understood the noble and unselfish motives which constrained him to a life of forty years' toil in the itinerant ministry, preceded or soon followed him to the church triumphant. To them this communication would have been entirely superfluous. But an almost new generation has arisen, who may not so fully understand the ambiguous language. I refer to ——.

There are, among the papers in possession of the doctor's family, sufficient items to correct any misunderstanding of the kind which may occur. Being unable, however, immediately to refer to them, and having been fortunate enough to make his acquaintance at an early period of his ministry, and continuing it till its close; having, also, a full knowledge of the events alluded to, I think my recollection will enable me faithfully to present to those who may feel interested a summary of the facts.

There are still a few left who remember Dr. Drake's ardent zeal for God and the salvation of men; his desire to honor the memory of departed saints, and to leave their example on record for the benefit of succeeding ages; his unostentatious and dignified bearing, and the absence of those petty demonstrations of pique or wounded pride characteristic of little minds. He had, as early as 1832, commenced a history of Methodism in the Southwest, in which are related some interesting incidents of the labors of Rev. Tobias Gibson. Unfortunately other pressing duties interfered, and he made but little progress in the work, though still hoping at some future day to find time for its completion, and endeavoring, meanwhile, to retain in memory and collect otherwise all that might aid his purpose. This design was known to a number of his friends, as well as to myself, and many contributed what they knew. In 1833 he requested Rev. Mr. Sneid to make inquiry concerning the burial place of Rev. R. Nolley. A letter, which is preserved, gives evidence of this, and that the brother was successful in finding his grave. He had long been trying to ascertain the burial place of Rev. T. Gibson, and favorable circumstances determining its location with certainty, during the Conference of 1856 he suggested the propriety of having its members contribute to the erection of a monument to his memory, and of making the occasion, also, one of interest and usefulness. His design was approved, and he was appointed to act for them. Among the numerous relatives of the Gibson family he had many personal friends, whose good opinion he highly prized. But I do not think he was at first aware that there were any so near to the deceased as a great nephew and nieces. With many of them, however, he consulted on the subject, and received their cordial approbation. The idea had never occurred to him that any one was chargeable with neglect, or that it could be regarded as casting a reflection on any person or persons. His wish was to assemble a number of ministers and members from various parts of the Conference, hoping to promote brotherly feeling and religious social intercourse, the ultimate object of all being the glory of God and the salvation of immortal souls. In his personal arrangements and division of time he had reference to the convention he was to attend, his duties as presiding elder, and to his family. He visited the marble yard just before leaving Vicksburg (in April, I think,) with other brethren, and chose such a monument as the Conference could afford, and such a one as they had erected for Dr. Leavel and others. Some of the friends who were present objected to the plain monument, as Mr. Gibson's relations were wealthy. He replied that he was acting as agent for the Conference, which could not afford a costly monument for all whom it might desire to honor, and it would be a bad precedent. Besides, he thought if Mr. Gibson could himself express his opinion, he believed it would not be in favor of a fine one. He then gave directions for the inscription to be cut, as intended, and started homeward. There had then been no co-operation offered by Mr. Gibson's relations. Ignorant of what was about to transpire, he spent a short time with his family and started for Nashville, having arranged to return home from thence, perfect his address for the occasion, and go by land to Vicksburg, where he had appointed his Quarterly Meeting to precede, by a few days, the expected celebration.

A few days before leaving Nashville Dr. Drake received a short communication from a friend of Mr. Gibson's relations, whom they had authorized to confer with him, stating that they positively refused to have the plain monument set up. There was no other suggestion or offer of co-operation, whatever may have been intended. The impression forced itself upon him that he had most unintentionally offended the family, lost their friendship, and appeared to them as an officious intruder. Utterly at a loss what course to pursue, as the time was at hand, and not foreseeing results which followed, he wrote immediately to his brother-in-law, Dr. Magruder, of Vicksburg, to have the appointment simply recalled, in the city papers and otherwise, and to the preachers of the various circuits and stations, where it had been announced to do the same thing. The Christian submission and cheerfulness he had so long cultivated, under disappointment and sorrow, did not forsake him now, and he returned to his family without giving expression, even to them, to any feeling of vexation, but explained with regret the failure of his purpose.

His opinion then was that the relatives of Mr. G. preferred conducting the services at a time and in a manner most convenient to themselves, and selecting whatever minister they preferred. At the appointed time he started to his Quarterly Meeting in Vicksburg. On the way he was met by various questionings and rumors on the subject, and as he approached the city found that a splendid monument had been prepared, and extensive arrangements were being made to set it up at the time first appointed. To the numerous inquiries of his friends and others, he could only state that there had been no definite consultation with him. I cannot think that those who took the most active part in the second monument intended unkindness, but so entirely misunderstood Dr. Drake as to render his circumstances tryingly perplexing.

Had the family requested him to go out and take part in the services he would have done so, though he had not the preparation he desired; but this was not the case.

A friend said to him: "You will be greatly misunderstood, perhaps misrepresented. Had you not better go?" He answered: "I think not. I have not been invited and cannot intrude myself." During the Saturday of his Quarterly Meeting the prospects of losing the good opinion of so many valued friends caused him excruciating mental anguish. Notwithstanding which no word of censure or suspicion escaped his lips. To the communication of a brother who spoke with him he answered: "I leave my cause in the hands of my heavenly Father." Doubtless the appeal was heard, and is remembered. To the same watchful care his friends commit his memory. Z.

Montgomery District Meeting.

MR. EDITOR: The Montgomery District Meeting convened in Salem, Lee county, September 2, 1869, and was organized with Rev. M. S. Andrews, presiding elder, in the chair, and William Lowther elected secretary. The attendance was full, especially of the lay delegates. The opening sermon was preached by the Rev. William Shapard, in place of Brother Ross, who was detained by sickness.

The exercises of the entire meeting were characterized by a high degree of spirituality. Saturday night will long be a bright spot in the spiritual history of all present. There was a most gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit, recalling the early days of Methodism. It was a precious reunion. The brethren were filled with love to God and each other. They prayed and sang and rejoiced together. It was indeed a time of refreshing from the Lord. The experience meeting on Sunday morning was but a continuation of this gracious manifestation.

Whatever else the meeting accomplished, it has been the means of a great spiritual blessing to the church. The fruit will doubtless be reaped many days hence.

The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: D. Clopton, William Lowther, Rev. S. W. Harris, Benjamin Rush. Alternates: Rev. G. W. F. Price, I. H. Swearingen, J. B. Bilbroe.

The next District Meeting will be held at Loachapoka. The report on the showed a highly encouraging and satisfactory condition of the church throughout the bounds of the district. The week of prayer was observed in all the charges with the happiest results. Revivals had occurred in nearly every church. The members had been blessed, and quickened, sinners converted, and large additions to the church, and the work was still progressing.

COLLEGES AND EDUCATION.

The Tuskegee Female College, under the presidency of the Rev. G. W. F. Price, has been more prosperous during its late session than at any time since 1862.

The East Alabama Male College opens the new year with flattering prospects. The faculty is now full, and each professor can now be recommended for scholarship and efficient working power.

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

The report on Sabbath schools showed a very gratifying condition of this auxiliary of the church. Large numbers have been transferred from its ranks to the church during the late revivals. While recognizing the great work it has already accomplished, there is yet a great field open for vigorous effort. Nor can the church or society ignore the claims of the children and youth to early religious training by means of this instrumentality without serious loss. The Sunday school institute is a valuable auxiliary in awakening a deeper interest and securing better trained teachers. The more general circulation of the Sunday School Visitor is especially urged upon our schools. Experience has demonstrated that it is an invaluable adjunct, and exercises no little influence in drawing in scholars and retaining them, thereby securing permanency to our schools. There is no literature sought after with such avidity by the scholars as Sunday school papers.

The following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That we recommend, as an important auxiliary in keeping up a healthy interest among the pupils of the Sunday schools, the supplying them liberally with Sunday School Visitors and other suitable papers.

Resolved, That the Sunday School Institute, which was created by the act of this District Meeting, at its session in 1867, deserves the sympathy and hearty support of the church in this district.

Resolved, That the ministers throughout the entire district be requested to give it their support, and to attend to annual meetings.

COLORED WORK.

The Rev. S. N. Harris has been acting as superintendent of the colored church in this district. Four circuits have been organized, served by colored preachers. The work is in a decidedly improving condition.

Resolved, That this meeting fully sympathize with and indorse the efforts now making to furnish the Gospel to the colored people in the bounds of this district.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that every consideration of interest and Christian duty demands that our people shall give them all possible encouragement by assisting to furnish them houses of worship, and by organizing them into societies and Sabbath schools.

The report on

CHURCH PUBLICATIONS

urges the church to rally to the support of its Advocates, especially the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, the organ of our Conference. It is emphatically our paper; for it we must work until it is in every Methodist family in the bounds of the Conference. It is a grave reproach to our church that our church papers are not more generally patronized, and it suffers great spiritual loss. Our Publishing House ought to be patronized, especially as books can be procured at as cheap rates as in New York or Philadelphia. There is every reason to hope it will soon be relieved of its pecuniary embarrassment, if the church will rally to its support, instead of patronizing Northern houses, establishments of other denominations, or unfriendly branches of our own church. A more general diffusion of our own literature is a grave need of our church.

CHURCH PROPERTY.

There is great carelessness in the titles of our church property. In many cases it is doubtful, if the question of title was raised, if any deed of conveyance could be produced. The history of the times admonishes us to look to our church property. The flimsy pretexts upon which courts, in many sections of the country, are dispossessing us of our heritage and giving it to strangers, warn us of the necessity of care and diligence.

Resolved, That pastors and church members conform strictly to the requirements of the Discipline on this subject, by having a board of trustees elected by the Quarterly Conference in each church.

Resolved, That these trustees have a deed executed in due form, as near as may be in the form prescribed by the Discipline, and that the deed be duly attested and recorded in the office of the Judge of Probate of the proper county.

MINISTERIAL SUPPORT.

The report urges that the system of assessments now established be continued, and that every member of the church, man, woman and child, be assessed something, especially the youth. They should early be trained to habits of Christian liberality, which will be invaluable to themselves, the church and the world. And not only should every member be assessed, but every regular attendant of the church should be asked to contribute, not as a matter of charity, but as a matter of simple justice.

It also urges a more extended circulation of our church papers, for experience abundantly proves that where these are taken there is very little difficulty in securing a prompt and ready response to the claims of the ministry, and all the benevolent enterprises of the church. There is no more successful method of awakening our entire membership to their duty in these respects than by putting a church paper in the hands of every member. Let our ministers work energetically to this point.

It also suggests, to meet the difficulty of incompetent or inefficient stewards in some charges, the appointment of a steward who shall have general oversight of the whole circuit. To that effect the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That each Quarterly Conference be requested to appoint a steward, whose duty it shall be to supervise, assist and co-operate with the local stewards throughout the circuit.

A report was made from a special committee to make provisions for continuing, at the East Alabama Male College, the student that this district is educating for the ministry, and the assessments for that purpose were duly apportioned. A gratifying report of his ministerial labors was received in the reports of the local preachers.

REPORT ON FAMILY RELIGION

The elaborate, able and exhaustive report of Rev. G. W. F. Price, upon this subject, was listened to with deep interest. We forbear to give even an abstract of it, as by order of the District Meeting it is to be read in all the churches.

WM. LOWTHER, Sec.

[There is a full column more of this report, which we have not space to insert.—ED.]

THE Journal of Applied Chemistry tells of the exceedingly thin castings of the Chinese used for kettles, having bottoms much thinner than was found possible to make at Birmingham. Being so thin, they are exceedingly liable to crack, and are mended by wandering tinkers. These mechanics not only mend cracked wares, but also repair such as have holes an inch square knocked in them. The sides of the hole are filed and cleaned with brick dust, the pot is then inverted over a tripod, so that the hands can have full play upon the outside as well as inside. A crucible not larger than a thimble is taken, and a bit of cast iron put into it, and the iron brought to fusion by a charcoal fire in a furnace not larger than a goblet. The melted iron is poured upon ashes on a piece of felt, and introduced under the pot by the left hand, while it is pressed on the top by the right hand, also protected by felt and ashes. The protruding portions of the iron are filed and polished off, and the vessel is tested to see if it is water-tight. The price for the job is from six to eight cents. This is a decided advance on what our Western household science has yet reached.

The Christian Advocate.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1869.

Jasper District, Mobile Conference.

Mr. Editor: The work still moves on in our midst. Since I wrote you before, we have seen precious times. Our second camp meeting was on the Elyton circuit, at Grimley's chapel, a new camp ground gotten up through the efforts of their energetic pastor, T. P. Roberts. In many respects it was the most extraordinary meeting I ever attended. I tremble under the responsibility of trying to record such a work of divine grace. From the very hour we pitched our tents the divine presence and glory came down upon us. The preachers' tent shared largely in this baptism of glory. Every hour's service the heralds of the Cross went out of this sanctum as from the immediate presence of the Lord, and thus baptized, while they spoke, signs and wonders followed. Nearly every manifestation of which we have ever read or heard in connection with revivals in modern times was witnessed here. In addition to the usual shout of "glory," welling up from hearts filled with joy unspeakable, some would weep, while others would laugh; some would have the "jerks," while others would fall down helpless and remain so for hours. It was here I saw, for the first time, what is called the "swimming" exercise. Occasionally, among those who would lose the power of speech and locomotion, there would be one who would retain the use of their arms, and who would lie for hours gazing steadfastly upward toward heaven, during which time their hands would be going through the exercise of swimming. In all these various manifestations, regardless of age or social position, the person exercised seemed to have no power, for the time being, to resist the strange impulses, or the overpowering awe that came upon them. One might find much to puzzle his philosophy and psychology, but the most callous could not come in contact with these demonstrations without reaching the conclusion "that surely God is in this place, and I knew it not." Though the work first began among the Sabbath school scholars, yet it became general; it was not confined to any one class. Some of the most hopeless cases were powerfully converted. A great many small children gave the most satisfactory evidences of the fact that they had been made "partakers of the divine nature, and tasted of the powers of the world to come."

One little girl, just ten years of age, after giving vent to her feelings in shouts of praise, seemed to lose sight of all below, and gazing heavenward, her face became radiant with glory, her little hands gently moved now and then, as though she was trying to clap them together, as an act of praise. Never, to my latest breath, shall I forget that radiant countenance! It was the most unearthly thing I ever expect to see this side of heaven!

To give you some idea of the moral power that pervaded the entire place, the great congregation on Sunday had no restraining influence whatever; the interest rather increased, so that all that vast throng was brought more or less under its bland sway! At the close of the eleven o'clock services at least fifty persons crowded their way to the altar; so it was again at three P. M.

Monday night was set apart for the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Such a communion service I never witnessed before. During the introductory remarks a flood of light and power was poured upon the speakor and the people that seemed to light up the very heavens! It appeared as though we all had been borne on down the stream of grace, until now we were "Plunged in the Godhead's deepest sea,

And lost in His immensity!"

Such heatific visions are seldom seen by mortals here below! O, it was good to be there.

The entire results of the meeting will only be realized in great eternity. No one could ascertain the exact number of conversions; there must have been over one hundred. There were eighty-five reported up to Monday morning, and then the work became so general in the tents, in the grove, all over the camp ground, that we could not get correct statistics. The influence of this meeting will give the church power all over Jones' valley. Methodism, Southern Methodism, has not run its race yet. We believe, in the hands of God, the Southern Methodist Church is just entering upon one of the most powerful revivals of modern times! We are not alone in this opinion. Some others we "wot of" are beginning to "opine the same thing," and are changing their position accordingly. But more of this anon.

Brother Roberts is doing a great work in harmonizing conflicting elements, and developing the latent resources of the church on the Elyton circuit. He has received already one hundred and twenty-five into the church, and has but just begun his services. The field is now truly white to the harvest. May the great Head of the Church sustain him while he is gathering sheaves for garners in the skies!

Brother J. E. Andrews, on the Jasper circuit, has had a revival all over his work. Some ninety-eight have joined the church, and over one hundred have been converted. Brother E. Nicholson, of Jonesboro circuit, has not labored in vain. At more than one place on his work the Lord has come already in reviving and saving power. He has other meetings yet to hold. Brother R. W. Coons, of Cahaba, Mississippi, is doing well. He is trying to prize that work up into a self-sustaining circuit. May the Lord give him a fulcrum, and increase the strength of his lever! Brother J. G. Gurley, of Elyton and Irondale, has put his house in order, and hung out his fleece of wool, and is waiting the answer. May Gideon's God send him speedily not only the "distilling dew," but pour a floodtide of glory upon his entire pastoral charge!

We have three more camp meetings to hold, after which we will report from the rest of the district. Through the mercy of God I have entirely recovered my health. I want to be a better man. Pray for us. Yours, in the kingdom and patience of Jesus,

J. M Boland.

DR. NEWMAN TURNED TURK!

Mr. Editor: The New York Methodist of the 25th ultimo, which has just come into my hands, contains a sermon in full, preached by Rev. Dr. Newman, in the Bedford street Methodist church, New York, from which I extract the following blasphemous utterance: "Nowhere, not even in the blessed Bible, can you find such spiritual, such lofty, such majestic conceptions of the Divine Being as are to be found in Mohammed's Koran."

What an assertion this beside the declaration of Jesus: "No man knoweth the Father but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal Him." Is it not evident that the glamour of orientalism hath blinded the eyes of the said doctor when he can thus avow that we derive a higher conception of God through the Koran of Mohammed than through the revelation of Jesus Christ? Who knows but the doctor has inscribed upon his broad phylacteries: "Great is Allah, and Mohammed is his prophet!" Has not the doctor, indeed, turned Turk?

Getting Ready for Heaven.—When Ben's master died they told him he had gone to heaven. Ben shook his head. "I 'fraid massa no gone there." "But why, Ben?" "Cos when massa go North, or go a journey to the springs, he talk about it a long time, and get ready I never hear him talk about heaven; never see him get ready to go there."

Drunkenness in Sweden.—In Sweden a man who is seen drunk four times is deprived of his vote. Such a rule enforced in this country would materially change some of our election returns.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Escambia Mission, Montgomery Con., October 5, 1869.

Mr. Editor: The Lord has again visited His people, and displayed His power in the conversion of souls and establishing the church. Brothers J. L. Skipper, L. A. Parker and myself have just closed a meeting of great interest at Pollard. It continued six days, and was a signal triumph, resulting in eight conversions and eight accessions to the church at this place. We feel that Methodism is on a firmer footing than ever in Pollard. Also, I have just closed another meeting near Pensacola, Florida, during which the Lord was present in power. It resulted in eleven accessions, and, as in the other case, a general revival of religion in the church. Blessed be the name of the Lord.

Your brother,

R. F. Mountain.

Williamsburg, Miss., Sept. 27, 1869.

Mr Editor: I have just closed my third round on the Paulding district, Mississippi Conference, for this year. We have had a series of revivals. At Mount Zion, Mount Carmel circuit, thirty accessions to the church. At Wesleyanna, Rankin circuit, twenty accessions. At Mount Moriah, Mount Carmel circuit, eleven accessions. At Souter Mount Carmel circuit, fifty accessions. At Byrd's chapel, Columbia circuit, twenty accessions, and during the meeting thirty five children were baptized.

A revival spirit pervades the church in many parts of the district; and God is present with His people, converting sinners from the error of their ways.

The following are our delegates to the Annual Conference: —— McLaurin, J. B. Lewis, J. E. Holloway and Rev. J. H. Holland. Alternates: Major Blackwell, E Enochs, J M Applewhite and Rev. J. J. Lezeby

H. P. Lewis, P. E.

Macon district, mobile conference.

Mr Editor: I am about to close up my fourth year's labors on this district. I wish to say a few things in regard to it. Each year we have had revivals to a greater or less extent, and our numbers have been gradually increased; but this has been the grand jubilee year for Macon district. The preachers in charge have from the start worked with a will. Among their first efforts was the purpose to circulate the New Orleans Christian Advocate—place it in every Methodist family, if possible. Your books will tell of their success. Pastoral visiting was promptly entered upon, and many families out of the church and a few in it have this year been blessed with the presence and prayers of God's messengers, who had not seen the face of one within their doors for many long months. Some of them have literally preached from house to house. Where they could do so they have held class meetings and love-feasts, and called for penitents at their regular appointments, and showed that they were in earnest. The people were impressed and the church was moved, and the foundation for a good work was thus laid.

When the time came for the battle to join they rallied their forces. The local preachers came up as true soldiers to the help of the Lord and the itinerants. The praying men, and the singing men and women turned out to each battle field in force. The preachers opened the batteries. The Spirit of the Lord helped. The people shouted. Satan's forces gave way. Sinners wept and prayed, repented, trusted in God, and were made happy. So the work has gone on, until now every circuit has had a general revival. One of the preachers said to me: "This is the first year I ever had a good revival on my work at every church. I believe I shall get all my collections."

At Macon station Brother Leith commenced a protracted meeting, a few days ago, which is still in progress. We hope God will reward his labors with a glorious success.

The district sends one young preacher to Greensboro, and Macon station pays half the board of another who goes to Summerfield.—The brethren at Summerfield assume the payment of the other half. Thanks to Summerfield, say I. Her liberality is magnificent.

Our old veteran, Rev. E. Callaway, has been with us at a number of our protracted meetings. He knows no abatement. He stands ready for every good word and work. In meekness he suffers many bodily afflictions, and is willing to live or to die. God bless him, and smooth his way down the declivities of life!

I leave this district feeling that I love every soul in it, and I hope, when the great reunion takes place, to meet them where friends part no more forever.

TEN DOLLAR PRAYER MEETINGS.

Mr. Editor: I have often been pained to see the little interest manifested by professors of religion in the weekly prayer meetings in our towns and cities. A dozen or two, out of a membership of two or three hundred, compose the congregation generally. This shows great indifference to spiritual things, and a low appreciation of the riches of grace in Christ Jesus.

If some great and powerful personage, from whom we expected to derive honor and patronage, should promise to meet us on such occasions, would we not exert ourselves to the utmost to be there? What shall be thought of our regard for the honor and power of Him who has said:—"Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them," when we suffer trifling excuses to keep us from the house of prayer?

I have sometimes thought if it were proclaimed, upon reliable authority, that every man, woman and child who should attend the weekly prayer meeting should receive, on every occasion, $10 in specie, what an alteration would be witnessed in the congregation! Church members who are scarcely seen there from year to year would become our most regular attendants. Parents would bring out all their children. The sisters would break through every difficulty. Business men would never be too much fatigued to be there. Methinks I hear a wife expostulating with her husband: "My dear, you are not very well, and you have been all day engaged in business. Stay at home to-night." "Oh, no, my dear," he replies; "you know it is our duty to serve God. I am not very tired. I can venture out to-night." At another time the wife will say: "It is cloudy and dark; you had better not go." "Oh, never mind; I can take my lantern and umbrella; you know we are commanded to endure hardness for the sake of Christ."

No doubt members of our sister denominations would be found there. They would say: "It is our duty to cultivate a catholic spirit. I am not a bigot. I can enjoy worship with any of God's people. I will go." What a revival we should have! The churches would not hold the congregations. They would come from all parts of the city. Ah! friends, does not this clearly expose our self-deception? We love money more than the riches of Christ's kingdom, and will make sacrifices for it that we would not make for spiritual gifts and graces. There is great reason to fear that many professors of Christianity will not be able to stand when the Son of Man cometh. They are deceived and blind, and do injury to the cause they professedly espouse. God help us to examine ourselves, and place all our feet firmly on the rock of ages.

IS IT A SIN TO USE TOBACCO?

I affirm that it is, and the following are my reasons for the affirmation:

The appetite for it is morbid, not natural. It is not nutritious. In ninety-nine cases out of every hundred it is positively injurious.

We are not our own. All we have and are belongs to God. We are His stewards. Now can we take God's money and spend it for tobacco with which we make our bodies sick and our minds feeble — those bodies and minds with which we are to glorify God, and not sin? I trow not! We are to do all that we do in the name of Christ and to the glory of God. Can we chew, smoke, snuff and dip tobacco in the name of Christ and to the glory of God? If we cannot, do we not commit sin when we gratify our morbid appetites with this bane to Christian decency?

Does God wink at this thing in ministers and church members? If our conscience goes down at our bidding, and we lose the compunction of our sin in this thing, will God forget, or will not a reckoning be had where no errors will be rectified or forgiven?

May God help us to keep ourselves pure, and be always ready to give an account of our stewardship.

For the Advocate.

Mr. Editor: I see a correspondent of the Advocate, incidentally alluding to the apostles, says our Saviour chose sinful and ignorant men.

While I incline to think much more has been made out of Acts 4: 13 than was intended by Luke, I do not remember any statement to the effect that the apostles were sinful men, unconverted, irreligious, when called to discipleship with Jesus; and in the absence of any testimony, we would naturally look for Him to select pious men for such an office.

The point may be considered a small one in theology, but I incline to think that some consequences might flow from either hypothesis which would carry with them some importance, and so I have thought worth while to notice it.

CHICAGO.

Chicago is more than one thousand miles of railway journey from Boston. Situated on the south shore of Lake Michigan, it has direct communication with the vast coast line of that great inland sea, whose circumference is about eight hundred miles. But as Lakes Superior and Huron form with it one individual expanse of water, the whole coast in immediate command of Chicago, leaving Lake Erie to the care of Detroit, extends upward of two thousand five hundred miles. Vessels load at Chicago, and by the lakes, canals, and the river St. Lawrence, find their way by a navigation of two thousand miles to the Atlantic, and do not shift their cargo till they reach Liverpool. Moreover, at Chicago railways converge from Minnesota, Iowa and Illinois, bringing to its markets, warehouses and wharfs the produce of the great northwest country, and of the vast and now cultivated prairie lands of the far West. Before long Chicago will be in direct railway communication with California, and thence by steamers with China, by the Union Pacific Railway. It is not, therefore, surprising that Chicago should have a vast trade in timber, beef, pork and all live stock; that it should be the chief primary market for grain in the world, and that it should promise to rival even New York in its commerce.

Its rapid growth is a marvel of the age. In 1831 it was only an Indian maze. In 1840 it had not five thousand inhabitants. Now, in 1869, it numbers upward of two hundred and fifty thousand, and is rapidly increasing in trade, manufactures and population.—The character of its population is influenced by its history. "Go ahead" is written in every countenance, seen in almost every action, and heard in almost every conversation. The people of Chicago naturally think "they are the people." They look quite down upon the old folks at Boston, and even of New York, as behind the age. Travelers have not seen America who don't go to Chicago. The cities of the eastern shore are but suburbs. Instead of Chicago being "far West," it is the centre of civilization, the fountain of progress. Would you know the true genius of America? Go to Chicago. Would you see how business should be transacted? Go to Chicago. Would you learn how to perform impossibilities? Go to Chicago. Would you ascertain the direction that political questions will take? Ask the people of Chicago. And if you desire an example of benevolence and religious zeal in building churches, providing schools, conducting Young Men's Christian Associations, then, also, go to Chicago.—The Broadway.

THE MASTODON.

On the same day that we received the news of the discovery of mastodon remains near Burlington, New Jersey, says the New York Journal of Commerce, a California paper brought intelligence of the exhumation of the huge tusks and bones of the same animal near Oakland, California. The California editor is a good deal puzzled over this singular find, and invites the Academy of Natural Sciences of his State to look into and explain it. Here in the East, and also in the South and many Western States, the disinterment of mastodon skeletons in whole or in fragments, is so common as to have ceased to excite astonishment. The opening up of almost every new marl pit, peat bed, and salt lick brings them to light. It is evident that at one time—at a very late geological period—mastodons were the most abundant of quadrupeds, ranging over the American continent in droves probably as large as those of the buffalo at the present time, on the far western prairies. The habitat of the animal was the whole temperate zone, though the climate and products of what are now the Middle, Western and Southern States seem to have been most suited to its tastes. Thus far the remains of the mastodon have been chiefly found in New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Kentucky, Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas, South Carolina, Mississippi, Alabama and Texas, though specimens have been occasionally dug up in British North America, even as far north as sixty-fifth parallel. The first nearly complete skeleton ever taken out was discovered in Orange county, New York, early in the present century, and was taken to London for exhibition, and afterward placed in Peale's Museum, Philadelphia. The swamps about Newburg, New York, are rich in these fossil treasures, and it is from those sources that the museums of the country have been supplied with such curiosities. One perfect skeleton was found in Newburg, New York, last year, and digging for them in the old swampy ground of that region would probably reveal hundreds of others. The same remark is true of swamps everywhere on this continent. The mastodon probably resorted to them to drink or feed on the roots of water plants, and becoming mired, was unable to extricate itself, and sank lower and lower, into the treacherous mud or quicksands, and was there drowned or suffocated. Since then decaying vegetation has gradually filled up the swamps, and the mastodon is now buried at a depth of from ten to fifty feet below the surface. This explains the frequent occurrence of its bones in marl and peat formations, and also in the salt licks of the West, to which the mastodons flocked at different seasons of the year. Of the genus mastodon giganteus there are estimated to be about thirty varieties, differing from each other in trifling respects. In general appearance and size they resembled the Asiatic elephant. The skeletons are from ten to twelve feet high, and from sixteen to twenty feet long, with tusks projecting from seven to nine feet beyond the sockets, and twenty-four teeth, the largest of which are about eight inches long on top and seven inches deep, thigh bone nearly a foot through at the thickest part, and four feet nearly two feet in diameter. At some stage in the history of the earth, prior, it is supposed, to the appearance of the mastodon on this continent, the creature flourished in Siberia; and the finding of its tusks, known as "fossil ivory," constitutes an important trade in that part of the world, even to this day.

A clergyman, once traveling in a stage coach, was asked by one of the passengers if he thought that pious heathen would go to heaven. "Sir," answered the clergyman, "I am not appointed judge of the world, and, consequently, cannot tell; but if you ever get to heaven you shall either find them there, or a good reason why they are not."

THE New Orleans District Meeting will be held in the Carondelet street church of this city, on the first Saturday and Sunday in November—6th and 7th.

J. C. KEENER, P. E.

N. B.—All itinerant preachers, local preachers, exhorters, class leaders, stewards and superintendents of Sabbath schools are members of this meeting, and are expected to be present with written reports of their various works. The meeting will begin at ten o'clock on Saturday morning.

A GOOD OPENING.

A note from President J. F. Tarrant, of the Columbus Female School, Mississippi, says: "Our institute opened yesterday with one hundred and thirty-four pupils." He adds further: "Brother Ramsay has been carrying on a meeting for two weeks. Prospects encouraging."

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

A letter from Rev. D. Merchant, dated Buckhorn, Mississippi, October 11, says: "We have had some gracious revivals on the Zainsville circuit this fall. At one of my appointments (Mount Zion) we commenced a meeting on Friday before the second Sabbath in September, and continued it eight days. It resulted in sixteen conversions and twenty accessions to the church. Brothers Glenn, Hill and Murph, all local preachers, were present during a part of our meeting and did effective service. One brother had nine children, or rather nine of his family, to join the church during the meeting. Nearly all the converts were Sabbath school scholars. Oh! what a blessing is the Sabbath school.

"I am glad also, with this good news of the church, to send you some new subscribers."

Moreau Street, New Orleans.

MR EDITOR: We have enjoyed a precious season of "refreshing from the presence of the Lord." About eighteen souls profess to have obtained the "pearl of great price," and as many united with the church. We are in a prosperous condition. Affectionately.

T. B. WHITE, Pastor.

OCTOBER 10, 1869.

THE recent Wesleyan General Conference, held in Hull, England, spent several hours discussing the case of a member who had written a book to show that attendance at class meetings ought not to be rigidly enforced. Many were in favor of suspending him from the ministry; but a mild rebuke was all that finally prevailed.

THE OUTDOOR MINISTRY.

The art of teaching, valuable as it is, constitutes but a part of the gifts essential to a minister of the Gospel, and that not the greater part. It was the power of the Saviour's life that impressed the multitudes, fully as much as the choice wisdom of his mouth. He was born in that sphere which admits no alternative for physical toil. His ministry was an immense labor, full of motion, of endurance and of exhausting service. He literally "went about doing good." The "chief rulers" had driven him from the synagogue to the seashore and the mountain. Every fibre of his body was taxed in the demonstration of a Son's obedience. The highest action of his life was at his exit from earth. It was not the fading out of a strong nature under the pressure of burdens insupportable, but his sun went down at midday, as a darkness brought suddenly over all the earth, from the sixth to the ninth hour. He was in the full morning of his wonderful life, in all its manhood, when his foes closed his career. How much more he might have done, but for the blind malignity of his enemies, can scarcely be imagined. That he would die at that time Jesus foreknew, as he foresaw any other event of history in advance; but that knowledge added nothing to the intensity of the Pharisees or priests' hatred for him, nor, on the other hand, in any degree lessened it. The Father did not arrest the natural flow of causes, for the Son came to be truly man, liable to all disasters incident to flesh. He himself had "power to lay down his life," and in the sense that he interfered not with any evil that might have overtaken any other just man, such as in a lower sense did overtake Socrates, He "gave himself for us." His death was then, in so far, an act of the Son of the Highest. He "bore our sins" in this action—he "carried our sorrows." It was the mightiest energy of love and the essential power of all life, in combined purpose holding back the curse of the law from a world of sinners. It was a support given to the human family in its hour of need, such as only could be given by a being of infinite holiness and infinite majesty, as well as of infinite sympathy.—And, looking at the greatness of this labor, there was a fitness in the age at which the Saviour entered into death—that is, when he was strongest in all manly attributes. His dying was the work of a Redeemer.

In all this we lose sight, for the time, of him as a teacher. His life seems to so far transcend anything that speech can hold. It is this import of action in the system of Christianity that must be kept in view by all true ministers of the Gospel. Sin was not met merely by word, nor will it ever be successfully, for it is much more than word itself. The constant tendency of those whose office is to teach is, to lose sight of the active forms of truth—the motion, the diligence involved in preaching the Gospel, by visiting the sick, aiding the poor, guiding the ignorant, looking after the weak and leading the young. Teaching is a small part of that service that is to bring the world to Christ. There is a great deal of heart and hand work, pure work, to be done, and burdens, actual pounds' weight, to be carried by the true minister. And those who, merely by speech ex cathedra, would reform the world, attempt more than the Son of Man attempted, though "never man spake like this man." The churches that merge the ministry of life into scholarship and scriptural dissertations, or into the indoor work of a Sabbath service, have remanded the New Testament church to the confined courts of the temple. They forget that the Saviour has said of that grand system: "There shall not be left here one stone upon another." God forbid that we should attempt to rebuild that which the wisdom of Christ has finally pronounced against!

St. Paul was more than a teacher—he was an apostle. His writings and sermons were prison notes, or speeches delivered to excited crowds of impatient Jews, or discussions with Greeks or Hebrews in schools or synagogues. He went into market places and theatres in the day time, or addressed the judges of the Areopagus by night. He visited the centres of action, and could not be repressed from delivering his great message either by magistrates, by stocks, by "stripes" or by Nero himself. He was "a day and a night in the deep," "three times shipwrecked," and the whole Adriatic could not quench his zeal. "Onward" was his motto. His action was as grand as his speech.

Mr. Wesley was another instance of the outdoor force that is required to constitute a minister. He was an extensive and finished scholar; but ten thousand have equaled him in that. He was a man of great faith, of surpassing courage and of pure spirit; yet even in all that there have been many his equals. But he was beyond and above all in the devotion of a life that could not be kept indoors. The world, he soon found, was outside of his closet, and in truth outside of his church. He went after that outdoor world.

"Confined to neither court nor cell," he planted the banner of the Cross in the alleys, the mines and the fields of Great Britain.

Bishop Asbury and his successors were true followers of Mr. Wesley. They put a great deal of living movement into the work of preaching the Gospel on this continent, and unfortunate will be the day when Methodism withdraws itself to the study and loses the characteristic of an active outdoor ministry.

GOLD AND "MACKEREL."

The world will, we suppose, never be too old to learn, if we may judge by the new theories that are presented for daily consumption. Among the latest is that in regard to "money." A writer of no ordinary experience and ability asks if,

"In the nature of things, and from a strictly commercial standpoint, there is any more reason why a monetary system should be organized and maintained on the exclusive basis of gold coin, than there is reason why it should be organized and maintained on the exclusive basis of pig iron, of block tin, of cotton bales, of sacked wheat, of barreled flour or whisky, of silk, linen, woolen or cotton fabrics in bolts, of dried herrings in boxes, or pickled mackerel in kits; of diamonds, rubies, garnets, emeralds, topazes, pearls, or corals in any of their various forms and settings—in short, of any substance that may be named in the catalogue of things eatable, drinkable, wearable, usable, valuable?"

This is to the point, and an answer to this question involves a solution of the real nature of money. We think there are many reasons why a "monetary system should be organized upon the exclusive basis" of gold and silver coin," and we can see none why it should be based upon "dry herrings in boxes," or "cotton fabrics in bolts." The statement that gold or silver coin is a "commodity" fully as much as "pickled mackerel in kits" is a quiet way of assuming the matter in question, and has no color of fact in it excepting in the case of bullion or uncurrent coin—uncurrent because its value is not readily known. In the very nature of mackerel it is not of a permanent value, but liable to many changes from age, moisture, heat, fermentation and other elements which, irrespective of the quantity taken, constantly and seriously affect the worth of "mackerel in kits," as compared with itself. It is this perishable and changeable quality in "dried herring," "sacked wheat" and "barreled flour" which preclude them, as well as mackerel, from being organized into any part of a monetary system. They are not and cannot be money from any comparative scarcity, or abundance. One of the uses of money is to measure values; and a value the least liable to change is very naturally taken for that purpose. The changes going on in mackerel can be ascertained by gold, because none are going on in it. To call gold a "commodity," and mackerel a "commodity," and thence to conclude that everything is money, and that in fact nothing is money, is a wholesale way of disposing of facts by the mere play upon words. All civilized nations have sought for a value-meter in some value that of all is the most equable and the most permanent; and all of them have fixed upon gold as the least liable to destructive change. Quicksilver has been fixed upon for ascertaining the changes of the temperature of solids and fluids. All substances are liable to thermal change. Hydrogen, as well as quicksilver, expands by heat and contracts by cold. But hydrogen, from the greatness of its expansion and contraction, is poorly adapted as a meter for other bodies. Yet everything is a thermometer, or can be, just as everything is a "commodity." "Pig iron" is not very perishable, but its value would lessen every hour by the labor required to handle it, and as a currency would soon be worth a great deal less than nothing. Emeralds and diamonds are sufficiently portable and imperishable; but they are not found in sufficient quantities to answer the purpose of a valuometer, nor can their purity or intrinsic worth be readily ascertained, excepting by practiced lapidaries.

Yet it must be admitted that, in one respect, "pickled mackerel" has one quality essential to a monetary basis: its quantity is limited—that is, as compared with the basis of our present monetary system. Countless as the mackerel are in the sea, yet there is really some limit to them; but there is absolutely none to a currency consisting of engraved paper, requiring only a resolution of Congress for its manufacture.

The discovery of the mines of California and of Australia has largely increased the quantity of precious metals, but so gradually that the fact is scarcely perceived. Twenty years have transpired since the flow from those sources began, but the depreciation of gold is barely appreciable. It is in its nature so valuable, because of its exemption from loss by fire, oxygen or moisture, that it is withdrawn from circulation nearly in the proportion of any surplus production. This is not the case with United States Treasury notes. During three days, the 23d to the 25th of last month, over $1,000,000,000 of this currency, under the name of "gold," changed hands in New York. The manipulation is said to have been attended with a variation of value equal to thirty per cent. The total circulation of all forms of paper money, national bank notes, United States notes, compound interest notes, three per cent. certificates and fractional currency, only amounts to the sum of $740,322,000; so that this variation equaled in amount one half of the whole circulation. This was a three days' change. The whole amount of gold received at New York from California during the past ten years is $283,153,493—considerably less than the variation in greenbacks during seventy hours. This was an exceptional case, but we doubt if under any circumstances "pickled mackerel," by every imaginable combination of destructive forces, could have been made to disappear with the same rapidity. We are not surprised that one who consents to believe that so variable a substance is really money, should be able to see no difference between money and a commodity. There are few substances in nature capable of such dilation and contraction as this present paper currency of the country, and nothing but the madness of the hour could induce any one to soberly regard it as anything but a commodity, for it has but few of the qualities essential to money.

Nothing but the rapidity of its changes saved the whole country from realizing the extent of the disaster. The motion was too rapid to communicate itself, and so the loss was confined to the people of New York.

One object of money is to fix values, as well as to measure them.—The precious metals constitute the fly-wheel of commerce. The gold in Europe acts as a check upon the gold in America, and the flowing in and out of specie prevents any undue accumulation of this universal currency. This steadiness gives an equal motion to all the operations of commerce, and it acts also as a check upon all tendencies to speculative excess. But when we adopt a currency which is in itself the very soul of speculation, we have determined that trade needs no check. This is virtually the meaning of one who gravely tells you that mackerel is money and money is mackerel. The experience of the last several thousand years in commerce is worth something, and that experience has determined that not only is a check necessary to the existence of profitable trade, but the most severe and uniform one that possibly can be discovered. Something must remain as firm as a natural law in order that trade may go on. At present, with a currency as light as hydrogen, we have no check. The whims of the Secretary of the Treasury, the changeable affections of the President, are the only reliance for stability the country has, unless it be the mercurial principles of those politicians who now rule Congress. Most anything "pickled" would be preferable as a stand-by.

Government—that is, the politics of the hour—is the most changeable thing in the world. But money should be the most immovable. If, therefore, the money of the country cannot be kept distinct from the government, and independent of it, the very uncertainty of its currency will eventually prove its commercial ruin.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

We have received from the publishers, through Mr. George Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street, the following works:

ADAM BEDE. Harper & Brothers, New York. 1869. With illustrations.

THE MILL ON THE FLOSS. Harper & Brothers. 1869

These are both by the same author, George Eliot, (Miss Evans, of England.) For power and distinctness of conception we know of no writer who can surpass this one in her characters. We class them as No. 1 in this department of literature, though the story in each is an agonizing picture of life among the middle classes of England. The reader here finds the English language in its purity; not even the works of Sir Walter Scott can repay more in this direction. The sentiment is elevated, and both works have in them the unmistakable stamp of genius of the highest order. They will outlive whole mountains of common "novels."

MENTAL PHILOSOPHY. By Thomas C. Upham, D D., professor of mental and moral philosophy in Bowdoin College, etc. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1869. Two volumes, 12mo.

The most of college students are familiar with this admirable treatise and text book. We well remember how, when we first read it, light broke in upon us at every page—light as from a new world, and light, too, which seemed to include all other worlds of knowledge. Every young person should read some treatise upon "mental philosophy." And we can heartily recommend the one before us as exhaustive and thorough in its treatment of the sublime science of the intellect, the sensibilities and the will.

THE HISTORY OF METHODISM IN TENNESSEE. By John B. McFerrin, D. D. Vol. 1. From the year 1783 to the year 1804 Nashville: Southern Methodist Publishing House, 1869. 12mo, pp. 527.

The day has come for unlocking the records of the past, and for bringing forth the rich treasures of heroic experience which Western Methodism has been so long accumulating. Tennessee was the centre of the revival of 1800, which went out in widening circles over all the West. It is immediately around that wonderful event that this "history" revolves. No one has better access to the people, the family and church records of Tennessee than the author, for he was raised in the State, and his family have had no ordinary influence in its social and religious development. The reader, therefore, will find in this work the best data for estimating the phenomenon of that great spiritual outpouring; the part especially which Methodists took in it, and its depth and consequences, both immediate and remote, upon all branches of the Christian church. We meet, in the pages of this "history," copious extracts from the autobiographies of William Burke and Jacob Young, from McAnally's Sketches of Holston Methodism, Garret's Recollections of the West, as well as from the more recent work of Dr. Redford. Then there are original letters in it from authentic sources, full of strange interest. We cannot complete this notice more satisfactorily to the reader than by giving an extract from one of these original contributions. John Adam Granade had been noted for his wickedness, his poetic genius and his eccentricity. After a terrific struggle, which called up Gadara, he found the Saviour. Instantly he began to preach, and "in a few moments sinners fell screaming on every side." He was soon sent out by Bishops Asbury and Whatcoat, and was appointed to Cumberland circuit.

"On his way to his first appointment he was so powerfully wrought upon by the Spirit that his limbs were so distorted that he could hardly ride. Those places where he had been so sorely tried, and which seemed as perdition to him, now became as heaven. He visited his old neighborhood on Barton's Creek, and as he went from house to house God attended his strange exhortations with great power, and many souls were converted. Having received permission from the Rev. Mr. Page to go and preach where he liked, and having resolved, by God's help, to attack the devil's crew anywhere, he 'took the great county road leading to Nashville,' and at places of drinking, and taverns where rude rowdies met, he went right in, and, filled with the Spirit, warned them of their danger. Some cried for mercy, and found peace. Others, blaspheming, went off raving mad. On his way he heard of a ball, and resolved at once to go and meet the enemy on his own ground, saying:

'In Jesus' name this day I'll stand,
As soldier bold with sword in hand,
The breastplate, helm and shield;
Thus armed, the powers of hell shall yield.'

He reached the place, and being invited in, he says: 'I went up to Mr. Musician, and stroking him on the head, asked him if he would not stop fifteen minutes. They were dancing, drinking, swearing and buzzing like loons. The fiddler swore at me, and kept on playing. That moment the glory of God, as a mighty stream or blaze of fire, flashed all over me, and my face burned with glory. I took a book from my pocket, striking it in my hand, and thundered out upon them. The dancers were so frightened they hardly knew whether they were dancing a jig, or reel, or what. A general fright ran all over the house. Mr. Fury, one of the 'bulls of Bashan,' ran at me and landed me on the door step. I stepped into the yard; the crowd without and from within surrounded me like bees. Hell was troubled, and threw up angry billows; but, glory to God, he was with me! I thundered away upon them on every hand. Some said I was a hypocrite, some said I was crazy or drunk; another thought I would be a better fighter than preacher. I told them Christ had spilt his blood for them, and if they did not repent and quit frolicking they would all go to hell. A bold orator of the devil said: 'If there was such a man as Jesus Christ, and if he had done so much for him, he was much obliged to him; but that he thought Tom Paine a greater man than Jesus Christ, and would stand on the right hand of God in the day of judgment like a game-cock,' jumping and huzzaing at the same time in the name of Satan. I left them and went on my way rejoicing. This was a remarkable day to me. As I was riding along the glory of the Lord came down upon me, and constrained me to cry aloud for half a mile in praising God. What I saw and felt no mortal tongue can express. O how near was God to me!"

Letter from Father Hyacinthe.

The following is the text of the letter which, as advised by cable, Father Hyacinthe has addressed to the General of his order in Rome:

PARIS-PASSY, Sept. 20, 1869.

MY VERY REVEREND FATHER: During the five years of my ministry at Notre Dame de Paris, despite the open attacks and secret accusations of which I have been the object, your esteem and confidence have never failed me for a moment. I preserve numerous testimonies of them written by your own hand, and which were addressed as much to my preaching as to myself.—Whatever may happen, I shall hold them in grateful remembrance. To-day, however, by a sudden change, the cause of which I do not seek in your heart, but in the intrigues of a party all powerful at Rome, you arraign what you encouraged, you censure what you approved, and you require that I should speak a language or preserve a silence which would no longer be the entire and loyal expression of my conscience. I do not hesitate an instant. With language perverted by a command, or mutilated by reticence, I shall not ascend the pulpit of Notre Dame. I express my regret for this to the intelligent and courageous Archbishop who has given his pulpit to me, and sustained me there against the bad will of men of whom I shall speak at the proper time. I express my regrets to the imposing auditory who surrounded me there with its attention, its sympathies, I was nearly going to say its friendship. I would not be worthy of the auditory of the Archbishop, of my conscience, nor of God, if I would consent to act before them in such a rôle! I separate myself at the same time from the convent in which I have resided, and which under the new circumstances that have happened, to me renders it for me a prison of the soul. In acting thus I am not unfaithful to my vows. I have promised monastic obedience, but limited by the honesty of conscience, the dignity of my person and my ministry. I have promised under the benefit of that superior law of justice and of royal liberty which is, according to the Apostle St. James, the proper law of the Christian.

It is for the more perfect practice of this holy liberty that I came to ask at the cloister, now more than ten years ago, in the élan of an enthusiasm free of all human calculation, I shall not venture to add, free of all the illusion of youth. If, in exchange for my sacrifices, I am today offered chains, I have not only the right but the duty to reject them. The present hour is solemn. The church passes through one of the most violent, dark and decisive crises of its existence here below. For the first time in three hundred years an Ecumenical Council is not only convoked but declared necessary. Such is the expression of the Holy Father. It is not in such a moment that a preacher of the Gospel, were he the last of all, can consent to remain as the mute dogs of Israel, infidel guardians, whom the prophet reproaches as unable to bark. Canes muti, non valentes latrare. The saints were never silent. I am not one of them, but, nevertheless, I belong to their race. filii sanctorum sumus, and I have always been ambitious to place my steps, my tears, and, if necessary, my blood, in the tracks which they have left. I raise, therefore, before the Holy Father and the council, my protestation as Christian and preacher against these doctrines and practices, calling themselves Roman, but which are not Christian, and which in their encroachments, always most audacious and most baneful, tend to change the constitution of the church, the bases as well as the form of her teaching, and even the spirit of her piety. I protest against the divorce, as impious as it is insane, which it is sought to accomplish between the church, who is our mother according to eternity, and the society of the nineteenth century, of whom we are the sons according to the times, and toward whom we have also some duties and attachments. I protest this more radical and dreadful opposition to human nature, which is attacked and made to revolt by these false doctrines in its most indestructible and holiest aspirations. I protest, above all, against the sacrilegious perversion of the Word of the Son of God himself, the spirit and the letter of which are equally trodden under foot by the Pharisaism of the new law. It is my most profound conviction that if France in particular, and the Latin races in general, are delivered over to social, moral and religious anarchy, the principal cause is, without doubt, not in Catholicism itself, but in the manner which Catholicism has, during a long time, been understood and practiced. I appeal to the council about to meet to seek for remedies of the excess of our evils, and to apply them with as much force as gentleness. But if fears of which I do not wish to share, come to be realized, if the august assembly has not more liberty in its deliberations than it has already in its preparation, if, in a word, it is deprived of the essential characters of an Ecumenical Council, I will cry to God and men to call another, truly united in the Holy Spirit, not in the spirit of party, and representing really the universal church, not the silence of some men, the oppression of others. "For the heart of the daughters of my people am I hurt; I am black; astonishment hath taken hold on me. Is there no balm in Gilead? Is there no physician there? Why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?"—Jeremiah, 8. In fine, I appeal to your tribunal, O Lord Jesus! Ad tuum Domine Jesu tribunal appello. It is in your presence that I write these lines; it is at your feet, after having prayed much, reflected, suffered and wailed much, that I sign them. I have confidence that if men condemn them on earth you approve them in heaven. That is sufficient for me, living and dying.

FR HYACINTHE,
Superior of the Barefooted Carmelites of Paris, second preacher of the order in the province of Avignon

OBITUARIES.

Died, at Cuba, Louisiana, August 27, 1869, Mrs. ELIZABETH ALEXANDER.

Sister Alexander had been among us but a short time, having come here on a visit to her daughter, Mrs. Robertson.—Although she was but little known, she was much beloved as a Christian and a lady. She had the happy art of making all about her happy and cheerful.

Sister Alexander was a native of Rapides parish. She was born on Red river in 1804, where she still lived, when at home, until God relieved her from sorrow and suffering, taking the bright sainted spirit of one so worthy to that mansion of bliss prepared for her in our Father's house above.

Her maiden name was Hendrie. She was married three times in life—first to Mr. Barlow, in 1821. Her second marriage was to Mr. B. C. Dake, of Harrisonburg, Louisiana, a high-toned gentleman and an unfaltering Christian. He only lived about six years after their marriage, leaving two children, a son and daughter, who still live. Her third marriage was to Mr. Alexander, who died in 1862, a short time before the fall of New Orleans.

Sister Alexander joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in early life. The time of her conversion is not known, but she ever lived a consistent member. She was like the Elizabeth of the Gospel, "walking in all the ordinances of the Lord blameless," embalming her name in the sweet odor of Christian virtues.

She was a friend of the poor and destitute. Being in good circumstances herself, she was peculiarly qualified by Divine Providence to administer to their wants.

Her house was ever the home of the ministers of the Gospel, many of whom will remember her Christian liberality and motherly kindness with joy, mingled with grief. Though we weep, it is but for a night. The bright morning of eternity will soon break in upon us all. "Then shall we know, even as we are also known."

"The palms of death are past,
Labor and sorrow cease;
And life's long warfare closed at last,
Her soul is found in peace."

T. H. MCCLENDON.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affliction, and that dread disease, Consumption, is anxious to make known to his fellow sufferers the means of cure.

To all who desire it he will send a copy of the prescription used, free of charge, with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for Consumption Asthma, Bronchitis, etc. The object of the advertiser in sending the prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable; and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address

SOUTHERN METHODIST HIGH SCHOOL,

NEW ORLEANS.

The exercises of the first session of this institution will commence on MONDAY, the 4th day of October next, in the basement of the German Methodist Church, Dryades street, between Felicity and Enterne.

In founding this institution our purpose is to supply the desideratum long felt in this city, viz: an acknowledged Protestant School of a high order, in which boys and young men can be thoroughly prepared either for college or the active business of life.

The government of the School will be strict and firm, yet mild and parental in its administration. Thoroughness in the preparation of lessons will be uniformly required of all pupils.

The sons of ministers engaged wholly in the work of their Church will be received at half price; and young men preparing for the ministry without charge.

A Preparatory Department and an Evening School are attached.

In the selection of Teachers the greatest care will be exercised, not only in regard to their mental qualifications, but also in reference to their ability to impart instruction to their pupils.

For further information apply at the School.

A MAN SEVENTY YEARS OLD.

I have had Catarrh over thirty years.

I have tried doctors and medicines almost without number, my strength constantly failing under their treatment, and without any relief from any one, until I commenced using Dr. WOLCOTT'S ANNIHILATOR for Catarrh. I hardly know how to express my gratitude for the wonderful benefit I have derived from its use. I owe my very life to Dr. Wolcott's Remedy; of this fact I am fully convinced. When I commenced using the Annihilator I only weighed 119 lbs.; my weight now is 140 pounds. This increase in solid flesh for a man of my years is the best proof of the efficacy of Wolcott's Annihilator, as I am now in my seventieth year.

SAMUEL SCHENDLER,
August 6, 1869.

My father is proprietor of the Peconic House, Greenpoint, L. I. I had rheumatism over five years. A portion of this time I was unable to walk. My legs, my arms and my body also have been contracted and drawn up shorter, and became crooked in consequence of the severity of this disease. I have poured out money without stint to doctors and for medicines without any earthly benefit or use, until I felt almost completely discouraged and disheartened. My pain and sufferings were beyond all description, and no language that I can use can portray the agony I have endured. I saw Dr. Wolcott's advertisement day after day and month after month, but could not believe his PAIN PAINT could reach my case, although I heard many people give the strongest testimony in its favor. I finally was induced to purchase a quart or an $8 bottle of his Pain Paint. This small amount did wonders for me. It removed the most of my pain, but not my stiffness. I continued purchasing and using until I bought five quarts, and I can say without hesitation that I am entirely cured. I can use my limbs and every part of my body with as much freedom and strength as I ever did in my life. Wolcott's Pain Paint, I can say from experience, is the best remedy and the greatest invention ever offered to suffering humanity. Instead of its being a dear remedy at $8 a quart, it is really worth more than $100 a quart.

H. T. STETSON,
Peconic House, Greenpoint, L. I.,

Dr. Wolcott's remedies are put up in white wrappers; buy none other. One gallon of Pain Paint, double strength, sent free of express charges on receipt of $20, or one quart $8, or one pint $4; or six pints of Annihilator, for Catarrh and Colds in the head, for $5, including directions and medical advice. All who come to the office treated free of cost, and no dosing the stomach. Small bottles sold at all drug stores. All remittances should be by post office orders or registered letters or by express. BRAN NEW LETTERS!

FRESH TESTIMONIALS.

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

THE ASTONISHING FAMILY MEDICINE.

Saved from Death!—Read!

MONTGOMERY, ALA., June 28, 1869.

MESSRS. J. DARBY & CO., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: Yours of the 23d is before me, and has attention. It gives me pleasure to say that my belief is that your "Fluid," under the supervision of a kind Providence, saved the life of my youngest child, some six years ago, the child being wasted to a skeleton by the effects of fretting, and an affection of the bowels therewith. I had never seen any one reduced so low to recover.

"Physic" had been tried in vain, until the physicians stated it was useless. A friend recommended your "Fluid," or Ozone, which he stated was one of the component parts of it. I did so, and the effect was like magic, plainly discernible in one hour in its good effects, producing quiet and sleep almost at once, where irritation and sleepless restlessness had previously possessed the child to nearly entire exhaustion.

At first administered it in a small way, two and three drops in a spoonful of water, and increased it to six and ten drops. It completely checked the bowels, and had the happiest effect, the child rapidly recovering.

I have used your "Fluid" on animals, with the same effect—both horses and cows—adding more or less to water, and letting them drink.

I have no hesitation in saying I believe it a specific for Chronic Diarrhœa, or any violent affection of the bowels.

I would not be without it in my family under any consideration. Yours truly,

WILLIAM FOWLER.

Mr. Foster is a member of the celebrated Hacking House of Fowler, & Somerville, Montgomery, Alabama.

AND AGAIN!

Read the following letter from Mr. Frank Saunders, a well known citizen, and brother-in-law of the beloved Bishop Paine, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

189 BROADWAY, N. Y., July 29, 1869.

MESSRS. J. DARBY & CO., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: About the 10th of June last one of my children was taken with Scarlet Fever, in its most malignant form, and as soon as I could I procured your valuable disinfectant, "Darby's Prophylactic Fluid." Although it was several days after the appearance of the disease before I began using the Fluid, still, by a free use of it, the disease was not only confined to the one case, but the malignity of that case somewhat mitigated.

During the use of the Fluid as a disinfectant in my family it was also tried in a case of headache and one of toothache, the results in each case being instantaneous relief. It was afterward tried in a case of Erysipelas, with almost equal success.

It is due to the merits of this compound, also, to state that the case of Erysipelas in question, being located in the feet, the Fluid, in its application, was brought in frequent contact with a troublesome emu on one of the feet, to the utter discomfiture of said corn, for, upon subsequent examination, it had disappeared, and though it was sought for diligently, it could not be found.

I send you this, hoping it may be the means of inducing others of earth's poor sufferers to test for themselves, as I did, the great merits of this great remedy.

Very respectfully yours,

FRANK SAUNDERS.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

LITTLE NELLIE.

BY ENOLA.

What is she like? A little wren
That haunts the brushwood of the glen;
A bright-eyed, shy, brown-coated thing,
Whose simple notes so clearly ring,
We feel 'tis glad as innocent;
And which in every heart is blent,
With thoughts of simple, cheerful life,
Devoid of passion, pain or strife.

What is she like? A violet,
Amid the lowly mosses set,
Whose tender, pure and perfect tint,
Scarce noticed by the common crew,
To every eye that views it nosr,
Must render it serenely dear,
Connecting it in memory
With beauty, peace and purity.

What is she like? A quiet star,
That in the broad sky burns afar;
To vulgar minds a shining dot,
But telling unto higher thought
A beautiful and mystic story
Of spiritual strength and glory,
Of progress, without haste or rest,
Toward all that's highest, noblest, best.

A BRAVE LITTLE BOY.

BY ALTA GRANT.

The children, Kate, Sadie and Tot—Tot is short for Thomas—were out strawberrying one day, when Tot, who was but four years old, called to Kate to come rub his back.

"It feels so kere!" he said, wriggling his shoulders.

Kate thought it was only a whim, but Tot was the baby, and she liked to humor him, for Kate was six years his senior, and had quite a motherly feeling for him. Instead of beginning the rubbing process at once, however, she first unbuttoned the little white waist to see what it was that felt "so kere," when a cry of horror escaped her; for there, inside the clothing, a small, green snake was squirming about. Perhaps he took Tot's smooth back for a new kind of tree, and wondered that he had such hard work to climb it. Both Kate and Sadie were too much frightened to know what to do, but their united screams brought to the rescue a man who was plowing in the neighboring field. Tot, meanwhile, stood "like a martyr at the stake," waiting for the snake to be taken out. This the kind farmer soon accomplished, and then the children scampered for home, running straight to mother with the frightful story.

The girls both tried to talk at once, but sympathetic little Sadie was so overcome at the remembrance of Tot's peril that she broke down at the beginning, and Kate was obliged to finish the story alone.

Tot listened to it all in silence, as unconcernedly as though he had had no part in the affair, until growing troubled at Sadie's sobs, he coolly remarked:

"What's the use o' crying, Sadie? The ole snake's dead!"—Little Corporal.

FARM AND GARDEN.

RED CLOVER.—I promised to give you the plan by which one of my neighbors successfully raised red clover in high perfection. The land is very old and thin, entirely devoid of sand and mold; would not have produced, treated in the ordinary way, eight bushels corn per acre; and the owner, having in view the improvement of his land, as well as being very anxious to raise fine stock, determined to try a plan he had been maturing for some time—two horse Brinly plows and subsoilers (Brinly) were procured, and not having enough mules to run ten two horse turning plows, and ten two horse subsoilers, only one subsoiler was run. Then subsoiling every other row, the entire field, in this way, every subsoiled furrow going at least fifteen inches, the others seven or eight inches. The plowing was commenced in November; wheat was then sowed and brushed in, and the operation was completed in the same month. The wheat was not pastured; thus the land was in fine condition, and when March arrived the entire field of wheat was sowed in red clover, one gallon per acre, and a sharp tooth harrow run over it. When the wheat was cut the clover appeared very thin and scattering, but was not allowed to be molested that year. This spring being one year old, the entire ground was thickly covered, apparently as thick as it could grow, and when cut, in many places of several acres area, it was five feet high, and no doubt averaged, over the whole field of forty acres, three and a half feet. No dressing was given it at any time. The gentleman, Mr. Edmonston, has since seeded thirty or forty acres more in clover, which promises to equal the first. As I before stated, this is the extreme southern part of West Tennessee, three miles from Mississippi line, and for years the opinion has prevailed that it was impossible to grow red clover in our soil and climate; but here we have it, and without manure of any kind, on very poor land.

NORWAY OATS.—T. J. Cox says they are a humbug, etc. I have tried them for two years, and without doubt can make double as much per acre with them as with any other oat used here. My neighbors say so also. I sow them on good land, and they grow from four and a half to five feet high, with a head from fifteen to eighteen inches long. I have also tried them in the fall and they do well. As Acorn says: "I have none for sale."

I am inclined to think if John W. Mattox puts five hundred hens in one house he will lose a great many. They will require at least four, twenty feet square, to insure health. Slatted sides and covered roof is the best, with nests on the ground and well protected.—Correspondent of Southern Cultivator.

RUST PREVENTED BY THE USE OF MANURE.—I made this year a small experiment, the details of which may be useful to persons who plant land subject to rust. Part of my plantation consists of what is popularly known in this county as Flat Woods. The geological formation of the land is peculiar. It is a strong lime land—magnesian lime stone abounding, and the waters, when chemically tested, showing the presence of lime. This land is very strong and lasting, not washing much, and for the first eight or ten years after being cleared, producing large crops of cotton. It is now almost entirely cleared up, and unfortunately no longer will produce cotton, although still excellent for corn and small grain. The rust takes the cotton in July, and ruins it—land capable of producing twenty to twenty-five bushels of corn not making more than three hundred pounds of cotton. I this year planted a field of which about four acres were Flat Woods, and knowing by experience that this land would rust, I only planted it to square out the field. I am using fertilizers this year, and about the 15th of July, seeing the rust making its appearance, I put a mixture of Peruvian guano and Pacific guano, seventy-five of the first and one hundred and twenty five of the last, at the rate of two hundred pounds per acre, on four rows of the cotton, extending through three acres. I put it immediately on the top of the cotton bed and plowed the land, and covered the guano with the hoe.

The four rows have remained green and untainted with the rust, whilst the cotton in all the adjoining rows has rusted very badly. There is no appearance of rust or disease in the manured cotton—it is fine and vigorous; the balance of the field is ruined by rust.

If this small experiment indicates what may be accomplished on a large scale, it will prove highly advantageous to planters who have land that will rust.—Correspondent of Southern Cultivator.

DRY EARTH AS A DEODORIZER FOR POULTRY HOUSES.—The employment of dry, pulverized earth as a deodorizer for poultry houses appears, says the London Field, to be worthy of more attention than it has hitherto received. The fact that from four to five hundred fowls can by this aid be kept in one building for months together, with less smell than is to be found in any ordinary farm house capable of accommodating a dozen chickens, is very conclusive as to its efficacy. In the building of the National Company, where the fact has been ascertained, seven or eight fowls are kept in each compartment, twelve feet by three feet, and yet there is no smell or trace of moisture. It should be stated that the droppings that fall from the perches during the night are removed from the runs each morning, and that the dry earth only receives the manure that falls during the day; this has its moisture absorbed so speedily by the earth that it at once becomes pulverized, mixed with the soil and ceases to smell. So powerful is the deodorizing effect of the earth that it does not require to be renewed in the runs for many weeks together.

PROPAGATION.—"Standard trees should be propagated only upon healthy and vigorous stocks, either by grafting or budding. The system of grafting upon small pieces of roots is wrong, to say the least of it. As this is the cheapest and quickest method to manufacture trees, it is much resorted to by some nurserymen. No lasting results can possibly be expected from trees worked upon this plan. They never form any but small fibrous, hair like roots, and when planted in the orchard they require staking, and seldom ever make a good tree. Several years ago we denounced this system as worthless, and only calculated to disappoint the planter.—Southern Cultivator.

RAT PROOF CORN CRIB.—"The Connecticut corn crib is the common type of the East and has many good qualities. It rests upon posts covered with inverted tin pans, which make it inaccessible to rats and mice."

These posts are a foot or more in diameter, and two or three feet from the surface of the ground to the bottom of the building. Sometimes flat stones, two or three feet broad, are substituted for the tin pans, but the latter are preferred.—Correspondent of Southern Cultivator.

SCIENTIFIC.

Prof. Huxley as President of the British Association.

There is, perhaps, no one in England, says the Spectator, (London,) outside the domain of politics, with whom we have contended so often or so fiercely as with Prof. Huxley. We usually disagree with his conclusions, always distrust his method, and occasionally, though rarely, cross-examine his testimony as to facts. Nevertheless, we cordially congratulate the British Association on the successful effort to elect him as president for 1870. It is quite clear, even from the reticent accounts which have appeared in the papers, that there was a contest about his election, and a contest in which it was of the last importance to the cause of free inquiry, or rather of scientific inquiry, of any kind, that his friends should be successful. A battle, it is pretty evident, was fought around him, between the obscurantists and the seekers after truth for its own sake, and if the former had won, as it appeared at one time probable they would win, the cause of truth—that is, in our judgment, of supernaturalism as opposed to materialism—would have been thrown back half a century. The fight, as we understand it, was in this wise: Prof. Huxley, as is well known, holds opinions—no, that is an incorrect description—avows a belief, that the processes of scientific inquiry, if strictly pursued, will yield results not consistent with certainty as to the existence of a sentient Final Cause. The Final Cause may be non-sentient, or may not exist—cause being as infinite as effect—or may be—and this is, as we understand him, Mr. Huxley's preferential view—so absolutely beyond human ken, so clearly the Unknowable, that to attempt to trace its character, or wishes, or end in the government of the universe, is an attempt to resolve a recurring decimal, a useless and perplexing waste of time. The idea is one very familiar to the scientific world, and would not worry it in the least; but Mr. Huxley is, unfortunately, very "indiscreet"—thinks it is duty not only to hold his opinions, but to propagate them; is apt to propagate them very forcibly; and, worst of all, is inclined, when propagating them, to talk English. Nobody competent to form an opinion at all can doubt for one moment that Mr. Huxley intends to say that the existence, and, still more, the character, of the Final Cause is an open question, upon which no human being, the Archbishop of Canterbury included, has any right to give an absolute opinion. Consequently, a large section of the association, like a still larger section of the British public, think Mr. Huxley "indiscreet," or dangerous, and though not prepared to affirm that his opinions are disqualifications for scientific office—to affirm that would be to give up investigation altogether—are prepared to say that "in the existing state of public opinion," and—ah! hum!—"having regard to the prejudices of the mass of English society," it would be expedient to nominate some president less liable to attack.

The Times reports and justifies the sort of dismay with which the election is regarded. Its reporter says: "There seems to be a very general feeling that Prof. Huxley, in the chair of the British Association, will be in as difficult a position as Mr. Bright in the ministry. He is the champion of views to which large classes of people entertain very strong objections; and however discreet he may be in the absence of opposition, his best friends tremble for him if those views should be impugned. The great object of the British Association is to render science popular, and this object is best promoted by a president whose name is not identified with one side of an unsettled question, and whose declared opinions are not calculated to provoke any kind of antagonism. About the great scientific claims of Prof. Huxley there can be no dispute; and, while we cannot look forward to his presidency quite without misgivings, we none the less cordially hope that it may fulfill all the expectations of his supporters."

If there is one thing dangerous to the faith of a people, it is that a belief should be hinted, should be veiled under sarcastic compliments to faith, should become the secret of the initiated, the arriere pensee of the cultivated, should filter down from mind to mind in silence, should drop through, as it were, from the supper table to the basement, and nobody be conscious that it is dropping, till accident reveals the irremediable mischief. That is how Voltarianism was diffused, and that is how English secularism will be, if the able respectables like Sir Stafford Northcote continue so dreadfully afraid of indiscretion in discussion. Discretion, in this case is simply concealment of the very thing that ought to be known, namely, the gravity of the moral result involved in the scientific inquiry—a gravity which, once realized, makes that inquiry not only much more exact, but much wider. Take, for instance, this discussion about primeval man. It does not really involve any religious point of importance—for, after all, whether man had a lemur for his ancestor or not, he is still man—but it is supposed to do so, and look how that supposition instantly widens the inquiry. Lawrence went into it as if all the data were bones and muscles, Sir John Lubbock includes the history of civilization, Mr. Wallace adds a vast mass of facts as to the moral instincts of savages, till at last, man being fairly treated, as a whole, all the facts being examined under the new pressure, Mr. Huxley, who is so much dreaded, makes what seems to us the greatest conceivable concession to the supernaturalists—that the chasm between man and the brute is beyond measurement—is infinite. There is no point of view, except one, from which the reticence now advocated can be logically defended. Of course, the unbeliever is not shocked. Suppose the observer is orthodox, then surely a frank statement that certain appearances seem inconsistent with the being of a God, is a warning not to accept those statements without the inquiry, rendered needful by that tremendous result, is infinitely better than a mere hint, apparent only to the initiated, that if it were safe to speak, that is what would be said. For the interests of the orthodox such conclusion should be stated in its clearest and least discreet form, not in its least "offensive" Nobody is really injured by plainness except that class represented by the Times' reporter, which holds that, next to enthusiasm, the one great evil is disturbance; that nothing is worth a fuss; that indifference is the proper state of mind, even if the subject of indifference is the existence of a Creator. This is the true English middle class stale of mind and the more it is shocked, annoyed and horrified by indiscretions like Mr. Huxley's, on one hand, and Mr. Strokes' on the other, the sooner will it begin to find a reason for the faith that is in it. If we only had an "indiscreet" Archbishop!—but that being impossible, let us be thankful that we shall next year have an indiscreet president of the British Association.—Scientific American.

THE BEST COOKING STOVE

FOR WOOD NOW IN USE.

THE FASHION.

We call especial attention to this Stove, which has been produced at great expense, combining all the new and important improvements; also to the extra height of the Oven under the fire chamber, the Patent Air Chamber Front Doors, and Patent White Enameled Iron Knobs, the improvements in the covers and centre pieces, all of which have been covered by Letters Patent, and are used in no other Stove. They are warranted to stand fire, or others sent free of charge in all cases. We have all sizes of this justly celebrated Stove, both

PLAIN AND EXTENDED BACKS,

the Extended Back with cast iron Enameled Reservoir and Faucet, Tin Warming Closet, Gridiron Cover, etc. The part of the top supporting the Reservoir is raised so that the flue is above the top plate, instead of below, as is the case in most of the Stoves now used, and the heat is forced directly against the whole surface of the bottom of the Reservoir. The Reservoir being detached from the pipe, can be removed at pleasure, thereby forming a six-hole Stove—the best in use, as the back holes will heat as well or better than the middle ones. For sale by G. W. W. GOODWYN, which can be seen at 62 Camp street. The advantages possessed by this Stove over all the other Coal Cooking Stoves are so numerous, and so patent to every sensible observer, that it is only necessary to examine it in order to be convinced of its superiority.

All of the above Stoves are fitted with extra care, Oven Doors lined with tin, and furnished with William Resor's Patent Air Chamber, sliding front doors, patent centres, covers and White Enameled Knobs.

The operation of every Stove guaranteed. Directions for putting up and using same accompany each Stove.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE, Staunton, Virginia.

The College of the Baltimore Conference, M E Church South.

Rev William A. Harris, President, with thirteen professors, teachers, etc.

Will begin its next session SEPTEMBER 20, 1869, and close June 30, 1870.

Than this no College for young ladies in the South ranks higher. It is attended by pupils from various Southern States. System of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Society is refined, scenery beautiful and health unsurpassed. A marked feature in this institution is the rapid promotion of the physical health and vigor of its pupils. Young ladies who come here from the South, with feeble constitutions, are entirely restored to health.

Charges for the scholastic year:
Board and tuition in the Collegiate Course, $225
Music and other extra studies, moderate.

Refer to Bishops Pierce, Wightman, Early, Doggett McTyeire, Dr. Thomas O. Summers, Dr. L. Pierce, Hon. B. H. Hill, Hon. Alex. H. Stevens, Georgia, Hon. J. S. Thompson, Mississippi, Mrs. General John H. Floyd, Faculty of University of Virginia, R. M. College.

Young ladies from the South received at any time during the summer months.

Constitutes it as good a medium for reaching the people who trade with this city and Mobile as any offered in the Southwest.

Our Circulation is Widening Daily

Under the care of

FIVE HUNDRED SOUTHERN METHODIST PREACHERS,

Who are both the agents and owners of this sheet.

A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much to his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

SQUARES.	1 MO.	3 MOS.	6 MOS.	12 MOS.
One (8 lines)	$5 00	$12 00	$20 00	$30 00
Two	7 50	15 00	25 00	40 00

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of this College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The wholesale trade continues to exhibit a fair degree of animation, but operations in our leading staple have been restricted by moderate supplies, and the demand being checked by the unfavorable accounts from New York, and buyers claiming concessions below the views of factors. The supplies of Western produce have been too limited to admit of any other than a moderate local trade, and very little has been reported in sugar and molasses.

The weather has been clear and pleasant, with similar accounts throughout the cotton growing region. The crop prospect is consequently decidedly more cheerful, but very much depends on whether we escape storms for the rest of the picking season, or have a killing frost before or after the average period of November 4. The latter, however, would do much less damage in consequence of the advanced condition of the crop. In the meantime planters are pushing picking with all the available force at their command, but complain of the inefficiency of the laborers. We have nothing to add to our previous accounts of sugar. There appears to be no probability of our having any increase over last year.

The river remains at about a stand, being ten feet six inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the 8th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	12494
Lake	54
Mobile	417
Florida	6
Texas	43
Total	13014

On Saturday, there being but little left unsold after the previous heavy business, and buyers standing aloof in the expectation of more liberal receipts, the sales were confined to 1,300 bales, at stiffer prices in the morning, when strict low middling commanded 25⅛ to 25¼c., but easier subsequently, when the New York telegrams had a depressing influence, without causing any quotable reduction from Friday's figures. On Monday, with a better but by no means large supply, buyers came forward more freely, with a repetition of the course of prices on Monday, the advantage being on the side of the factor in the morning, but in favor of the buyer later in the day. The business comprised 3,459 bales, and at the close the heavy decline reported at New York had a still more depressing effect. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair inquiry, but buyers claiming material concessions predicated on the decline reported at New York, while factors were unwilling to give way to the extent demanded, and only a moderate business was done during the morning, at a reduction of ¼ and ½c. The movement continued without animation, resulting in sales of 2,600 bales. The figures accepted indicated a decline of ½ to ¾c. Low middling sold toward the close as low as 24½c., and, if pressed upon the market, strict low middling would hardly have commanded over 24½c. During the day both strict low middling and Liverpool middling changed hands in small lots at 24⅝ and 24¾c.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 17,000 bales, taken for the North, France and Great Britain.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 77,019 bales, against 79,378 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 57,457 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is a decrease of 1,471 bales to Great Britain, 1,839 to France, and an increase of 1,772 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	— to —
Good ordinary	— to —
Low middling	23½ to 24

READVILLE SEMINARY.

This is a private institution, with its number of pupils limited, and is authorized by the Legislature of Louisiana to confer degrees, diplomas and literary honors. It was in successful operation from 1843 until interrupted by the events of the war in 1862, and reopened January, 1867.

Teachers of a high grade of talent and merit are in charge of the different departments—English, Ancient and Modern Languages, Music, Painting, etc.

Pupils charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session. All pupils received with the understanding that they are to remain and attend the examination at the close of the session in which they enter, and no deduction made on the bills for absence, except in cases of protracted illness, when the loss may be divided between the institution and the patron.

In her outfit each pupil should be provided with toilet boxes, towels, napkins, sheets, pillow cases and blankets or comforts. She should also bring knife, fork, spoon, cup and napkin ring.

All articles and clothing brought to the Seminary should be distinctly marked, in-ide of which should be permanently placed on some part of the trunk convenient for reference. The scholastic year commences October 1 and ends in July.

EXPENSE.

Board and tuition per year	$275 00
The Modern Languages a small extra charge.
Music, per year	75 00

Payments due a half session in advance.

Monthly reports of the studies, health and general deportment of the pupils are sent to the parents or guardians at a distance.

The main Seminary building, recently destroyed by fire, will be replaced by one of ample accommodations, now in process of construction, which will be ready for the reception of pupils at the opening of the next session.

For other information desirable in reference to the school apply to

SEMINARY FOR YOUNG LADIES,

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

E. A. GRANT, LL. D., PRINCIPAL.

This institution occupies the large and elegant building lately known as Grant & Butler's School. The grounds are situated on Sixth street, between Walnut and Chestnut streets, and extend back to Centre street. They are elevated several feet above the street, thus making the large and beautiful lawn a most desirable place for healthful outdoor exercise.

The building, furniture and apparatus of the school are among the most complete and valuable in the West.

Experienced teachers, residing in the institution, will devote their time to the moral, intellectual and physical improvement of the pupils.

For particulars address the Principal.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—In the Supreme Court to day the argument in the Yerger case was commenced by Attorney General Hoar. He argued at length that to bring a case within the appellate jurisdiction of this court, in the sense requisite to enable it to amend a writ of habeas corpus, under the judiciary act, it is necessary that a commitment should appear to have been issued by a tribunal whose decisions are subject to a revision by this court. This court has never granted this writ when the prisoner was not, at the time he petitioned for it, in confinement under an order of a court, whose proceedings can be revised by a superior court. This court cannot exercise any appellate control by appealing to a writ of error or any other proceedings outside of its appellate jurisdiction. The military commander holds the petitioner not under any order or decree of the Circuit Court, but by the military authorities, and could discharge the prisoner at his pleasure, notwithstanding the action of the Circuit Court. The habeas corpus issued with the certiorari as an adjunct of the appellate power, is only permitted wherever the military commission by virtue of whose sentence the prisoner is imprisoned, nor has this court power in any form, or by any procedure, to remove the proceedings of the commission. In the cases of the petitioner the adducing of a writ of habeas corpus to the military commander in Mississippi would be an exercise of original and not appellate jurisdiction. The repeal by Congress of so much of the act of February 5, 1867, as grants an appellate power to this court, in cases of this nature, was intended and should be construed as taking away not the whole appellate power in cases of habeas corpus, but the appellate power in cases to which the act applied, and finally the act of 1867, providing for a military government in Mississippi, necessarily suspends the writ of habeas corpus in that State, which it was in the clear constitutional authority of Congress to do.

Mr. J. M. Carlisle replied. He said that, as a citizen, he confessed that there was no means of determining what Congress might have intended to do, but it was certainly difficult to tell when Congress had come into court and seized upon a cause sub-judicio, and strangled what might have been the intention, but, as a lawyer, it was easy to say what Congress really had done by applying the ordinary rules of interpretations, and by such means he feared that Congress, by the act of 1868, repealed only the statute of 1867, which had given special jurisdiction before the existence of the fourteenth section of the Judiciary, yet was unaffected by the repealing of the act of 1868, and it was under the provisions of that section that this proceeding was instituted and not under the act of 1867, as conceded by the Attorney General.

He had heard no argument which had in the least shown that this court was without jurisdiction under the judiciary act, and he would be inexcusable in longer detaining the court on a jurisdiction which it had iterated and reaffirmed, time and again. Mr. Carlisle spoke briefly, without notes, making the argument of the Attorney General the basis of his remarks. The excitement first caused by this case seems to have subsided, but few spectators being present to-day. The venerable Thomas Ewing, of Ohio, was present until the argument closed, and appeared much interested.

The court adjourned till Monday on conclusion of the argument.

Mr. Field, of Massachusetts, was admitted to practice in this court.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19.—Rumors that the Supreme Court had given a decision in the Yerger case adverse to the constitutionality of the reconstruction laws caused some excitement among the Radicals, and an extra session of Congress to take action in the matter has been threatened.

The Captain General of Cuba lately sent an urgent demand to the Madrid government for $2,000,000, and was informed in reply that the Spanish treasury was empty, and that hereafter he must raise in Cuba himself the money required for military purposes. Spain will supply troops, but Cuba must furnish the money.

A gentleman who called on the President to ascertain the truth regarding the proposed loan from the Rothschilds, says while it may be true that no correspondence has taken place between the President and M. Friquet, there is the best of reason to believe that there is some proposition of the kind alluded to before the government, though the exact nature of it cannot now be explained.—Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—The latest Cuban news is unimportant. The course of the volunteer organizations, now very formidable, is watched with much anxiety by the Spanish officials.

The number of troops reported to have arrived from Spain is greatly exaggerated, and there is much sickness among the Spanish troops The Cubans are in good spirits.

The Spanish official reports of military operations in the eastern departments of Cuba to the end of September afford ample evidence of the determination of the Cubans to harass the enemy at as many different points as possible, and of the necessity on the part of the Spaniards of maintaining the strictest watchfulness in every part of the disturbed region.

General Belknap was an active member of the Grand Army of the Republic. This settles speculations as to his political status.—Times.

GEN. SHERMAN IN THE WAR OFFICE.

We copy as follows from a special dispatch dated New York, October 13:

It is reported in political circles, to-night, that the immediate cause of Sherman's withdrawal from the cabinet is a disagreement with Secretary Fish on the Cuban policy Sherman, as is well known, has strong sympathies for the cause, and is no particular stickler for law. At a conference held yesterday, recent dispatches from Sickles, predicting the present extended republican movement in Spain, were under discussion, when Sherman urged immediate action in regard to Cuba, so as to take advantage of Spain's embarrassments. Partly supported by Grant's views, and because of carrying out his predecessor's urgent death bed request, Sherman at once became the great Cuban champion of the cabinet, being met, however, by the solid opposition of Secretary Fish, who again and again reminded him that the recognition of Cuba would be a casus belli. Sherman subsided, but immediately after insisted upon being replaced by another person in the cabinet.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NEW YORK, Oct. 18.—Father Hyacinthe has arrived on steamer from Havre.

NASHVILLE, Oct. 20.—In joint session of the Tennessee Legislature to day two ballots were taken. On the first ballot Johnson received 40 votes, Etheridge 30, scattering 38 Second ballot, Johnson 41, Etheridge 29, scattering 38.

There being no choice the Legislature adjourned until to morrow. The scattering votes are mostly complimentary and will doubtless soon be consolidated. There were twelve members absent to-day.

It is thought Johnson has done his best.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 20.—The full official vote of Pennsylvania shows Geary's majority to be 4,596, and Williams', for Supreme Judge, 8,703.

EUROPE.

BOMBAY, Oct. 11, via London 14. Mr. Bitkin, in a dispatch to the government here, says a caravan arrived at Zanzibar. It brings welcome news that Dr. Livingstone had arrived at Niyi alive and well. He was on the way to the coast, the road to which was open and safe. Another caravan is expected here, which will bring later information of the doctor's progress.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 14.—The Empress Eugenie has arrived. She was received by the Sultan with most imposing and magnificent ceremonies. The waters of the Bosphorus were covered with boats gaily decorated, and the banks crowded with spectators.

MADRID, Oct. 18.—The druggists report extraordinary sales of turpentine and other combustibles, which the government apprehends is to be used for incendiarism.

PARIS, Oct. 18.—Napoleon has invited the King of Belgium to meet him at Compeigne.

Marshal Bazaine will be appointed commander of the Imperial Guard.

LONDON, Oct. 18.—Lord Derby is dying.

MADRID, Oct. 18.—The loss of life in fighting preceding the capture of Valencia was trifling. The troops lost two killed and seven wounded. The loss of the insurgents is unknown.

No taxpayer or householder in Valencia revolted; its capture had a tranquilizing effect throughout Spain.

MADRID, Oct. 20.—There have been three thousand more troops ordered to Cuba.

The Bishop of Orleans to Father Hyacinthe.

By mail from Europe we have the following text of a letter addressed by Monseigneur Dupanloup to Father Hyacinthe:

ORLEANS, September 25, 1869.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: As soon as I was informed from Paris of the step which you were about to take I endeavered, as you know, to spare you at any cost what would prove a great fault and misfortune for yourself as well as a profound affliction for the church. I sent off on the instant, and in the night, an old fellow-student and friend of yours to prevent you, if that were possible. But it was too late; the scandal had been consummated, and from this moment you can measure by the grief of all the friends of the church, and the joy of her enemies, the extent of the mischief which you have wrought. At present I can do no more than pray to God, and conjure you to pause on the declivity on which you now stand, leading as it does to abysses which your soul, in its trouble, has not discerned. You have suffered, I know; but allow me to tell you, Father Lacordaire and Father de Ravignan had to bear more than you, and they raised themselves to a higher rank in patience and fortitude, through their love of the church and Jesus Christ. How is it that you did not feel what an injury you were doing to the church, your mother, by these accusing predictions? And what an insult to our Saviour to place yourself, as you are now doing, alone, face to face in opposition to him, and in contempt of his successors. But I am willing to hope and believe that this aberration will be only a transient one. Return among us; after having caused this affliction to the Catholic world, give it a great consolation and a striking example. Go and throw yourself at the feet of the Holy Father. His arms will be open to receive you, and in clasping you to his paternal heart he will restore to you the peace of your conscience and the honor of your life.

Receive from him who was your bishop and who will never cease to love your soul, this testimonial and and these counsels of sincere and religious affection. FELIX,

Bishop of Orleans.

FATHER HYACINTHE'S REPLY.

To the above letter Father Hyacinthe made the following reply:

PARIS, September 26, 1869.

MONSEIGNEUR: I am much touched by the feeling which dictated the letter you addressed to me, and I am most grateful for the prayers you so kindly put up in my behalf; but I cannot accept either your reproaches or your counsels. What you qualify as a great fault committed—I call a great duty accomplished. Be pleased to accept, Monseigneur, the homage of the respectful sentiments with which I remain, in Jesus Christ and his church, your very humble and obedient servant,

BROTHER HYACINTHE.

EXPLORERS RETURNING.—News of the ill-fated Sir John Franklin comes to us not only from the shores of the Pacific, but from Greenland and the Northeast. Dr. C. F. Hall, the veteran Arctic explorer, who sailed for the frozen seas from New London, Connecticut, June, 1864, in the ship Monticello, fitted out by Mr. Henry Grinnell, with the aid of Messrs R. H. Chapel, H. Robinson, Prof. Bache and others, and who was heard from December, 1864, and July, 1866, arrived at New Bedford, Massachusetts, the 26th ultimo, in the ship Ansil Gibbs, from Repulse Bay, August 23. He brings with him two Esquimaux and their daughters. His five years' residence in the Arctic regions has not been without results. He is able to report interesting intelligence in regard to the death of Sir John Franklin and his companions, and conclusive proof that none of them ever reached Montreal Island. He saw natives who were the last to look upon Crozier and his party. The doctor brings with him the remains of a young man who belonged to that ill fated band of explorers, and also various relics of the explorations. He has prepared a report, addressed to his friend, Mr. Henry Grinnell, of New York, which will soon be given to the public through the press. Dr. Hall is by no means tired of exploration, and proposes next spring to start anew and push his journeying to the North Pole. He regards his experience of the last ten years as invaluable to him as a preparation and aid in the future. In his report alluded to he says: "Wherever I found that Sir John Franklin's companions died I erected monuments, fired salutes, and waved the Star Spangled Banner over them in memory of the discoveries of the Northwest Passage."

THE Methodist mission among the Germans of Paris has had a remarkable history, and one of its interesting incidents is the fact that the rationalistic German society there had applied to the Consistorium for a pastor, but been refused, as they were unwilling to accept the orthodox creed. One of the members, a wealthy merchant, asked Rev. William Schwartz, of the Methodist mission, to preach for them one Sabbath. He told them he should have to preach evangelical religion; but they were willing to hear both sides, and for two months he has been preaching for them Sabbath evenings, and now on Sunday afternoons, as he believes, with good results. They ask no rent, pay all incidental expenses, and advertise the service in every possible way. Some of the Orthodox Lutheran and Reformed Church are greatly astonished at his liberality; but he tells them that it is just the glory of Methodism that its preachers feel it their duty and privilege to preach the Gospel to all the world.—New York Independent

PATHOS.—The preacher was taking up the Annual Conference collection. He was not a pathetic preacher—he was a man of fact and argument rather. He had clearly stated the Bible principle, method and measure of giving for the support of the Gospel, and was making the "application" to the occasion. After expressing his approval of the policy of the Methodist Church, which is to give their preachers a fair support, he said: "I always plead earnestly for this fund, for the superannuated preachers and widows and orphans of deceased preachers who have died in the work of God; for I expect to live and die in this work, and some one will plead for my wife and little ones as I am pleading for others today." His voice was choked at the thought and mention of the dear little circle at home, his utterance ceased, and the usually fearless preacher stood silent before a tearful audience.—San Francisco Spectator

WHAT TO READ.—Are you deficient in taste? Read the best English poets, such as Gray and Goldsmith, Pope and Thomson, Cowper and Coleridge, Scott and Wordsworth. Are you deficient in imagination? Read Milton, and Akenside, and Burke and Shakespeare. Are you deficient in power of reason? Read Chillingworth, and Bacon, and Locke. Are you deficient in judgment and good sense in the common affairs of life? Read Franklin. Are you deficient in sensibility? Read Goethe and Mackenzie. Are you deficient in political knowledge? Read Montesquieu, the "Federalists," Webster and Calhoun. Are you deficient in patriotism? Read Demosthenes, and the "Life of Washington." Are you deficient in conscience? Read some of President Edwards' works. Are you deficient in piety? Read the Bible.

THERE has been for some weeks a great deal of interest in Cincinnati on the question of how the Roman Catholics could be induced to attend the public schools. Very liberal offers were made to them, and compromises of various sorts suggested in the school board, and a committee of the board visited the Archbishop to find just what would satisfy him; but the report which they brought back was not such as to satisfy them. What they seem determined to get is a share of the school money proportionate to their population, which they may use as they please, teaching their creeds and catechism and their own text books.

PRAYER.—Do not say you cannot pray, because you cannot speak much, or well, or long. Prayer is wrestling with God; the heart is the wrestler; holy faith is the strength; if thy heart be a good wrestler, though thou art ever so tongue-tied, thou wilt be a prevailer. Rhetoric goes for little in the heavenly court, but sincere groans have a kind of omnipotence.

Columbus District Meeting, Mobile Con

COLUMBUS, MISS., Oct. 12, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: The District Conference for Columbus district, Mobile Conference, was held in this city on the 8th and 9th instant, Bishop Paine presiding. The attendance was small—the Bishop said the smallest he had met anywhere. The various interests of the church were inquired into and carefully considered. Revivals were reported from most of the circuits, and, upon the whole, the condition of the church was found to be improving. The want of mail facilities was, in several cases, plead as an obstacle in the way of a more general circulation of our church papers. Rev. W. Murrah, from the Committee on Colored Missions, made a report, which was adopted, recommending the appointment, by the Annual Conference, of an agent to travel through the bounds of the Conference to organize churches and circuits. It is believed that many of these people, formerly under the care of our church, are willing now to return from their wanderings, and to resume their places in our church.

I send you the report of the Committee on Sunday Schools, by instruction, to publish, if you are willing to find room for it. The Bishop expressed a desire to have it published, and the brethren concurred with him.

Lay delegates to the next session of the Mobile Conference were elected as follows: Rev. Elzy Williams, John T. Terry, Esq., Dr. W. L. Lipscomb and Colonel Joseph W. Taylor. Alternates—Rev. John F. Tarrant, Charles F. Sherrod and S. A. Brown.

Bishop Paine was in fine health, and preached on Sabbath morning to the delight and profit of a large assembly. He also ordained a local deacon and elder, addressed the Sunday school and administered the holy communion during his stay. The occasion was a very pleasant and edifying one to those who attended, and we regret that it was appointed at a season when so many found it out of their power to be present.

Very truly yours,

S. A. BROWN.

[The Sabbath school report alluded to will be published hereafter. It is necessarily crowded out for the present on account of its great length.—EDITOR.]

A GEM.—The sunlight that follows a shipwreck is not less beautiful though it shines upon the remnants of the broken bark; what is saved is so much more precious than that which has been lost. The domestic circle is always too small to allow of ruptnre; it is always too precious to make excusable any neglect to prevent or to heal disturbance. There are enough to minister, by hints and reports, to domestic unkindness; and, unfortunately, the best, under such circumstances, are much prone to mistake, and thus misrepresent motives; and trifles, with no direct object, are magnified into mountains of unintentional offense. It is the same in social life. Let us guard against it. Delicate relations are like the polish of costly cutlery: dampness corrodes, and the rust, though removed, leaves a spot.

THE prejudice in England against clerical celibacy is so great that the proposals in favor of sending out unmarried missionaries, made last May, by Dr. Landels, and by some of the managers of the Baptist Missionary Society, are almost universally repudiated by the denomination. As a consequence, one of the secretaries, Mr. Trestrail, resigns his post.—New York Independent.

COUGHS and colds are often overlooked. A continuance for any length of time causes irritation of the lungs or some chronic throat disease. Brown's Bronchial Troches are offered with the fullest confidence in their efficacy, giving almost invariably sure and immediate relief.

THE Emperor of China is to be married this year with great pomp. He is fifteen years of age.

REVIVAL AT EMORY COLLEGE.

For the last week or ten days the news of a great revival in Emory College has been growing, until now we learn that it has swept almost all the students into the church. These are glad tidings of great joy, and they have carried comfort and hope to the heart of many a parent.

There is in this fact a demonstration of what we have been urging on our readers for years—that in our institutions of learning we have our most valuable religious nurseries, and the church cannot afford to let their prosperity decline. They are to be kept up at all costs, and enlarged and endowed, and made more valuable, year by year, until their full power for usefulness shall be developed. We hope that our prosperous Methodists will lay it to heart, throughout all the South, that all our institutions need money, and, while they are plowing and reaping and gathering wealth, let them ever have it in view to enlarge and endow these nurseries of the church by ample appropriations to them.

But we hail this revival as auspicious of an increase of our ministerial force in educated men. We trust that it will be the ardent prayer of the church that scores of preachers may be brought forward from the ranks of these new converts—called of God, consecrated to the work by their parents, endued with the Spirit, and all obstructions from self and sin and the world removed, until the Conferences—now crying out for laborers—shall have no lack of them in any harvest field. We have already heard more than one friend of Emory College express the wish and hope we here record—that this revival may, in God's providence, be a gathering into the church of many valiant leaders in the militant church of the near future. Let all the people say, "Amen."—Southern Christian Advocate.

PUNISHING CHILDREN.

In multitudes of cases parents make hasty and furious and utterly groundless charges against a child, which has so taken it aback that it could not make a reply, and this has been taken as a tacit confession of guilt, and the next question proposed in fury is, "What did you do it for?" And the child being thus confused and more alarmed, cannot assume presence of mind and composure enough to make a denial, and as the only alternative, bursts into a kind of hysterical crying. Many parents are of such temperament that when a child cannot be induced to utter a word under scolding, they utter threats which are a disgrace to civilization; we have heard them ourselves, from affectionate, indulgent and Christian parents, "I'll knock you down with a log of wood," "I'll break every bone in your body," "I'll beat you within an inch of your life," and other similar bestialities of expression from educated and civilized minds; at least that passed as such in the great world.

There is one safe rule applicable in the reproof of children; speak so low to them that no third person ten feet away could hear what was said. Angry feeling is intensified by a loud utterance. Another good rule is not to rebuke them in the presence of a third person; or if so, let it be in a soft and affectionate tone. A third precaution, and it is not a minor one either, is, do not reprove on the instant; wait a few hours, if not until the next day, or better still in many cases, defer it until the occasion is about to occur when the fault might likewise be repeated. Any intelligent and observant housekeeper knows that if a steak is put on this morning and burnt into a crisp, bouncing up from the table, running into a kitchen and blazing away at the cook is neither lady-like, nor wise, nor polite. But next morning, just before the steak is about to be cooked, be in the kitchen, and ask that it be not over done as yesterday, with some word of encouragement; whatever servant is not managed in this way had better be dismissed. Now children are as ignorant as a servant; the minds of both are weak and may be easily made perverse alike. Be assured, reader, that if you make it an inflexible rule never to scold above a whisper, you will never outrage your child's feelings, nor fracture its skull by a blow dealt in ungovernable fury.—Hall's Journal of Health.

WHO PLUCKED THAT FLOWER?

Inscription in an old English church yard:

"Who plucked that flower?"
Cried the gardener as he walked through the garden.
His fellow-servant answered,
"The Master."
And the gardener held his peace.

"Who plucked that flower?" the gard'ner said,
As, walking with his friend, he spied
A stalk with mutilated head,
Where once had bloomed his hope and pride;
A brief response his comrade made:
"The Master—let thy murm'rings cease."
The gard'ner meekly bowed his head,
And from that moment held his peace.

"Who plucked that flower?" the mother cries
In anguish deep, and dark, and wild;
"I have no more on earth to prize;
Who took my son, my darling child?"
While yet she speaks a calmness stills
The waves of sorrow's sea; they cease;
"It is the Master; thus he wills."
And so the mother holds her peace.

"Who plucked that flower—my darling boy?"
The father says in hopeless grief;
"He was my light, my life, my joy;
There's nothing now can bring relief."
But lo! there shines from heaven a light;
He sees, and all his sorrows cease;
"It is the Master; all is right."
And so the father holds his peace.

"Who plucked that flower?" the man of care
Exclaims when wealth eludes his grasp,
And vanishes in misty air
The prize he fondly hoped to clasp.
A voice falls gently on his ear:
"The Master; let thy longing cease;
Wealth cannot buy an entrance here."
And so the worldling holds his peace.

"Who plucked that flower I've watched so long?"
The aspirant for honor cries;
With it my hopes for fame were strong;
Without it all ambition dies."
An answer comes: "Humility
Will bid all love of glory cease;
It is the Master—yes, 'tis He."
And so the murm'rer holds his peace.

"Who plucked that flower?" we all inquire
When disappointment is our lot,
And hopes are blasted as by fire,
The future dark, the past a blot;
But when we list to Jesus' voice
Our murmurings all quickly cease;
"It is the Master"—we rejoice,
And all submissive hold our peace.

"Who plucked that flower, to us so sweet?"
Oh, Christian! why the question press?
In every sorrow we may meet
And bless the Lord our Righteousness.
The Master gave, the Master takes;
We are the stewards of his grace;
The garden of our joys he makes;
He plucks the flowers—we'll hold our peace.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

MR. EDITOR: The Sunday School Convention of the Union Springs district, Montgomery Conference, convened in Troy, Alabama, September 30, 1869. The opening sermon was preached at night by Rev. W. W. Graham.

October 1, ten A. M—Organized by electing Rev. J. W. Shores president, Rev. A. Dowling vice president, and W. C. Menefee, Esq., secretary.

The following pastoral charges were represented: Union Springs, Mount Hilliard, Pine Level, Brundidge, Mount Ida, Millville and Troy.

A number of important questions pertaining to the vital interests of the Sabbath school were brought up and discussed. At eleven A. M. an address was delivered to the convention by Rev. A. Dowling, on the hindrances to the Sabbath school. At the close of the address the following was offered by Rev. J. B. Cottrell:

Resolved, That the success of the Sunday school enterprise is largely dependent upon the efforts at home, upon the part of parents and the older members of the household, in religious training, and that it is important that ministers, while urging the importance of the Sunday school, urge the importance of family religion.

Adopted. Adjourned with benediction.

Met in the afternoon at three o'clock. After transacting important business the convention was addressed by Rev. J. W. Shores on the opening and closing exercises of the Sunday school. The convention adopted the following:

Resolved, That we recommend Sabbath school superintendents to have the whole school—teachers and pupils—repeat at the close of the first prayer, audibly, the Lord's prayer, the one who opens the school leading in a distinct, solemn voice. Also to have the whole school, at some period of its session, repeat together the Apostle's Creed, standing as they repeat it.

Adjourned.

Met in night session at eight o'clock P. M. Soul stirring music by the choir before prayer. The convention was then addressed by W. C Menefee, Esq., on the qualifications and duties of Sabbath school superintendents. At the close W. H. Parks offered a resolution that no superintendent or teacher shall be appointed in the Sunday school who is not a member of the church and professing godliness.—After much able discussion, pro and con, the resolution was laid on the table. Adjourned.

October 2.—Convened at nine A M. Rev. A. Dowling in the chair. Rev. J. W. Shores and W. C. Menefee, Esq., offered a series of resolutions, which were adopted, giving to the convention a more systematic and permanent organization. The officers under this organization, for the ensuing year, are a president, two vice presidents, one secretary, and, if need be, an assistant, and an executive committee consisting of the above officers and three others, elected by the convention. As thus organized, the following are the officers: Rev. J. W. Shores president, Rev. W. M. Motley and Hon. R. H. Powell vice presidents, and W. C. Menefee secretary. The above and Rev. W. H. Biggs, Rev. W. G. Perry and G. N. Gilmore, executive committee.

The hour having arrived for the Sabbath school procession, the convention arose and joined the Baptist and Methodist schools in their march to the grove. Here was a grand scene. What a host of young and little folks are seen following their beautiful banners! Arriving at the destined place and being seated, the schools united in songs of charming sweetness, led by Mrs. Dr S. D. Wilson, of Troy. The music ceased, and Rev. H. B. Cottrell was introduced and addressed the vast audience on the best means of teaching. The speech was listened to with rapt attention. Then came music with melting sweetness. Rev. J. B. Cottrell was then introduced and delivered an address on the aims and objects of Sunday school instruction. At the close of this stirring speech dinner was announced, and was found to consist of an abundance of such preparations as charm the eye and delight the palate. After all had partaken to satisfaction of the elegant repast, the crowd returned to the stand and listened to strains of melody, and were then addressed in pointed, telling speeches by Rev. Neil Gillis, of Camden, Hon. A. N. Worthy, of Troy, and Dr. P. R. Clements, of Brundidge. Adjourned till night.

Assembled again at eight P. M. After dispatching some business the convention was addressed by J. D. Garduer, Esq., on the qualifications and duties of Sunday school teachers. Some other questions were raised and important discussions followed.

A resolution was offered by A. Dowling and E. E. Richardson, asking the convention to have the proceedings thereof published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, the Southern Christian Advocate, and the Messenger and Advertiser. Adopted, and A. Dowling, W. C. Menefee and H. B. Cottrell appointed said committee.

After an appropriate resolution of thanks to the citizens of Troy for their generous hospitality in entertaining the convention, we adjourned sine die.

The executive committee will make arrangements for the place, time and order of business of the next convention.

Preaching on Sabbath, at eleven A. M., by Rev. J. B. Cottrell; at three P. M. by Dr. P. R. Clements, and at seven P. M. by A. Dowling.

A. DOWLING,
W. C. MENEFEE,
H. B. COTTRELL,
Committee

ONE of the dresses which Lyons gave Eugenie is a white poult with bouquets of flowers in which no less than sixty hues are blended, all so harmoniously that not one is conspicuous. The flowers are so light that they seem to wave at every passing breath. Another, to which she gave the preference, is a white grosgrain, without brilliancy, called "mat," (ivory-like,) on which are brocade satin roses. The flowers are in high relief and appear to stand out ready for some jeweled fingers to cull.

Woodville District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The Woodville District Conference met at Midway, Wilkinson circuit, Mississippi Conference, September 23, and concluded its business on the 24th. The Rev. James A. Godfrey, presiding elder, in the chair.

The two following days were spent in preaching, religious exercises, and holding the Quarterly Conference for the circuit.

Though many of the brethren were absent, the reports of protracted meetings and revivals then in progress showed that they were at work for the Master.

The following committees were appointed, viz: Committee on the State of the Church, Committee on Ministerial Education, Committee on Religious Interests of Colored People, Committee on Memoirs.

The committee on the State of the Church report a marked improvement in the spiritual condition of some portions of the district. Revivals have commenced, and are still in progress at Salem, on the Liberty circuit; at Smyrna, Hopewell and New Hope, on Buffalo circuit; at Macedonia, on the Wilkinson circuit; and at Pipkin's chapel, on the Jackson circuit; and throughout the district there is an evident increase in the congregations, and in their attendance on divine service an unusually serious attention prevails. On some of the circuits, however, there is no special manifestation of any increased religious interest.

It is our conviction that the use of ardent spirits as a beverage, and the practice of dancing, in which some of the younger members are disposed to indulge, are among the chief obstacles to the success and prosperity of the church in our borders.

The finances are reported in an improved condition, though still not what is needed. To this report on the state of the church is appended a resolution, which was unanimously and heartily adopted, "recommending preachers, official and lay members to discourage dancing everywhere."

The same committee offered a resolution, which was adopted, requesting the Annual Conference to petition the College of Bishops to change the time of holding the Conference to February or March. The presiding elder was requested to bring the same before the Annual Conference.

The Committee on Ministerial Education reported a constitution and by laws for the formation of a society, to be called the Woodville District Educational Society, which society was promptly formed and its object heartily indorsed.

The presiding elder of the district is president ex officio. Two vice presidents, a secretary, assistant secretary and a treasurer are to be elected annually, one of whom is to be a traveling and one a local preacher, belonging to the district. The officers constitute an executive board, a majority of whom, including the president and one vice president, shall be a quorum.

Five dollars paid annually entitles to membership, or twenty-five dollars paid at one time to life membership.

The presiding elder, on his first round, is to collect all dues and to pay them over to the treasurer, who is to disburse according to the direction of the executive board, which board has power to elect as beneficiary of the society any young man who professes to feel convinced of his duty to preach the Gospel, and has been recommended by the Quarterly Conference to which he belongs. The board selects the school and keeps oversight of said students, that the design of the society be carried out. The regular meeting shall be at the session of the District Conference, at which time the executive board shall make full report to the society of its condition and doings. The president may call special meetings. The above sketch gives some idea of the organization of this important and popular movement. Preachers and laity advocate it with an earnestness ominous of success. They are demanding that the workmen be "thoroughly furnished," that the "mystery of iniquity, which worketh" in high places and amidst the subtleties of science, shall be unmasked, and the Gospel correctly and fully commended to all men. God bless the work.

The Committee on Religious Interests of the Colored People report a still somewhat distracted state of things, but that there are evidences here and there of a desire to return to former relations with us. The Conference showed a readiness to enter any effectual door that may be opened in this direction.

The Committee on Memoirs report the deaths, during the past year, of two of the members of the District Conference, viz: Colonel Daniel Hoard, of Woodville, and Rev. Samuel T. Sweeney.

Of the former you have had an obituary notice in the ADVOCATE. He was a noble Christian gentleman, whose integrity was recognized in all the relations of life. He adorned the doctrine of God, and in death illustrated its power to save. We cherish his memory and emulate his virtues.

Of Brother Sweeney the report says: He died recently, full of faith and the Holy Ghost. He was possessed with an extraordinary brightness of intellect. He was truly a man without guile, evincing a holiness of life but rarely met with. He was a great but patient sufferer.

The wonderful works of God impressed him profoundly. The beauties of creation, the harmony of its laws, and the fitness of all things vividly illustrated to him the wisdom and goodness of God. He had a poetic turn of mind, and as he spoke the beauties and glories and joys of the other world would often flash upon his hearers with telling effect, and show that they were the themes of his constant meditation. His thoughts were in heaven.

He bore a superannuated relation to the Mississippi Conference, but as long as he lived he ceased not to labor in the Gospel.

His pure, bright spirit is with his Saviour. His afflictions, we doubt not, have worked out an exceeding weight of glory. His place is warm in our hearts, his memory precious to his brethren.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and Sunday School Visitor received a vote of approval and promise of support.

The lay delegates to the Annual Conference are: Rev. J. E Jagers, George H. Wiley, L. K. Barber and James Clinton.

The next District Conference is to be held at Jackson, Louisiana.

THE AQUARIUM IN BERLIN.—The aquarium recently opened at Berlin is described as the most magnificent in Europe, and in fact in the world. The first room is a hall paved with marble, having snake and lizard cages on either side. From this room the visitor passes to a balcony running above a large cavern, with a pool below tenanted by water fowl. An adjoining room is also arranged as a nearly circular cavern, with basins in the rock work around the side, and with a magnificent aviary in the middle, containing more than a thousand birds, appearing to occupy only a large cage of wire gauze. On closer examination, however, it is discovered that this large cage is divided by very delicate wire partitions, radiating from the centre, so that only about one hundred birds occupy the same compartment. From the aviary a rocky vaulted passage leads to the aquarium, strictly so called, and also to the lower part of the cavern. The imitation rock work is reported to be true to nature, and the general effect of the different apartments is described as very imposing.

WE are glad to chronicle the fact that sixty eight thousand children were present on the opening day of the public schools in this city. Give all the children a chance to obtain an education, and if need be compel parents to send their children to school.—Scientific American

DEATH is only death as viewed from the earthly side; as viewed from the heavenly side it is all birth.

Starkville District Meeting, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: At the request of Brother J. T. McGee, who was secretary of the late District Meeting for the Starkville district, Mississippi Conference, I furnish you a brief account of the doings of that meeting. It was held at the town of Vaiden, Carroll county, Mississippi, a flourishing village on the Mississippi Central Railroad, and embraced the fifth Sabbath in August.

The attendance of the official members of the church from all parts of the district was not as general as it should have been. Not all the traveling preachers, even, were present. This may be accounted for, however, first, on the ground that the place of meeting was on one side of the district, and it was therefore not very convenient of access, except to those living near the line of railroad. Second. Some of the preachers were engaged in very interesting protracted meetings in their charges. Some thirty or forty members were present, however.

The various interests of the church were considered and reported on by appropriate committees, and some very interesting discussions were had that will no doubt result in good to the church. My observation at this, the second meeting of the kind I have ever attended, satisfies me that this may be made an almost invaluable auxiliary to the furtherance of God's cause and the prosperity of our beloved Methodism. It will require time to educate our people up to the responsibilities that this new feature in our economy imposes, and induce them to avail themselves of the opportunity it affords to become familiar with the practical working of our system. The fact that hitherto the laity of our church have confided the management of affairs entirely to the ministry, and have taken no active part in the great enterprises of the church, further than to give and to do as they were called upon, has no doubt operated to lessen rather than increase their sense of individual responsibility. It was to remedy this evil—not because of clamor from without—that our last General Conference inaugurated a plan of lay co-operation, which extends to the highest department of our church judicature.

There is still a manifest indisposition among our people to enter the door thrown open to them—to come fully and heartily up to divide the labor and share the responsibility. Many still oppose lay representation. It was strongly opposed at this meeting, and I think tacit instructions were given their delegates to the Annual Conference to cast their votes for delegates to the General Conference with reference to the repeal of this law. This, I am confident, was the ruling sentiment. The very general manifestation of this feeling, and the consequent indifference to the monthly church meetings, as well as District Meetings, I confess has made me, as well as others, question the beneficial result. If our brethren would enter spiritedly into co operation with the ministry, as is now provided by law, there can be no question as to the result.

We were favored with reports on various subjects, from committees of laymen, that would have been creditable to a general conference of experienced ministers, and that exhibited such an interest in all that affects the prosperity of the church that could not fail to impress all who heard them. Some were ordered to be sent to you for publication. Pressing engagements otherwise have prevented the secretary from complying fully. But you will have something from him.

The preaching was earnest, faithful and evangelical. Beside traveling and local preachers from the district, there were present during the meeting Brother A. W. Jones, president of Tennessee Conference Female College, Jackson, Tennessee; Brother H. F. Johnson, president of Whitworth Female College, Brookhaven, Mississippi; Brother W. P. Barton, presiding elder of Yazoo district, Mississippi Conference, and Bro. L. W. Boyle, of Blackhawk circuit. The latter is the son of Dr. Boyle, of St. Louis. All these brethren, except Brother Barton, who was only present for a few hours, favored us with some of the most profitable sermons it has ever been my privilege to hear, and such as no doubt were "a savor of life unto life" to many souls. We had a happy love-feast on Sunday at nine o'clock, and a most delightful communion season at the close of the eleven o'clock service.

The religious exercises continued for some days of the following week. I remained with Bro. P. A. Johnston, the pastor, until Wednesday morning. A deep religious interest pervaded the community. Several were added to the church, and there is reason to believe much good was done.

I have been traveling extensively in this region, embracing the counties of Holmes, Carroll and Attala, for some weeks past, and am happy to say that there is a gracious spirit of revival abroad in the country. Very many souls are being converted and added to the church. Although, by force of circumstances I cannot control, I am compelled to secularize somewhat for a livelihood, still I have preached a great deal, and hope in God I may be able soon to take my place again in the ranks. "God is good, a strong hold in the day of trouble."

Truly, your brother,

H. J. HARRIS.

LOVE FOR GOD'S WORD.—Two men came one night to Mr. Ellis, the missionary of Madagascar.—They had walked a hundred miles out of their way to visit him.

"Have you the Bible?" asked Mr. Ellis.

"We have seen it and heard it read," one man said; "but we have only some of the words of David, and they do not belong to us; they belong to the whole family."

"Have you the words of David with you now?" asked Mr. Ellis. They looked at each other, and would not give answer. Perhaps they were afraid; but Mr. Ellis spoke kindly to them. Then one of the men put his hand into his bosom and took out what seemed to be a roll of cloth. He unrolled it, and after taking off some wrappers, behold, there were a few old, torn, dingy leaves of the Psalms, which had been read, passed around, lent, reread, until they were almost worn out. Tears came to Mr. Ellis' eyes when he saw them. "Have you seen the words of Jesus, or John, or Paul, or Peter?" asked the missionary.

"Yes," they said, "we have seen and heard them; but we never owned them."

Mr. Ellis then went and brought out a Testament with a book of Psalms bound up with it, and showed it to them.

"Now," said he, "if you will give me your few words of David I will give you all his words, all the words of Jesus, and John, and Paul, and Peter besides."

The men were amazed and delighted; but they wanted to see if the words of David were the same in Mr. Ellis' book; and when they found they were, and thousands more of the same sort, their joy knew no bounds. They willingly gave up their poor, tattered leaves, seized the volume, bade the missionary good by, and started off upon their long journey home, rejoicing like one who has found a great spoil. Did not these poor men prize the Bible? And had they not found a treasure?

THE CHILDREN.—Are they being converted? How many of the children of your congregation have been converted during the past year? This question will probably set some pastor to thinking—and praying.

CLOSING WORDS.

By the time this number of our paper reaches the press the Pacific Conference will have commenced its annual session, at Vacaville, Bishop Marvin presiding

The past year has been marked by prosperity and progress. The statistical report will show a decided increase of members, and an advance in all the temporal interests of the church. The number of souls converted will reach a figure large enough to thrill every truly pious heart with joy.

This year the laborers have sowed in tears and reaped in joy. It has been a year of trial to many of our brethren. Some have had to struggle for a footing in new fields; some have been embarrassed on account of the limited support received; others have met trials in other forms; and doubtless all have had occasion to feel their dependence upon God for strength to meet and overcome the difficulties and obstacles encountered while doing their Master's work. These difficulties have been met and overcome; our brethren have achieved the victory of faith, and they meet at the close of the year rejoicing and praising God. But they rejoice with trembling. While the degree of success realized excites their gratitude and encourages their hearts, they look to the future, and their souls become burdened with a sense of the magnitude of the work yet to be done and the weight of responsibility devolved upon them as overseers of the work of God. The opening and widening fields spread out before their vision; the peculiar difficulties as well as the peculiar necessities of the work reveal themselves to their earnest minds, and they say in their hearts, "Who is sufficient for these things?" Taking in the vast dioceses of the field, stretching from British America to the Mexican border, from the Bay of San Francisco to the Missouri river, soon to be peopled by millions of our race, our little handful of laborers seem utterly inadequate to the task of its evangelization. But with God all things are possible. The history of the church furnishes ample encouragement to our faith. In 1807 the "Western Conference," embracing the entire Mississippi valley, had fifty five preachers, all told, and a membership correspondingly small. Into what a host have they since multiplied! These fifty-five preachers were like many of ours—very poor. Bishop Asbury, in his journal, says: "The brethren were in want, so I parted with my watch, my coat and my shirt." These were the men who evangelized the Mississippi valley—yea, the nation. Are we their legitimate descendants and successors? By our fruits we shall be known. Holiness, faith and zeal like theirs will, under God, work the same glorious results. The partial success of the past year proves this to be true. Shall not the more abundant success hereafter more gloriously demonstrate it? The Lord's arm is not shortened that it cannot save. His word is sharper than a two-edged sword. The Gospel is the power of God. We believe there will be witnessed on this coast such exhibitions of that power as have not hitherto gladdened the hearts of the Lord's people. The day of the Lord's power will come to a willing people.

No preacher has died during the year—a fact which demands our devout and thankful acknowledgment. Some have been at times apparently near the gates of death, but were spared, and will greet their brethren at Conference with peculiar feelings. The roll of our honored dead remains as it was: Fulton, Ellis, Sanders, Cox, Blythe, Stewart, Gray, Bond, Eppes, Colby, Petersen.

Not only have the lives of all our preachers been preserved, but in answer to our prayer more laborers have been sent to our aid. Our transfers have come opportunely, and will strengthen us. Among them are men of experience and tried devotion. They leave good records behind them, and will meet a hearty welcome among us. The younger men who come to us as transfers will find a welcome as hearty and will feel "at home."—San Francisco Spectator.

He who never looks up to an excellence higher than he has attained, who never regards himself as formed for pure and generous sentiments, who never admits the thought that exalted goodness is placed within his reach, will never put forth his powers in pursuit of virtue. He will never rise. He dooms himself to his present state. Exertion supposes that good may be attained, and vigorous exertion supposes that the mind is kindled by the prospect of attainment. What can you expect from him who sees nothing in the future better than the past?—Channing.

What I Saw of the Suez Canal.

NUMBER ONE.

The night of the 31st of December, 1868, had not been favorable to the approaches of "tired nature's sweet restorer" at "Sheppard's Hotel" in Cairo. First, a poor camel had fallen in the street before our window, and, having broken a leg, was instantly butchered then and there, and the pieces, even to the tail, sold to the highest bidder. At a later hour there was an arrest and an attempt at rescue; which latter, by the way, was unsuccessful, although there seemed to be nearly fifty rescuers and only one policeman. But the majesty of the law is respected in Cairo, and although there was much rattling of bamboo sticks, much tossing about of dusky arms and white turbans, and a fearful screaming and yelling in jawbreaking Arabic, yet the policeman was not touched and the culprit went to the calaboose. From that time till morning the bands of fierce and loud mouthed dogs, which have never yet settled their claims to the possession of the town, engaged in a series of battles royal, and made night hideous with their cries.

The day before we had ridden fourteen miles on donkey-back and ascended the pyramid of Ghizeh, and our muscles were still sore from being dragged over the huge stones by the four brawny guides, who evidently think that the nearer they come to breaking the neck of the traveler the more backsheesh they are entitled to; and so when, soon after daylight, a red fez cap, surmounting an ebony visage, was thrust in at the door and we were told that the train for Ismael left in an hour, I, for one, felt sure that nothing short of a sail on the Suez Canal could get me out of bed at five o'clock after a night like that.

Passing, on our ride to the depot, through crowds of kneeling Arabs and kneeling camels—the Arabs at their morning devotions and seeing up complaints, no doubt, that "Christian dogs" should come "between the wind and their nobility;" the camels receiving their daily loads, and growling loudly, and much more reasonably, because their burdens are twice as much as they should carry—and being, at length, by means of a capital courier, a little bad Arabic and a good thick stick, safely piloted through shoals of the worst and most importunate beggars in the world, beheld us seated in a first class, English-made car, with two Frenchmen and the Arab conductor, whizzing through the land of the Pharaohs at the rate of thirty miles an hour. The morning was beautiful, clear, balmy and elastic, such as only an Egyptian morning can be. On our left lay the broad, majestic Nile, calm, still, without a ripple on its mysterious surface, while far above the tall palm trees on the opposite bank, and dwarfing them into reeds by comparison, loomed up the three great pyramids of Ghizeh. On we sped, through tracts of wheat and clover, knee deep and emerald green, the fourth series of crops which the wonderfully fertile soil has produced within the year. Here a flock of snow white egrets, which catch grasshoppers as we pass and mind us not; there a crowd of dusky Nubian children, who shout after us, "Adeena backsheesh" (give alms,) in hopes of a piastre, as the train flies by; here an ancient Arab plowing, his head and beard like Aaron's; his plow, a crooked limb of mulberry wood; and his team, a woman, a dog, a camel and a cow, harnessed "tandem."

And now, suddenly and without a moment's warning, we have left the green fields of wheat and barley and cotton, and are plunging through hillocks of stones and sand. We have passed the line to which the waters of the Nile extend during the annual inundation, and are entering that which, should the Nile fail for two years, Egypt would be—the desert. Far as the eye can reach lies one vast plain of shining sand. A few stunted bushes near the railroad are the only signs of vegetation, and as we go on even these disappear, until at last the sky seems to meet the sand, and we feel that we are indeed in the wilderness. On for four long hours do we go, the tracks seeming to join in front of us and in our rear, until gradually our pace slackens, the whistle blows a feeble and tired note, and we alight to find the heat of the desert just cooling beneath the evening breeze, and ourselves at Ismael.

And now, as we are far out of the beaten track of tourists, and about to visit scenes and places about which, until we saw them, we knew very little, perhaps a little geography just here may not be amiss. Ismael—or, as the French and English call it, Ismailia—is situated on the Isthmus of Suez, about one-third of the way from the Red sea to the Mediterranean. Five years ago it was a burning desert. The jackal howled and the wild Bedouin pitched his tent where now stands a neat French town, with streets and stores, an excellent hotel and a population of about two thousand souls.

Lake Timsah, upon the bank of which it is built, was, before the canal reached it, simply a hollow in the desert; now it is a broad and beautiful sheet of water, more than a mile in width and nearly circular. At this point enters the fresh water canal from the Nile. This, of the depth and nearly the breadth of our ordinary canals, serves the purpose, if indeed such were needed, of a feeder to the grand canal, and also furnishes all the fresh water which is used from Suez to Port Said. Many boats were lying in it, laden with provisions and material for the army of men and engines, whose white tents and curling wreaths of steam we could catch glimpses of over the farther shore of the lake. This canal leaves the Nile at Cairo, just above the gardens of the Pacha of Egypt, and enters Lake Timsah at its western edge, and at right angles with the Suez Canal, whose course is along its eastern shore. The level of this fresh water canal above that of the surface of the lake is nearly ten feet.

The copings of the fresh water canal and the docks and quays on Timsah are all of cut stone, solidly built and elegantly finished. The magazines of the company, which are situated here, are immense structures, capable of holding, as they do, a vast amount of material. We strolled through the main street of this curious mushroom town of Ismailia. It reminded us strongly of one of our seaside towns; the boarded curbs, the whitewashed palings, the faint odor of smburned wood and the cool evening breeze from the desert made it difficult to believe that we were almost in the heart of the Syrian desert. Yet the houses are all neatly built, and that of M. Lesseps, the president of the company (who with his family resides here,) elegantly so.

But at this rate we shall never get to our grand canal ride. So let us pass over our capital dinner of snipe, artichokes, new potatoes and asparagus (this was New Year's eve, remember,) garnished with a bottle of good wine and a cheerful flow of conversation from mine host of the "Grand Hotel de l'Isthme de Suez," and behold us seated on the forward deck of the "Petit Prince" (which deck, as the entire length of the steamer was twenty feet, we two filled completely,) and prepared, through the courtesy of M. Lesseps, to accompany the Imperial mail in its distribution along the Suez Canal. The captain of our little craft, which was about the size and build of the steam launches now used in our navy, was a civil engineer, who had been employed upon the canal since 1857, and was now placed upon this light duty on account of failing health. He was exceedingly polite and communicative, and cheerfully afforded us all the information in his power. With true French punctuality, although we, the only passengers, had come on board with the mail bags fifteen minutes before ten o'clock, he waited, watch in hand, and on the minute we shot out into the blue waters of Timsah. Ten minutes' rapid steaming due east, a sharp turn to the left, and we entered the grand canal so suddenly that we had hardly time to take a last look at Timsah and Ismailia, the beauties of the desert, ere the sand hills shut them from our sight. Where the canal enters Timsah from the north the cuttings are deep, and the great heaps of sand lie on either side sixty or seventy feet high. The channel through which the water runs is not one hundred feet wide, and the depth not over twelve feet. Hydraulic engines of enormous power were at work dredging up and pouring out immense volumes of mud and sand. Hundreds of men, mostly Arabs, with barrow, pick and shovel, were moving the huge heaps, or, waist-deep in the water, turning from our path their uncouth boats; for much traffic is even now done upon the canal, and besides the boat loads of stores and provisions belonging to the company, we saw many a cargo that reminded us of the sutlers' stores in the "Army of the Potomac."

The Timsah cutting extends for perhaps half a mile, and then the desert is scarcely above the level of the water, and in fact in many places it is below it, so that the water covers many hundreds of acres, and the course of the canal is buoyed out sometimes for nearly a mile.—Edward Burd Grubb in Lippincott's Magazine

In the chief court of law in Granada there used to be the picture of a naked man with a large bundle of papers under his arm, and certain words proceeding out of his mouth, of which these are a translation: "I who won my suit am now stripped to the skin; what, then, must be the fate of him who lost it?" Spanish litigation would seem to be almost as expensive a luxury as our own.

LIGHT AND HEALTH.

The doctors are unanimous in urging the sanitary virtues of sunlight. On this point all the schools, agree—homeopathic, allopathic, hydropathic—and all consent that the sun has a first rank as a "healing medium." No pills, no powders, no lotions, no fluids are so potent in their influences, so infallible in their "exhibition" as this imponderable ray, which is never spent. Galen, Hahnemann and Priessnitz alike assume that light is essential to the effect of their remedies. The medical theory that a sick chamber must be gloomy and dark has ceased to have favor in any method of practice. A first requisite in choosing a site for a hospital is that it shall be sunny. This is quite as important as that it shall be dry, and, indeed, if it is not sunny it cannot be dry. The perfect hospital will be that which shall have the sun on all sides all the day, if the light can be so twisted by any Irish genius—which shall let it fall on all the beds in all the wards. In our recent war the unlucky patients who found themselves billeted on the shady side of the hospital wards had the trial of knowing that their confinement would probably be doubled; a severe wound on the sunny side would heal more quickly than a slight wound on the shady side. Even with the best ventilation, the malaria would cling in the blood which had only a northern light to drive it out. One could note the contrast, in passing between the beds of the patients who were sitting or lying in the sun, with those who were condemned to the shade. This large experience of the hospitals in the war converted many who were skeptics about light as a healing agent, and who went into the service with the lingering prejudice that the sick should be kept darkened as well as kept quiet. Actinic influence is now not a fancy to be laughed at, but a fact to be considered and used. Hereafter, curtains on sick beds will be not only superfluous, but a positive nuisance, to be put aside with all speed.

The exact reason, and the exact way of this sanitary influence of sunlight are not yet fully understood, but the fact is acknowledged. It is an influence which works in all kinds of disease. Inflammatory diseases, nervous diseases, digestive troubles, are all cured by a full supply of the sun's rays. These rays assist other remedies, and are the substitute for many remedies.—The direct action of the sun upon the skin is, indeed, dreaded by many, and it is not probable that any protest of a journal of health will lessen the sale of French kid gloves, or drive veils out of use. A white hand and a fair cheek will still be preferred to the bronze and tan of a sun-browned skin.

Some protection against the burning of the sun may be allowed. The best sanitary influence of the sunlight is not that of the hot ray directly upon the skin, but rather of the light in the air that is around the air, the light that envelopes, rather than the light that impinges upon the frame. The sunny atmosphere, more than the battery of rays, forces the frame into vigor. Reflected sunlight, if we can have plenty of it, is even better than the direct sunlight. The diffused stream, more than the exuberant fountain, dispenses the blessing. It is enough if we are only in the light, and it is not necessary to be always "under the sun."

We may condense into a few practical rules the substance of these remarks. First, in building, or buying, or hiring a house, choose always a site where there is abundance of light. Avoid dark lanes, neighborhoods where there are high walls or thick groves, or any obstruction which shuts out the sun. A cottage with three rooms and light in them, is better than a palace with thirty halls and chambers, where the light must be made by artificial aids.

Then, secondly, live in those rooms of the house in which the light has freest entrance, sit in them, eat in them, sleep in them. If any are to be shut up for state occasions, or for the reception of rare visitors, let them be the darkest rooms in the house, the north and east rooms, rather than the south and west. Let the sunny rooms be those which are the most constantly used.

Many a child goes astray not because there is want of prayer or virtue at home, but simply because home lacks sunshine. A child needs smiles as much as flowers need sunbeams. Children look little beyond the present moment. If a thing pleases they are apt to seek it; if it displeases they are prone to avoid it. If home is the place where faces are sour and words harsh, and fault-finding is ever in the ascendant; they will spend as many hours as possible elsewhere. Let every father and mother, then, try to be happy. Let them look happy. Let them talk to their children, especially the little ones, in such a way as to make them happy.

SCIENTIFIC.

AGASSIZ ON HUMBOLDT.

"Referring to Humboldt's career as an embassador at Paris, Prof. Agassiz described a personal interview he had with him:

"His official position and his rank in society, as well as his great celebrity, made him everywhere a cherished guest, and Humboldt had the gift of making himself ubiquitous. He was as familiar with the gossips of the fashionable and dramatic world as with the higher walks of life and the abstruse researches of science. He had at this time two residences in Paris; his lodging at the Hotel des Princes, where he saw the great world, and his room in the Rue de la Harpe, where he received with less formality his scientific friends. It is with the latter place I associate him; for there it was my privilege to visit him frequently. There he gave me leave to come and talk with him about my work and consult him in my difficulties. I am unwilling to speak of myself on this occasion, and yet I do not know how else I can do justice to one of the most beautiful sides of Humboldt's character. His sympathy for all young students of nature was one of the noblest traits of his long life. It may truly be said that toward the close of his career there was hardly one prominent or aspiring scientific man in the world who was not under some obligation to him. His sympathy touched not only the work of those in whom he was interested, but extended also to their material wants and embarrassments. At this period I was twenty-four; he was sixty-two. I had recently taken my degree as doctor of medicine, and was struggling not only for a scientific position, but for the means of existence also. I have said that he gave me permission to come as often as I pleased to his room, opening to me freely the inestimable advantages which intercourse with such a man gave to a young investigator like myself. But he did far more than this. Occupied and surrounded as he was, he sought me out in my own lodging. The first visit he paid me at my narrow quarters in the Quartier Latin, where I occupied a small room in the Hotel du Jardin de Plantes, was characteristic of the man. After a cordial greeting, he walked straight to what was then my library—a small book shelf containing a few classics, the meanest editions bought for a trifle along the quays, some works on philosophy and history, chemistry and physics, his own 'Views of Nature,' 'Aristotle's Zoology,' 'Linnæus' Systema Naturæ,' in several editions; Cuvier's 'Regne Animal,' and quite a number of manuscript quartos, copies which, with the assistance of my brother, I had made of works I was too poor to buy, though they cost but a few francs a volume. Most conspicuous of all were twelve volumes of the new German Cyclopedia, presented to me by the publisher. I shall never forget, after his look of mingled interest and surprise at my little collection, his half sarcastic question as he pounced upon the great encyclopedia: 'Was machen Sie den mit dieser Eselsbrucke' What are you doing with this ass' bridge?—the somewhat contemptuous name given in Germany to similar compilations. 'I have not had time,' I said, 'to study the original sources of learning, and I acted a prompt and easy answer to a thousand questions I have, as yet, no other means of solving.'

"It was no doubt apparent to him that I was not over familiar with the good things of this world, for I shortly afterward received an invitation to meet him at six o'clock in the 'Gallerie Vitree' of the Palais Royal, whence he led me into one of those restaurants, the tempting windows of which I had occasionally passed by. When we were seated, he half laughingly, half inquiringly, asked me if I would order the dinner. I declined the invitation, saying that we should fare better if he would take the trouble. And for three hours, which passed like a dream, I had him all to myself. How he examined me, and how much I learned in that short time! How to work, what to do, and what to avoid; how to live, how to distribute my time; what methods of study to pursue—these were the things of which he talked to me on that delightful evening. I do not mention this trivial incident without feeling that it may seem too familiar for the occasion; nor should I give it at all, except that it shows the sweetness and kindness of Humboldt's nature. It was not enough for him to cheer and stimulate the student; he cared also to give a rare indulgence to a young man who could allow himself few luxuries."

We learn that the Erie Railroad are about to adopt the electric, or Drummond plan, for lighting the Bergen tunnel, according to the suggestions in our article on lighting tunnels, published in these columns a few weeks ago. The Bergen tunnel is nearly one mile long, and is said to have cost the Erie Railroad $4,000,000. A number of railroad companies run their cars over the Erie track through this tunnel and so great is the traffic that a train is within it nearly all the time. The passenger coaches have now to be lighted with lamps, and thus the passage through is a gloomy one. An oxygen light in the middle of the tunnel, with the use of Fink's patent reflectors, will illuminate the dungeon brilliantly, and the traveling public will hail its adoption with great satisfaction. The railroad companies will probably find that the cost is not greater than the expense attending the oil consumed in the cars, and the liability to accident will be greatly reduced.—Scientific American.

Painless Cutting in Surgery.—At a late meeting of the British Medical Association Dr. B. W. Richardson exhibited a knife consisting of a revolving blade, and which divided with such rapidity that superficial incisions could be made with it without pain. The revolutions were about twenty-five per second, but the speed might be greatly increased. The knife in its action illustrated that an appreciable interval of time is necessary for fixing an impression on the mind, and for the development of consciousness. He hoped he should soon be able to give to the surgeon a small pocket instrument with which to open abscesses, and perform many minor surgical operations painlessly, without having recourse to either general or local anæsthesia.—Scientific American.

Consecration.—We are told that in the middle ages, ere yet a page was dubbed a knight, he entered a temple dedicated to the Most High, and, approaching the altar, placed thereon his sword and shield. A robed priest came, and holding his benedictive hands above the weapons of warfare, prayed that the blessing of God might rest upon them, and consecrated them from that moment to the use of humanity; and that man was recreant to his knightly vows who from that moment failed to listen to the cry of oppression, from whomsoever it came. He was bound to be honorable in his bearing toward all, and brave and true in every emergency. The middle ages, with their chivalry, with their shields, with their Damascus blades, have gone into the eternal past; but, brethren, to-day there is a similar duty laid upon us. We, too, can go into the temple dedicated to the Most High; we, too, can place, as we approach the altar, close to the sacred flame that burns thereon, the weapons of our warfare, the energies of our hearts, the impulses of our natures, and the thoughts of our minds. And though no priest with his white robe may come officially to bless us, believe me, when the young or the old thus dedicate themselves and all they have to God, a thousand angels come from heaven, robed in the white garments of immortality, and hold their benedictive hands over our heads, and dedicate us, by the influx of new power, a new wisdom, a new strength, to the grander, the holier and the sublimer purposes of human life.—Hepworth.

"Dying Hard."—"I never heard," says a Paris correspondent of the London Star, "a more striking instance of strong men 'dying hard' than one that is given in the Paris papers. A well known wrestler and athlete of Avignon, bearing the illustrious name of Meissonnier, caught, a few weeks ago, his death illness by carrying a little girl across a swollen ford, which she was obliged to traverse in order to take to her father his dinner. This action was performed in the most good natured way. Meissonnier seeing the child, who was to him an utter stranger, trembling and weeping on the brink, said to her, 'Take heart, little one; I'll serve as a ferry for you.' Swinging her on his shoulder, he carried her over. On returning to the bank whence he started, he slipped and was thoroughly submerged. A cold, which led to a virulent fever, was the result. As his end approached Meissonnier literally struggled with the malady, and his last words were, 'O, death, if you were a man, what short work I'd make of you.'"

A Famous Preacher.—Richard Weaver, of London, the famous lay preacher to the poor, is becoming almost as famous in England as Whitfield was a hundred and thirty years ago. He lately made a preaching tour in the country, and preached, among other places, at Ascot, where people came from all the surrounding country to hear him, some coming sixteen and twenty miles. "The whole congregation listened with great attention, many standing with streaming eyes, as he spoke of what he himself had witnessed of the power of the Gospel." Invitations crowded upon him far beyond his power to accept.

Sunday School Union Concert of Prayer.

The regular monthly concert of prayer of the New Orleans District Sabbath School Union, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, is held every fourth Wednesday of the month. The next meeting will be in Felicity street church, on Wednesday, October 27, at seven o'clock P. M.

W. H. FOSTER, Pres.

THE REV. DR. WINFIELD writes us, October 6: Our Conference is all ablaze with revivals. The like has not been witnessed for years.—Hundreds are being converted and added to the church. My own district is all alive. In this station (Camden) we have just closed a very fine meeting. Over forty accessions to the church. Camp meetings are common and powerful. I am just home from one in Bradley county. It was glorious. I leave for another in Lafayette county in the morning. I attended the Washington District Meeting a week ago; it was very fine. The presiding elder presided, to the satisfaction of all. All the preachers of the district, except one, were present, and seemed deeply imbued with the spirit of their work. Our people are building a fine frame church in Washington. It will be a beauty when completed. I came by a camp meeting on my return home, and found Brother Morris and the local brethren well nigh broke down, but the church was all alive and many were being converted.—Churches are going up all over our Conference; parsonages, too.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

LAY DELEGATES to the General Conference may be chosen from the church at large within the bounds of the Annual Conference electing them, and are not necessarily to be taken from delegates present or voting. So Bishop Paine decided at the late session of the Tennessee Conference.—Southern Christian Advocate.

THE DOCTORATE.—At a recent meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Oglethorpe University the degree of doctor of divinity was bestowed worthily on the Rev. James E Evans, of the South Georgia Conference. May he live long to wear his honors, and to see the pleasure of the Lord prosper under his zealous ministry.—Southern Christian Advocate.

COURTESY.

"Be courteous" is a Christian precept, directed especially to believers, and to be exhibited in their relations as brethren. Politeness is a religious duty, therefore, and enforced by inspired authority. It must spring from benevolence and kindness of heart if it be genuine; and, as applied to the outward manners, it is the expression of true interest in the welfare of others. There is a hollow and hypocritical courtesy, of a purely worldly and selfish character, in which there is no real kindness of feeling. It is something which the usages of society have established, and it is submitted to as a convenience or a necessity. The canons of social intercourse are studied and obeyed, and carried to the highest pitch of perfection, as a means of advancing worldly interests or of securing admiration. Chesterfield is the law giver and representative of this school of politeness, where refinement of manners is associated with vices of the most degrading nature, and where a polished exterior is the instrument of achieving the purposes of lust or of ambition.

With some people politeness is a mere business accessory, practiced and wielded for advantage in the pursuits of gain. Fortunes have been made upon the capital of a bland and persuasive address, and by attention to the nicer shades of etiquette. Courtesy thus becomes the stock in trade, or the means of advertising a man's craft or profession, and advertising in this line pays as well as in any other. A man's fortune is often made or marred by his manners, and failure and success may be seen as next door neighbors where the cause of difference lies in this single circumstance. However valuable this kind of courtesy may be as an element of business, we lose respect for it as soon as its venal character is suspected. The man who seeks to coin his bows and smiles into gold awakens in us sentiments of profound contempt. This sinister and affected politeness is often offensively overdone, and is characterized by a pompous and patronizing air, or it turns to the extreme of sycophancy. As it is without principle, so it is governed entirely by practical and selfish ends. If a rough exterior and brutal manners would pay better the garb of courtesy would be doffed, and these would be put on. This false politeness often has a hard and cold finish, in which the stony eye and metallic voice give a true interpretation of the superficial smile. Beneath the glossy exterior there is the heart of a tiger. It is exposed in its hollow and hypocritical character by this test of genuine benevolence. Where nothing is to be made by it, it gives place to harshness and coarseness of demeanor. The brute that is in the soul is only masked or restrained by public opinion, or by the commercial value of good behavior. Take these influences away, and all apparent refinement gives place to the exhibition of the vilest selfishness.

There is much of this unreal politeness in society. Men and women train themselves to those exquisite artifices and devices of fashionable intercourse which make the social reunions of the world but little else than pantomimes of lies. The veil which wraps up all this mass of falsehood is penetrated by those who are actors in the elegant drama of social dissipation. They know that, apart from the circumstances of position and wealth, they feel no interest whatever in the welfare of each other.

True courtesy is something higher and better than these empty pretensions. The polished exterior is not excluded, the elegancies of society are not eliminated. There is neither honesty nor religion necessarily inherent in boorish manners. The affectation of being "a plain, blunt man," and the cultivation of a certain bruskness of manner, are not of consequence accompanied by genuine goodness. External refinement in our intercourse with others is a religious duty, and courtesy in this sense is due between Christian brethren. To be careless and indifferent about the outward attributes of politeness is a breach of Gospel charity. Abraham and Paul challenge all profane history to produce their superiors in the courtesies of social intercourse. What incomparable dignity and grace of manner and sentiment in Abraham's address to the children of Heth, and what courtliness in Paul's rejoinder to Festus! These outward manifestations of courtesy among Christians are productive of great good; and especially are they obligatory upon members of the same congregation. Our relations as brethren in Christ demand mutual recognition, and such offices of kindness as we may be able to render.

The soul of politeness is love, and the perfection of courtesy in its principle and practice ought to be found associated with the Christian profession. Politeness of manner is the sunshine of a loving heart, shedding gladness and joy upon the pathway of life; it is the melody of a soul tuned and in perfect accord with the angel song of "On earth peace, good will to men," and it is the expression of the highest and tenderest forms of moral grace and beauty. There is no falser sentiment than the oft repeated declaration that "politeness costs nothing." The sham, which is sometimes called by this name, may be as cheap as it is worthless, but genuine politeness is as costly as it is rare. True politeness costs much thoughtful consideration and attention to the welfare of others; it costs denial of ease and considerable sacrifice and generosity of soul, and it costs many a struggle with selfishness, impatience and irritable and peevish tempers. So true is this that it rises to the nature and importance of a religious grace, the practice of which brings us to the frontier of self-crucifixion and purity of heart. The world is filled with the counterfeit article. Bogus politeness, superficial, hypocritical, conventional and venal, pervades society; but true politeness, endowed with moral and spiritual attributes, is both costly and rare. We must seek for it in the very heart of Christianity, and in the perfections of the heavenly glory.

WINDING UP.

The preachers in our Southern Conferences are rapidly finishing their labors for the year. They are winding up the affairs of their respective appointments. The word is expressive. It suggests the importance of compacting and bringing things together, as we would disentangle thread, smooth away the knots and snarls, and put all snugly upon the ball. In such sense as this it behooves the pastor to wind up his work in the church. Nothing should be left at odds and ends for him who may come next. Things should by no means be left in a loose and scattered condition. Cases of discipline can be better disposed of by the old pastor than by the new. Everything in the shape of church property, debts, titles and disputed claims ought to be placed in a state of security and equitable adjustment. Because these matters are often troublesome and extremely disagreeable, we are not justified in leaving them to embarrass somebody else. In some of the circuits the records are neglected or carelessly kept. Of the membership there is no other account than may be found in fugitive class papers, and these are in some instances lost. We have known circuits where the preacher himself kept no record of his members, and none of the baptized children. In some stations the same negligence may prevail, so that the new preacher is left almost without a clew to the flock which he is sent to feed. Many appointments need a special winding up in these respects, for everything has been conducted in a hap-hazard way already too long. The record of members should be expurgated at the last church meeting, and the names of those who "have been lost sight of for twelve months" struck from the roll. No preacher should leave this duty to his successor. He is better qualified to perform it, and it is just that his administration should sustain the statistical loss.

The preacher is to wind up his work before Conference in the sense of bringing it to a conclusion and final settlement. He is to take it for granted that he will be removed. This is the theory upon which he is to act, because he is a traveling preacher and an itinerant. He must preach as if certain of never having another year in which to proclaim the Gospel message to his present congregations. What he expects to do for their spiritual welfare cannot be adjourned over, even in part, to another year. He must so labor now as to be clear of the blood of those committed to his care. The Methodist preacher is compelled by the tenure of his annual appointment to preach a present salvation, and to look for immediate results. He must go to Conference with a clear conscience that he has done all that he could to build up the church and to save sinners. As to that people he is to regard the end of the year as the termination of his ministry. Happy is the pastor who concludes his labors amidst revival influences, and is able to wind up the spiritual part of his work with this divine seal to his ministry!

In temporal matters the preacher should have all settled before Conference. Financially nothing can well be allowed to go over without prospective embarrassment. Stewards and people should be instructed in this feature of our economy, that all claims end with the Conference year, and that not to meet them by that time is in effect to repudiate them forever. It does not brighten the prospects of the newly appointed preacher to find the stewards still agonizing over the arrears due to the presiding elder and their last year's pastor. A clear balance sheet, with all claims generously met, and a trifling surplus to begin the new year with, would be an augury as charming as it is unheard of. In this final settlement the special collections are not to be forgotten.—These are important, not alone for the money raised for benevolent objects, but also for their effects upon the intelligence and piety of the church. They afford occasions for the instruction of the people with reference to the duty and grace of giving, and for the exposition of the Gospel of money. Life in both preacher and people is fairly indicated by the collections. These must be taken, of course, before the year expires. The missionaries, the widows, orphans and worn-out preachers, and the Bishops, are waiting and dependent upon the pastor's faithfulness and the people's considerate liberality. No work can be regarded as brought to a just conclusion until all the collections have been attended to. Not till every interest has been presented, and something gathered, does the preacher wind up the labors and toils of the year.

The preacher's work is to be wound up in the sense of renovation, or as a clock is wound up, and thus put in a state of continued motion. A circuit or station, spiritually and financially run down, is the saddest of all objects to the believing heart. This state of things may sometimes exist in spite of the pastor's faithfulness, and owing to untoward circumstances and influences beyond his control. Success must be considerably qualified before it is made the test of ministerial fidelity. The aim should be to leave the charge in good working order, all the cogs and wheels lubricated, and the entire church machinery moving harmoniously and effectively. The brevity of the appointment may have the effect on some of relaxing their diligent efforts to build up the church. The thought that they will not be permitted to reap where they have sown may influence a few. It is possible, in rare instances, that the pastor finds resignation to a state of declension in the hopeful reflection that things will hold together until the end of the year. The true pastor, the real self denying itinerant, will rise above these low and selfish considerations, and seek only the glory of God and the welfare of the church. He will strive to leave his charge in the highest prosperity, and the more certainty of his removal the more strenuous will be his exertions to realize this result.

In all of these respects many of our preachers are now winding up their affairs preparatory to the certain or probable changes which are soon to be determined. The most disagreeable feature of the whole process is the violent displacement and dislocation of local attachments and domestic interests, and the separation from those who have been made dear by a brief but most intimate and tender religious fellowship. Private business interests are to be settled, debts paid, and thus all the fibres, spiritual, social and temporal, which have united pastor and people, and given them a common life and experience, are to be severed. In this, as in life itself, the end of a thing should be better than the beginning—the winding up should be crowned with a peculiar grace.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

PACIFIC GLEE BOOK. A collection of secular music, consisting of part songs, solos and choruses, glees and operatic arrangements. Edited by Frederic W. Root and James B. Murray. Chicago: Published by Root & Cady, 67 Washington street.

We have looked through the table of contents and find a large variety of popular songs, appropriately set to music. They are of all sorts, devotional, sentimental. Some of them old and long familiar. Some new to us. We judge the collection will supply a felt want, and afford entertainment and gratification to thousands who are fond of music and song.

THE STARRY CROWN OF SUNDAY SCHOOL MELODIES. By W. O. Perkins. New York: William A. Pond & Co., 347 Broadway.

Amongst the multitude of books issued for the use of Sunday schools it is not easy to determine which is best. All of them have some merit. Some are exceedingly meritorious. This little volume has a varied table of contents, adapted to the young. There is a good selection of music, and adapted with taste and judgment to the hymns and songs.

THE HISTORY OF PENDENNIS. By William Makepeace Thackeray. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers. 1869.

Any criticism of Thackeray at this day would be altogether superfluous. This volume is in paper cover, and abundantly illustrated. A convenient and cheap form, and placed within the reach of all the author's admirers. For sale by G. Ellis, opposite the post office, New Orleans.

FELIX HOLT. Harper & Brothers, New York.

This is volume three of George Eliot's novels, now being published by the Harpers, in uniform style and binding. The print, binding and illustrations cannot well be surpassed in beauty and perfection of finish. Felix Holt has all the characteristic merits of the works of this greatest of female writers. For sale by G. Ellis, opposite the post office, New Orleans.

PERIODICALS.

THE SOUTHERN REVIEW, October, 1869, has been received. This single number is in itself a stout volume, and to the thoughtful reader displays a suggestive and tempting table of contents, as follows: Injustice of American Tariffs; The Theory of Reasoning; Sir John Coleridge's Life of Keble; Improvement Needed in Geometry; Lucian; The United States as a Military Nation; Virginia, Her Geographical Position; Battle of Ball's Bluff; Notices of Books.

ONCE A MONTH, for November, 1869. T. S. Arthur & Sons, Philadelphia. This number is finely illustrated, and abounds in choicest of original and selected matter.

THE GALAXY, November, 1869. Sheldon & Co., New York. This is deservedly becoming one of the most meritorious and popular of the monthlies. The publishers are evidently sparing neither pains nor expense.

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR, November, 1869. A magazine for little ones. T. S. Arthur & Sons, Philadelphia. Adapted, interesting, instructive to the children. Copiously illustrated this month.

ARTHUR'S HOME MAGAZINE, November, 1869. Fully equal to the past, and worthy of its extended circulation. This is number five of the twenty-fourth volume.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE, for November, is also to hand. Paper, typography and entire mechanical execution excelling all the monthlies published. Its literary merits are inferior to none. The contents of this are rich and varied beyond any previous number.

A Commentary on the Gospels.

In the Nashville Christian Advocate, of October 16, Dr. Summers announces the publication of the first volume of his Commentary on the Gospels, and describes the character and design of the entire work, as follows. We suppose the entire work will be ready for our libraries at an early day.

We have just published the first volume of our Commentary on the Gospels. It comprises the Gospel according to Matthew. It is a handsomely executed duodecimo of three hundred and sixty-eight pages. It is accompanied by a tinted map of Palestine, illustrative of the places mentioned in the Gospels. It is designed for biblical students in general, and especially for Bible classes and Sunday schools, for whose benefit we have prepared a book of questions, based on the analysis which the commentary presents.

For several years the author has been employed, as far as other engagements would permit, in writing a Commentary on the Gospels, based on a harmony different from any that he has seen in print, and presenting synopses of the views of leading expositors and occasional annotators on the sacred text, ancient and modern.

Having to leave the Publishing House in February, 1862, his lot was cast in Tuscaloosa, where he had access to valuable private libraries, and to the magnificent library of the State University—till it was burnt by order of General Croxton—so that he was able to prosecute his work with considerable advantage. But as it grew on his hands to such an extent as to be altogether too elaborate for general students, such as members of Bible classes, Sunday schools and many ministers, he has postponed its publication, yielding to the importunities of judicious friends, and prepared a condensed Commentary on the Gospels, in which results are given, for the most part, without the processes by which they were reached, and without noticing conflicting opinions of other authors. Though the original text has been constantly kept in view, he has refrained from citing it, in conformity with his main design. The author could not further condense the work without making it too elementary and superficial to meet the wants of those who may seek its aid in studying the inspired records.

It may not be improper to state that this commentary has been, for the most part, written, rewritten and revised with no little care—it is given to the public with much diffidence—and like his previous publications it will be left by the author to work its way into circulation and to take care of itself, if any of its views should be impugned.

The Commentary on Mark is in press, and will soon be published.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

BRUSH CREEK, Oct. 18, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: Since my last communication I have closed six protracted meetings—Shiloh, Salem, Nebo, Scottsville, Mount Hermon and Bethlehem. About sixty-eight have been added to the church. We have had a revival at all the appointments except three. We have yet to hold them.

J. W. McCANN.

TUSKEGEE, ALA., Oct. 14, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: The Tuskegee Female College has opened finely—has one hundred pupils to-day, and the numbers are increasing weekly. At the Quarterly Meeting, at the station here, on Saturday last, a committee was appointed to raise funds at once to complete the new church, of which the walls have been up since 1862.

How would it do to suggest to the brethren to hold church meetings in the month of November to complete the business of the year, and especially to increase the circulation of our ADVOCATE? The monetary tide is flowing in upon us, and the ADVOCATE ought to have its share, as it stimulates all the enterprises of the church.

Our finances are improving. The missionary collections in this district, I think, will be doubled.

Yours, B. B. R.

COPENHAGEN, LA., Oct. 7, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: My fourth Quarterly Meeting has just passed Brother Fred. White was with us, and preached with great acceptability at this Quarterly Meeting. The Lord has blessed the Columbia circuit in many places since my last report to you, and the result has been that some thirty-two have been received into the church, for which our hearts have been made glad. When I came to this work, last winter, I was much discouraged at the prospect. Only three appointments were in existence, and only one of them of much note. I have now ten. Eight of these are doing well, while two are in the midst of the hot-beds of Waterism. But we think even at those two, if properly nursed, we will weather the storm, and in the future be more prosperous than they are now. May God take care of those two widowed appointments and be a husband to them. Yours in Christ,

JOHN H. BOULT.

RANDOLPH CIRCUIT, MOBILE CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Permit us to say to the friends of Zion, through the columns of your ever welcome paper, that the Lord has been very gracious to his people in this vineyard. He has made them to feel that he was in their midst to own and bless their drooping souls. On the 18th ultimo we commenced a union meeting at Six Mile, which lasted nine days. Rev. William Moore represented the Presbyterians, Rev. S. H. Cooper and myself the Methodists. The meeting increased in interest from day to day, and the old brethren say it was the greatest meeting that has been in their midst since the days of camp meetings. On the 26th ultimo Brother Cooper and myself commenced a meeting at Sandy chapel, which lasted five days. The church was greatly revived, and there were several accessions to the church. On the 2d instant I came to Randolph and commenced a meeting under very unfavorable auspices. Many were made to feel that the cross was again raised in their midst, and there was indeed great rejoicing. We never witnessed a greater manifestation of divine power. There were many conversions, and twenty-one accessions to the church. Pray for us.

Fraternally, etc.,

C. L. KIRKSEY.

SMITHVILLE, MISS., Oct. 3, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: Perhaps it will be of some interest to the readers of the ADVOCATE to learn of the outpourings of the Spirit on us in the community of Athens.

The very first service was a success, and victory brightened into a perfect triumph. Such displays of divine power I have never before witnessed; the convictions seemed to be irresistible, the conversions of the brightest character, and many Christians were heard to say: I know that perfect love is attainable in this life.

Another feature connected with the occasion added to its solemnity. On Tuesday morning, at sunrise, while the trumpet was summoning us to the stand for morning prayers, it was reported that Sister Posey was dying. We reached the tent in time to see her start for heaven. Though the summons was sudden, and we were not permitted to hear her experience in death, yet we have abundant reason to believe that hers was an abundant entrance. She was a member of the church for many years, and on the morning previous to her death she was in the altar, perfectly happy, praising God. Oh, what a glorious place to die, at camp meeting! I do believe it is the best way to heaven. On the following night, at midnight, a large sound of the trumpet was heard, calling us to the church in which were the remains of the departed sister, and your unworthy servant was called upon to address the congregation on the subject of death; but so very solemn and imposing was the occasion that, during the opening exercises, while Brother Bush, with his mind and heart inspired in prayer, the power of God came down and filled the house, and congregation and preachers, with one accord, raised a shout of praise to God.

My soul would sit and sing herself away
In such a frame as this.

On the following night, at midnight, I preached from Matthew 25: 6, and surely I never witnessed a time when heaven was so near the earth as then. Surely the Lord is good. Let everybody praise him. On the last night of the meeting forty persons who had been converted during its continuance came forward and gave us their hand, besides others who had left before it closed. We expect to have at least forty tents on the ground next year at this place, and you will oblige us very much to advertise, through our dear ADVOCATE, that there will be a camp meeting held at this place, Athens camp ground, Mobile Conference, commencing Friday night before the third Sabbath in October, 1870, to which everybody is invited. We are looking for good times at other points on the circuit. Will you pray for us? May the Lord bless you and the ADVOCATE.

Your brother in Christ,

J. T. M. GREGORY.

CAMP MEETING.

There will be a camp meeting, on the primitive Methodist style, at Flurry church, West Pascagoula circuit, Mobile district, Mobile Conference, commencing on Friday night before the fifth Sabbath in October. Everybody is invited, and ministers specially.

OBITUARIES.

MRS AMANDA E. WHITE, wife of Thos. White, of Wilkerson county, Mississippi, died September 15, 1869, aged thirty-one years.

Sister White had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South from her youth, and by her life proved that she possessed the spirit as well as the form of godliness.

She was a devoted wife and mother.—Indeed it is thought by some that her disease and death were brought on by the anxiety and constant watchfulness and faithful nursing of many months, which she had bestowed on her greatly afflicted little boy. She was greatly beloved by her neighbors and Christian brethren, and her loss is keenly felt by all, but especially by her husband. Few men have been left in more painfully distressing circumstances. But no doubt our loss is her gain.

G. D. W.

Died, in Sumter county, Alabama, September 11, 1869, at the residence of Mrs. Judge Crews, after a short illness, Mrs. C. H. CREWS, consort of the late J. D. Crews, in her fifty eight year. She was born in North Carolina, July 24, 1812, and came to Alabama in 1838.

She had left home to visit her friends and relatives in Sumter, when the angel of death called her from earthly scenes and pleasures to appear before the great "I am." Her Christian character is without reproach, having been a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for the last thirty-six years. Her great object in life was to reap the reward of the finally faithful, and so to raise her children that when earthly things should pass away she would meet them in that world where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest.

M. A. McB.

Brother J. T. WOOD, of Sumpter county, Alabama, was born April 10, 1827.

Being brought up under the influence of pious parents, he was early impressed with the importance of religion. These impressions grew with his growth and strengthened with his strength, until in the year 1845, when he was happily converted to God. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which he lived a faithful member until the day of his death, which was August 27, 1869.

Brother Wood's Christian career, although comparatively short, was full of activity. He was always found in his place in the Quarterly Conference, in the protracted meeting, in the Sunday school, and wherever the church called him to work, showing that he exercised a living faith in the promises of the Gospel, and that he was expecting that "by works his faith would be made perfect."

The church had just begun to appreciate his worth and to realize fully his usefulness when God called him from labor to that rest which He has prepared for all His faithful ones.

The last contest found Brother Wood with the armor on. As he bade farewell to earth Heaven opened to his view; and after an affectionate adieu to his family he fell asleep in the arms of Jesus.

S. M. THAMES.

WINNIFRED LUTITIA DELILA WALKER, daughter of Rev. Joseph and Sarah Camp, was born January 25, 1845; married to Rev. John G. Walker, of the Montgomery Conference, November 15, 1864, and died September 18, 1869, aged twenty-four years, seven months and twenty-three days.

Another angel has been added to the host above. Another harp swells the melody of heaven. Another witness has been given the world of the power of the religion of Jesus to sustain the soul, to impart peace and comfort, yea to give victory in the hour of death.

She professed faith in Christ and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in early childhood, and ever after adorned the profession she had made. She was a Christian not in word only, but also in deed and in truth, carrying her religion into all the details of duty in the common walks of life, and left a bright example of Christian consistency to the anmerous relatives and friends who mourn her loss.

For four years she experienced the lights and shadows of itinerant life, soothing the cares and lightening the burdens of her devoted husband. Then, a life of duty here fulfilled, she was led by the hand of Providence to the home of her youth, "which round her heart with true affection's bond entwined," and seraph voices called her to that bright home above, that she might receive her crown of life, peace and joy, and hear the welcome plaudit: "Well done, good and faithful servant."

She was a faithful wife, ever absorbed in the wishes, wants and interests of her husband; an unselfish mother, a dutiful daughter, a gentle, loving sister, a kind, generous friend, and, above all, a devoted Christian. What more is needed to make up a pure and beautiful character? Yet we find all these virtues combined in our dear sister, glowing and sparkling in the tributary light of a cheerful disposition.

Alas! that a home once so bright with her presence should now be darkened by death and shrouded in the memory of the past.

God grant that this severe affliction may be sanctified to the good of the bereaved, especially to her crushed and broken-hearted husband and dear little children, Sallie and Maggie.

"How vacant seems the early home
When those we loved are gone!
How doubly dreary falls the gloom
O'er spot where sunshine shone!
We cannot value shadows cast
O'er paths once bright with flowers,
Nor dwell, when fore away hath passed,
In desolated bowers!"

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease, Consumption, is anxious to make known to his fellow sufferers the means of cure.

To all who desire it he will send a copy of the prescription used, free of charge, with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, etc. The object of the advertiser in sending the prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable; and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address

A MAN SEVENTY YEARS OLD.

I have had Catarrh over thirty years.

I have tried doctors and medicines almost without number, my strength constantly failing under their treatment, and without any relief from any one, until I commenced using Dr. WOLCOTT'S ANNIHILATOR for Catarrh. I hardly know how to express my gratitude for the wonderful benefit I have derived from its use. I owe my very life to Dr. Wolcott's Remedy; of this fact I am fully convinced. When I commenced using the Annihilator I only weighed 119 lbs.; my weight now is 140 pounds. This increase in solid flesh for a man of my years is the best proof of the efficacy of Wolcott's Annihilator, as I am now in my seventieth year.

SAMUEL SCHENDLER,
250 Washington st., Hoboken, N. J.,
August 6, 1869.

My father is proprietor of the Peconic House, Greenpoint, L. I. I had rheumatism over five years. A portion of this time I was unable to walk. My legs, my arms and my body also have been contracted and drawn up shorter, and became crooked in consequence of the severity of this disease. I have poured out money without stint to doctors and for medicines without any earthly benefit or use, until I felt almost completely discouraged and disheartened. My pain and sufferings were beyond all description, and no language that I can use can portray the agony I have endured. I saw Dr. Wolcott's advertisement day after day and month after month, but could not believe his PAIN PAINT could reach my case, although I heard many people give the strongest testimony in its favor. I finally was induced to purchase a quart or an $8 bottle of his Pain Paint. This small amount did wonders for me. It removed the most of my pain, but not my stiffness. I continued purchasing and using until I bought five quarts, and I can say without hesitation that I am entirely cured. I can use my limbs and every part of my body with as much freedom and strength as I ever did in my life. Wolcott's Pain Paint, I can say from experience, is the best remedy and the greatest invention ever offered to suffering humanity. Instead of its being a dear remedy at $8 a quart, it is really worth more than $100 a quart.

All who come to the office treated free of cost, and no dosing the stomach. Small bottles sold at all drug stores. All remittances should be by post office orders or registered letters or by express. SOUTHERN METHODIST HIGH SCHOOL,

NEW ORLEANS.

The exercises of the first session of this institution will commence on MONDAY, the 4th day of October next, in the basement of the German Methodist Church, Dryades street, between Felicity and Enterpe.

In founding this institution our purpose is to supply the desideratum long felt in this city, viz: an acknowledged Protestant School of a high order, in which boys and young men can be thoroughly prepared either for college or the active business of life.

The government of the School will be strict and firm, yet mild and parental in its administration. Thoroughness in the preparation of lessons will be uniformly required of all pupils.

The sons of ministers engaged wholly in the work of their Church will be received at half price; and young men preparing for the ministry without charge.

A Preparatory Department and an Evening School are attached.

In the selection of Teachers the greatest care will be exercised, not only in regard to their mental qualifications, but also in reference to their ability to impart instruction to their pupils.

For further information apply at the School.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE BEGINNING OF EVIL.

It was such a little thing—
One slight twist of crimson string;
  But 'twas stealing all the same;
And the child that took it knew
That she told what was not true,
  Just to screen herself from blame.
First a theft and then a lie—
Both recorded up on high.

It was but a little sip,
Just a taste upon the lip;
  But it left a longing there.
Then the measure larger grew,
And the habit strengthened too,
  Till it would no curbing bear.
So the demon drink decoys—
Soul and body both destroys.

It was but one little word,
Softly spoken, scarcely heard,
  Uttered by a single breath;
But it dared to take in vain
God's most high and holy name,
  So provoking wrath and death.
Soon the lips, once fresh and fair,
Opened but to curse and swear.

It was but one little blow,
Passion's sudden overflow,
  Scarcely heeded in its fall;
But, once loosed, the fiery soul
Would no longer brook control.
  Laws it spurned, defied them all,
Till the hands, love-clasped in vain,
Wore the murderer's crimson stain.

Ah! it is the foxes small,
Slyly climbing o'er the wall,
  That destroy the tender vines;
And is the spark of fire,
Brightening, growing, curling higher,
  That across the forest shines.
Just so, step by step, does sin,
If unchecked, a triumph win.

A LITTLE GENTLEMAN.

'So many of the little boys we meet are rough and rude that it is really pleasant to find one now and then who is a real gentleman. Active, healthy, noisy, romping boys, I like to see; but the boy who is a gentleman will not romp or be noisy out of time and place; and why? Because a gentleman always thinks of the comfort and pleasure of others, and will do nothing that he knows to be unpleasant to them.'

Aunt Rachel had gone on thus far, half in reproof of John, her nephew, a thoughtless, roguish, but kind-hearted little fellow, who sometimes could hardly be called a gentle boy, when he looked up into her face, with a merry smile, and said:

'You don't call our dentist a gentleman, do you? Some things that he does to people are anything but pleasant.'

'But he means to do them good, little sauce-box!' returned Aunt Rachel, smiling in return.

'Now, I'd like to know, Auntie,' said John, his face getting earnest, 'if you ever did see a boy-gentleman. I don't believe there are any. It isn't in them.'

'Why should there not be gentle boys as well as gentle men? It doesn't come naturally, I will confess—isn't in them, as you say. Nor was the ability to walk, and talk, and read. These had all to be learned. And so you had to learn to say 'please' and 'thank you,' and to mind what your father and mother and teacher say; to be silent and orderly in church, and respectful to visitors. And you can just as easily learn to act like a gentleman.'

'I'm sure I want to learn, Auntie. How shall I begin? Give me the first lesson.'

'It is better to be a gentleman than merely to act like one,' said Aunt Rachel. 'So my first lesson will tell you how to become a real gentleman—that is, one at heart, and not merely on the outside. Be thoughtful of others.'

'Is that the first lesson?' asked John, looking rather disappointed.

'Think kindly of others,' said Aunt Rachel. 'Is that any clearer? If you think kindly of others—that is, how you can make them feel pleasant—you will soon begin to feel kindly; and then to act kindly will come almost of itself. That is being a gentleman, as we say, at heart. I saw a little gentleman one day last week. Shall I tell you about him?'

'Yes, do, Auntie,' answered John.

'Well, I called on a lady in Warren street.'

'What is her name, Auntie?'

'Her name is Mrs. Wentworth. Her little boy, just about your age, opened the door for me. 'Is your mother in?' I asked. 'Yes, madam; will you please to walk in?' he answered, very politely. Then he showed me into the parlor, took the card I gave him, and carried it to his mother. In a few minutes his mother came down and asked me to go up into the nursery with her, as she was alone with the children. In the nursery I found Frank, the boy who had opened the door for me, his sister, younger than himself, and a baby not a year old.

'Now, if Frank had not shown himself to be a little gentleman, my visit would hardly have been a pleasant one. He might have teased his sister, taken the baby's playthings away, or romped about the room in a noisy manner. I have seen boys do such things, to the mortification of their mothers and the annoyance of visitors. But my little gentleman had a higher sense of honor and duty. I saw him give up a plaything to his sister, and quiet her when she became noisy. He sat down by the baby on the floor, and showed her pictures till she was tired of looking at them; then he got some wooden animals, and talked to her about sheep, and cows, and chickens, and so he kept on amusing the baby, first with one thing and then with another, during the whole time of my visit.'

'Why, your little boy is a perfect gentleman!' I said to Mrs. Wentworth, as I was going away.

'She looked pleased as she answered, 'Yes, Frank is a good boy.'

'I am sure,' went on Aunt Rachel, 'that Frank was a hundred times happier for the self-denial he practiced in order to keep his sister and baby quiet while his mother talked with a friend, than if he had been rude, noisy and unkind, as so many children are; don't you think so?'

John silently determined that he would act very differently the next time his mother had a visitor; and on that very day the opportunity came. After the visitor retired he had the sweet satisfaction of receiving a warm kiss from his mother, accompanied by these words:

'I am so pleased with you, John, for keeping the children quiet and behaving like a gentleman. I feel quite proud of you.'

He could not remember the time when approval from his mother's lips fell so gratefully on his ears as now.

BOYS, DO NOT SMOKE!—Dr. Duncaisue, in the course of investigations on the influence of tobacco on circulation, has been struck with the large number of boys, aged from nine to fifteen years, who smoke, and has been led to inquire into the connection of this habit with the impairment of the general health. He has observed thirty-eight boys, aged from nine to fifteen, who smoke more or less. Of these, distinct symptoms were present in twenty-seven. In twenty-two there were various disorders of the circulation—bruit de souffle in the neck, palpitation, disorders of digestion, slowness of intellect, and a more or less marked taste for drinks. In three the pulse was intermittent. In eight there was found on examination more or less marked diminution of the red corpuscles. In twelve there were rather frequent epistaxis. Ten had disturbed sleep, and four had slight ulcerations of the mucous membrane of the mouth, which disappeared on ceasing from the use of tobacco for some days. In children who were very well nourished the disorder was, in general, less marked. As to the ages, eight of the boys were nine to twelve years old; nineteen from twelve to fifteen. The duration of the habit of smoking was, in eleven, from six months to a year; and in sixteen, more than two years. The ordinary treatment of anæmia in general produced no effect as long as the smoking was continued; but, when this was desisted from, health was soon perfectly restored, if there were no organic disease. — British Medical Journal.

FARM AND GARDEN.

YOUNG STOCK vs. OLD STOCK.

Not long ago, in our monthly notes and suggestions, we advised farmers not to keep old horses, for they are very unprofitable stock, and this suggestion was objected to by one of our correspondents, who stated that getting rid of an old horse, which had been useful and valuable in his day, looked like an act of ingratitude and inhumanity, or something of that kind. We agree with our correspondent in his opinion that an old horse deserves to be well treated when he is no longer fit for the labors of the field, and on this account it is better that he should fall into the hands of some benevolent person, who can afford to take care of him, than to remain on the farm to be in the way, in place of being useful. A great many farmers have enough to do to support their families, together with horses and other stock that cannot be dispensed with. If a farmer can afford to keep an old, useless horse, on account of his former services, by all means let him do so, but as a general thing the practice of keeping horses until they have become old and depreciated in value should be avoided.

Old working-oxen are bad enough, but there is a better chance of getting rid of them without losing money, than old horses, for before they fall in the yoke they can be put into the stall and made up for the butcher. Nevertheless there are many objections to keeping oxen until they are nearly past their labor—they consume as much food and do less work than animals in their prime, are not so easily fattened, and do not make as good beef as younger animals. It need scarcely be said that old milch cows are not so desirable for the dairy, for it is well known that they do not produce as good milk, or as much of it, as animals in their prime. Their calves are small and unthrifty, and the older they are the more difficult it is to fatten them. Their beef is also inferior to that produced by younger stock. It is well known that the best quality of beef is produced by three or four years old barren heifers.

Light fleeces at shearing time, and dead lambs in spring, ought to be sufficient to warn the farmers against keeping old breeding ewes; yet some are to be found who disregard these silent admonitions and go on in the old track until the animals become perfectly worn out. The wool of old sheep is much easier torn off by brush or briers than that of young ones, and from the decay of their teeth they are prevented from feeding to advantage—they cannot pick up sufficient food in the pasture, and require succulent provender to put them in good condition. Every sheep breeder who has obtained any celebrity for producing good stock makes it a point to keep no animals for breeding purposes but such as are of superior quality and in their prime.

The same results are obtained in the breeding of swine—old animals are unfit for breeding purposes. Successful breeders never keep sows or boars that are past their prime; they manage to get rid of such stock before they have suffered pecuniary losses by keeping them, and fill their places with animals of the best breeds, and of the most suitable age. Those which are too young are not desirable for breeding, and those which are too old are entirely unfit for the purpose. Unsuitableness in age will neutralize many good qualities. Well managed hogs of the best breeds, from nine to twelve months, will weigh heavier than neglected ones of inferior breeds at twice that age. There is no occasion for keeping hogs until they are one and a half or two years old, when, by proper management in the breeding, feeding and caring, they may be sold with profit at the age of one year or less.—Western Rural.

SMALL FARMS vs. LARGE FARMS.

It has been quite fashionable, in late years, to cry down large farms, and recommend that a more thorough system of culture be applied over a much smaller surface—that is, to adopt small farms. This is correct as far as it goes; but to recommend small farms for fruit culture and gardening of but three to ten acres, as amply sufficient to occupy the time and energies of the cultivator, and yielding an ample profit, is not always a judicious policy. Were we asked by an amateur about purchasing a small farm, our candid advice as to its successful management, we would reply:

1. Do not buy too small a farm, nor plant it all out in fruits.

2. Leave enough space to grow other crops for home support or sale.

3. Allow sufficient room for the production of grass or hay to produce an abundance of manure.

Money is almost always ill spent in purchasing fertilizing material from other sources than the home farm. It should be as much the calculation of a small farmer to produce all the manure he needs on his own place as to endeavor to cultivate the land well. Trust to home resources is a good motto for all.

A farm of ten acres is not enough to enjoy life as favorably, as economically, or to conduct as judiciously as one ought.

A certain space of every farm should be devoted to fruits; then a certain space to garden truck, which will yield an income the first year; then another space should be devoted to raising crops for home support, and, lastly, another space in grass, which is to furnish, through the cattle who eat it, the manure which is to fertilize the whole. It is impossible to make small farms pay unless manured well.

We hold that no man should go off his own farm to buy manure, but should always provide for an abundance on his own place; no one ought to complain if he has more than enough. The stumbling block in the way of the success of too many small farmers is, that they trust too much to the natural fertility of their soil, and do not calculate enough on proper and abundant supplies of manure.

They find out, sooner or later, that a small farm, to pay well, needs fine culture, and that depends more than all things else on a big manure heap.

Given that, then we believe in farms of ten acres, four acres, or even ten rods; without that we would not give a fig for as fine land as lies within a thousand miles of the great city.

Small farms are correct in theory, provided they are treated in the best manner; but large farms can always be made to pay, because they possess conveniences not enjoyed by the other.

In fruit culture it is impossible to crop the ground year after year without giving back to it some appropriate nourishment, and bountiful crops will come in proportion to the amount applied.—Deitz's Farm Journal.

STEAM PLOWS.—The Viceroy of Egypt is said to have in operation two hundred sets of steam plowing machinery of the largest class, by means of which the recent remarkable increase in Egyptian cotton production has been attained, and the quality of the fibre improved.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

LIGHT BISCUIT.—Take two pounds of flour, a pint of buttermilk, half a teaspoonful of saleratus; put into the buttermilk a small piece of butter or lard rubbed into the flour; make it about the consistency of bread before baking.

SHORT CAKE.—Rub in a very small bit of shortening, or three tablespoonfuls of cream, with the flour; put a teaspoonful of dissolved saleratus into your milk, and mix the cake pretty stiff to bake quick.

POTATO SOUP.—Five large potatoes, pared and cut fine, (cut down in squares and then sliced off.) Boil in nearly three pints of salted water till soft; add a pint of milk and cream; thicken with a tablespoonful of flour; add butter; eat with bread or crackers. Do not spoil it by putting in meat.

COOKING OLD POTATOES.—In the summer old potatoes should be peeled and soaked in cold water several hours before they are cooked. This makes them nearly as dry and good as when first dug in autumn. Old potatoes should be put in cold water, with a little salt in the pot. Boil slowly—the slower the better. If the water stops boiling they are apt to be watery.

BROWN BREAD.—Put the Indian meal in your bread pan, sprinkle a little salt among it, and wet it thoroughly with scalding water. When it is cool, put in your rye; add two gills of lively yeast, and mix it with water as stiff as you can knead it. Let it stand an hour and a half, in a cool place in summer, on the hearth in winter. It should be put into a very hot oven, and baked three or four hours.

TOMATO CATSUP.—Cut a bushel of tomatoes without skinning them, and boil until quite soft. Rub through a hair sieve, and add half a gallon of cider vinegar, one pint of salt, two ounces of cloves, quarter pound allspice, one teaspoonful cayenne pepper, one tablespoonful black pepper. Mix all together, and boil three hours longer. Bottle for use without straining, and if it is well corked it will keep for years.—Germantown Telegraph.

THE annual report of the Armenian missions says:

"The Armenian missions embrace a territory more than half as large as that portion of the United States east of the Mississippi river. It includes a portion of European Turkey on the west, the whole of Asia Minor, and extends to Persia on the east, and Syria and Arabia on the south. The evangelization of this region has been left almost exclusively to the American Board; and is carried on by twenty-six missionaries, residing at twenty-one principal stations, and by native preachers and pastors at one hundred and seventy out stations.—Twenty unmarried ladies are engaged in special labors in behalf of their sex. Sixty-five churches have been gathered, now under the care of forty-one native pastors, wholly or in part supported by their own people. To these churches three hundred new members were added on profession of their faith the past year (sixty-nine of them in Marash,) making an aggregate membership of about three thousand. Other professed believers will be organized into churches as soon as pastors can be set over them, and the people are prepared for the duties and responsibilities of such a relation. The average attendance upon public worship on the Sabbath is about eleven thousand, and upon Sabbath school instruction eight thousand, while not far from six thousand youth are to be found in the various schools and seminaries under the care of the missionaries. The contributions to various Christian objects amounted to over $15,000 in gold—an advance of $2 000 upon former years, and an average of over $5 to each church member. Progress is still making, in the larger part of the field, in the direction of self-support and independence."

Comparing the wages received here and in Turkey for a day's labor, this average amount of $5 would correspond to an average contribution of over $50 from all our American church members.—During the year over one hundred young men have been in training for the ministry, of whom thirty have finished their studies and immediately become pastors.

THE BEST COOKING STOVE
FOR WOOD NOW IN USE.

THE FASHION.

We call especial attention to this Stove, which has been produced at great expense, combining all the new and important improvements; also to the extra height of the Oven under the fire chamber, the Patent Air Chamber Front Doors and Patent White Enameled Iron Knobs, the Improvements in the covers and centre pieces, all of which have been covered by Letters Patent, and are used in no other Stove. They are warranted to stand fire, or others sent free of charge in all cases. We have all sizes of this justly celebrated Stove, both

PLAIN AND EXTENDED BACKS,

the Extended Back with cast Iron Enameled Reservoir and Faucet, Tin Warming Closet, Gridiron Cover, etc. The part of the top supporting the Reservoir is raised so that the fire is above the top plate, instead of below, as in the case in most of the Stoves now used, and the heat is forced directly against the whole surface of the bottom of the Reservoir. The Reservoir being detached from the pipe, can be removed at pleasure, thereby forming a six hole Stove—the best in use, as the back holes will heat as well or better than the middle ones. BRAN NEW LETTERS!

FRESH TESTIMONIALS.

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID

THE ASTONISHING FAMILY MEDICINE.

Saved from Death!—Read!

MONTGOMERY, ALA., June 28, 1869.

MESSRS. J. DARBY & Co., 161 WILLIAM ST. N. Y.—Gents: Yours of the 24d is before me, and has attention. It gives me pleasure to say that my belief is that your "Fluid," under the supervision of a kind Providence, saved the life of my youngest child, some six years ago, the child being wasted to a skeleton by the effects of teething, and an affection of the bowels therewith. I had never seen any one reduced so low to recover.

"Physic" had been tried in vain, until the physicians stinted it was useless. A friend recommended your "Fluid," or Ozone, which he stated was one of the component parts of it. I did so, and the effect was like magic, plainly discernible in one hour in its good effects, producing quiet and sleep almost at once, where irritation and sleepless restlessness had previously possessed the child to nearly entire exhaustion.

I at first administered it in a small way, two and three drops in a spoonful of water, and increased it to six and ten drops. It completely checked the bowels, and had the happiest effect, the child rapidly recovering.

I have tried your "Fluid" on animals, with the same effect—both horses and cows—mingling more or less in water, and letting them drink.

I have no hesitation in saying I believe it a specific for Chronic Diarrhea, or any violent affection of the bowels.

I would not be without it in my family under any consideration. Yours truly,

WILLIAM FOWLER.

Mr. Fowler is a member of the celebrated Banking House of Fowler & Somerville, Montgomery, Alabama.

AND AGAIN!

Read the following letter from Mr. Frank Saunders, a well known citizen, and brother-in-law of the beloved Bishop Pulne, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

189 BROADWAY, N. Y., July 29, 1869.

MESSRS. J. DARBY & Co., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: About the 10th of June last one of my children was taken with Scarlet Fever, in its most malignant form, and as soon as I could I procured your valuable disinfectant, "Darby's Prophylactic Fluid." Although it was several days after the appearance of the disease before I began using the Fluid, still, by a free use of it, the disease was not only confined to the one case, but the malignity of that case somewhat mitigated.

During the use of the Fluid as a disinfectant in my family it was also tried in a case of headache and one of toothache, the results in each case being instantaneous relief. It was afterward tried in a case of Erysipelas, with almost equal success.

It is due to the merits of this compound also, to state that the case of Erysipelas in question, being located in the feet, the Fluid, in its application, was brought in frequent contact with a trouble some eruption on one of the feet, to the entire demolition of said eruption, for, upon subsequent examination, it had disappeared, and though it was sought for diligently, it could not be found.

I hand you this, hoping it may be the means of inducing others of earth's poor sufferers to test for themselves, as I did, the great merits of this great remedy.

Very respectfully yours,

FRANK SAUNDERS.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have no material change to notice in the general market. Most branches of the wholesale trade show a moderate degree of activity, but hardly equal to the anticipation of dealers. Stocks are still ample and well assorted, and offered at rates which present strong inducements to country merchants to purchase here in preference to any Northern market. The sales of sugar and molasses have been confined to retail transactions, at about previous rates. The receipts include 3 hogsheads and 3 barrels molasses, the first this season, which came to hand on Tuesday, the 19th. The first receipts last year were 3 hogsheads sugar October 19, and 22 barrels molasses October 20. The sugar this year was from Madame Choppin's Bay Tree plantation, parish of St. James, and the molasses from Mr. P. G. Deslonde's Cedar Grove place, parish of St. James. Operations in Western produce have been mostly confined to the local trade.

The weather has continued clear and pleasant, with similar accounts throughout the cotton growing region. The crop prospect is consequently decidedly cheerful, but very much depends on whether we escape storms for the rest of the picking season, or have a killing frost before or after the average period of November 4: The latter, however, would do but little damage in consequence of the advanced condition of the crop. In fact we have already heard of a killing frost on the northern line of the cotton belt in Tennessee, but no complaints of injury to the crop. Planters are pushing picking with all the available force at their command, but complain of the inefficiency of the laborers. We have nothing to add to our previous accounts of sugar.

The river has fallen two inches since our last report, and is now eleven feet two inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 15th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi ..... bales..	12011
Lake	50
Mobile	1616
Florida	24
Texas	61
Total	13762

On Saturday buyers came forward with a fair degree of spirit; 3,800 bales changed hands at an improvement of 1/8 to 1/4c., low middling closing at 24½c., and middling at 25c. On Monday the demand was lively, and enabled factors to realize a further improvement of 1/4c. at the opening, but additional samples having been opened, subsequently a part of this was lost, and the net advance at the close was not more than 1/8c. The sales summed up 3,850 bales. On Tuesday a moderate business was done during the morning, at figures which indicated a further advance of 1/8 to 1/4c., but subsequently the improvement was lost, and the business was confined to 2,500 bales, closing at our subjoined quotations.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 10,150 bales, taken for the North, France and Great Britain.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 100,733 bales, against 106,556 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 67,092 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 11,702 bales to Great Britain, 10,175 to France, and of 7,219 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

READVILLE SEMINARY.

This is a private institution, with its number of pupils limited, and is authorized by the Legislature of Louisiana to confer degrees, diplomas and literary honors. It was in successful operation from 1843 until interrupted by the events of the war in 1862, and reopened January, 1867.

Teachers of a high grade of talent and merit are in charge of the different departments—English, Ancient and Modern Languages, Music, Painting, etc.

Pupils charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session. All pupils received with the understanding that they are to remain and attend the examination at the close of the session in which they enter, and no deduction made on the bills for absence, except in cases of protracted illness, when the loss may be divided between the institution and the patron.

In her outfit each pupil should be provided with toilet boxes, towels, napkins, sheets, pillow cases and blankets or comforts. She should also bring knife, fork, spoon, cup and napkin ring.

All articles and clothing brought to the Seminary should be distinctly marked, lists of which should be permanently placed on some part of the trunk convenient for reference. The scholastic year commences October 1 and ends in July.

EXPENSE.

Board and tuition per year	$275 00
The Modern Languages a small extra charge.
Music, per year	75 00.

Payments due in half session in advance.

Monthly reports of the studies, health and general department of the pupils are sent to the parents or guardians at a distance.

The main Seminary building, recently destroyed by fire will be replaced by one of ample accommodations, now in process of construction, which will be ready for the reception of pupils at the opening of the next session.

For other information desirable in reference to the school apply to

SEMINARY FOR YOUNG LADIES,

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

E. A. GRANT, LL. D., PRINCIPAL.

This Institution occupies the large and elegant building lately known as Grant & Butler's School. The grounds are situated on Sixth street, between Walnut and Chestnut streets, and extend back to Centre street. They are elevated several feet above the street, thus making the large and beautiful lawn a most desirable place for healthful outdoor exercise.

The building, furniture and apparatus of the school are among the most complete and valuable in the West.

Experienced teachers, residing in the institution, will devote their time to the moral, intellectual and physical improvement of the pupils.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 23.—It is positively announced that Sherman and Grant will attend the meeting of the army of Tennessee at Louisville, on November 17.

McMahon, the Paragnayan minister, and Worthington, the Argentine Republic's minister, have arrived.

The earthquake of yesterday extended throughout Canada. At St. Andrews, New Brunswick, chimneys were thrown down and walls cracked.

Parties in Arkansas have for some time managed to defraud the revenue by having tobacco manufactured by the Indians, just outside of the State border, in the Indian Territory.

The Indians being exempt from taxation, no revenue has heretofore been collected for this tobacco, and it is supposed that new legislation will be required in the matter.

Mail advices from Nassau state that the steamer Lillian, which sailed with an expeditionary force from Florida for Cuba, had been captured by the British gunboat Lapwing, and taken into Nassau, where she was released by the authorities under the ruling of the Attorney General that she could not legally be held.

WASHINGTON, Oct 25.—The State Department has Belize, British Honduras, advices to September 16. The symptoms of yellow fever have decreased; so far not epidemic; deaths few, and confined to the unacclimated.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—Judge Chase, in his opinion on the Yerger case, concludes as follows:

"The argument having been confined to the question of jurisdiction, this opinion is directed to that question."

The jurisdiction of the court to issue the writ is affirmed. The following is an extract from the opinion:

"We are obliged to hold, therefore, that in all cases where a circuit court of the United States has, in the exercise of its original jurisdiction, caused a prisoner to be brought before it, and has, after inquiry into the cause of detention, remanded him to the custody from which he was taken, this court, in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, may, by the writ of habeas corpus, aided by the writ of certiorari, reverse the decision of the circuit court; and if it be found unwarranted by law, relieve the prisoner from the unlawful restraint to which he has been remanded."

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, Oct. 20.—None of the Roman Catholic clergy have as yet called upon Father Hyacinthe, and the Boston delegation of clergymen who announced their intention of calling upon him this morning have not done so.

The Tribune learned yesterday from Father Hyacinthe that he desires it to be understood that he is still a Roman Catholic. He has never been, he says, an ultramontane, is not now and never will be, but he denies that there is any reason for identifying ultramontanism with the Catholic Church. He indulges the firm hope that the Ecumenical Council will not, as commonly anticipated, consolidate the ultramontane theories, and constitute them the creed of the church, but that on the contrary it will leave the door wide open for those who, like himself, have been throughout life the devoted champions of a more liberal construction of the Catholic doctrines, and who, in particular, have defended the entire harmony between the Christian religions and great achievements of civilization of the nineteenth century. The strong basis of his religious belief, on which he dwells with particular emphasis, is the belief in the divinity of Christ, in the inspiration of the Scriptures, and the excellence of the Christian civilization of the nineteenth century. Hyacinthe has no fixed programme while here. He has come to see and study this country. After being here a few weeks or months he may go to the Ecumenical Council, or may not. He desires rest.

Father Hyacinthe was called upon to-day by a large number of clergymen and laymen. Great efforts are being made to induce him to express his views on the great religious questions of the day, but as yet he steadily refuses to address an American audience. He is dressed in a plain black suit, without any peculiarity to distinguish his clerical character. In reply to a question asked him to-day by a prominent member of the press, whether he had broken with the church, he emphatically stated, "I have not. I have only broken with its abuses." He further said that he intended to remain here two months and try and study the religion and manners of the people, and then would go to Rome. Whether he would present himself at the council depended upon circumstances.

This afternoon the preacher monk had a long interview with Father Hecker, who leaves for Rome tomorrow. He also visited the French consulate, and for the first time appeared at the public table at the hotel, where he created quite a sensation. The Boston clergymen will call upon him to-morrow and extend to him a cordial invitation to visit the Hub.

NEW YORK, Oct. 22.—Dispatches from Concord, Portland, Boston and other places, report that the earthquake was distinctly felt there.

The grand jury presented a batch of indictments this morning. None against Corbin, Butterfield, or the gold speculators among them.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NASHVILLE, Oct 22.—In the Tennessee Legislature to-day the opposition concentrated on Henry Cooper. He was elected United States Senator on the first ballot, the vote resulting as follows: Cooper, 55; Johnson, 51.

Second Dispatch.—The Senatorial contest is ended, and the result has taken every one by surprise. Johnson's friends felt confident of his success, but it appears that a trap was sprung on him, as when the vote came to be taken Johnson received 51 votes and Henry Cooper, of Davidson county, 55.

AUGUSTA, ME., Oct. 22.—This morning, at half past five o'clock, the shock of an earthquake, lasting more than a minute, was felt in this vicinity. Nearly every one was awakened, door bells rung and buildings shaken. The shock extended all along the river.

CUBA.

HAVANA, Oct. 26.—The decree of the constitution of the Cortes, establishing unrestricted liberty of religion in Cuba and Porto Rico, has been promulgated, and has gone into effect as a law of the land. The document is exceedingly liberal in its terms, and declares that Spain cannot remain from the general movement of Europe and the world, and adds that this consideration is more powerful for the Antilles because they lie near a continent where liberty of religion is recognized by the laws. One clause of the decree provides that no person shall be prevented from holding office under the government by reason of religious belief.

The decree is received with general satisfaction by the populace. The city is very tranquil. The American and European merchants are making contracts for coming crops.

HAVANA, Oct. 26.—The Voz de Cuba expects to lose beneficial results to the country from the decree of religious freedom.

The Diario makes no comments. The Prensa expresses dissatisfaction.

EUROPE.

LONDON, Oct. 23.—The monster meeting of the Fenian amnesty partizans has been postponed, it being understood that the ministry intended to suppress it.

Lord Derby is dead; aged seventy.

MADRID, Oct. 23.—The country is tranquil.

The Bishops of Alhambra and several Protestants have been arrested at Grenada.

PARIS, Oct. 23.—It is now certain that none of the deputies will go to the chamber on the 26th.

The Empress Eugenie arrived at Suez, and has been well received.

The military are collecting in this city, as a precautionary measure against the threatened meeting of the deputies on the 26th.

The Orleanists are active. It is thought the crisis may restore Rouher to the cabinet.

LONDON, Oct. 23.—The Morning Standard, in an editorial to-day, protests against the election of the Rev. Frederick Temple as Bishop of Exeter, on account of his suspicions heterodoxy.

One length of the new submarine cable, designed to connect Havre with the Island of Jamaica, has been completed.

MADRID, Oct. 23.—Alborda, suspected of implication in the recent insurrection, has been arrested by authorities and taken to Valencia for trial.

The Spanish cabinet is divided on the subject of a candidate for the throne.

ALEXANDRIA, Oct. 23.—The ceremonies on the occasion of the successful completion of the Suez Canal will be interesting. The following is the programme:

The fetes will begin at Port Said on the 16th of November; the vessels forming the fleet will proceed to Ismailia on the next day; will remain there until the 18th, and will go through to Suez on the 10th, where proceedings will be ended on the following day.

PARIS, Oct. 23.—Yesterday the marshals who were present had a reunion.

The strike which originated with the merchants' clerks is rapidly spreading among all classes of workmen.

LONDON, Oct. 25.—It is reported in Paris that the plot for Liberals for rising on Tuesday has been discovered. The Liberals deny the rumor, and say they are disposed to postpone the attempt to open the Corps Legislatif. The people of Paris are much excited. The Emperor is concentrating troops, and Bazaine has been ordered to employ artillery, if necessary, to keep the streets clear.

MADRID, Oct. 25.—It is the growing conviction that it will be impossible to select a King in the present state of affairs. Parties in the Cortes and cabinet are both divided in opinion, and, unless a compromise is effected, the establishment of a monarchy is hopeless.

PARIS, Oct. 25.—The Emperor has arrived at the Tuileries.

M. Petre, the prefect of police, issued a proclamation, in which he says that in view of the proceedings expected on the 26th instant, which are likely to disturb the public peace, the authorities inform the people of Paris that measures will be taken to insure respect of law and the maintenance of tranquillity.

All good citizens are requested to be on their guard against imprudent curiosity, and not to expose themselves to consequences that may result to the enforcement of laws against mobs.

LONDON, Oct. 25.—The fears of a revolt at Paris are diminishing. The government is taking every precaution to guard against a disturbance. Marshal Bazaine has been authorized to use his cannon without mercy if need of it be required.

PARIS, Oct. 26, 6 P. M.—The city has been perfectly tranquil up to this hour. The threatened demonstration has been made, but no disturbance whatever has occurred.

The Emperor went out this evening in an open carriage, and drove through the principal streets.

MADRID, Oct. 26.—The three principal parties in the Cortes have each appointed seven deputies to hold a conference and try to come to some agreement in regard to the selection of a King.

PARIS, Oct. 27.—The Emperor returns to Compeigne to-day.

The city continues tranquil. Apprehension of a disturbance has subsided.

PARIS, Oct. 27.—The Patrie says that a widespread conspiracy has been discovered in Turkey, and connected with the revolt in Caltaro.

Austria and Turkey are acting in concert in suppressing the conspiracy.

MADRID, Oct. 27.—General Prim has published a letter announcing that Minister Zorrilla accepts the modification made by the other members of the cabinet in the ecclesiastical finance section of the Treasury budget, reducing thirty per cent.; the ministerial crisis here has consequently terminated.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 27.—Extensive preparations are making for the reception of the Emperor of Austria.

Some one has advanced the idea of telegraphic stations in mid-ocean. A voyage across the ocean frequently occupies a dozen days or more, and those who are compelled to cross often have no means of getting any news. It is proposed to station a telegraph ship at a point some fifty miles from the coast of England, which shall be connected by a cable with Penzance. Then ships can stop there and hear the news from the whole world. In time these projects may increase, and station ships may be anchored all along the routes of the various cables. What next?

The business of the Union Pacific Railroad is announced to be $175,000 greater for September than during August.

Three young men of Brussels have just made the trip from that city to Paris on velocipedes.

FATHER HYACINTHE.

HIS BIOGRAPHY AND COSTUME.

Father Hyacinthe (Charles Loyson) was born at Orleans, France, in 1821. In 1853 he was ordained at St. Sulpice, Pau, in which parish he subsequently officiated as a priest; but in the mean time he studied theology four years and taught philosophy at Avignon, and afterwards theology at Nantes.—Having passed ten years in the Lyons Convent of Carmelite Friars, he became a member of the order, and was first a preacher in that city. It was during the summer of 1864 that he made his first appearance in Paris, at Notre Dame. Here he at once, by the eloquence and boldness of his utterances, attracted public attention and gained a brilliant reputation. He is a most popular preacher, and it is from this fact that his recent letter protesting against the coming council, and the fearful policy which that council is pledged to support, excites such wide comment. The distinguished Father's costume is that of a civilian—black hat, coat and pantaloons; and invariably in his hand he carries a missal. The hope of many of seeing him in the long serge habit of a Carmelite monk, with naked feet shod with sandals, was disappointed. The custom house officers spared the monk the rausacking of his luggage.

DESCRIPTION OF FATHER HYACINTHE.

Father Hyacinthe is a short, thick man of five feet five, with short, crisp, black hair, retreating from his forehead. His face was florid with hues of health, and his teeth brilliantly white. His nose was aqualine, but rather small in proportion to his fully rounded visage, and his eye wore the introspective aspect, frequent among those who have experienced strong stirrings of the spirit. His age appeared to be forty. He was in citizen's dress, and completely black. The hair upon his tonsured crown had grown again. He had been occupied in reading a small Douay Bible, with red edges, which lay on the marble table before him. Evidently the voyage had interfered with his self-allotted tasks in that respect, and the necessity of recovering lost time was the chief cause of his desired seclusion.

INCIDENTS OF THE VOYAGE.

Many French priests came by the Pereire, who all behaved with marked respect to the distinguished man. But during the voyage he was reserved and almost taciturn; nevertheless he entered freely into conversation with the Hon. Fenian de Wood and Captain Duchesne. Among the Father's fellow-voyagers were an operatic troupe of fifty members, who have come to fulfill an engagement in New Orleans. On the voyage the opera troupe volunteered a display for the purpose of increasing the funds of the Shipwrecked Mariners' Association of France, and $400 were collected. Father Hyacinthe will soon have the pleasure of meeting his intimate friend, the poet Longfellow. He brings letters of introduction to General Dix, Henry Ward Beecher, and Father Hecker. He desires to remain in perfect retirement and to study this country, whose institutions he professes to admire.—New York Day Book.

The death of the Earl of Derby is a noteworthy event in the history of the times. He was one of England's foremost statesmen and orators. From early manhood to extreme old age he has borne a conspicuous part in all the political transactions of Great Britain. Starting a Liberal, he was for many years a co-worker with the Earl Grey, Lord Brougham, and other great chiefs of the Whig or Liberal party. Whilst Mr. and Lord Stanley and a member of the House of Commons, he was for some time one of the most formidable oratorical champions of the Whigs. As he grew older, and the Tory or Conservative party became liberalized, Stanley, then Earl Derby, assumed the chieftainey of the new Conservative party, and with Mr. Disraeli wielded for some time the government of the nation. But though always able and eloquent, manly and high-toned, he never manifested the power nor commandod the influence as a Conservative leader, which he did as one of the Liberal chiefs. The truth is that as age began to creep on him that hereditary disease of British statesmen, gout, increased in violence and frequency so as often to interfere with his discharge of the great duties and responsibilities of his position as minister and a party leader.

But for this and his strong taste for literature, the fourteenth Earl of Derby would have proved one of the most eminent names in English history. He was a ripe scholar, with a sincere love of classical literature, and as a parliamentary debater and ready orator had no superior in the British Parliament.

His son, who succeeds to the title, is one of the most promising of the new class of statesmen in England. His forte and characteristics are very different from his father's. In the dry field of statistics, finance and political economy—in a thorough command of the topics and figures collated in the Blue Book—Lord Stanley is said to be without a rival among English statesmen. He does not, however, possess the graceful elocution, the dash and readiness in debate of his father. But fortunately these gifts have ceased, in this material and mechanical age, to be as valuable as when the late Earl won his Parliamentary spurs. Not the less worthily, however, will the fame and honor of this distinguished house be maintained and preserved by the new Earl of Derby.—New Orleans Times.

CHEATING THE DEVIL.—"I do not know any buyer that pays such high prices as the devil pays when he buys men. Here is a man who sells himself for about one-eighth of a pound of chickory in a pound of coffee. He sells himself to every customer that comes in. He adulterates. He prepares his commodity with a lie, and retails it with another lie. Every time a man commits a known dishonesty he sells his soul; and thousands of men are selling themselves by little driblets. A man who sells himself thus—cheats himself? No, he cheats the devil. The devil pays too much for him." Beecher.

CHINESE girls are not considered of sufficient account to be named. So they are simply numbered—first daughter, second daughter, etc. Such is the degradation of woman in that country. A recent letter from a lady missionary near Pekin speaks of a Sunday school in her charge in which very encouraging progress is made in promoting the individuality and self-respect of the girls. The teachers insist on giving them names. Retaining and adhering to these names is a decided step in the right direction and evidence of interest in the school.—New York Independent.

A BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATION.—It is said of the Icelanders that they scrupulously observe the usages of reading the sacred Scriptures every morning, the whole family joining in the singing and prayers. When the Icelander awakes he salutes no person until he salutes God. He usually hastens to the door, adores the great author of nature and providence, and then steps back, saying to his family, "God grant you a good day." What a beautiful illustration on the part of the household to recognize and worship God.

NURSES OF CHRIST'S LITTLE ONES.—The most prominent feature in the Sunday school teacher's character should be his individual possession of divine grace, and his growing advancement in the divine life. A high standard of personal piety must be his constant aim, and habitual communion with heaven his highest delight. "We are the nurses of Christ's little ones; if we forbear taking food ourselves, we shall famish them. If we let our love decline, we are not likely to raise theirs."

A GOOD NIGHT KISS.—Always send your child to bed happy. Whatever cares may trouble your mind, give the dear child a good night kiss as it goes to its pillow. The memory of this, in the stormy years which may be in store for the little one, will be Bethlehem's star to the bewildered shepherd, and swelling up in the heart will rise the thought, "my father and mother loved me!" Lips parched with fever will become dewy at this thrill of youthful memories. Kiss your child before it goes to sleep.

THE Independance Belge warns tourists who intend visiting Suez to avoid the sea on November 5, as the position of the moon on that day foretells severe atmospheric convulsions, which may cause serious disasters, especially to ships. The effects will be felt more or less all over the world.

A MAN who cheats in small measure is a measureless rogue. If he gives short measure in wheat, then he is a rogue in grain. If in whisky, then he is a rogue in spirit. If he gives a bad title to land, then he is a rogue in deed.

MOTHERS, SPEAK LOW.—I know some houses, well built and handsomely furnished, where it is not pleasant to be even a visitor. Sharp, angry tones resound through them from morning till night, and the influence is as contagious as measles, and much more to be dreaded in a household. The children catch it and it lasts for life—an incurable disease. A friend has such a neighbor within hearing of her house when doors and windows are open, and even Poll Parrot has caught the tune, and delights in screaming until she has been sent into the country to improve her habits. Children catch cross tones quicker than parrots, and it is a much more mischievous habit. When mother sets the example you will scarcely hear a pleasant word among the children in their plays with each other. Yet the discipline of such a family is always weak and irregular. The children expect just so much scolding before they do anything they are bid; while in many a home, where the low, firm tone of the mother, or the decided look of her eye is law, they never think of disobedience, either in or out of her sight. O, mother, it is worth a great deal to cultivate that "excellent thing in woman," a low, sweet voice. If you are ever so much tried by the mischievous or willful pranks of the little ones, speak low. It will be a great help to you to even try to be patient and cheerful, if you cannot succeed. Anger makes you wretched, and your children also. Impatient, angry tones never did the heart good, but plenty of evil.—Read what Solomon says of them, and remember he wrote with an inspired pen. You cannot have the excuse for them that they lighten your burdens any; they make them only ten times heavier. For your own, as well as for your children's sake, learn to speak low. They will remember that tone when your head is under the willows. So, too, will they remember a harsh and angry voice. Which legacy will you leave to your children?—New York Chronicle.

STATE SEMINARY.—We are gratified to learn from the following that the Deaf and Dumb Asylum at Baton Rouge has been secured for the State Seminary:

It is a source of much gratification in our community—as, from the nature of the case, it must prove to be throughout the State—to know that satisfactory arrangements have been concluded by which the duties and exercises connected with the State Seminary are to be resumed, and that, too, at Baton Rouge.

Colonel Boyd, the president of the seminary, has been in our city this week, and secured the co-operation of the directors of the Institute of the Deaf Mutes and Blind, (based on a letter to the directors given by Governor Warmoth, recommending the same,) to an extent which secures for the seminary all the room requisite for its uses.

The seminary will occupy the north half of the main building, together with the wing attached, and will be allowed the use of the main staircase.

The school will be reopened on Monday, the 1st of November.

It is proper to mention, in connection with this subject, that the City Council held a meeting on Monday last and took suitable action by way of bringing about the favorable result which has been attained. The attention of the Governor and of the directors of the institute was officially solicited to the consideration of the important matter.—Comet, October 23.

THERE is a remarkable movement now going on among the Jews of Bessarabia, Russia, in favor of accepting the messiahship of Christ, while retaining their Jewish Sabbath, circumcision and other customs; thus resembling the first forms of Christianity, which seemed like a Jewish sect. A converted rabbi, named Gurland, in Kischenen, the principal town in Bessarabia, says that Israelites are coming for instruction from Wilna, Odessa and other places.

A SIMILE.

BY LONGFELLOW.

Slowly, slowly up the wall
  Steals the sunshine, steals the shade;
Evening damps begin to fall,
  Evening shadows are display'd.
Round me, o'er me, everywhere,
  All the sky is grand with clouds,
And athwart the evening air
  Wheel the swallows home in crowds,
Shafts of sunshine from the west
  Paint the dusky windows red;
Darker shadows, deeper rest,
  Underneath and overhead.
Darker, darker, and more wan,
  In my breast the shadows fall;
Upward steals the life of man,
  As the sunshine from the wall,
From the wall into the sky,
  From the roof along the spire;
Ah! the souls of those that die
  Are but sunbeams lifted higher.

PREACHERS' SONS.

The idea, for some reason or reasons, has long been current that ministers' sons are extra bad—worse than the average of other Christian men's sons. It is scarcely necessary to say that we think this a mistake, and most unjust to ministers and to their families. I suppose, however, that the mistake is more the result of thoughtlessness and want of information than any wish to do ministers or their families a wrong.

The minister and his wife may be holy and in a gracious state; but children are born according to nature, and not by grace and "of the Spirit." Holy people's children are born with depraved natures, just as the children of unholy and unrenewed persons, and just as much need regeneration to make them new creatures and zealous of good works. Thoughtless lookers on forget these theological facts, and are surprised to see the children of holy men, devoted to preaching the Gospel, with natures and dispositions like other and less holy people's children. The holiness and blamelessness of the father is put in strong contrast with the natural depravity of his children. We think it is this strong contrast, not wisely considered, that makes the impression upon some minds that ministers' children are worse than other people's.

It should be remembered that the clergy, like any other class, may have among them unwise fathers, and mothers wanting in wisdom, so that it may occasionally happen with ministers, as with other good people, that their children may not always be most judiciously trained.

I have read that this subject has attracted some attention in England and other Protestant countries, but I have not been able to lay my hands on any definite results of these inquiries. However, it has been ascertained that there are a larger proportion of ministers' children who do respectably well as to education, morals, marriage and success in life, than the children of an equal number of agriculturists, manufacturers, merchants or professional men.

So far as I have been able to ascertain, this is true in relation to the children of our Methodist ministry, although their small salaries, frequent removals, and the father's absence from home are all unfavorable conditions under which to train, educate and set forward their children in the world. Ministers have mental culture enough to know the value of education, and strain their narrow resources to the utmost to educate their children. Ministers rarely have it in their power to give their children much worldly gear, but they give them that which is far better—a good moral and mental training, with habits of economy and self-reliance.—From these conditions, as a rule, the best and most useful men arise.

It is impossible, without a more pains taking and time-consuming research than we can give it, to get any extended statistics; but from some little gatherings from my readings I collect the following facts—a number of names illustrious in various walks of public usefulness. Among eminent ministers and authors who were sons of ministers I find the names of John and Charles Wesley, Bp. Pierce and Dr. McFerrin; Robert Hall, the renowned Baptist orator and author; Dr. Robertson, the author of Charles the Fifth and many other able and valuable works; Bishop Thirlwall, famous for a history of Greece, and Schliermacher, the distinguished pulpit orator, commentator and general writer; Jonathan Edwards and his illustrious son.

Among politicians, the sons of ministers, I find John Hancock, president of the convention that sent out the Declaration of Independence, and the first of the signers; Henry Clay; Jas. Hillhouse, U. S. S., and renowned in his day; Edward and Alexander Everett, both so distinguished in the legislative and diplomatic history of our country.

Among the poets of sons of ministers I find Goldsmith, Cowper, Montgomery, Coleridge, Leigh Hunt, Tennyson, poet laureate of England, and Mrs. Barbould.

Among historians, philosophers and general cultivators of literature, variously distinguished on the rolls of fame, I find among the German philosophers and critics August William von Schlegel and his illustrious brother, Friedrick Karl Wilhelm von Schlegel; Friedrick William Joseph Schelling and Johann Paul Friedrick Richter; Henry Hallam, historian; Ralph Waldo Emerson; Isaac Taylor; Addison, author of the Spectator; Charlotte Bronte, an authoress of great power; Dr. Edward Jenner, discoverer of vaccination; Agassiz, the renowned naturalist, descended from five generations of Swiss ministers. Arthur Young, a renowned writer on agriculture, and Lord Campboll, Lord Chief Justice, and distinguished author of the Lives of the Lord Chief Justices of England.

In a research of this kind of course it is impossible to find the names of thousands of pious, useful and estimable men, because they have not been literary nor historic celebrities.

I hope this article may call attention to this subject, that more facts may be called forth, and an effectual quietus be given to this thoughtless slander on the clergy and their families. W.

NEW ORLEANS, October, 1869.

Eufaula District Meeting, Montgomery Conference.

CLAYTON, ALA., Oct. 12, 1869.

MR EDITOR: The District Meeting of the Eufaula district, Montgomery Conference, assembled at Eufaula, Alabama, on the 30th of September last, and continued its session until the evening of the 2d of October. A large number of delegates were present, every charge in the district being represented.

The introductory sermon was preached on Thursday, at eleven A M, by the Rev. C. L. McCartha The sermon was appropriate and impressive. No Bishop being present, the Rev. W. A. McCarty, presiding elder, presided.

The pastors' reports on the condition of their charges were generally favorable, representing the church in a sound and healthful condition.

Committees were appointed on all the important interests of the church, and the reports presented by each, on the subjects submitted to their consideration, were thoroughly and ably discussed, and the minds of the members of the meeting were deeply impressed with their importance, and they were strongly incited to go forth with greater zeal and energy in advancing all the interests of our Zion.

The Rev. T. H. Dawson, M. D, S. H. Dent, Esq., Colonel W. H. Chambers and J. T. Rodgers were elected delegates to the Annual Conference. Rev. C. L. McCartha, J. H. Bass, Alto V. Lee and Dr. J. E Crews were elected alternates.

On Sabbath morning there was an interesting Sunday school celebration, many prizes being distributed to the deserving children. The exercises during the meeting were religious and useful, and to the spiritual good of those present.

The following resolution was adopted by the meeting:

Resolved, That the secretary be requested to furnish a copy of the report of the Committee on the Administration of Discipline to our Conference organ for publication.

I herewith send the report of the committee.

ALTO V. LEE, Secretary.

EXTRACT FROM THE REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE ADMINISTRATION OF DISCIPLINE.

The rules of our church are the teachings of the Bible, as understood and believed by some of our wisest and best men, and as such they are entitled to all obedience. Governed by them, under the providence of God, the church has increased, prospered and accomplished much good. This seems to prove that they are good rules and regulations.

Every person, in connecting himself with the church, took upon himself the obligation to obey and observe the discipline of the church, and no matter whether his judgment or conscience approved all these rules or not, they are none the less binding.

Your committee is aware that this is a subject that requires good judgment, tact and discretion—more, perhaps, than anything else connected with the management of the church; and it is impossible for your committee to make a report that would suit every case. In fact, we are far from advising charges and a trial in every instance of an infraction of the church rules. Yet there are some things which seem about to grow up into great evils in the church, and which certainly need correction

The time was when such a thing as a dancing or drinking Methodist was unknown and unheard of. We are sorry to learn, from some of the reports, that such members are not altogether unknown or unheard of in these latter days. Brethren, we believe these things ought not to be, and we are fearful that if they are unnoticed by the church that she will lose in a great measure, if not entirely, her usefulness in the world.

We advise, then, that the church adhere to the rules and discipline by which, under God's providence, it has already done so much good in the world. We are told, in his word, that we cannot serve two masters—that we cannot serve God and mammon. A religion that does not separate a man from the world, and that does not make him better in all respects, is not worth having, and a church or society that cannot stand the test of our discipline had better be dissolved. The connection of such a society with our church can do neither any good, and must do the church harm.

In conclusion, brethren, we advise a faithful enforcement of the church discipline, not hastily or under excitement, but deliberately, advisedly and with that "charity that suffereth long and is kind," and "that never faileth."

[We regret our inability to publish all of the report on this most important subject, but press of matter has compelled us to give only what seems to us the more material parts.—EDITOR.]

A WISE CLERGYMAN, now deceased, once said: "He had learned to preach not only so that people could understand him, if they had a mind to, but also so that they could not misunderstand him, if they wanted to." A hint here to all called upon to make statements with pen or lips.

A CHICAGO medical college has decided to admit women to its course of instruction, and to grant them the degree of M. D. upon the same terms as men. A number of women have already applied for admission.

Montgomery District, Montgomery Con.

AUBURN, ALA., Oct. 13, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: Religiously the year has been very prosperous. A spirit of revival has pervaded most of the charges, and a great many have been added to the church.

I am satisfied that, in a great measure, this has been owing to the earnest and laborious efforts of the preachers. It would be difficult to find a more devoted and indefatigable set of men than they have been Being pastors as well as preachers, they have attended to all the departments of church interest, and usually have been ready at the Quarterly Conferences to render satisfactory and encouraging accounts of the condition of the church, and to make valuable suggestions about compacting and enlarging the work.

The present spiritual condition of the membership is very good, perhaps never better. There have been but three or four expulsions reported during the year, which, considering we have largely over three thousand members in the district, is certainly very gratifying. I am satisfied that proper discipline has been exercised in all cases of delinquency. We endeavor to keep up the love-feasts after the old style, and have found them the means of great grace and comfort to the church. Regarding them as a kind of spiritual thermometer, they indicate a good deal of heat, yea of fervent piety in the church. They are well attended, and I do not remember one during the year that was not a blessing to the church. There are some of the old paths delightful to walk in.

Our District Meeting was a most gracious and refreshing season. It has been years since I saw a time of equal interest. When we met it was found that half of the preachers on the different works were absent. There seemed to be a pervading desire to have the religious element to preponderate during the meeting. The numerous revivals which preceded it prepared those present specially for this. The general prayer was for a spiritual feast while we attended to the regular business that called us together.

An incident showed the position of at least some of our preachers with their people. When Brother Ross had read his report, being quite feeble, he added but a few comments and sat down. A delegate from his charge was called on for a statement. He arose and said: "I can add nothing to the report of our pastor. He, sir, has our confidence, and we do what he tells us." Brother R. was deeply moved by this expression of the regard of his flock, and of the responsibility it imposed upon him. I am well assured that the confidence exists between other pastors and their flocks. And may it ever be thus. How much lighter would be the burdens of the ministers, and how much more efficient their ministry, if they could always be assured of the generous confidence and support of the people of their charges!

We had reports prepared with great care and ability on various subjects of direct interest to the church, which were discussed with much earnestness, and we trust profit, by both the laity and clergy. There was one noticeable feature: the laity were much freer to join in the discussions than on former similar occasions.

Motions were made to send some of these reports to the ADVOCATE for publication, but after discussion it was decided that as the church papers are burdened with these things now, we would spare you. Did we do right? [Yes!—EDITOR.] It was, however, ordered that copies of certain parts of some of the reports be furnished to each pastor, with the request to have them read before each congregation. Brethren were found who volunteered to do the copying. Thus all will be reached, while the papers reach but few.

The delegates to the Annual Conference are: David Clopton, William Lowther, Rev. Samuel W. Harris and B. A. Rush. Alternates: Rev. G. W. F Price, J. B. Bilbo and J. H. Swearingen. All agree it is a most excellent selection.

The educational interests of the church in the bounds of the district are prospering. The male college at this place has commenced the fall session with increased patronage and brightening prospects. There are now something near ninety students in both departments of the institution. More than sixty of these are in the regular college classes. We have a laborious and efficient faculty, and a college in every sense worthy of the sympathy and patronage of the church. The financial difficulties, under which we have labored, are rapidly disappearing, and we hope soon to be able to attain to the wonderful prosperity the college enjoyed before the war. If the Montgomery Conference and the people of east Alabama would but remember home institutions, as we think their interests demand, the halls of East Alabama College would be crowded this winter.

The Tuskegee Female College has renewed its youth. I was there a few days ago, and it looked like old times. President Price was in place, and ninety-nine girls were around him, and new ones were arriving daily. This is as it ought to be, for there is no better educator of girls anywhere than Rev. G. W. F. Price.

I find that Tuskegee is looking up again. A decided reaction is taking place, and the town will, I hope, soon be itself again. Our recent Quarterly Conference there resolved to proceed at once to collect funds to finish the new church, which was commenced the first year of the war, but, owing to the failure of the architect, left in an unfinished state. It is much needed, and will be an ornament to the town when completed.

It affords me pleasure to be able to say that the condition of things is improving in this section of Alabama. There is a greater air of cheerfulness and hope than I have noticed since the war closed The crops have been greatly injured by the heat and dry weather, so that in many places not much more than half of what was expected will be gathered. But the price of cotton is encouraging and remunerative, and the people are hopeful. Many of them are out of debt. This is especially the case with the farmers. Lands in the richer section are in good demand, and advancing in price daily.

The village of Opelika has three newspapers, a telegraph office and a large number of good business houses. Her merchants are active, intelligent and public spirited men, who are up with the times and seem intent on making their town a commercial centre. Two new lines of railroad, running northeast and northwest, will soon connect them, it is hoped, with the Tennessee valley at two points Our church at Opelika, under the efficient management of its devoted pastor, Brother Wild, ably seconded by Brothers Pitts, Wardlaw and the local brethren around, keeps pace with the rapid growth of the place. We sincerely hope all their expectations of temporal and spiritual prosperity may be speedily realized.

Early in the year tolerably liberal assessments were made for the support of the preachers. From present indications these will all be met by Conference, excepting, perhaps, those in one or two charges. In these the deficiency, if any, will not be great. All the collections ordered by the Conference will be fully realized, unless a great change takes place between this and the 1st of December. In addition to this the district is educating a promising young preacher at our college. M. S. ANDREWS.

THE BIRD that soars on the highest wing
  Builds on the ground her lowly nest;
And she that doth most sweetly sing,
  Sings in the shade when all things rest;
    In lark and nightingale we see
    What honor hath humility.

The saint that wears heaven's brightest crown
  In lowest adoration bends;
The weight of glory bows him down
  The most when most his soul ascends;
    Nearest the throne itself must be
    The footstool of humility.

GRATITUDE and prayer are always suitable and becoming, as we are ever in want, and God is always giving.

ABOUT BABIES.

In one of the street cars of the metropolis, a few evenings since, was a lady with a baby—one of the blue-eyed, crowing, happy babies, disarranging its white robes and rumpling its blue ribbons with all the abandon of a baby that is secure in ever fresh supplies both of love and clothes. The mother was evidently a stranger to the other ladies in the car, yet all of them smiled when they looked in her direction, and many of them spoke to her and seemed to love her for the sake of the beautiful child.

The opening instinct of womanhood seems to be the love of babies, and the girl must be a very little one who does not want a doll to which she can play the sweet part of mother. The depth and purpose of the instinct are revealed to us in the petition of the little miss of five years, who happens to be an only child:—"Mamma, I want a baby to play with—a neat baby, mamma."

No kinder blessing was ever bestowed than in the close of Fanny Fern's letter to the then newly married Princess Royal of England: "And when, brightest of all others, the crown of maternity shall descend upon your youthful brow, God grant you that nicest of all places on earth to cry in—a mother's bosom."

Yet, while the instinct of maternity is peculiar to woman, and marks her sex more plainly than rounded limbs or gentle manners, it is not to women and girls alone that the love of babies is confined.

It was once the lot of the writer to dwell in the white tents of Camp Harrison, in Georgia—in that lower part of the State where families are always far between, and much more so in war times. For long weeks we had not seen a woman or a child.

At last the railroad through the camp was repaired, and in the first train there was a lady with just such a wide-awake, kicking baby as the later one of the metropolis. Some hundreds of rough soldiers were around the cars, and Captain Story, of the Fifty-seventh Infantry, was the biggest and roughest among them, if we judge of the tree by its bark.

The lady with the baby in her arms was looking from a window, and he took off his hat and said: "Madam, I will give you five dollars if you will let me kiss that baby." One look at his bearded face told her that there was nothing bad in it, and saying with a pleased laugh, "I do not charge anything for kissing my baby," it was handed over. The little one was not afraid, and the bushy whiskers, an eighth of an ell long, was just the plaything it had been looking for.

More than one kiss did the captain get from the little red lips, and there was energy in the hug of the little round arms. Then other voices said: "Pass him over here, cap'l" and before the train was ready to move half a hundred men had kissed the baby. It was on its best behavoir, and crowed, and kicked, and tugged at whiskers as only a happy baby can. It was an event of the campaign, and one giant of a mountaineer, who strode past us with tread like a mammoth, but with tear-dimmed eyes and quivering lips, said: "By George! it makes me feel and act like a fool; but I've got one just like it at home."

Other lands have owned the power of this young immortality; and the Hindoo hails the little stranger with the words: "Young child, as thou hast entered the world in tears when all around thee smiled, so live as to leave the world in smiles while all around thee weep."—Appleton's Journal.

DO NOT MAKE YOUR OWN PECULIARITIES A LAW FOR OTHERS.—Much domestic unhappiness comes from the fact that the people do not know, or do not recognize the peculiarities of each other's natures. They expect impossible things of each other. If a flaming, demonstrative nature, and a cool, undemonstrative nature come together, neither of them understanding or making allowance for the peculiarities of the other, there can scarcely fail of being unhappiness. The latter demands that the former shall keep still, and the former demands that the latter shall wake up. They are all the time actuated by cross purposes, and are at disagreement with each other.

THE closet is a nursery for piety; and whenever there is a declension in its duties, there will be a declension of religion in the heart.

FROM A GARRET.

BY EDGAR FAWCETT.

Four stories high, in a garret room,
All day I sit by a table old,
And toil at the oddest of cheaic tasks—
The toning of ink into gold!
Whatever the busy world will read
We struggle to furnish, my quill and I.
Who talks of glory? The favored few:
A man must dine or a man must die!

Most bright were my dreams in the halcyon days
When hope made merry with youth; most fair
The witherless laurels no hand, no brow,
But my own should gather and wear.
They are dead—requiescant—those brilliant dreams;
I can think of them calmly, with not a sigh.
Let glory be won by the favored few:
A man must dine or a man must die!

Very grand are the thoughts that now and then,
Like stately dames, through my garret door
Seem to glide with a rustle of silken robes
On the carpetless, dusty floor.
Unbidden they come and unheeded they go;
The leisure to flatter them have not I.
They keep their chorus for the favored few:
A man must dine or a man must die!

The honors that neither were sought nor found:
Does it profit my life to regret them? I muse:
Though never to seek be never to gain,
To gain not is never to lose.
Success is the vassal of discontent;
And the proudest of triumphs defeat stands nigh;
'Tis the safest of mottoes for all human toil:
That a man must dine or a man must die!

Extracts from the Diary of Rev. J. H. Mims,

FIELD AGENT OF THE SOUTHWESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY IN LOUISIANA

1869. May 3.—Called on a good brother, who informed me of a family of Catholics just below him; "but," said he, "you need not stop, for they will not have a Bible on any terms." I did stop and sold to the man and his wife two Bibles—one in French and one in English! Another poor French family, living close by, was supplied with a French Bible free. Distributed twelve volumes of the Scriptures this day.

May 4.—Called on a Catholic family, and sold a French Bible; sold a Bible to a young Frenchman. At night a Catholic gentleman took me in, treated myself and beast kindly, for which he would have nothing, and bade me God-speed in the morning.

May 14.—Leaving Bayou Rapids, I entered at once the pine forest; the roads exceedingly rough and hilly; was compelled often to get out and lead my horse over and around bad places. Twelve miles brought me to the first house, at eleven A. M. Here I was cordially invited to rest and take dinner, and have my beast fed. Finding a large family, or rather two or three families, on the place, a school teacher, and several strangers, I proposed to have prayer, which was readily agreed to, though none present were professing Christians. Held the religious exercises accordingly. Six miles over a rough road brought me to the next house; it being sixteen miles to the next house, I remained here, and called on two families near by; found them without Bibles, and supplied them.—Gave some Testaments and Psalms to orphan children.

May 21.—Started for Pine Island; visited twelve families on the way; seeing an humble cottage some distance off from the road, I called, but the occupants were absent. Taking out a sixty-cent Bible, I wrote on the fly leaf, "Please to accept this Bible as a present from the Southwestern Bible Society. If you have a Bible, then please to hand it to some one of your friends who is without a Bible;" and left the precious volume on the water shelf, outside the house.

May 22.—Being directed to take the left of my road, I did so; but the left road finally dwindled down to a cow path, obstructed by logs leading across deep gulches, in one of which I came near smashing my buggy; got into a swamp; no road visible; left my buggy and struck a circle, but found no road; quit the swamp; took to the hills, and after serpentining around deep branches, logs and thickets for a long time, I espied a fence, made for it, and found a family without a Bible or Testament; they were poor people; gave them a Bible. Met another family without a Bible; another and another before night. All were supplied, but one refusing.

May 26.—Returning, came to the humble cottage where I left the Bible on the water shelf; found the good lady and the children at home. I addressed them thus: "In passing here a few days ago, and finding you not at home, and fearing you did not have a Bible, and expecting that it would not be convenient for me to pass this way again soon, I took the liberty of leaving a Bible on the water shelf, and hope you will not think hard of me for doing so." "Thank you, sir," said she; "we did not have a Bible, and were very glad to get one." "Are you able to pay for it?" "Yes, sir, I have some money." The Bible was paid for. At night had preaching and a Bible address; audience full and attentive. Received a donation of $5 for the Bible cause.

May 27.—Held a Bible meeting in a Baptist church; a full meeting; several addresses made by Rev. N. H. Bray, Rev. Mr. Adair and Mr. Pressly; one of the most intensely interesting meetings I ever witnessed. The work of distribution throughout Sabine parish was resolved upon and planned. Said one of the local ministers—of whom seven were present, and who had heretofore been indifferent about the cause—"I never saw fully into the matter till to-day; why, it is the most interesting subject I ever met with." Our hearts were strangely warmed and thoroughly united; but it is impossible to describe the actual state of the meeting on paper. Suffice it to say, each one left that humble spot with enlarged views of the great work of scattering the word of God all over this land.

May 28.—Left early in the morning to meet the people at a two days' meeting, twelve miles distant. Road rough, extinct in some places. Found a good number of people at a new school house. Here we found some grown persons who had never heard a prayer or sermon. Had service at eleven A. M. and at night.

May 31.—Called again on Rev. A. Wright, and suggested that he constitute himself a life member of the Southwestern Bible Society, which he agreed to, and handing me $10, he said: "I will pay the balance this fall, if I have reasonable success with my crop." A few moments after he said: "I am afraid I may not live to see the fall, and that I might die without completing my life membership; here is the balance, $20. I want to be sure of it before I die."

INCIDENTS.—"You need not call on Mr. —— and wife; they are infidels, and will insult you; they would not have a Bible on any terms." "How far is it to their house?" "One mile and a half." "I must by all means see them; I should consider my visit to this neighborhood half lost if I were not to call upon them." I went; was kindly received. I found him to be the man who had written to me many months before, begging for a Bible, though he was nearly two hundred miles from me. "I want a family Bible," said he, "and intend getting one as soon as I can raise the money." "You can take this Testament, as a present from the Southwestern Bible Society, and read it till you can get a large Bible.—Will you read it?" "Thank you, sir; I will read it."

June 9.—Nine miles brought me to Mr. Hathaway's, on Calcasieu river, forty-three miles from Alexandria, where at night we had a congregation at the house of a poor afflicted widow. She had been confined to her bed for ten years, unable to walk; had not heard a sermon in all that time. I presented the Gospel of St. John, in large type, to this poor widow, in the name of the Southwestern Bible Society. It was received with thanks and a flood of tears. She has long been an humble follower of Jesus, and says she is waiting for the summons to depart.

What I Saw of the Suez Canal.

NUMBER TWO.

As we left the hills of Timsah the wind struck us sharply, and ever and anon a quantity of the light sand of the desert would be caught up by it and sent whirling into the water; and looking closely, we could see where it had drifted little capes and promontories into the canal. Let us repeat what our captain said upon this subject, being asked:

"Yes, monsieur, this drifting in of the sand certainly seems to be one of our greatest difficulties, for the wind blows across the canal all the year round—six months one way, six months back. One ounce of sand per square yard amounts to five hundred tons for the whole canal. If it came in at this rate it would be a long time before the company would pay any dividend. But we do not intend to let it come in; and this is how we prevent it: This sand only extends to the depth of from nine to twelve feet; below this is a stratum of blue mud, mixed with a sort of clay, in which, by the way, we find great quantities of beautiful shells and fossil fish.—Well, then do you see those two huge engines which we are approaching—one an hydraulic dredger in the middle of the canal, the other an iron shute (it looked like the walking-beam of an immense steamer,) near the edge? Do you see how the vast masses of sand, mud and water come up from the dredger, are poured out into the 'shute,' and thence on the ground sixty or eighty feet from the edge of the canal? Do you see how quickly the great heaps rise, and how they extend, almost without a break, all along? Well, monsieur, you would find these heaps almost immediately baked hard by the sun, and as they are firm enough to bear the railroad which we intend putting upon them the better to expedite the mails from India, so we hope they will be high enough to keep out the sand-drifts from the canal."

"And what are your other great difficulties, mon capitaine?"

"Well, monsieur, at Chalouf, near Serapeum, we have struck a peculiar hard stone at the depth of twelve feet, and are obliged to blast to clear it out (it is axolite.) Then the deposit of the Nile mud near Port Said will always keep us dredging. But what we fear most is the Red sea. For a long distance from Suez it is extremely shallow; then, lower down, it is very rocky; and while this is nothing to steamers, which can easily keep the narrow channel, yet with the wind blowing six months one way and six months the other, it will not be easy for a heavily-laden clipper to keep off the ground. Yet these things will all be set right, for trade will take the shortest route, and the Suez Canal will be a success, although no nation now believes it except France and (with a bow) America."

The only stopping place from Ismailia to Port Said is Kantara, which means The Bridge. A swinging boat answers the purpose now, but the abutments are being built for a more substantial structure. We reached Kantara about three o'clock. Here is a little clump of houses clustering along the canal, trying hard to look like a miniature Ismailia, and scarcely succeeding in the attempt. French, English, Italian and Turkish flags were displayed, either on account of the arrival of the steamer, or because it was New Year's day, and we were invited to accept the hospitalities of the "Cafe de Canal." A neat French woman set before us some excellent coffee, good fresh bread and delicious dates, and while enjoying them we observed the "cafe." It was hard to realize we were where we were. There were the inevitable mintsticks in the glass jar with a brass-rimmed cover, the fly-marked cheese cakes and the honey-dew plug tobacco; and had it not been that the walls were covered with flamingoes, Egyptian geese, pelicans and the skins of two leopards recently killed near by, it would have been hard to believe that we were not in a cake and beer shop on an American turnpike.

Kantara is thirty-one miles from Port Said, and the canal is almost perfected thus far; that is to say, although the dredges are still at work, yet for this distance the canal is one hundred yards wide and of an average depth of twenty-six feet; and these are to be the dimensions for its entire length. A curious feature, which is visible along the narrow parts of the canal, is a current flowing in from the north at the rate of one and a half knots per hour. Although it is many months since the water attained its level, yet this current still continues.—Our captain attributed it to evaporation and absorption. It must be remembered that all the cuttings have been from the Mediterranean toward Suez, and that the main body of the men employed, numbering eighty-five hundred, are working at the head of the canal, which is now advanced as far as Serapeum. Here it is necessary to cut through a number of sand hills to the Bitter Lakes, which are a series of depressions in the desert, in the lowest parts of which are marshy ponds. They are twenty-five miles in extent, and it is expected that when the water is let in an area of one hundred and forty thousand acres will be covered. (This has since been done.) Then comes the Chalouf cutting to Suez, sixteen miles, and the seas meet. After leaving Kantara, for many miles the water overflowed the desert on either side, and we passed along as through an immense lake. The channel was buoyed, and as an evidence of the shallowness of the overflow, flamingoes, pelicans and a kind of large curlew waded about, intent on fish and regardless of us, while myriads of snipe and sand-pipers gazed at us from the little islands which in every direction appeared above the water. After leaving Kantara we did not pass a boat nor see a human being until we reached Port Said. The eye fairly ached with reaching over the desert distance—miles upon miles of sand, and, after we left the overflowed land, one long silver thread of water. Not a tree, not a shrub, not even a good sized stone, to relieve the intense monotony of the landscape. So when the captain handed us his glass and said that he could see the shipping at Port Said, we were well satisfied that our voyage through the desert was drawing to a close. It was eight o'clock when we reached the steamer's dock, and leaving our baggage in the hands of the ubiquitous custom house officials (Turkish,) made our way under the guidance of our good courier (Jules Hoffman) to the "Oriental Hotel," where, during our stay of two days, while waiting for the steamer for Jaffa, we had good rooms, clean beds, capital fare and excellent wine.

Now a word or two about Port Said (pronounced there, Port Sayeed.) Ten years ago it was a narrow strip of sand, which served as a resting place for the flamingoes when tired of wading about in the marshes which still lie around it. It was here M. Ferdinand Lesseps (pronounced Le-sepps, and not De Lesseps) made the first blow with his pick and set his army of Arab workmen in motion. It is now a flourishing seaport—a regular place of call for four lines of steamers, with a fine harbor, huge workshops, great stores of material, and a population of twelve thousand, increasing every year. This is made up from all the countries round the Mediterranean — French, Italians, Turks, Syrians and Greeks. Italian is spoken at this end of the canal, even more than French. Port Said has a large square, named after M. Lesseps, and surrounded by comfortable and lofty dwellings. Its stores, of which there are many, contain almost all the articles which can be obtained at Marseilles or Alexandria. Upon one we noticed the sign painted in four different languages—French, Italian, Turkish and modern Greek. All the Arabs connected with the place are apart in a village about half a mile along the beach to the westward, and, considering their proximity, Port Said is a very clean town. Its harbor, however, is its great feature. In order to protect the mouth of the canal from the deposit of mud brought over constantly in great quantities by the Nile, and also to defend the shipping from the severe storms which sometimes beat in here, two immense piers of breakwaters are built out into the sea, separated by an interval of seven hundred and fifty yards. The western pier is twenty-seven hundred yards in length, the eastern one to two thousand yards, and between them lies the harbor. The material used in their construction is artificial stone made on the spot from a combination of sand and lime, under the action of a powerful hydraulic machine. Each stone weighs twenty-five tons, and is put in its place by two boats constructed for the purpose. The piers are not regularly built, but they look very strong.

A few words now upon the canal in general. Whether or not the idea originated with Pharaoh, Napoleon I acted upon it, and actually had a survey made, when it was reported that there was a difference of thirty feet in the level of the two seas; and for that and other reasons the project was abandoned, and lay dormant until about 1854; upon the 30th of November of which year the contract between the Egyptian government and the "Compagnie Universelle du Canal Maritime de Suez" was signed. Its duration is ninety-nine years from the day of the opening of the canal for traffic. The Egyptian government is to receive fifteen per cent. of the net profits, and holds a large proportion of the company's bonds. Egypt conceded to the company all the lands which might be irrigated by the fresh water canal, and in 1868 bought back its own concession for a sum equal to $10,000,000.

On the 1st of January, 1869, there were at work eighty-five hundred men. These men are obliged by the Egyptian government to work on the canal, but are paid by the company at the rate of two francs per day. The engines for dredging are sixty in number. Each cost $200,000 in gold. The expenses amount to $1,000,000 in gold per month, and the work has already absorbed $40,000,000. It is said that the rates of toll are to be ten francs per ton. The company is a private one, and has not been publicly recognized or assisted by the French government.

With regard to the rocks, the calms and the tortuous channels of the Red sea, mentioned before as the chief obstacles to the use of the canal by the larger class of merchantmen, plans have already been elaborated in England, with a view to the building of a class of vessels suited to this trade, and carrying each sufficient steam power to assist her through the canal and down the Red sea. For the dispatch of mails and the transport of troops this route will be immediately available; and although it will take time to conquer English prejudices and predilections, yet in time the bulk of the India trade must come this way.

Whether the Suez Canal be for the future a new and brightened gateway between the nations, or whether it is doomed to be obliterated by the influences of nature or the neglect of man, like that other traditional labor which was performed perhaps in the dim ages of the Pharaohs, surely it has even now obtained a place upon the page of history, and it or its name will survive, monumental of distinguished ability, untiring energy and the utmost tenacity of purpose.—Lippincott's Magazine.

Father Hyacintho at Notre Dame.

The following description of the preaching of this eloquent monk was furnished in a letter to the Evangelist, two years ago, by a correspondent then in Paris:

But now the tall Swiss halberdier, making a passage along the aisle, announces the approach of Pere Hyacinthe, and instantly this whole sea of faces is turned toward him, with an expression of sympathy so intense as seemed enough to electrify one who came in all simplicity and sincerity to bring to them the words of life. He followed slowly, with his eyes cast down, his face pale, and, mounting the steps of the pulpit, he knelt down, and buried his face in silent prayer. Then rising, he stood, with erect and majestic form, and for some moments regarded in silence those to whom he was to speak, while a deep sigh involuntarily escaped from his large chest.

Although I was already under the magnetism of this extraordinary man, my eye as an artist took in all the surroundings of the scene. In scenic effect nothing could exceed the beauty of the tableaux—the dark background of the pulpit, in ancient carved oak; the form of the preacher, rendered more striking by the robe of his order, (he is a Carmelite monk, and wears a long serge gown, with only sandals on his feet,) with his white cowl thrown back upon his shoulder, his head shaven so as to leave only a chaplet of hair upon his brow, while the light from above fell upon his bare head, and his countenance so sad and beautiful, yet responding with quick sympathy to all the regards turned toward him. Surely if he had studied all this mise en scene he is a master in the art.

He began to speak, and from that moment I wished to believe in the sincerity, in the piety, in the Christian faith of this man—for if he is not all that, he profanes the most beautiful gifts of Providence. Never did a voice more sympathetic strike my ear; never did art more perfectly captivate and control the human heart.

He announced his text, first in Latin and then in French. It was in Ecclesiastes—a warning to diligence and activity, which he applied to stimulate men in the work of salvation, repeating with emphasis: "Agonize for your faith; combat for your soul!" He described the agony of Christ that he might hold him up as an example. As it is the season of Lent, all thoughts are supposed to converge toward that central theme, and all motives to radiate from the great sufferer. He depicted the sorrows of the Saviour of the world, the drops of blood falling to the ground and the last scene on the cross. During this description all was hushed and still. The vast cathedral seemed to wear a deeper gloom, as if in sympathy with the darkness which was described, and when he repeated our Saviour's words, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" it seemed as if every heart shuddered at the cry.

As Christ suffered and agonized for man's salvation, so should man himself struggle and suffer unto death that he be saved—there was his theme. But how do men carry on this spiritual war? Here the preacher turned from the divine sufferer to the world which he came to redeem—a world full of sorrow and sin. Instantly we were in the midst of the nineteenth century—with examples of guilt which all should recognize. He drew his pictures from actual life, portraying the tempter and the tempted; and in his charges of selfishness and crime, he seemed as if he would array all men at the bar of divine justice. He did not spare any class or profession—not even his own—but drew a fearful picture of the unworthy priest.

"It is not by hypocrisy," he said, "that the bad priest dishonors his ministry. Hypocrisy is a thing vulgar and base, soon unmasked, which cannot long deceive any one. But it is by that cold, cruel Pharisaism, which puts the letter in place of the spirit, the dogma in place of charity, in a religion which is all love. It is not with hands hard and cold that the priest must touch the wounds and sores of humanity, but as a mother in her love for her children covers the plague spots which mark the outbreaking of revolting disease. It is with burning lips that he is to suck the poison from the very blood of the death-smitten; it is with tears of charity and of tenderness that he is to wash and to purify the sinful soul!" As he said this there was in his voice, and in the whole expression of his sad and beautiful countenance, something of the tenderness of a father—he seemed to yearn toward those who listened to him with an irresistible attraction, and with one of his electrifying gestures he threw open his arms as if he would take upon his own heart the griefs and the remorse of every troubled spirit.

I give you but a faint outline of his sermon, though it seemed that every word was engraven on my memory. But merely to repeat his arguments and illustrations could give you no impression of his power, for it lay in the man, in his eye, his gesture and his voice. In true eloquence there is something which escapes analysis—a power beyond words—a magnetism vibrante et subtile which penetrates lightning, which cannot be described, but which is only felt as the intensest action of the human soul. To make you understand its effect I must paint for you that countenance so mobile, now grave and stern, and now wearing a look of ineffable tenderness. His gestures were full of energy and animation. There was intense life in every limb and every motion. Now he appeared as if he was the accuser of his hearers, flashing the light of conscience on every deed of guilt. At such a moment you might believe that you heard another Savonarola thundering against the vices of the age. Then suddenly his tone changed and his manner became tender and almost caressing, as if he would draw the multitude to the feet of him whose agony he described.

In Pere Hyacinthe it is easy to see the struggling of two natures. Under that coarse monk's dress throbs a great human heart. As Carlyle said of Edward Irving, "He strove to be a priest in an age alien to the character," so it seems as if this man also were striving to realize even here in the gayest city in the world, and amid the allurements of modern degeneracy, the heroic type of one of the old confessors.

In recalling this marvelous preaching it seems to me that there is in it something of the senses as well as of the spirit. I will not use the word sensual, for it would not express my thought, nor be just to the preacher. But there is an element of passionate emotion which is so marked in the writings of St. Theresa and Madame Guyon—a mingling of a heart yearning for affection, but which, shut up from all domestic ties, pours itself out in a love for all mankind. But what a fascination in this eloquence inspired by the most passionate love to God and to men!

If you think me carried away by my enthusiasm, I can only give you the more sober impressions of others. Our Protestant friends here render full homage to his genius and eloquence. M. de Pressense says that his manner is the union of extraordinary natural gifts with the most consummate art. It seems he does not shun the Protestant society. Not long since he passed an evening at Madame Adolphe Monod's, and they were charmed with his dignity and courtesy. Although he goes everywhere in the dress of his order as a Carmelite monk, with his naked feet shod only in sandals, yet his bearing is as distinguished as that of a gentleman of the Court of Louis the Fourteenth.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

RICE CAKE.—Take six eggs, with their weight in fine sugar, and in butter also, and half their weight of flour of rice, half of wheaten flour; make the cake as directed for the Madeira cake, but throw in the rice after the flour; then add the butter in the usual way, and bake the cake about an hour and ten minutes.

JENNY LIND'S PUDDING.—Grate the crumb of half a loaf, butter the dish well, and lay in a thick layer of the crumbs, pare ten or twelve apples, cut them down and put a layer of them and sugar, then crumbs, alternately, until the dish is full; put a bit of butter on the top and bake it in an oven. An excellent and economical pudding.

ESSENCE OF PEPPERMINT.—1. Spirits of wine, one pint; put into it one ounce of prepared kali, previously heated; decant and add half an ounce of oil of peppermint. 2. Oil of peppermint, one pound; strong spirits of wine, two gallons; color with dried peppermint leaves, eight ounces. 3. Oil of peppermint, three ounces; spirits of wine, colored with spinach, two pints.

A GOOD MADEIRA CAKE.—Whisk four fresh eggs until they are as light as possible, then continuing still to whisk them, throw in by slow degrees the following ingredients in the order in which they are written: Six ounces of dry, pounded and sifted sugar; six of flour, also dried and sifted; four ounces of butter just dissolved, but not heated; the rind of a fresh lemon; and the instant before the cake is molded beat well in the third of a teaspoonful of carbonate of soda; bake it an hour in a moderate oven. In this, as in all compositions of the same nature, observe particularly that each portion of butter must be beaten into the mixture until no appearance of it remains before the next is added; and if this be done, and the preparation be kept light by constant and light whisking, the cake will be as good, if not better, than if the butter were creamed. Candied citron can be added, but it is not needed.

CARONDELET STREET CHURCH.

This charge, under the pastoral care of Rev. Dr. Walker, has recently enjoyed a season of revival influence. In a protracted meeting of two weeks' duration, closing on Sunday, the 24th instant, twenty-five persons professed to find peace with God through faith in Christ. We are glad to say that our churches in the city and suburbs are generally in a good spiritual condition.

ATTENTION is called to a communication, published this week, from Dr. Redford, our book agent. The sixty-dollar proposition is again urged. None can afford to be without the new books mentioned by the agent.

The Manual of the Discipline and Dr. Summers' Commentary have not reached us, but we are sure they should be in every household immediately.

NEW ADVERTISEMENT.—We call attention to the card, in this issue, of the firm of Messrs. Aiken & Watt, cotton factors and commission merchants, No. 60 Carondelet street.—This wealthy house are the successors of Messrs. Rotchford, Brown & Co., and by their urbanity and thorough business qualifications entitle themselves to the patronage of the public. We cheerfully commend them to our friends as safe and reliable factors, and worthy of their favorable regard.

WE are under obligations to Hon. W. P. Kellogg, United States Senator from this State, for Message and Documents, 1868-69.

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP.—There are said to be in the United States a total of six million two hundred thousand members of evangelical churches, including one hundred thousand Quakers. If we reckon three persons to each church member, which is a low estimate, there will be nineteen millions of our population directly and indirectly connected with the several evangelical churches. The Roman Catholic population is reckoned at five million.

EYE SERVICE.

Living unto God, and having a supreme regard to his approval, is the opposite of eye service. The spirit of this service is to please men. Hence servants are admonished to discharge their duties "not with eye service as men pleasers, but in singleness of heart fearing God." The duty of pleasing others is enjoined by the same authority, but it is to be "for his good to edification." In this sense Christ pleased not himself, and Paul was "made all things to all men," that he might, by all means, save some. Pleasing others, then, is enforced by the highest authority, and illustrated by the most perfect examples. To a truly benevolent nature it is an object always desirable in itself, if consistent with the requirements of duty to God.

The end to be sought, however, is not the mede of praise, but always "for his good to edification." This was Paul's motive in conciliating the Jew and the Gentile, by adapting himself to their circumstances. He sought to disarm prejudice, and to catch them with the "guile" of a wise and broadly benevolent heart. "Men pleasers," in the meaning of Scripture, are the eye servants of religion, who chiefly, if not solely, regard the opinions and judgment of men without this ulterior object of their good to edification. Ambition, vanity and selfishness move them to please others. An inordinate and insatiable love of applause, or the desire of more substantial returns, incite them to seek their good opinions. The benevolent end is wanting, wholly or in part, and this defect leads to the most serious abuses. Principle is compromised, the conscience is tarnished, and the soul is finally ruined. Where the desire of pleasing is confined to its legitimate purpose of benefiting men, and where it springs from a supreme regard to the will of Christ, we are treading the firm ground of duty and safety. Actuated by this spirit the minister will never sacrifice truth, nor countenance error for the sake of conciliating sinners. No Christian will care to secure the friendship or respect of the ungodly at the cost of his own fidelity as a witness for Christ.

The law of pleasing is "for his good to edification," and this is the test by which we are to examine ourselves and to judge of others. Take away the appreciation of others, and many Christian hearts become impatient and weary in well doing. Unconsciously the praise of men has become an important consideration, and they fail to find in God alone a satisfying reward. The case is not made better by the fact that this want of appreciation is in the church, or exhibited by those who profess to be good and holy men. If the ultimate object of our labors and sacrifices has been the good opinions of our brethren, and that our praise might be in the church, the service rendered has not been unto the Lord. We have been all the time seeking to obtain the verdict of "well done, good and faithful servant," from frail and erring men, rather than from the infinite Judge of the universe. Those who would not be ostentatious, nor self-righteous in an offensive sense, are pained by the conviction that their virtues and labors are not altogether known.

The commendations of the intelligent and good are refreshing and encouraging. To assume indifference is to betray a peculiar and unnatural weakness; but to make these necessary to our peace and comfort is a lamentable aspect of that eye service which the Scriptures condemn. People may bring themselves to the point at length where duty is without attractions, unless festooned and garlanded with the praise of others. They come down from the serene heights of the divine approbation, and move, altogether, in an atmosphere of fulsome encomium. This appetite grows with indulgence until the impossibility of adequate gratification converts it into a source of internal distraction and misery. Heartily, as unto the Lord, must our service be, if acceptable to him. We may please men to save them, but not thereby to compromise ourselves or to dishonor God. We are rendering mere "eye service as men pleasers" if the supreme object, the paramount desire, be not the glory of the Redeemer.

When the believer reaches this high place of true religious service he will be always tranquil, if not happy, in it. Whilst not stoically indifferent to the good opinions or censures of others, he will find a peaceful refuge and an abiding satisfaction in the smiles of his heavenly Father. If God appreciates his labors in the Gospel field, and accepts the offering of a devoted life, he is abundantly rewarded and altogether content. Doing "unto the Lord" is indeed the remedy for much impatience and self-inflicted trouble of spirit. The path of the eye servant is strewed with thorns, and mortification, disappointment, wounded vanity await him, and, possibly, ruin at last. The path of humble consecration, on the other hand, amidst the denial and self-abasement which it imposes, leads the soul to fadeless bloom and ever brightening skies. *

HELPING ONE ANOTHER.

Amongst other ways in which Methodists are to evidence their desire of salvation is the following, as found in the General Rules: "By doing good, especially to them that are of the household of faith, or groaning so to be; employing them preferably to others; buying one of another; helping each other in business; and so much the more because the world will love its own, and them only."

The duty of doing good to all men is clearly recognized, "of every possible sort, and, as far as possible, to all men." The preference which the rule declares for the household of faith is taken from Paul's words: "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." The apostle doubtless had reference to works of charity, and gifts to the destitute and suffering; but Mr. Wesley has not gone beyond the spirit of the passage in applying it to business affairs. To help each other in business is the natural and spontaneous tendency of fraternal feeling and brotherly kindness. The preference which the relation of brethren demands in the bestowal of alms is certainly not less obligatory in the industrial pursuits of life. Believers are described as "the household of faith"—intimately united in fellowship to Christ and to each other. Christ takes his disciples under his special care, denouncing the heaviest judgments upon those who shall cause them to stumble, and assuring him of a special reward who shall give "unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple." Christ recognizes and rewards the good done unto his disciples as done unto himself: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

The help which Christians can afford each other in the way of business is often considerable, and it is the most prudent and rational mode of bestowing benefits. Where the poor can be placed in positions to earn their bread, and to become independent of charity, they are more effectively aided than if gratuitously maintained. Many a worthy mechanic, tradesman or merchant, vainly struggling for a start in business, might have been saved from poverty and failure by a little encouragement and patronage from his brethren in Christ. Young men seeking employment are perhaps neglected by members of the same church, who might with little trouble secure them positions. Where there is already abundant prosperity the relation to the household of faith should still decide our choice in business transactions. We may hope that the wealth to which our patronage has contributed will be more expended to the glory of God in the hands of a Christian than in the hands of an unbeliever. Better enrich the man who consecrates his money to the support of the Gospel than build up the fortune of another, who lives only to hoard his gains or to expend them upon his lusts.

This duty of employing Christians preferably to others, and buying one of another, is of easy and wide application. Every day there are opportunities, in some direction, to practice it, and yet it is often most grievously neglected. We do not mean that we are to buy of each other without respect to price, nor that we are to employ Christians without regard to qualifications.—Other things being equal, the preference is to be given them in trade and in employment. If the Methodist does not do as well by me as another, then I must go where I can do the best. But, with the rule thus qualified, we ought to be at some pains and inconvenience to make our connections in business with those who are known to be exemplary and good people. Whilst we would reprobate an offensively clannish and bigoted spirit, we believe that the rule of "helping each other in business" is of scriptural obligation, and not to be neglected without censure and condemnation. However much we may affect a broad and liberal spirit, we cannot set aside the inspired declaration: "Especially unto those who are of the household of faith." The rule is often broken through want of consideration, and from the idea that business has nothing to do with the church and religion. The claims of Christ's disciples are not thought of in such a connection. They have never thought of their merchant, their grocer, their employees as having any religion at all, but only as serving them to the best possible advantage. The duty, as Christians, of helping each other in business has never amounted to a practical and serious conviction. It is not our purpose to give this subject a sectarian application, though in this respect Methodists need to be reminded of their delinquency. While we do not abate our catholicity of spirit, there is need that the ties of our brotherhood be drawn closer in the temporal affairs of life. *

PERIODICALS.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY, November, 1869. We read this first, and more completely than any of the monthlies. Its political and theological drift we do not like, but every number contains some contribution to science or literature worth more than the cost of the entire volume. We note in this number part two of "The Increase of Human Life," a most instructive paper, and "Mohammed and his Place in Universal History," as suggestive and discriminating. Published by Fields, Osgood & Co., Boston.

THE RIVERSIDE MAGAZINE, for young people, November, 1869. Hurd & Houghton, New York. We have frequently noticed this as one of our best periodicals for the young. It is more tastefully and richly illustrated than any other.

THE LITTLE CORPORAL, November, 1869. This is an original magazine for boys and girls. Published by Alfred L. Sewell & Co., Chicago, Illinois. The literary quality is not excelled, and its moral and religious tone is generally decided, and of most wholesome tendency. The present number is full of good things, some of which we shall serve up to our readers from time to time.

Our Sixty-Dollar Proposition.

Under the embarrassing circumstances with which the Publishing House has been surrounded, no proposition we made brought us such timely relief, or contributed so much to our present prosperity, as the one requesting that every traveling preacher purchase $60 worth of our publications.

Although our profits during the past three years already exceed $78,000, which was the amount of the entire debt of the Publishing House on the 1st day of June, 1866, yet the rapid increase of the business of the house has compelled us to use a large portion of the profits in so increasing our stock as to meet the demands of the trade. We are therefore left with a heavy balance of this debt, which should be paid before the meeting of the General Conference in May next.

We therefore propose, once more, to all the preachers, local and traveling, to churches which may desire to furnish their pews with hymn books, to Sunday schools that may wish to supply themselves with libraries, and to all others who may desire to aid us in our efforts to free the house from all embarrassment, to accept our sixty-dollar proposition, and send us an order immediately for the books.

In addition to the books in the catalogue, we invite your attention to the following new publications:

Life and Times of Bishop McKendree. In two volumes. By Bishop Paine.

Manual of the Discipline. By Bishop McTyeire.

Methodism in Tennessee. First volume. By Rev. J. B. McFerrin, D. D.

Commentary on the Gospels. First volume. With questions accompanying. By Rev. T. O Summers, D. D. A. H. REDFORD, Agent.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

TRENTON, LA., Oct. 14, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: God has been pleased to bless us with a gracious revival. Brother Evans, our pastor, held a meeting which, after lasting nearly two weeks, ended last week. There were seventeen accessions to the church, and all the old members seem to have renewed their covenant, being baptized afresh with the Spirit. Brother Evans preached truly with power from on high. Under his pastorship the churches on this circuit are flourishing, and have nearly doubled in numbers. They are building a parsonage in Monroe, and expect to commence erecting soon a new church, for the construction of which some funds have already been raised. Brother Evans is now holding a protracted meeting at Faulks' chapel, on this circuit, from which may God send us the blessed tidings of many souls being set free from sin, and delivered into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

Yours in Christ, J. L. B.

ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT, LOUISIANA CON.

MR. EDITOR: You may say to the friends of Zion, through our excellent ADVOCATE, that the revival on the Alexandria district continues with unabated interest; and may it continue until there shall not be one soul left to advocate the cause of the wicked. Within the last three months four hundred and seventy five have been added to the church in the bounds of the district. The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few. O, that the Lord of the vineyard would send forth more laborers therein! We need six or eight men more than we have to supply the work on the Alexandria district. Where are these men to come from? Will not some of our sister Conferences send us a few of their young men? Where they have a surplus they can be spared; and here is a field ripe unto the harvest. Everywhere the cry is heard: Send us a preacher; we will support him. We have not the men; we cannot supply the work. Who will come to our assistance? Immortal souls are perishing for the bread of life. At whose hands will their blood be required? Will our brethren of the older Conferences think about it?

FRED. WHITE, P. E.

MINDEN, LA., Oct. 14, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: I am still highly pleased with the ADVOCATE. Have just read the copy of 21 instant. The revival intelligence contained in said number is certainly very encouraging. Much has been accomplished in this (the Ouachita) district during the year, which seems not to have been reported. It will doubtless be made manifest at Conference. I believe that considerable good has been accomplished, through the agency of our protracted efforts, at the various appointments in the bounds of this (Minden) circuit; though not as much visible good as we had hoped for. About one hundred accessions to the church, white and colored.

Your "loader" on "Supply and Demand" is timely and appropriate. I am loth to believe that God does not call men to the ministry now as in former times. I suppose that the diminution of preachers is owing to the fact that men resist the divine call.

This district expects to send up two recruits to the Annual Conference that I know of—possibly more; one of them from this circuit. If each district in the Louisiana Conference would do as well, for a few years, the supply would soon equal the present demand.

I love good old-fashioned Methodism too much to favor the change proposed by Brother B. F. White. I think, too, that those of our circuits which are compelled to bear with "one horse" preachers certainly ought to have the services of a man of experience and ability once a quarter.

I am satisfied that we would accomplish more good by preaching and discharging pastoral duties more faithfully, and letting the machinery of our church alone. We certainly have the most perfect system of church government in existence. I think we had better let it alone. The great want of the church now is "vital piety," and not "change of polity." I am in favor of anything that will increase our "spirituality," but opposed to that which proposes less.

Yours, etc., THOS J. UPTON.

VAIDEN, MISS., Oct. 22, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: Thinking you would dislike to be troubled with numerous accounts of meetings, I would wait and give in one short letter the result of a series of meetings held on the Vaiden circuit. Just after the Midway meeting, the result of which I wrote you on a former occasion, the Starkville District Meeting convened at Vaiden. It was poorly attended, on account of a series of protracted meetings going on in the bounds of the district at that time; however, we had a gracious season. The ministers preached in the power and demonstration of the Spirit. Sinners were convicted, mourners converted, and the church strengthened in the faith. Ten professed faith in Christ, eight joined the Methodist, two the Presbyterian Church. From Vaiden we went to West Point, where the Lord was with us in great power. There were thirty-one accessions to our church at that place, the most of them converted. Brothers Langford, Murff and Meritt did good service there. Father Applewhite was with us, doing effective service in the altar. We adjourned to Enon, where we gained a great victory over the devil. At this place the church was cold. The church had the form, but few had the power of godliness. Twelve deserted the enemy's ranks and joined the army of the living God. We had a most precious time here. I would say, at this point, that it was a genuine work. The young men organized a prayer meeting, and keep it up regularly. Nothing deters or keeps them away but things they cannot control. The class meeting is revived. From here we assembled at Chestnut Hill. At this place the church was neither cold nor hot. Such deadness scarcely ever prevails in any society; but the Lord was very merciful and poured out his Spirit upon the church and gave us a Holy Ghost revival. The church was much blessed. The young men's prayer meeting was organized, and men have taken up the cross and are praying in public who have never prayed in public before. Nine joined here; some of them very bright conversions. We adjourned from this place to Gerrington. At this place we have very few members. Discouragement was on every side, but we determined to give the enemy a fight, and at the end of five days' struggle we found we had gained eight to the Lord's side. They all professed saving faith in Christ. Having no ministerial help we had to stop, which we regretted very much. Up to this time there have been about one hundred and ten accessions to our beloved Zion.

P. A. JOHNSTON.

A MAN recently had a presentiment that he should die at such an hour on the following day, and requested his friends to toll the bells that hour. He dressed himself in his best, and lay down at the appointed hour to die. The bells tolled, but the man did not die, thus adding another to the many curious cases of presentiment that have occurred.

NEW CHURCH IN MANSFIELD.

MANSFIELD, LA., Oct. 21, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: With feelings of supreme gratitude we announce that our new church in Mansfield has been finished and paid for. Just eight months from the time that the plan was conceived to build the house it was finished, beautiful in its proportions and elegant in its taste. It is an ornament to the place and an honor to the church. The finishing touch was given to it on Saturday evening, and Sabbath morning, at eleven o'clock A. M., Bishop Wightman dedicated it to the service of God by an appropriate sermon and service. The Bishop was complaining of bruises received from the upsetting of the stage; but we think that he never preached better. Permit us to rejoice, and to ask you to rejoice with us, that we have a beautiful and comfortable church to worship in, and that it is unencumbered with debt.

MISSIONARY ITEMS.

IT IS a matter of interest to all contributors to missionary funds to know how much of the collections are expended in the gathering and disbursing of the appropriations, and how the expenditures of the various societies stand in comparison. The following figures exhibit the expense of administration for the leading societies the past year:

	RECEIPTS.	EXPEN.
American Board.....	$535,838	$40,324
Am. and Foreign Christian Union.....	96,310	17,337
American Baptist do..	196 897	30.148
Prot. Episcopal do .	63,369	10.051
Methodist ..... do..	606,661	29 070
Presbyterian Board...	338 360	12,844
Reformed Board.....	81,410	3 884

It will be seen from this statement that the Methodist Board, in cost of administration, stands only third largest, whilst its receipts are greater than those of any other society. The Presbyterian Board shows an economy nearly the same as ours. The American Board is second in point of receipts and first in expenditures. Of this amount $15,665 were paid to agents, etc., for collecting funds, and $2,196 were received from the permanent fund for officers.

A THRILLING event in the session of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, which has just been closed, was a resolution, unanimously adopted, to occupy Japan as a mission field. The recent events in Madagascar and other pagan countries have strengthened the hope of the Christian world that rich harvests are now in store for the devoted laborers in the foreign missionary field, and there is now hardly a more promising field than Japan. The progress of this new enterprise will be followed by the whole Christian world with lively interest.

WE sometimes imagine that our church is doing very largely for foreign missions, but a table of receipts for 1868, which we find in the Foreign Missionary, for October, puts ours in the third rank of missionary societies of this country. Here is the table; it relates, let it be noticed, to foreign missions only.

American Board.....	$416,167
Presbyterian Board.....	296 729
Methodist Board.....	275 868
Baptist Board.....	183 911
Reformed Board.....	79 009
Episcopal Board.....	61.969

The churches represented by the Presbyterian Board give to foreign missions at the rate of $1 08 per member; those of the American Board $1 03 per member; the Methodists 23½ cents per member. We are not doing all we ought in the foreign field.—Methodist.

MARRIED.

On th 9th of September, by Rev. F. White, at Lucky Hill, Rapides parish, Louisiana, Mr. H. K. GORDON to Miss REBECCA A. SHARITT.

OBITUARIES.

Died, near Amite City, Louisiana, on the evening of the 18th instant, ALICE, daughter of F. M. Eckford, of this city, aged twenty-three years.

Died, at midnight on the 19th of October, 1869, at Wesson, Mississippi, Mrs. ELIZABETH STANFORD.

An obituary notice will soon be prepared of this most estimable Christian lady.

B. JONES.

Died, near San Antonio, Texas, on the 2d of September, 1869, Mrs. SARAH R. CREW, wife of F. T. Grayson.

Sister Grayson was born on the 22d of July, 1814, in Claiborne county, Mississippi. She was for many years a consistent member of the Methodist Church, and a most estimable Christian lady. Having been for some time in declining health, she visited western Texas with the hope of finding relief. For some months her health was much improved by the change, but her prostrated constitution suddenly sunk under an attack of fever, and she passed peacefully to her home in the skies. The writer of these lines saw her in this city when on her way to Texas. She was then cheerfully resigned, and expressed herself as entirely ready for the divine disposal, whether it should be for life or death. None who knew her can doubt that her chastened and sanctified spirit is now with "the saints in light," and happy in "the paradise of God."

LINUS PARKER.

At the fourth Quarterly Conference of the Fort Deposit circuit, Montgomery Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South, the following preamble and resolutions were introduced by J. W. Shores—Rev. J. W. Glean in the chair—and unanimously adopted by a rising vote:

WHEREAS, This Quarterly Conference has learned of the afflictive dispensation of Divine Providence which has come upon our friend and brother, the Rev. F. L. B. Shaver, president of the Alabama Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, in the death of his daughter, Miss ELIZABETH SHAVER;

AND WHEREAS, He has greatly endeared himself to this charge by his Christian courtesy and kind co operation in promoting the cause of Christianity; therefore, be it resolved by this body:

1. That we extend to our bereaved brother our tenderest sympathies and kindest condolence in his sad bereavement.

2. That we will offer to our Heavenly Father our most fervent prayers that he will grant his sustaining grace in this hour of severe trial.

3. That this preamble and resolutions be published in the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE at New Orleans, and the Methodist Protestant, and that the secretary furnish a copy to our brother.

MRS. SUSAN P. KILGORE.

If it were not that

"Beyond this vale of tears
There is a life above,
Unmeasured by the flight of years—
A life that is all love;"

then should the dwellers in "this vale" oft be made most miserable indeed. Here

"Friend after friend departs," and

"Leaves us weeping on the shore,
To which they can return no more."

But when we are assured, with respect to those who go from us, that they have fallen asleep in Him who is "the resurrection and the life," then our troubled hearts are calmed, our sorrows soothed, and in the faith and hope of the Gospel we are enabled to say: Though they cannot come to us, we can go to them. Oh! the prospect and the hope of meeting friends beloved, where death can never come. How does it quicken our steps, and make us feel like hastening forward to that day when we too shall be called to join them in the realms above. Such are the reflections that have pressed themselves upon the mind while reading, in a letter from my brother, Rev. A. E. Goodwyn, the sad intelligence of the death of the Christian lady whose name stands at the head of this brief obituary. Having no data at hand to guide me, and fearing that memory may be at fault, I cannot state it as a fact, but my present impression is that during most of her life Sister Kilgore was a professor of the religion of Christ. I found her a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South when I first made her acquaintance, about twenty years ago. Her husband, Dr. William Kilgore, was then living. He died some four or five years ago, since which time she has resided mostly in the Attakapas country—at Franklin and New Iberia. At the latter place she departed this life, September 28, 1869, aged fifty-six years.

When the writer was appointed to the Franklin and Pattersonville circuit, in 1850, some time before reaching the charge a communication was received from Bro. and Sister Kilgore, kindly inviting himself and family to make their house a home during our stay on the work, unless some other provision should be made.—The invitation was thankfully accepted, and with them we remained the entire year; and in the best sense of the word they made it a home to us. In that home circle it was that I learned to regard Sister Kilgore as an amiable, pious and sweet-spirited woman; and the lapse of years has only confirmed me in the opinion which I then formed. Without being sectarian, Sister Kilgore was sincerely and devotedly attached to the church of her choice. It was her delight to attend upon the ordinances of God's house, to read and meditate upon his holy precepts. She made it her constant study and aim, by an upright walk and a godly conversation, to commend the religion of Christ to those around her. As long as she lived in a home of her own there was always a "prophet's room" in her house, and it seemed to be among the greatest pleasures of her life to entertain the ministers of Christ who visited or took up their abode for a time in her hospitable home.

Having met with her only at long intervals in the past twelve or fifteen years, I have no incidents connected with her religious history to record. From what I learn through others, and know myself personally, I feel that the truth is spoken when it is said that "to her to live was Christ, and to die was gain." Relatives and friends of the deceased, the heartfelt sympathies of the writer of this are hereby tendered to you, and he shares largely with you in the present sorrow. But, thanks be unto God, ours, in this instance, is a sorrow that is full of hope.

A MAN SEVENTY YEARS OLD.

I have had Catarrh over thirty years.

I have tried doctors and medicines almost without number, my strength constantly failing under their treatment, and without any relief from any one, until I commenced using Dr. WOLCOTT'S ANNIHILATOR for Catarrh. I hardly know how to express my gratitude for the wonderful benefit I have derived from its use. I owe my very life to Dr. Wolcott's Remedy; of this fact I am fully convinced. When I commenced using the Annihilator I only weighed 119 lbs.; my weight now is 140 pounds. This increase in solid flesh for a man of my years is the best proof of the efficacy of Wolcott's Annihilator, as I am now in my seventieth year.

SAMUEL SCHENDLER,
250 Washington st., Hoboken, N. J.,
August 6, 1869.

My father is proprietor of the Peconic House, Greenpoint, L. I. I had rheumatism over five years. A portion of this time I was unable to walk. My legs, my arms and my body also have been contracted and drawn up shorter, and became crooked in consequence of the severity of this disease. I have used out money without stint to doctors and for medicines, without any earthly benefit or use, until I felt almost completely discouraged and disheartened. My pain and sufferings were beyond all description, and no language that I can use can portray the agony I have endured. I saw Dr. Wolcott's advertisement day after day and month after month, but could not believe his PAIN PAINT could reach my case, although I heard many people give the strongest testimony in its favor. I finally was induced to purchase a quart or an $8 bottle of his Pain Paint. This small amount did wonders for me. It removed the most of my pain, but not my stiffness. I continued purchasing and using until I bought five quarts, and I can say without hesitation that I am entirely cured. I can use my limbs and every part of my body with as much freedom and strength as I ever did in my life. Wolcott's Pain Paint, I can say from experience, is the best remedy and the greatest invention ever offered to suffering humanity. Instead of its being a dear remedy at $8 a quart, it is really worth more than $100 a quart.

Dr. Wolcott's remedies are put up in white wrappers; buy none other. All who come to the office treated free of cost, and no dosing the stomach. All remittances should be by post office orders or registered letters or by express. R. L. SOUTHERN METHODIST HIGH SCHOOL,

NEW ORLEANS.

The exercises of the first session of this institution will commence on MONDAY, the 4th day of October next, in the basement of the German Methodist Church, Dryades street, between Felicity and Euterpe.

In founding this institution our purpose is to supply the desideratum long felt in this city, viz: an acknowledged Protestant School of a high order, in which boys and young men can be thoroughly prepared either for college or the active business of life.

The government of the School will be strict and firm, yet mild and parental in its administration. Thoroughness in the preparation of lessons will be uniformly required of all pupils.

The sons of ministers engaged wholly in the work of their Church will be received at half price; and young men preparing for the ministry without charge.

A Preparatory Department and an Evening School are attached.

In the selection of Teachers the greatest care will be exercised, not only in regard to their mental qualifications, but also in reference to their ability to impart instruction to their pupils.

For further information apply at the School.

HOW MUCH HAVE YOU LOST?

Little Charles was at school, and though just twelve years old, he was head of the class in arithmetic. His father had come home from his work, his mother was out that evening visiting a neighbor whose boy was very ill of inflammation of the lungs, Charles, sitting with a slate, on a stool near his father, said:

"Now, do please give me an account, and you will see how soon I will do it."

"Well, I will," his father replied.

"Are you ready? A rich lady once found lying at her door, one summer morning, a little baby wrapped in an old shawl. She could not find who laid it there; but she resolved to rear it, and gave it out to nurse, keeping an account of all it cost her. When the little baby had grown up a fine boy of twelve years of age, she wrote out the account thus:

A nurse for keeping infant for three years, at $100 a year	$300 00
Clothes for twelve years, at $20 a year	240 00
Food for twelve years, at $50 a year	600 00
Lodging for twelve years, at $25 a year	300 00
Teaching, books, etc., for six years, at $10 a year	60 00
Doctor and medicines, when the boy was ill, three times, $10, $5 and $10	25 00
Total	1,525 00

"Now tell me the sum of it."

Charles, after a little explanation, set to, and by multiplying found out the figures marked opposite each article, and adding, found that the little baby had cost the lady $1,525.

"How much money!" the boy exclaimed.

"Yes, it is indeed, Charles," said the father. "Do you think you could pay as much?"

"Oh, no! I have just one half dollar grandpapa gave me."

"Well, but, my boy, do you know you have to pay all that, and much more, to a kind lady?"

Charles stared.

"Yes! Are you not just twelve years old; and what kind lady nursed you, clothed and taught you? I thought Charles forget who did all this for him when he put on a sulky face this morning and went so slowly on mamma's errand to the baker!"

The little face was bent downward and covered with blushes.

"Let me see your account, Charles; there is something more to put down. For twelve years mamma has loved you, watched over you, prayed for you! No money can tell how much that love and these prayers are worth! When you grow up you might pay the $1,525; but how will you pay mamma for her love?'

Charles' eyes filled with tears. "I will not behave so again! I can never pay what I have cost her!"

When mamma came home Charles showed her the account. She kissed him, and said: "Oh! if my Charlie grows up to be a good man I will be well paid for all."—S. S. Star.

What Am I Going To Do?—One Sabbath morning a boy set off with some thoughtless companions to join a pleasure party. "What am I going to do?" he suddenly asked himself. "I am going to break the Sabbath. Suppose God should punish me for my wickedness." This thought made him turn back, and he spent the day in a proper manner.

One day he saw a lady drop her purse, which he ran and picked up, and walked off with it, lingering the money which it contained.

"What am I going to do?" came into his mind. "I am going away with a purse of money that does not belong to me," was the answer. "This is not honest. I shall be a thief if I do so. God has said: 'Thou shalt not steal.'"

In another moment he ran after the lady as fast as he could. She gave him a half dollar, and an honest half dollar is worth more at any time than a dishonest ten-dollar gold piece.

Had Cain asked himself what he was going to do when he set off to kill Abel, or Judas when he went out of the room to betray his Master, do you think that both of them would have been struck with horror at the crime they were about to commit? A bad act will not bear reflection.

The way to be happy is to do God's will; and so long as you do this you will never be afraid to ask yourself: "What am I going to do?" The way to be unhappy is to disobey God, and while you act thus the question, "What am I going to do?" will be a trouble to you.

When you are in doubt, and when you are tempted to do wrong, be sure and ask it. If you ask it, sincerely, it will help to put you right. Try the plan of putting to yourself the question in all your undertakings, "What am I going to do?" Should you find it useful, go on with it; and if you find it useless, you can give it up. Try this plan; it can do no harm, and it may do you much good.

SCIENTIFIC.

Use of Gun Cotton in Dentistry. This statement appears absurd at first, as if dentists used gun cotton as an explosive agent; but the fact is that quite recently the collodion made of gun cotton, hardened by evaporation, as a varnish, into thin sheets, has been used as a substitute for the objectionable vulcanized rubber, as a basis for support of false sets of teeth. For this purpose different sheets are softened by ether, and pressed together in the mold, which is made in a way similar to that in use for making the platinum or India rubber sets.

One of the objections to the vulcanized rubber sets of teeth is the dark color, which can only be corrected by vermilion, which gives it a reddish color, somewhat similar to that of the gums. Vermilion, however, being a compound of mercury, seriously affects the health of some persons, whose peculiar constitution renders them very sensitive to the influences of this pernicious metal.

In drying collodion contracts considerably, and the only additional trouble, in making objects of dry collodion, is to make the molds larger by repeated castings and re-castings in plaster; the plaster expending every time a little, the last meld obtained may be sufficiently enlarged to compensate for the shrinkage of the material. Sets of teeth made on collodion are much lighter and stronger than on any other material thus far employed for that purpose, and, no doubt, will soon come into general use in the United States, as the dentists of this country are among the most progressive in the world.—Druggists' Circular.

Peculiar Fish.—"We have," says Sir Charles Bell, "a curious instance of the precision of the eye and of the adaptation of muscular action in the beaked chætodon, a fish which inhabits the Indian rivers, and lives on the smaller aquatic Indian flies. When it observes one alighted upon a twig, or flying over (for it can shoot them on the wing,) it darts a drop of water with so steady an aim as to bring the fly down into the water, when it falls an easy prey. It will hit a fly at a distance of from three to six feet. Another fish of the same order, the Zeus, has the power of forming its mouth into a tube, and squirting at flies, so as to encumber their wings and bring them to the surface of the water." In these instances a difficulty will readily occur to the reader: How does the fish judge of position, since the rays of light are refracted at the surface of the water? Does instinct enable it to do this, or is it by experience? Now, Sir Charles Bell was one of the closest observers and the most trustworthy writers of his time, so that his authority is unquestionable.

Not to be Let Alone.—Ruskin correctly observes that "the notion of discipline and interference lies at the root of all human progress and power; that the 'let alone' principle is, in all things that man has to do with, the principle of death; it is ruin, certain and total, if he lets his land alone—if he lets his own soul alone. His whole life, on the contrary, must, if it is a healthy life, be continually one of plowing and pruning; and therefore it is only in the concession of some principle of restraint and interference in national action that we can hope to find the secret of protection against national degradation."

FARM AND GARDEN.

MAKING HOME PLEASANT.

Charles D. Copeland, of Lima, New York, writes to the Evangelist a sensible article on beautifying the homestead:

Housekeepers should never rest until home, hallowed by piety and virtue, is made the abode of contentment and delight; which husbands will enjoy as a sanctuary of rest, and children prefer as a place of recreation, rather than seek enjoyment in company that is vicious and ruinous. To this end, among other things, a fine flower garden is an indispensable appendage. In forming one:

1. Shape the beds tastefully.

2 Have the soil made rich and mellow.

3. Procure plants and seeds, the flowers of which are showy, and that are a long time in a blossoming stage—such as perpetual hybrid roses and althœas for shrubs; and for annuals the aster antirrhinum, balsam, dianthus, pansy, salpiglossis, zinnia and everlasting flowers.

4. Sow the seeds either under grass early for transplanting or in open beds, about the time of planting for early garden sauce.

5. Cover the seeds, especially those that are small, not more than one-eighth of an inch deep, sifting on very fine earth.

6. Keep the ground moist, but not soaking wet, by sprinkling on water just before evening.

7. Transplant a part when they come up thick. They blossom earlier and more perfectly when standing thin and growing stocky.

8. Select a few of the best plants to ripen seed, which should be gathered early for the next year.

9. When the first fine show of flowers is past cut back the plants, relieving from the top about one-third the length, and most of the varieties will throw out new branches, yielding a second crop of flowers.

10. Let the children of the family take part in their cultivation, and it will improve their health, refine their sensibilities, and create within them a love for home and home enjoyments.

In procuring fruit plants, a few only, and those of the best varieties, some of which are very early and others late in fruiting, should be sought for, namely, such as the cherry, Victoria and white grape currants; the Philadelphia, Doolittle, Davidson's Thornless and Mammoth Cluster raspberries for summer fruiting; and for autumn the Catawissa and Lum's Everbearing; for blackberries the Kittatinny, Early Wilson and Missouri Mammoth; for quinces the true orange; and for strawberries the Wilson's Albany is the best adapted to all localities so far as tested.

At a small expense these may be grown, and putting up the fruit in cans, jellies, jams and preserves, they supply in their fresh and preserved state a luxury the year round, both for the table and sick room. Happy the housekeeper who has a garden of fruits, a yard of flowers, a husband who loves his wife, and a surrounding family that looks to her as the centre of domestic bliss.

Butter Making.—I will not go into the details of churning, but must say that it is impossible to produce prime butter when it comes out of the churn salvy. It always should be in globules or particles at least as coarse as mustard seed, and not hardly stuck together. Remove it directly from the churn into cool water. It will float apart so that the water will come in contact with most of the milk, and separate it from the butter.

In the operation of taking it out of the churn gather it gently with a ladle, pressing the mass slightly together, and pour off the water. But be careful not to work it too much, as there is more butter injured by being worked too much and improperly than by not being worked enough.

Add a little salt, which will help to extract the milk, and toughen the grain of the butter; then put on more water, and work it a little by pressing lightly and turning it over; at all times avoid, as far as possible, all friction, for that will make butter salvy; no after treatment can restore it.

Butter should never be allowed to come in contact with any person's hands, for they will make it oily and sticky, even in cold weather, and with the utmost care.

The water should now be drained off, and at least one ounce of fine Ashton salt added to a pound of butter, if intended for long keeping. It should be worked this time only just enough to mix in the salt. Set it in a cool place for a short time, where it will harden, and a portion of the salt dissolve, when it may be worked a little more, mixing the fresh and salted portions together; then drain it again and allow it to stand until the next morning, and it will be firm and yellow.

Then it should be worked until it is a uniform mass, and until there is no buttermilk in the pickle or brine, which the salt has made. It will now be in condition for packing or for the market.

When properly manufactured and packed, butter can be kept for years in good preservation.—New England Farmer.

SOCIAL LIFE IN INDIA.

To comprehend domestic life among the Hindoos, let us take a look at one of their homes. The family is patriarchal. The father is the head; his sons bring their wives home one after another, the women occupying apartments by themselves. The Hindoo word for woman's apartment is "zenanna"—The women of the household mingle freely together, but John never sees the wife of his brother Joseph. Six or eight families, and three or four generations are sometimes seen under one roof, and when the house becomes thus populous, the head of the family has quite as much as he can attend to in settling family troubles.

Think of the life of those women They are wholly ignorant; they know not a letter of their language. Why should a woman learn to read? What would come of it? If they go to visit a neighbor, it must be in a close palanquin—their faces veiled. They know nothing except family gossip. They cannot do the plainest sewing. The little towhead on the lowest bench of an infant school in America, making patchwork, can use the needle more deftly than most of the millionaire Baboos.

Think of your little rosy-cheeked darling, who climbs upon your knee for her good night kiss, being affianced in marriage at the age of five years, shut up for the rest of her days with nothing to do—no knitting work, no bed quilts to make, no knowledge of needle work; surrounded with books, yet not knowing a letter; her room a blank wall; her daily duties for the remainder of her life being the performance of her daily puaja—a worship of a little brass or stone image in the form of a monkey, or a figure with six arms and four faces; hanging flowers around its neck, sprinkling it with water, bowing before it, walking around it, talking to it as little girls do to their dolls, lighting little wax tapers; nothing but this, except to dawdle her children, bring food to her husband, and eat her own, and rearrange the folds of cloth which answers for a garment; doing this, and sleeping the rest of her time, from morning till night, through the twenty-four hours, the weeks, the months, the years, from childhood to old age.

Such is the daily, unvarying life of the Hindoo women of the upper classes. The Baboos, who read Shakspeare, who know what is going on in America, even to the rappings of the spirits, who will discuss the theisms of Theodore Parker with you, are beginning to feel that there is an awkward gap in their system of life.

The Hindoo upper classes, who are too intellectual to be grossly sensual Baboos, repudiate Brigham Young. They are not polygamists; they are fond of their wives, and treat them with respect, and love their children, especially if they are sons. But there is no Eve in their paradise. They come home from their counting room when the day's work is done, read a play from Shakspeare, or an article from Blackwood, or Longfellow's last poem, and then comes the reflection that the wife, so far as this is concerned, is an idiot.

Many of the Baboos are now anxious to have their wives educated; but the women, knowing nothing of the sweets of knowledge, manifest but little desire to obtain an education. Yet they are desirous of learning embroidery. Those who have undertaken to do something toward raising the women of this land from their degradation have seized upon this, and are using it to great advantage.—Carlton in the Boston Journal.

It is a well known fact that no animal is more difficult to kill than a shark. One of these monsters of the deep was captured by the crew of the French clipper Rossignol, on its last cruise; and, being brought on deck, was made fast by the head and tail. The captain thereupon ordered some of his most experienced hands to rip it up from the lower jawbone to the tail with sharp knives, and to take out its heart, lungs, liver and entrails. This done, it was cast into the sea again, through which it swam with so much velocity that in a few seconds it was lost sight of. Although it could not possibly live long in this condition, it apparently swam with as much ease and energy as it did before receiving the mortal wound. New York Independent.

Speeches were delivered at the National Musical Convention at Boston, on the 23d ultimo, in favor of music as an element of worship. Satisfaction is expressed with the results of the convention.

THE BEST COOKING STOVE

FOR WOOD NOW IN USE.

THE FASHION.

We call especial attention to this Stove, which has been produced at great expense, combining all the new and important improvements; also to the extra height of the Oven under the fire chamber, the Patent Air Chamber Front Doors, and Patent White Enameled Iron Knobs, the improvements in the covers and centre pieces, all of which have been covered by Letters Patent, and are used in no other Stove. They are warranted to stand fire, or others sent free of charge in all cases. We have all sizes of this justly celebrated Stove, both the Extended Back with cast iron Enameled Reservoir and Faucet, Tin Warming Closet, Goldiron Cover, etc. The part of the top supporting the Reservoir is raised so that the flue is above the top plate, instead of below, as is the case in most of the Stoves now used, and the heat is forced directly against the whole surface of the bottom of the Reservoir. The Reservoir being detached from the pipe, can be removed at pleasure, thereby forming a six-hole Stove—the best in use, as the back holes will heat as well or better than the middle ones. For sale by G. W. W. GOODWYN, ever invented, in the estimation of all who have yet seen it. Patented in 1869.

PLAIN AND EXTENDED BACKS,

THE MONITOR,

which can be seen at 62 Camp street. The advantages possessed by this Stove over all the other Coal Cooking Stoves are so numerous, and so patent to every sensible observer, that it is only necessary to examine it in order to be convinced of its superiority.

All of the above Stoves are fitted with extra care, Oven Doors lined with tin, and furnished with William Resor's Patent Air Chamber, sliding front doors, patent centres, covers and White Enameled Knobs.

The operation of every Stove guaranteed.

Directions for putting up and using same accompany each Stove.

BRAN NEW LETTERS!

FRESH TESTIMONIALS.

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID,

THE ASTONISHING FAMILY MEDICINE.

Saved from Death!—Read!

MONTGOMERY, ALA., June 28, 1869.

MESSRS. J. DARBY & CO., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: Yours of the 23d is before me, and has attention. It gives me pleasure to say that my belief is that your "Fluid," under the supervision of a kind Providence, saved the life of my youngest child, some six years ago, the child being wasted to a skeleton by the effects of teething, and an affection of the bowels therewith. I had never seen any one reduced so low to recover.

"Physic" had been tried in vain, until the physicians stated it was useless. A friend recommended your "Fluid," or Ozone, which he stated was one of the component parts of it. I did so, and the effect was like magic, plainly discernible in one hour in its good effects, producing quiet and sleep almost at once, where irritation and sleepless restlessness had previously possessed the child to nearly entire exhaustion.

I at first administered it in a small way, two and three drops in a spoonful of water, and increased it to six and ten drops. It completely checked the bowels, and had the happiest effect, the child rapidly recovering.

I have tried your "Fluid" on animals, with the same effect—both horses and cows—mingling more or less in water, and letting them drink.

I have no hesitation in saying I believe it a specific for Chronic Diarrhea, or any violent affection of the bowels.

I would not be without it in my family under any consideration. Yours truly,

WILLIAM FOWLER.

Mr. Fowler is a member of the celebrated Banking House of Fowler & Somerville, Montgomery, Alabama.

AND AGAIN!

Read the following letter from Mr. Frank Saunders, a well known citizen, and brother-in-law of the beloved Bishop Peine, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

189 BROADWAY, N. Y., July 29, 1869.

MESSRS. J. DARBY & CO., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: About the 10th of June last one of my children was taken with Scarlet Fever, in its most malignant form, and as soon as I could I procured your valuable disinfectant, Darby's Prophylactic Fluid." Although it was several days after the appearance of the disease before I began using the Fluid, still, by a free use of it, the disease was not only confined to the one case, but the malignity of that case somewhat mitigated.

During the use of the Fluid as a disinfectant in my family it was also tried in a case of headache and one of toothache, the results in each case being instantaneous relief. It was afterward tried in a case of Erysipelas, with almost equal success.

It is due to the merits of this compound also, to state that the case of Erysipelas in question, being located in the feet, the Fluid, in its application, was brought in frequent contact with a troublesome corn on one of the feet, to the utter discomfiture of said corn, for, upon subsequent examination, it had disappeared, and though it was sought for diligently, it could not be found.

I hand you this, hoping it may be the means of inducing others of earth's poor sufferers to test for themselves, as I did, the great merits of this great remedy.

Very respectfully yours,

FRANK SAUNDERS.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution in the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge of its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market continues to exhibit a considerable degree of animation, without any great activity, the demand from the country having fallen off, but there being still a fair business in most branches of the wholesale trade. The supply of new sugar has been more liberal, and although buyers have not come forward with much spirit, yet most of the receipts have been disposed of at easier prices. Molasses, also, has arrived more freely, and been mostly taken from the landing, the market closing at a material falling off from the opening rates. Operations in Western produce have been confined to the local trade.

In our last report we noticed a continuance of fine weather, but toward the close there were some indications of a change, and on Friday night or Saturday morning we were visited by a violent storm of wind and rain, since which it has continued cloudy, cold and rainy, and excited some apprehensions with regard to the effect on the exposed cotton crop. In fact, we learn that on Saturday morning the storm was felt at Natchez, and in that vicinity, with even greater fury than in the city, and that cotton had suffered serious injury. We are not aware, however, of any disasters in other localities, but nevertheless look for further accounts with some concern. Nothing of any moment has transpired with regard to the sugar crop, which, it is hoped, will be somewhat in excess of last year's.

The river has fallen two inches since our last report, and is now eleven feet six inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 22d instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	11928

Mobile.....	519
Florida.....	15
Texas.....	62
Total.....	12581

On Saturday the movement commenced with a fair demand, but only a limited supply, and more stringent pretensions on the part of the factors, who contended for an advance of 1/16c., which buyers refused to pay. Operations were restricted accordingly, and the business was confined to 2,550 bales, at stiffer prices, without any quotable improvement. On Monday the offerings were more copious, especially after meridian, and with encouraging accounts from New York, and increased freight facilities, the demand was quite active, and the sales summed up 4,350 bales, at prices showing some irregularity, but on the whole an improvement of 1/4c. in strict good ordinary, and 1/8c. in the higher grades, the former ruling at 24 1/4c., and the latter at 24 1/2c. for low middling, 24 5/8c. for strict, and 24 7/8 to 25c. for middling. On Tuesday the market opened with only a limited inquiry, the movement being checked by rainy weather. Factors, moreover, were more stringent in their pretensions, and it was difficult to buy the descriptions most in request under 1/8c. advance on previous rates; 4,500 bales changed hands at our subjoined quotations.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 11,400 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 129,376 bales, against 129,354 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 84,656 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 30,690 bales to Great Britain, 3,655 to France, and of 8,588 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Good ordinary.....	24 to 24 1/4

READVILLE SEMINARY.

This is a private institution, with its number of pupils limited, and is authorized by the Legislature of Louisiana to confer degrees, diplomas and literary honors. It was in successful operation from 1843 until interrupted by the events of the war in 1862, and reopened January, 1867.

Teachers of a high grade of talent and merit are in charge of the different departments—English, Ancient and Modern Languages, Music, Painting, etc.

Pupils charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session. All pupils received with the understanding that they are to remain and attend the examination at the close of the session in which they enter, and no deduction made on the bills for absence, except in cases of protracted illness, when the loss may be divided between the institution and the patron.

In her outfit each pupil should be provided with toilet boxes, towels, napkins, sheets, pillow cases and blankets or comforts. She should also bring knife, fork, spoon, cup and napkin ring.

All articles and clothing brought to the Seminary should be distinctly marked, lists of which should be permanently placed on some part of the trunk convenient for reference. The scholastic year commences October 1 and ends in July.

EXPENSE.

Board and tuition per year..... $275 00
The Modern Languages a small extra charge.
Music, per year..... 75 00

Payments due a half session in advance.

Monthly reports of the studies, health and general deportment of the pupils are sent to the parents or guardians at a distance.

The main Seminary building, recently destroyed by fire, will be replaced by one of ample accommodations, now in process of construction, which will be ready for the reception of pupils at the opening of the next session.

For other information desirable in reference to the school apply to

SEMINARY FOR YOUNG LADIES,

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

E. A. GRANT, LL. D., PRINCIPAL.

This institution occupies the large and elegant building lately known as Grant & Bacier's School. The grounds are situated on Sixth street, between Walnut and Chestnut streets, and extend back to Centre street. They are elevated several feet above the street, thus making the large and beautiful lawn a most desirable place for healthful outdoor exercise.

The building, furniture and apparatus of the school are among the most complete and valuable in the West.

Experienced teachers, residing in the institution, will devote their time to the moral, intellectual and physical improvement of the pupils.

For particulars address the Principal.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1.—The Attorney General has pronounced illegal the sending of troops into States fully restored to the Union, to enforce laws. In consequence of this legal announcement, the President and Secretary of the Treasury are in earnest conference as to the proper course to be pursued when officers report that they cannot enforce the revenue laws without the military aid.—Picayune.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1.—The following is a fuller statement of the Supreme Court case, Thorington vs. Smyth & Hartley, in the bill in equity for the enforcement of a vendor's lien. Smyth & Hartley purchased Thorington's land, and gave a promissory note for part payment. The transaction occurred in 1864. Without modifying the circumstances, Thorington would be entitled to a decree for the amount and interest. The defense pleaded that only Confederate notes were current.

The land was worth only $3,000 real money; the contract price was $15,000, and $35 000 whereof was actually paid in Confederate notes, and the note for the remaining $10,000 was to be discharged in the same manner; and it is claimed, on this state of facts, that the vendor is entitled to no relief in the United States Court, which claim was sustained by the court below, and the case dismissed. The questions before the Supreme Court, on appeal, are:

1. Can a contract for the payment of Confederate notes made during the late rebellion, between parties residing within the so-called Confederate States, be enforced at all in the courts of the United States?

2. Can evidence be received to prove a promise expressed to be for the payment of any other currency than lawful dollars of the United States?

3 Does the evidence in the record establish the fact that the note for $10,000 was to be paid by agreement of the parties in Confederate notes?

The first question is answered affirmatively.

The second question is answered affirmatively, with the following remarks: We are clearly of the opinion that such evidence must be received in respect to such contract, in order that justice may be done between the parties, and that the party entitled to be paid in these Confederate dollars can only receive their actual value at the time and place of the contract, in lawful money of the United States.

On the third question the court says: We do not think it necessary to go into a detailed examination of the evidence in the record. It is enough to say that it has left no doubt on our minds that the note for $10,000, to enforce the payment of which suit was brought in the Circuit Court, was not to be paid by any agreement of the parties in Confederate notes.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2.—The Supreme Court heard to-day the Grapeshot case from New Orleans. This case involves the question of the constitutionality of President Lincoln's provisional courts in the subjugated portions of the country. It is contended that such courts being invalid, the subsequent action of Congress cannot give validity to their decrees.

General Belknap, the new Secretary of War, being serenaded, made a speech in which he favors extension of suffrage, but made no allusion to Texas or Mississippi. He said his State's record was as bright as the brightest—her eighty thousand troops had no feeling of hostility toward the South.

Reports from Republican sources state that New York city has gone Democratic by forty thousand majority. Reports from heavy Republican counties show a falling off of majorities on account of comparatively light vote.

MISCELLANEOUS.

RALEIGH, N. C., Oct. 2.—The negro militia excitement remains unabated. A company has been sent to the upper part of Wake county and are creating much disturbance, making threats and insulting females. A party waited on the Governor today, on the subject, but got no satisfaction. The militia are all negroes, even the officers. A collision is considered inevitable unless these troops are withdrawn, for the people are wearied almost past endurance. Reflecting citizens condemn the whole movement as unnecessary and unwise.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 2.—The twenty-two votes by the Board of Education last night for excluding the Bible from the public schools were divided as follows: Ten were Republicans and twelve Democrats; nominal religion—three Protestants, ten Catholics, eight free thinkers, one Jew. Of the fifteen votes against excluding, twelve were Republicans and three Democrats; nominal religion—thirteen Protestants, one free thinker and one Jew.

The champion of the party for the expulsion was the Rev. Thomas H. Vickers, left wing. Liberal champion for retaining the Bible, Rev. A. D. Mayo, Unitarian.

The resolutions forbid the use in the schools of religious books, or the singing of sacred songs.

THE ELECTIONS.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 2.—Every precinct has gone Democratic. The vote is light. Majority in this city nine thousand.

CAIRO, Nov. 3.—This city gives a Democratic majority of 230.

WHEELING, W. VA., Nov. 3.—Returns received from thirty nine counties give Lower House 15 Republicans, 9 Liberal Republicans, and 21 Democrats. Eleven counties to hear from.

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 3.—The result of yesterday's election is: Senate, Democrats 13; Republicans 8. House, Democrats 33; Republicans 4. The Democrats gain 4 on joint ballot.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—The latest returns received indicate that the Democratic majority is from 7,000 to 10,000. Senate, 17 Democrats, 15 Republicans; Democrats gain 2. The House is very close; present estimates give House 66 Republicans and 62 Democrats; several districts doubtful.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 3.—In New Jersey the Democrats gain 1 Senator and 2 Assemblymen.

The Democrats carried Leavenworth and Atchison at the State election in Kansas.

The Lower House of the Massachusetts Legislature stands: Prohibitionists 75, Licensists 123.

THE cable telegraph reports the death of the Marquis of Westminster. It is noticeable from the fact that he was the richest nobleman in England. He owns, besides family estates in various counties, whole miles of lots in London and Westminster, covered with houses built on his grounds, of which the leases are soon to fall in. Years ago his revenue was estimated to exceed £1,000 a day, and it is increasing constantly. In a few years—when his grandson, son of his successor, comes of age—it is computed that he will have an income from rents of more than £2,000,000 ($10,000,000) per annum. The late Lord was distinguished for nothing but his wealth. His successor is his son, known as Earl Grosvenor, whose son—heretofore called Lord Belgrave—will be known by the courtesy title of Earl Grosvenor.

If the family estate could be equally divided it would make all of them rich, for the late Marquis had thirteen children, of whom eleven are living; but by the law of primogeniture entail the eldest born takes nearly all.—New Orleans Picayune.

EUROPE.

MADRID, Nov 1.—The prospect of an agreement in the Cortes on the choice of a king improves. One hundred and forty-nine deputies are pledged to vote for the Duke of Genoa.

A ministerial crisis is still pending. General Prim is strenuously endeavoring to keep at least one Unionist in the cabinet.

LONDON, Nov. 2.—The Suez Canal is twenty feet deep, which excludes the Empress Eugenie's yacht, the Aigle Eugenie. Another yacht of less draft has been ordered.

PARIS, Nov. 2.—There was a great crowd at Montre-Marto cemetery. Everything perfectly quiet.

MADRID, Nov. 2.—The cabinet has been in part reconstructed. Martaz was appointed foreign secretary and Figuerola minister of finance.

FRANKFORT, Nov. 2.—There were quite heavy shocks of an earthquake last evening throughout Germany, but particularly at Darmstadt, Wiesbaden, Mayence and also in this city.

LONDON, Nov 3.—The Times, today, in an article on the influence of Rome, says: The Catholic Church must be withdrawn from an undue Roman preponderance and the city of Rome from an ecclesiastical domination. It is only by ceasing to be an Italian sovereign that the Pope can aspire to become an universal pontiff.

MADRID, Nov. 3.—General Prim today presented to the Cortes the members of the constituted ministry. He declared the government would remain faithful to the principles of the revolution.

The opposition to the Duke of Genoa is still so large and determined that it is feared there is no chance of his election.

LETTER FROM CHINA.

MR. EDITOR: As we take a survey of the field of missionary labor now and compare its present prospect with that of twenty years past, we are greatly encouraged. No one can say the cause, the glorious cause, in which we are engaged in a heathen land is not gaining ground. The doors which have been for so many ages sealed are now being opened, and they can no more close them. The missionary who labors among this populous people benefits not only one village or a few people, but it extends to untold thousands. The work of those who are faithful will go on long after they have become silent in the tomb. It is a glorious work, and we see light ahead of us rising up out of this Egyptian darkness and mass of corruption. God will cause the wrath of man to praise him. To God be all the praise. Those who wish to give themselves up to this work should make up their minds to devote their lives to it, depending alone on the divine blessing. Great changes are taking place now in Japan and in China, and we have every reason to be greatly encouraged. Twenty years ago we could number in China but about three hundred converts to Christianity, and now there are over six thousand. The great question in China and in Japan among their leading men is: "How shall we deal with the religion of Jesus?" In Japan for several hundred years the Christian religion has been proscribed, and the penalty of death passed upon all who dare accept of that faith. They were hunted in the mountains and caves; they were imprisoned and tortured, and thousands of Roman Catholics were slain. The cross has been annually trampled upon by the officials, and a stone erected, stating the true state of feeling in these words: "If the God of that religion himself should come to Japan he would be put to death." But with all the espionage of the Japanese they have not been able to drive the Christians or their religion from the country, and they have recently, to the astonishment of every one, deliberated in their Senate as to what course they should pursue in reference to this religion. Their Senate is now in session, and one of the first questions which came up in that body, and was discussed with a great deal of warmth, was: "What policy shall we adopt in regard to this religion of Jesus?" After a lengthy discussion on the subject they concluded it was no longer best to use force, and that some other course must be pursued. It was at last agreed that the religion of Jesus should be put on a par with the Buddhist religion. Their deliberations were to this effect: that they must frown upon the religion of Jesus, treat it with contempt, and persuade the people that the old way was the best. They should worship the spirits of their hills and valleys, and of their rivers, as their fathers had done before them, and treat with contempt this religion of Jesus. They have found that they cannot keep out from their country the Christian religion. Just one week since the magistrate of Nagasaka, Japan, arrested six or seven Roman Catholics and had them arraigned before him and tried. He told them they knew the penalty of believing in this religion of Jesus, and asked them if they would recant. They replied they could not do it. He then said to them: "You must then suffer the full penalty of the law," and they were hurried off to prison. They fully expected in a few hours to face death. But to their astonishment, on the next day the same magistrate, like the magistrate at Philipi, came himself, quietly opened the door of their prison, and quietly said to them: "Go to your homes." These few Christians could scarcely believe what they saw. They could not understand it. It is supposed he had just heard of the action which had been taken in the Japanese Senate at Yeddo, and he feared the consequences of his action. Surely this is a step in advance. There is a great deal gained, though the Christian religion should be placed upon a par with the Buddhist religion. Thanks be to God, the Christian religion is there as well as in China, and no power of earth can drive it from the country. We see the same agitating the minds of those in authority in this great empire. They are presenting secret memorials to the Emperor, inquiring as to what policy they shall pursue in regard to this religious question. They see that it is getting a foothold in the country and they must be brought face to face with it. They are at a loss to know what to do with it. The subject troubles them.

But the Christian religion is here, and they cannot banish it from the country. It has a great and glorious work to perform. They may persecute the native Christian and slay the missionary, but the work is God's work and will still go on. Native Christians are receiving persecution in every part of this empire. But a few weeks since a native Christian, who was also a preacher in the north of China, was most brutally treated by one of the officials, which shows how little regard many of the Chinese officials have for treaty stipulations. This native preacher supported himself, and was a most zealous and efficient man in the work. He had rented a house in the city of Chowyuen, where he was conducting his labors with good effect, when suddenly he and his landlord were summoned to appear before the city magistrate. The landlord was accused of inviting "devils," foreigners, into the city, and for this he was beaten two hundred blows. The Christian preacher was then called and accused of the great crime of embracing the religion of the "foreign devils," and attempting to delude the people by preaching a false and dangerous doctrine. This Christian man referred to the clause in the treaty relating to Christianity. In answer to the questions of this magistrate, he went on to give an account of the Christian religion, speaking of a future state of rewards and punishment, and of the salvation of all men through the suffering and death of Christ. At this time the officer exclaimed: "Then Jesus suffered in your stead, did he?" This Christian man replied: "He certainly did." Immediately the magistrate ordered him to be beaten with fifty blows. After he had received forty-seven blows, and the blood flowing freely from the wounds, the officer asked him, in a sneering manner: "Can Jesus hear that for you?" He was then remanded to prison. In the evening he was called and told by the magistrate he would send him to his own city, that the magistrate there might beat him to death. The next morning, with chains around his neck and in manacles, with an escort of five Yamun underlings, he was taken about forty miles, suffering much from his wounds. The next day he was ordered before the magistrate and commanded to make confession of his guilt, which he again refused to do. The official dispatch containing the charges was thrown into his face. It read thus: "Miao Hwayu, under the false guise of preaching religion in connection with a Mr. Mateer, took forcible possession of a house in the eastern suburbs of this city. He makes use of mysterious arts to deceive the people. It is his purpose, in connection with the foreigner Mateer, some time in the eighth month, to kill the officers and raise an insurrection."

He was then beaten with three hundred blows, with one hundred additional blows on the face, in order to force from him a confession of this accusation. The next day he was examined at great length with reference to the doctrines he preached.

The magistrate seems to have satisfied himself that the charges were false. He ordered that Miao's chains should be taken off, and that he should receive no further ill treatment. He also sent for the leading men of his village, and they testified to his being a good citizen. He then called for his accusers, but none were to be found.—This officer seemed afraid to take the responsibility of releasing him, so he still remains in prison. Steps have been taken to have him released from prison. Such is a brief account of what one of these native Christians has suffered for the cause of Christ, without renouncing his faith in him as his Saviour.

I might mention many others, but I come now to relate the sad news of the murder of one of our best missionaries and a faithful man of God. It has just occurred, and is most painful to us all. This sad news has cast a gloom over the whole missionary circle in China. A week since we were startled by the news of the murder of Rev. Mr. Williamson, of the London Missionary Society at Trintsin. In company with Rev. Mr. Hodge, of the English Methodist New Connection, they were going to one of their out-stations, when, late at night, they were attacked by robbers while asleep in their boat. Mr. Williamson, going on to the bow of the boat first, was killed instantly. Mr. Hodge was awakened by the noise, and, going out, saw about twenty ruffians with swords ready to strike, and not seeing Mr. Williamson, supposed he had escaped, and he himself tried to jump ashore. He succeeded in making his escape, but not without some severe bruises and a serious shock to his nervous system. The robbers then plundered the boat and made good their escape. It is supposed now that they were Chinese soldiers. Rev. Mr. Williamson's body was not recovered until the third day after the murder.—Both of these dear brethren were well known to me. Thus the blood of another missionary has stained the soil of China. It unites the bond of Christian love and union among all missionaries more firmly. They are more determined than ever to prosecute with all ardor and zeal the glorious commission of their divine Master. They will never cease to warn and exhort this dying heathen people.

And now, my dear Christian brethren, I would entreat of you a daily interest in your prayers to God. My work lies, for the most part, in the country, and there I must go; but my trust is in the Lord. I dare not say my life is my own. As we go among this heathen people we know not what awaits us. I am willing to suffer for the cause of Christ, my Lord, if it is the will of God. I feel it my duty to go. Many years have I labored among this people, and have traveled many miles among them. So far they have never disturbed me, save to throw stones or use abusive language. God has been my helper and my shield. My trust shall ever be in him. Pray for me; and may the blessing of God rest upon us and upon all his people.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A GREEK GRAMMAR FOR BEGINNERS. By William Henry Waddell, professor of ancient languages in the University of Georgia. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers, Franklin square. 1869.

This is a convenient volume of about one hundred pages. The type is clear, and the Greek letter is nowhere blurred. The perfection and beauty of the print will contribute something toward reconciling the boys who use it to the task of memorizing such a mass of declensions and rugged conjugations. The book will prove a convenience, we have no doubt, and supply a felt want.

HISTORY OF JOSEPH BONAPARTE, KING OF NAPLES AND OF ITALY. By John S. C. Abbott. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers. 1869.

This is a neat 12mo of three hundred and ninety-one pages. The subject of this historical work was a subordinate actor in the great events of Europe in the time of the first Napoleon, and he was associated with the great men and the military and political affairs of the empire. The author is generally very readable, if not always accurate. He states in the preface that President Lincoln highly appreciated "Abbott's Series of Historics," and that he "read them with the greatest interest." After such a testimony we suppose no further commendation is necessary.

SCENES OF CLERICAL LIFE AND SILAS MARNER. With illustrations. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers.

This is volume four of the novels of George Eliot, now being issued by the Harpers in a uniform edition. We have hitherto characterized George Eliot as the greatest of novelists. This volume, already familiar to many of our readers, is not inferior to her other works. The moral is good, the interest sustained. The language seems to flow from the very well-head of English undefiled.

THE MINISTER'S WIFE. By Mrs. Oliphant. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1869.

We shall turn this over to "the lady of the house." Mrs. Oliphant has written much, and has been before the public for a good while. The scene of the Minister's Wife is laid in Scotland, and Scotch life and religion are graphically described.

PEG WOFFINGTON, CHAISTIE JOHNSTONE AND OTHER STORIES. By Charles Reade.

Here are seven different stories, of which the two longer ones are mentioned in the title.

All the above noticed books are for sale by George Ellis, opposite the post office, New Orleans.

THE CHORAL TRIBUTE. A collection of new church music. By L. A. Emerson. Boston: Oliver Ditson & Co.

This work has the reputation of being an excellent thing in its way. It is noticed favorably by many who are competent to give opinions on the subject.

PERIODICALS.

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE FOR NOVEMBER. A monthly of recreation and instruction. Profusely illustrated. Edited by Rev. Thomas Guthrie, D. D.

This is truly, in many respects, one of the grandest and best of the magazines of Europe or America. It is republished by J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia, and in respect to letter press and illustration is a fac simile of the English edition. Dr. Guthrie's name is a sufficient warrant of its religious tone and literary merit.

THE AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST FOR NOVEMBER, 1869. Published by Orange Judd & Co., New York.

As usual it is richly freighted with all that is new and useful in the various departments of agriculture; and the present number is illustrated more splendidly and profusely than hitherto.

LAURA, MY DARLING.

Laura, my darling, the roses have blushed
At the kiss of the dew, and our chamber is hushed;
Our murmuring babe to your bosom has clung,
And hears in his slumber the song that you sung;
I watch you asleep, with your arms round him thrown,
Your locks of dark tresses wound in with his own,
And the wife is as dear as the gentle young bride
Of the hour when you first, darling, came to my side.

Laura, my darling, our sail down the stream
Of youth's summers and winters has been like a dream;
Years have but rounded your womanly grace,
And added their spell to the light of your face;
Your soul is the same as though part were not given
To the two, like yourself, sent to bless me from heaven—
Dear lives, springing forth from the life of my life,
To make you more near, darling, mother and wife!

Laura, my darling, there's hazel-eyed Fred,
Asleep in his own tiny cot by the bed,
And little King Arthur, whose curls have the art
Of winding their tendrils so close round my heart;
Yet fairer than either, and dearer than both,
Is the true one who gave me in girlhood her troth;
For we, when we mated for evil and good,
What were we, darling, but babes in the wood?

Laura, my darling, the years which have flown
Brought few of the prizes I pledged to my own.
I said that no sorrow should roughen her way;
Her life should be cloudless—a long summer's day.
Shadow and sunshine, thistles and flowers,
Which of the two, darling, most have been ours?
Yet to-night, by the smile on your lips I can see
You are dreaming of me, darling, dreaming of me.

Laura, my darling, the stars that we knew
In our youth are still shining as tender and true;
The midnight is sounding its slumberous bell,
And I come to the one who has loved me so well.
Wake, darling, wake, for my vigil is done;
What shall dissever our lives, which are one?
Say, while the rose listens under her breath,
"Naught until death, darling, naught until death!"

OUR CHURCH IN CALIFORNIA.

MR. EDITOR: The year just closed and the session of our Conference recently held are regarded by the pioneer preachers here as the most remarkable in the history of our church on this coast. With very few exceptions the preachers came up to Conference with new coats and shining countenances—faithful indexes of the joyful news of a successful year's labor about to be reported.

This is the tenth Conference I have attended—before the war, during the war, since the war—in Alabama and in California, and it surpassed them all for prayerfulness, revival spirit, good reports from the work, and zeal for the cause.

Our numbers became increased by a large number of valuable transfers—four from the Columbia Conference; Rev. Abram Adams, from the Mobile Conference; Rev. John P. Jones, from the Montgomery Conference; Rev. G. W. Flemming, from the Texas Conference, and Rev. John L. Brown, from the Louisville Conference. Rev. Ivy H. Cox, also formerly of the Texas Conference, was reported in south California, and appointed to San Diago.—These numerous additions so increased our numbers that we became entitled to three delegates to the General Conference. Two former members of the Conference, who located only one year ago, were readmitted, full of devotion and zeal. During the past year none have died, and at this Conference only one located.

These facts show the spirit of our affairs in California. Three years ago Bishop Kavanaugh came out expecting to wind up our affairs on this coast. An almost universal spirit of despondency and gloom prevailed among preachers and people. Under the apprehension that the approaching session of the Conference would be our funeral day, certain parties, who expected to administer on our estate, became all at once very friendly and brotherly—invited Bishop Kavanaugh to preach in their pulpits, dedicate their churches, etc. But when the Conference met at Petaluma, by the influence, as we trust, of that Divine Providence which watches over all such assemblies, certain brave spirits were raised up, who said: "No; we have no thought of disbanding!" Instead of dying we began to live anew, and from that day have lived and grown healthily and vigorously. (Permit me to add, by way of parenthesis, just in a whisper, all to ourselves, that the good and great Bishop remained in the State a whole year, but received no further courtesies from our near neighbors.)

Well, God has given grace and strength. Both our material and spiritual force has been increased. More than a year ago a good Providence sent us that "master in Israel," Bishop Marvin. He found us embarrassed by several troublesome trials in the Conference, and heard the same old irrepressible if making itself prominent at the head of such sentences as these: "If we continue on this coast;" "If our church prospers here;" "If we maintain our ground," etc. First disturbed by this unpleasant sound, then roused to battle, he declared to the Conference that the if must be ostracised. Every man in the Conference was ready for the decision. Through the past year of faithful labor, devout prayer and patient faith our worthy Bishop has led us, not so much by precept as by example, and the if, which truly has been the very worst obstacle to our success here, I humbly believe is forever ostracised. I did not hear it at our recent Conference, except when spoken of as a thing of the past. The attitude of our Conference at the present is that of confident strength, and implicit faith that the Lord is with us, and that we have a great work to do on this coast. The minutes of the recent session of the California Conference of the Methodist E. Church (North) show a decrease of one hundred and ten members, while ours show an increase of five hundred and seventy-two. (Here comes in another parenthesis, and I mention that at our recent session we received fraternal messengers from them, expressing much love and desire for more friendly relations.)

Let that parenthesis stand by itself; and also permit me to remark that the affair was really pleasant, and an indication of good to ours and the universal Zion. There is not a Conference in our connection which holds more firmly to the centre than ours does; and our brethren of the other side have found it out, and respect us accordingly. The fraternal messengers above referred to were sent, we believe, with true Christian spirit and good will. We received them with all courtesy, and sent like messengers in return, but gave them positively to understand that all proper fraternity and Christian union could exist without any thought on our part whatever of organic union.

A year ago we organized the Los Angeles district as a missionary field, sending only three of our preachers from the Conference to occupy that large territory. The result has been a blaze of revival, the organization of many circuits, served by local preachers, the building of a large academy, now called and expecting soon to be a college, and four hundred and five members reported. So largely does the country open up before us in that direction, and so rapidly does it fill up with people from the South, as it is too remote to be conveniently connected with our Conference, we have petitioned the General Conference to organize a new Conference, to be styled the Los Angeles. I will add that all that I have heard or read of that part of the State is in its favor. It is universally spoken of as a delightful climate and amazingly fertile soil. Our presiding elder there told me that from one hundred to one hundred and fifty bushels of corn per acre was not an unusual crop. It is the finest grape country in California, and oranges, English walnuts and very many other fruits grow in great abundance.

I am sorry to add that Brother J. F. Scurlock, who came to us one year ago from the Louisiana Conference, was attacked during the year with an affection of his throat, so serious as to stop him from preaching. His physician gave him no encouragement to hope for a recovery in the peculiar climates of California, and advised his return to the Gulf States. Accordingly he transfers back to his former home. He had served the Healdsburg station here, and won the sympathy and esteem of many of our preachers whose acquaintance he had more intimately formed.

To those of your readers who take a personal interest in your correspondent, permit me to say that I have had a laborious but successful year in San Francisco, and am returned to my church another year. With a membership increased one-half and our financial condition much improved, our faith in God's mercy and goodness firmer than ever, and a determination to do and suffer for the cause of Christ, we hope for a year of greater prosperity than ever before.

JESSE WOOD.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 15, 1869.

BRANDON DISTRICT MEETING.

The third annual District Meeting was held at Forest, Mississippi, October 15 and 16. There was no Bishop; hence the presiding elder occupied the chair.

The meeting was marked with decided interest. Committees were appointed upon the following subjects: State of the church, the importance of infant baptism and the relation of baptized children to the church, Sabbath schools (denominational and union,) church literature, and Bible cause.

The committees were prompt in the performance of their duties. We extract from the report of the Committee on the State of the Church as follows: "This Conference year has been marked by gracious revivals of religion within the bounds of the district. The result of protracted meetings has been highly encouraging. There is a manifest improvement in the spirituality of the membership. Accessions have been numerous, and in many instances embraced the heads of families, as well as the lambs of the flock. We regret that we cannot give the exact number who joined the church, but feel authorized to say that the number is between three hundred and fifty and four hundred."

CHURCH LITERATURE.

"The world is filled with books and periodicals, but a large majority of them tend to vitiate the taste, corrupt the heart, and fill the mind with error fatal to the interest of pure religion. It is our duty, as ministers and official members of the church, to supersede these by circulating a purely religious literature. We have in our Depository in New Orleans an adequate supply of books and tracts, such as our people need for themselves and for their children; and the weekly visits of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE ought to be the pastor's assistant in every Methodist family. We would like to see another effort made to publish a religious paper in our State, and we hold ourselves in readiness to support such an enterprise."

BIBLE CAUSE.

"We hail with pleasure the reports of the great American Bible Society, and the annual reports of our Southwestern Bible Society, located at 163 Camp street, New Orleans, an arm or branch of the parent society. Rev. J. W. Harmon, the efficient agent for the Southwestern Bible Society, in his field of labor for the last two years, has reorganized twenty-seven Bible societies, and also distributed in the southern part of Mississippi upward of $3,000 worth of Bibles and Testaments."

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

The import of the committee is as follows: Sabbath schools, union and denominational, are productive of much good; yet in every instance, wherever practicable, Methodist schools should have the pre-eminence; and especially do we insist that our people patronize our Publishing House in the purchase of suitable books, that our children may be properly indoctrinated.

IMPORTANCE OF INFANT BAPTISM AND THE RELATION OF BAPTIZED CHILDREN TO THE CHURCH.

Upon this subject the committee admits that there is a manifest neglect, on the part of some who profess to love our doctrine and discipline, to have their children baptized. "This neglect gives our opponents—pedo Baptists—an undue advantage of us, which does, in all probability, more to impede our progress than all the arguments they can offer against our faith and practice."

Baptism is a sign and seal of God's covenanted mercies; hence should be administered to all, adults and infants.

God declared to Abraham that every uncircumcised child should be "cut off from his people;" and as we have the same God and church, and as the law of circumcision was repealed and baptism substituted, we therefore see the importance of baptizing our children; and if we fail to do our duty God may visit us or our children in wrath for our negligence.

Christ regarded little children as being members of his church or kingdom; and as none can be members thereof without baptism, it is therefore advisable, and, as we believe, a matter of vital importance, that our children should be baptized.

After baptism they should be regarded members of the church.—They are or they are not. If they are not, in what sense is the church or children benefited by their baptism? If they are not made members by their baptism they are not members. If they are members, why should we have a rule in the Discipline which requires them to make a profession of faith in Christ? See Discipline, chapter 3, section 1. Again, if they are not members, why should we pray thus: "And ever remain in the number of thy faithful and elect children, through Jesus Christ our Lord?"

In conclusion I will say that I have given a synopsis of the business transacted. I have also given the import of the reports, except the extracts, which are given verbatim.

THE DANCE.—What a strange thing, says the Moravian, this dancing is, after all, when you look at it from a philosophical, or, if you please, unsophisticated point of view. The other day Insulanus asked a lady how it came to pass that the entrance upon the floor of the ball room made such a wonderful change in her usual manners and habits. She asked him what he meant, as she did not understand. He asked her: "Suppose I introduced you to a friend of mine, a stranger, and he would not only take your hand, but put his arm around you, what would you do?" You may imagine her look and answer. What would she do? All our lady readers know what they would do, and what the father, husband or brother of such a lady would do. "But," said Insulanus, "as soon as you enter the room of the hop or ball you permit a perfect stranger, who is introduced to you at the time, not only to take your hand, but to put his arm around your waist, and to sail around the room with you in the giddy mazes of the dance, and your father, brother and husband think it is all right!"

A PLAN is reported in Italy to cut a ship canal through the peninsula between Rome and Ancona. The cost is estimated at $60,000,000.

Marianna District Meeting, Montgomery Conference.

MR. EDITOR: This body convened at Gordon, Alabama, on the morning of the 14th instant, Rev. W. B. Dennis, presiding elder, in the chair. The secretary selected for the occasion was Rev. A. M. Gillespie.

As to church property the district is not very rich. We have not many magnificent churches, with high steeples, calling the congregations together with deep-toned bells, yet we have some good church houses, but not a many of those as we ought to have. Much room for improvement in this line. But little interest has been manifested in procuring houses for the comfort and convenience of preachers and their families. Up to this year the district could boast but two parsonages—one at Greenwood, the other at Westville, on the Genova circuit. The people of Haw Ridge circuit are now building a parsonage at Ozark, which will be ready by next year. Steps are now being taken to erect a district parsonage at Newton.

The Committee on Finance was composed entirely of laymen. They recommended the plan of assessing the heads of families according to their ability to pay. Of the many good things this report contains, suffer one extract: "Your committee would urge the great necessity of appointing men of the right stamp to the office of steward, remembering that a steward of small ideas serves only to cheat the preacher out of his small but well earned dues." The preachers on the district are all cheerful, hoping for better times; though they have not been well supported. Preachers' salaries in this country are like the proceeds of a cotton crop—realized at the end of the year, and subject to many contingencies.

The report on church literature, so far as periodicals are concerned, stands thus: Christian Advocates, fifty-eight; Sunday School Visitors, seventy two. The report on this subject was not full, so we may make additions to the above figures. But after making all these necessary allowances these figures tell a mournful tale, considering we have some two thousand five hundred members in the district. The great drawback here is the want of proper mail facilities. When the contemplated Southeastern Alabama Railroad is built, I think you may turn your eye to this country with the hope of having the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE spread widely among the Methodists of this district, as we will then have direct mail communication with New Orleans.

The Committee on Temperance found it necessary to come out very decidedly against the use of ardent spirits. It is a shame that a member of the church will disgrace himself and his family and his church by drunkenness, or even by drinking spirituous liquors, unless in cases of actual necessity.

The spiritual state of the church is reported as improving. In the judgment of the committee on this subject, "It is to be feared that, as a church, while we strive to push forward the Redeemer's kingdom in the way of having souls converted, we do not give attention to the spiritual growth of our members." In their report they refer to the doctrine of holiness, and to both private and family prayer, and also to class meetings, and urge these upon the members of the church as altogether worthy of their attention.

The Sabbath school report, compared with the report of last year, shows an increase in the number of schools in the district. The preachers and people are waking up to the importance of this subject. The Sabbath school, in connection with parental training, is being looked to as the hope of the rising generation. Much has been done; more remains to be done. Last year a district Sabbath school association was formed, the constitution thereof requiring an anniversary to be held every year at the time and place of holding the District Meeting. The anniversary of this association was held on Saturday night. Rev. C. L. McCartha, of Lawrenceville, addressed the audience on the manner of conducting Sabbath schools, giving us some excellent hints, at the close of which a few racy remarks on the money question were made by one of the members, and then a very respectable collection was raised for Sabbath school purposes. The report calls for a district Sabbath school convention to be held next year, embracing the first Sabbath in July.

The Committee on Denominational education submitted a report recommending denominational schools in general, and the East Alabama Male College and the Tuskegee Female College in particular. In the bounds of the district but two are attending denominational schools.

WM. A. SAMPEY.

NEWTON, ALA., Oct. 21, 1869.

VENUS IN 1874.—In the winter of 1874 there will occur one of those interesting phenomena by which nature occasionally teaches men useful lessons respecting her economy. We refer to the transit of Venus on December 8 in that year. One of the most effective modes of observing this transit will require that a party of scientific men should penetrate far within the recesses of the desolate antarctic circle. Where are the trained arctic seamen to be found who will venture upon this service? Most of our noted arctic voyagers have earned their rest; and as Commander Davis said at a recent meeting of the Geographical Society, those who go for the first time into the arctic or antarctic solitudes are too much tried by the effects of the new experience to be fit to undertake important scientific labors. He spoke with special reference to the transit of 1882, before the occurrence of which there is fully time to train a new school of arctic voyagers. It is just possible that for the transit of 1874 trained explorers belonging to the old school of arctic travel may still be found. But if not, no time should be lost in supplying the deficiency. It has only been discovered within the last few months that journeys to the antarctic will be required as much for this transit as for the other. The Astronomer Royal has expressed his desire that the discovery may be rendered available by suitable expeditions. "Every series of observations," he remarks, "which can really be brought to bear upon this important determination will be valuable."—Therefore, for this reason alone, and even if the reputation of England in the matter of arctic travel were altogether worthless, it would be well that efforts should quickly be made to prepare crews and commanders for the work of 1874 by "sending them to school," as Commander Davis expressed it, "in the arctic seas."—St. Paul's Magazine.

ARE MISSIONS A FAILURE?—At a recent ordination in Auburn, New York, of four members of the graduating class in the seminary as missionaries, Rev. Dr. Clark, of the American Board, preached the sermon, and gave the following interesting summary of what had been accomplished in the foreign missionary field:

"Eighty-one years ago Carey felt called to be a missionary. That was the beginning of the modern missionary movement. Now there are 42 societies, with 1,800 missionaries, engaged in giving the Gospel to the heathen. Sixty years ago the American Board was not in existence; now it has 200 churches, and has, reckoned in all, 70,000 converts. Sixty years ago nothing had been done in the South seas; now there are 800 native preachers, and 200,000 communicants. There are 100 preachers in Madagascar; 600 missionaries in India; 20,000 communicants in South Africa; 15,000 on the west coast of Africa; 100 native churches in Turkey and Persia; 40,000 people taught to read in the past twelve years from a single station of the American Board in Eastern Turkey.

"The King of Burmah, instead of holding poor Dr. Judson in a filthy dungeon, now welcomes missionaries to his capital, is building a school house to accommodate 1,000 scholars, and has commanded the translation of the British Encyclopedia into the Burmese language. The Queen of Madagascar, instead of persecuting her Christian subjects, is crowned beneath a canopy inscribed, 'Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men.' In money matters the change is equally striking. In 1788 there was nothing given for the evangelization of the heathen; in 1808, $100,000; in 1828, $1,000,000; in 1842, $2,000,000; and in 1868, $5,000,000."

IT IS a curious coincidence that the births and deaths of M. Boismartin and Countess Morand should occur at nearly the same moment.

THE PREACHER.

He took a shaft both strong and straight;
A shaft he had polished with labor great.

He winged it with sweet eloquence,
With learning and with subtle sense.

Boldly he drew, and he aimed with care;
But it wounded only the idle air.

A second he took, both straight and strong,
Winged with a passionate sense of wrong.

He drew it stoutly and aimed it true;
The mark he aimed at was plain to view:

Swift it fled, yet it lighted wide,
For it touched on a rock, and it swerved aside.

He reached his hand, and took from above
A sleader arrow, barbed with love.

He aimed it with hot little art,
Yet it touched and wounded a human heart.

His last, his lightest, was winged with prayer,
And he shot it forth through the yielding air.

No careful aim the preacher took,
For he turned to heaven his upward look;

Yet it pierced a heart both hard and proud,
The hardest heart in all the crowd.

Opelousas District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The Opelousas District Conference met at Vermilionville, October 14, 1869.

Rev. J. D. Adams, president ex officio, took the chair, and F. T. Rawson was elected secretary. The roll of members being called, committees were appointed to consider and report on the various interests noticed below.

Reports of pastors were presented, read and filed. They showed that all the ministers were laboring in their appointed fields, and exhibited improvement in the spiritual and temporal interests of the church throughout the district.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.—PROF. J. W. SWINDALL, CHAIRMAN.

Indispensable for training the children for useful places in the church. Pupils should be well taught in the doctrines of the church. Being a part of the church, as is the prayer meeting, it should not be distinguished from it as a church for children. Teachers should, if possible, be selected from the experimentally pious. Our own publications should be used, and Visitors enough taken to supply each family with one. Uniformity of instruction being important, it would be well for the church to publish a manual for the guidance of school officers.

CHURCH FINANCE.—G. ZENOR, ESQ., PATTERSONVILLE, CHAIRMAN.

Affirms improvement in finances; might be greater with systematic effort therefor. Condemns acceptance of ministerial service without assured support of minister.

EDUCATION.—DR BEAUCHAMP, VERMILIONVILLE, CHAIRMAN.

Urges high considerations in favor of educating all; advises establishment of day schools under the care of the board of stewards; pledges Conference to use influence for employment of pious teachers in schools under its influence; and condemns the idea that religion should be kept out of the schools, and that ignorance is the mother of devotion.

MISSIONS.—DR. WALKER, NEW IBERIA, CHAIRMAN.

Recommends that, through our Annual Conference, the General Conference be asked to publish a church periodical devoted to the interests of missions, which shall contain a history of the operations of the church in this field, together with the manner of supporting missionaries, the necessities, obligations, etc., that they involve. Advises that all Sabbath schools be organized into missionary societies; and that in them and the congregations monthly collections be taken where practicable.

CHURCH LITERATURE.—T. H. LEWIS, ESQ., CHAIRMAN.

Great necessity for religious literature; present success of church the result, in great measure, of general circulation thereof in the past; advises renewed and continued effort to increase it. Sunday schools should renew their libraries; and suggests good plans for so doing. Advocates establishment of libraries in every church; advises that they contain standard works, such as those of Wesley, Fletcher and Clarke, that by their ready availability the people may become thoroughly indoctrinated. Condemns general dependence of church on the lighter literature of the day as pernicious and fatal to its spirituality. Charges the rich to provide, in this respect, for the less prosperous. Affirms the great value of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and pledges Conference to special efforts to secure its introduction into every family of the church; and to this end urges that the rich supply the poor by paying to the pastor the subscription price for them.

CHURCH EXTENSION.—J. B CLARK, ESQ., CHAIRMAN.

Sets forth the duty of church members in a forcible manner; urges as a valuable means of church extension the establishment of Sabbath schools wherever ten children can be got together; advises that members of organized churches hold prayer meetings, etc., in destitute neighborhoods, and with other excellent sentiments utterly discountenances and condemns the idea that while work is to be done a single Christian has the right to be idle.

BIBLE CAUSE.—REV. J. H. MIMS, CHAIRMAN.

Resolved, That it is the duty of every Christian to aid in distribution; that Conference will heartily cooperate with the Southwestern Bible Society and its agents in this great work; that each pastor will take up a collection therefor in the month of December.

The above reports have been condensed as much as possible.

The religious services of the meeting were of a superior character; the congregations large and attentive.

The Conference resolved to hold the next District Conference at New Iberia requested the secretary to prepare a digest of proceedings for publication, and elected the following delegates to the next Annual Conference: A. Littell, J. H. Mims, J. Ward, A. Hufpower. Alternates: H. T. Goodloe, J. D. Sainte.

History of Celebrated Women of China.

HISTORY OF SA NYUNG, WIFE OF THE EMPEROR WONG KE.

Sa Nyung was the mother of Vung Wong. Her disposition was mild and most amiable. She was very retiring in her manners, and was unwilling to place herself in any position where she could hear or see anything improper. She was very guarded in teaching her first-born son, Vung Wong, who became a wise and good man. According to the account given in Chinese history the teaching of Vung Wong was even before his advent into this world. At that age of the world, about 1120 B. C., there were no chairs or tables, but mats were used instead, as is the custom in Japan at the present time. It is said the mother of Vung Wong would not sit upon the mat unless it was placed smoothly upon the floor. If her food was not placed in just such a position she would refuse to eat. She often called the blind to come into her presence and sing their poetical songs in praise of the virtuous and the good. She would listen to no libidinous speech, neither would she look upon anything of an offensive nature. On this account, it is said, her son was wise above all other men. His mother was very particular in having everything of an evil nature kept from her son, lest he, coming in contact with vice, should abandon her instruction and partake of the wickedness of the age. Vung Wong was the father of Voo Wong, the first Emperor of the Chow dynasty, 1121 B. C. The strength, power and glory of the kingdom is attributable to the ability of his father, who was taught and instructed in all the branches of knowledge then known, by his mother. Her image deserves to be placed in every household, and her example should be observed by all.

HISTORY OF TAE SCE, WIFE OF THE EMPEROR VUNG.

Tae Sce was the mother of Voo Wong. She was of the See family, who lived in the district of Yersing, and was of the lineage of the Emperor Yu. When quite young she was looked upon as a girl of remarkable attainments, and of the most benevolent disposition. Emperor Vung, having formed her acquaintance, went in person and solicited her hand in marriage, in the State of Waysway. He caused a boat to be constructed in the form of a bridge, over which she passed to his home. After their marriage Tae See thought it became her to attend with all diligence in serving the grandmother of the Emperor Vung, while Tae Nyung, the mother of the Emperor Vung, still continued to act in the capacity of a faithful and loving daughter-in-law, laboring day and night to serve her mother-in-law. The Emperor's wife, Tae See, was in all things obedient to her mother-in-law. While the Emperor conducted all the affairs of State, his mother, Tae Nyung, conducted all the affairs of the palace. Tae See, the wife of the Emperor Vung, gave birth to ten sons. The second son was Voo Wong, and the third Tser Kung Tah, the only two of the ten who became celebrated in history. The queen instructed her sons from their youth up, and would not allow them to see or know anything of an evil, libidinous nature. When they had arrived at the age of manhood the Emperor Vung took charge of and instructed them. Voo Wong and Tser Kung soon developed remarkable talents, and became men of renown. The Literati say that Tae See, the queen, was a woman of most benevolent disposition, of superior intellect and unsullied virtue. The Book of Odes speaks in the highest terms of her kind and benevolent disposition. About this time, 1120 B. C., the mariner's compass was invented. Emperor Voo arrested the country out of the hands of Chow Sing, who was a tyrant and oppressed the people. He was slain. Emperor Voo encouraged learning among all the people, and great peace prevailed, so that for forty years there were no punishments inflicted.

FABULOUS PERIOD IN CHINESE HISTORY, NOT CONNECTED WITH THE HISTORY OF CELEBRATED WOMEN, WHICH I AM NOW TRANSLATING — NOT BELIEVED BY MANY CHINESE.

Paw Koo, the first man, was produced immediately after the division of heaven and earth. But it does not state how he was produced.

1. Tien Wong (imperial heaven) settled the years. There were thirteen brothers of them. The reign of Tien Wong lasted eighteen thousand years.

2. Te Wong (royal earth) fixed the months. There were eleven brothers of them. The reign of Te Wong lasted eighteen thousand years.

3. Znng Wong (sovereign man) divided the land. There were nine brothers of them. His rule, or rather their reign, lasted forty-five thousand years.

Yew Chaon was the inventor of dwellings.—Gen. 4: 20.

Suy Znng was the inventor or discoverer of fire, by means of the friction of two pieces of wood. He taught the people how to cook their food.

TRADITIONARY PERIOD IN THE HISTORY OF THE CHINESE.

Fuh He taught the people hunting and fishing, and invented the diagram, arranged a scale for music, and established marriage. He is said to have had the head of a man and the body of a serpent. He was assisted by a female called Wa; probably Chowa or Eve.—Gen. 3: 20. She assisted in the government of the world one thousand three hundred and sixty odd years. The Chinese say at that time a portion of the heavens in the northwest was deficient, but this remarkable woman took stones from the southeastern portion of the earth and made good the deficiency in the heavens.

Shin Nung, the next in order, is said to have had the body of a man and the head of an ox. He taught husbandry and medicine.—Gen. 4: 2. He reigned one hundred and forty years. At that time people were dressed in leaves. This Emperor Shin Nung at this time is represented in one of the temples of Shanghai dressed in leaves.

His son was called Chung and reigned sixty years. Ming was the son of Chung and reigned forty-four years. Sien was the son of Ming and reigned forty-five years. Lay was the son of Sieu and reigned forty-eight years. Yu Vong was the son of Lay and reigned fifty-five years. At that time the dynasty came to a close.

Hwang Te invented the cycle and letters; he also invented music. He discovered the silkworm, made implements and boats and wrought in metals.—Gen. 4: 2. He also made clothes; and reigned one hundred years. Hwang Te's son was called Sowan, and reigned eighty-four years.

Sowan's son was Tsa Sho, inventor of the calendar. He reigned seventy-two years. The son of Tsa Sho was Te Kwuk. He was a musician and reigned seventy years. Te Kwuk's son was Tse. He reigned but nine years. About this time divine and human personages mixed together and produced confusion.

Now comes the true date of Chinese history. Emperor Yaw was the son of Te Kwuk also. His benevolence was as heaven, and his wisdom as the wisdom of God. He reigned seventy-two years. Emperor Sung was of the lineage of Tsay Sho, the sixth generation. He was the son-in-law of the Emperor Yan. He was a man of remarkable humility, and made use of all men of ability and wisdom, and peace prevailed throughout the whole empire. After his reign came the Hea dynasty. Emperor Yu was also of the family of Tsay Sho. It was during his reign a great inundation occurred. After the waters had subsided, Emperor Yu, having divided the country into nine parts, constructed nine large incense stands of brass. Upon each of these nine stands the products of all the different parts of the empire were inscribed. They were then placed before his door, so that every one might see them. This Emperor was an officer in the time of Emperors Yaw and Sung, but was preserved during the inundation. The first son of Emperor Yu was called Che, and is said to have been a good man. The second son, Tae Kong, was a bad man, and was fond of hunting.—Gen. 10: 9.

J. W. LAMAUTH.

A MOTHER'S WORDS.—A youth of eighteen or nineteen years sat at an open window—a look of painful perplexity in his face, apparently occasioned by a letter he held in his hand. After sitting thus for some moments, he muttered to himself:

"Yes, I must go; if I don't Brown and Smith will be laughing at me, and call me righteous overmuch; and, after all, there's no great harm in it, for I'll go to church in the morning, and it's only to be a sail down the river and spend the day in the country."

Still he pressed his hand on his forehead for an instant, then rising hastily, he said:

"There is no use bothering about it; I must go."

As he rose his eye lighted on the setting sun, and as it did so his whole expression changed; a sweet yet sad look played on his face—his thoughts were elsewhere—another scene was before his eyes. The dark street had disappeared, and in its stead a neat country cottage had risen. In thought he was there. Once more he saw the hills that rose near that cottage door; once more the blue waters of the lake glistened before him; once more he sat in the cottage garden with his widowed mother and watched the setting sun. Once more that mother's words sounded in his ears—"John, don't forget your God, and he'll not forget you. 'Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy.' Though sinners entice you to break it, consent thou not. O, when you're tempted to do wrong don't forget to pray! Never let the sun go down on a prayerless day. May the God of the fatherless guide you—may the Lord Jesus Christ be your Saviour!"

Yes, six months had passed since he heard these words, and yet they seemed to sound in his ears. Tears filled his eyes; and rising, he folded his hands and kneeled in prayer; then taking his pen, he wrote thus:

"Thanks, Brown, for your invitation; but I cannot accept it. My duty to God is to obey his commands; and he hath said: 'Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy.' Spending the day in idle pleasure is not doing this; and I wish you would think over the subject and not go yourself."

How great is the influence of a pious mother's words. How wonderful the answers to her earnest prayers.

OF THE twenty-four thousand streets in London, six thousand are counted "business streets."

Effects of Candy on Children.

FROM THE NOTE BOOK OF AN EMINENT PHYSICIAN.

July 26.—As the town enlarges and the confectionery shops increase, I see more and more the ill effects of candies on children.

"My child is so restless and thirsty at night," said Mrs. B——. "What can be the matter with her stomach?"

"Do you allow her to eat candy?" I questioned.

"O dear! yes," was the reply. "I wouldn't deprive her of the happiness of anticipating and receiving the package of candy which grandpa brings every night, for anything. She is so fond of candy that she often prefers it to her dinner. But you wouldn't believe how much water she drinks at night. I always place a large pitcherful by my bed, and sometimes she will drink it all before morning. And then this thirst makes her so restless and wakeful that we are all disturbed by her. Can't you give her some medicine for her thirst?"

The subject of this appeal was a slender, waxen faced little girl, with thin, sharp features; a dusky yellow half-circle under her eyes; hands so thin as to be translucent, the blue veins standing prominently out; the tongue of an angry red color, showing an inflamed stomach; pulse irritable, weak and quick; tenderness over the stomach; bowels tumid—the group of symptoms indicating a sub-acute inflammation of stomach, excited by indigestible substances (candies in her case,) and followed necessarily by loss of appetite, thirst and an impoverished condition of blood.

I have so frequently had to advise in this class of cases latterly that I have learned that success is not to be attained by a direct attack upon the candy, but by a more general argument—thus: "You know that the stomach of a child is very delicate, very sensitive—quite as much so as the eye; it will bear milk, and so will the eye; but if you add to the milk, pepper, the eye becomes red, and so does the stomach. Cold water is grateful to the eye, to relieve this inflammation, and it is equally so to the stomach. Now, candy is but little less irritating than pepper; it creates the same redness, the same grade of inflammation, and there is the same demand for water to quench the inextinguishable flame. In such a stomach healthy digestion ceases; the appetite fails; the blood becomes poor and watery, and the tissues are all impoverished. It is not the sugar that does the harm, for pure sugar is healthy; it forms part of the milk of the infant, and enters largely into many of our best vegetables. It is the sugar mixed with various other articles, often poisonous, and the process of manufacture that render candy so injurious.

"You mean to do well by your child, but you are slowly and certainly effecting her ruin. At this critical period of her life, when, for proper development and growth, she needs a large supply of nourishing and easily digested food, you give her these detestable compounds of burnt sugar and poisons, which not only slowly poison her system, but, worst of all, deprive her of appetite and even of the power of digestion. If you persist in this course, it is not difficult to predict the result; the chances that your child will reach womanhood will be diminished tenfold; if she reach adult years, it will not prove adult life in her case, but rather a dwarfed and imbecile maturity. Her certain inheritance will be dyspepsia, a morbid appetite for crude and indigestible articles, and chronic and incurable diseases which will render her irritable and peevish, and lead to premature old age and death in mid-life.

"The cure is certain, and the remedy is at hand; remove the particle of dust from an inflamed eye and the redness soon disappears; so cease to apply to the surface of this inflamed stomach the foreign substance which irritates it, and it will recover; the thirst will subside; her appetite will be restored; her lips and cheeks will become red, and she will regain the flesh which belongs to her."

WHY THE HAIR SOMETIMES WON'T GROW.

August 1.—Mr. T., Jr., is growing bald at thirty-five, as did his father and grandfather before him, in spite of a profuse employment of every variety of hair oil which has been advertised. I told him, in professional consultation, there was no use of striving, in his case, to make the hair grow where the hair ought to be; the trouble is, the roots of the hair, the hair-bulbs, are dead. It was as idle, under such circumstances, to cultivate a growth of hair on his vertex as to attempt to raise a crop of grain without seed.

People generally seem to think that by the use of hair oil, hair may be made to grow anywhere, when the truth is that hair grows like a plant. It has its root and stalk; the stalk may be broken off frequently, and yet a new shoot springs up, perhaps more vigorous than the first. This process may be, and often is, repeated many times during the life of the individual. Fever, erysipelas of the scalp, and many acute diseases, are followed by the breaking off of the hair, and temporary baldness. But the hair-bulb still remains uninjured, and a new growth is sure to follow. This new growth may be hastened by stimulation of the scalp, as by friction, irritating washes, etc. But when from any cause the roots of the hair die, there is an end for all time of the growth of hair in that soil. By no art or device can a new crop be sown or transplanted. Hair oil is as useless as if applied to the sole of the foot. We cannot always tell when the hair-bulbs are actually dead without the trial of means to invigorate them; but there is no doubt that baldness is hereditary, as in the case mentioned, and that it certainly follows some constitutional diseases. On the contrary, falling of the hair after acute diseases, or earlier in life than usual in the family descent, or after any unusual perturbation of body or mind, is almost, without exception, temporary.—Hearth and Home.

THE DIVIDING LINE.—Where does the dividing line run between true religion and the world? We answer that it runs just where God's word puts it; and a conscience which is enlightened by the word and by prayer does not commonly fail to discover it. Where Christ would be likely to go if he were on earth, is the right side; but where a Christian would be ashamed to have his Master find him, there he ought never to find himself. Wherever a Christian can go, and conscientiously ask God's blessing on what he is doing, there let that Christian go. He is not likely to wander over the line. And when a church member can enter a play house, or into a dancing frolic, and honestly ask God's blessing on the amusements and come away a better Christian for it, then let him go; but not before.

But should not every good man be a "friend of the world?" Was not the divine Jesus a friend of the world when he so loved it that he gave himself for its redemption? Did not Paul love the world when he endured hardship, humiliations and martyrdom to lead sinners to the cross? Ah! yes—very true; but what the Redeemer and his apostle were after was not sinners' sins, but sinners' souls. And they sought to save the world not by conformity to it, but by transforming it to a higher and holier ideal of life.

Nor is it by going over to the world that we can save the worldling. If we are to impress the world, we must live above the world; if we would save sinners we must, in the same sense that Jesus was, be "separate from sinners." The moment we go over the line to "curry favor" with the votaries of sin, we never reach them; and only run the risk of ruining ourselves. World to God that in trying to draw the world into conformity to Christ, we did not allow the world to drag us down into conformity with itself?—Evangelist.

THE missionaries in Madagascar have appealed to the London Missionary Society for five additional missionaries, who will be sent next spring. The increase of adherents has been very rapid, as 30,000 were added to the numbers attending services during the last seven months of last year, while the congregations increased from 92 to 148. The present year bids fair to show a more remarkable increase. At the last reports 20 or 30 new congregations had been formed since January, and some of the previously existing congregations had doubled in the same time. About 120 chapels are at the present time being either built or enlarged. The public adhesion to Christianity on the part of the Queen and prime minister has given an unprecedented impulse to the spread of Christ's kingdom in Madagascar, from which the most important results may be anticipated. There are now nine large town churches in Antananarivo, the Queen's residence and the largest city on the island, and two congregations of 1,000 each in Ambohimanga, the next largest city; and the work allows of great extension, as but a small portion of the entire island has been occupied. The eastern coast is occupied by the High Church Propagation Society, and Mission Life for August contains a rich account of the processional hymns, surpliced choir, and other ceremonies attending the celebration of Holy Week and Easter at their station at Tamatave, where they have 47 communicants.

ONE of the most essential preparations for eternity is delight in praising God; a higher acquirement, I do not think, than even delight and devotedness in prayer.—Chalmer.

MONTGOMERY CONFERENCE.

CHANGE OF TIME.

MR. EDITOR: Please announce that by urgent request Bishop Paine has postponed the meeting of the Montgomery Conference one week. It will assemble on Wednesday, December 8, instead of December 1, as first announced.

Truly your brother,

JOSEPH B. COTTRELL,
P. C. at Union Springs, Ala.

UNION SPRINGS, ALA., Oct. 26.

THE APOLOGIST.—This German Methodist paper, edited and conducted by Rev. J. B. A. Ahrens, has recently come out greatly enlarged and improved. Brother Ahrens informs us that the circulation is increasing, and that the prospects of the paper are highly encouraging. From our knowledge of the learned editor we are sure that this publication deserves the patronage of our German people.

ARRIVED.—Rev. R. J. Harp and wife reached the city this week. We are glad to welcome the return of our esteemed brother, and to congratulate him upon the auspicious event which fills his cup of happiness, and satisfies the best wishes of his many friends.

NEW ADVERTISEMENT.—The advertisement of Dr. Robert Hunter appears in our columns this week. His method of treating throat and lung diseases is highly commended by many who have been benefited by it.

HINDOSTAN is suffering from pestilence and apprehensions of famine. Four hundred persons are dying a day from cholera throughout the northwestern provinces. Since 1858 there has been no season so fatal to Europeans. In Gwalior, Hijdetalod, Madras, Azra, Benares and other places, the epidemic has been very fatal. Seventy per cent. of those attacked die. The long drought is supposed to be the cause. As a failure of the crops is threatened, starvation must follow, unless heavy rains have occurred since the latest advices were received.

SOUTHERN COLLEGES.

An agent of the East Alabama Male College, situated here in this town of Auburn, Alabama, visited New York a few days ago, and to test the fraternal feeling of our Northern brethren, I suppose, applied to some of your leading men for pecuniary aid in an effort to create a fund for the payment of professors to teach the students temporarily, until the college can get again well under way by the patronage and help of our own people. It is a Methodist college. Your Methodist preachers dared not, they said, to bring the subject before their congregations! I want it known that the Harpers gave the agent $25, and that Horace Greeley told him plainly, in a much more manly spirit: "No, sir, not one cent! I will give $100 to sink the college!" It may be giving "weight to smoke," but this is the caput mortuum remaining in the crucible of war.

Candida pax homines, trux decet ira feras.

The above item is not only significant, but comes very direct. We have it from the brilliant correspondent of the New York Day Book—"Warwick." He is the brother-in-law of President Dowdell, of the East Alabama College, and may be supposed to know what he says. The Harpers and Mr. Greeley both know the worth of colleges, and therefore they wish no good to Southern ones. The latter gentleman, with his usual directness, sees that the shortest way to the end would be to stop all the fountains of learning throughout rebeldom, and thereby compel its youth to seek an education in the halls of Yale, Amherst, Cambridge, or some other one of these great centres of influence, literary and political—upon the same principle that the son of Theodore of Abyssinia has been put to school at Oxford by the English statesmen. Or it may be that he wishes to reserve the young men of the South altogether for hewers of wood and drawers of water to a mere enlightened people at the North; and it is barely possible that he suspects some new impulse has been given to Southern colleges by the war. It is very certain no new one has been given by it to Northern schools, so far as Southern patronage is concerned.—We hear of some straggling parties of Southern young men who still find their way to Massachusetts and Ohio in search of learning; but that kind of folly is well over, and such instances are sporadic. Our people have determined henceforth to suckle their own children. Hospitals and orphan asylums, and colleges for educating freedmen, let us hope, still come within the wide circle of Mr. Greeley's philanthropy as comparatively harmless institutions; but these Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia and Louisiana male colleges are of the real wolf-suckling breed, and he thinks should be destroyed.

We hope that our people will take a lesson, not from the charity, but the wisdom of Mr. Greeley. He has no special animosity to the factories or foundries or ship-building of the South; he can even forgive the elasticity and resources of her agriculturists. He sees nothing there to alarm, for they are but elements of strength, which, if adroitly used, can be made useful to the North. But the brain power of the South he could wish to remain latent, or else be developed, if at all, by teachers who can give it proper shape. He knows the full value of the brain-shaping power of the universities of New England. They have given law and opinion to the entire North and West. The politicians, lawyers, clergymen and scientific men of the Middle, Northern and Northwestern States have received their precise image and superscription from those great mints of learning. The professor at Yale, in the narrow compass of his lecture room, has determined the public opinion of entire States. Sentiments and theories have made their way into the policy of the country not by their weight or worth, but through the yielding material upon which they were first impressed. With a room full of young men who represent, it may be, the more wealthy part of society, or who are destined to fill professions and places which usually form the public opinion of a community, a very feeble voice and an ordinary intellect can wield an incredible influence for good or evil. No doubt the abstract theories and doses and treatment suggested and urged by medical chairs in Philadelphia, in regard to yellow fever, have worked death and distress to thousands in New Orleans, who otherwise might have survived an epidemic. And so the whole region which has derived from the schools of the six New England States theories upon government, society and religion, must endure the consequences of a wretched and fatal practice. The doctrines of protection, of a loose construction of the Constitution, of federalism as opposed to State sovereignty, of abolition of slavery by force, and of a "higher law" generally, were all bred, set on foot and sent out by these great seats of learning which shaped the men who made the laws.

At first thought it might be supposed that a very different enterprise had given the immense prominence to the "solid men of Boston" which they now undoubtedly hold in the counsels and control of this country—their manufacturing and mechanical genius, which has given birth to factories, builds ships, and that commercial tact which has made ice a necessity to the world and an important export. But what nourished the weaving of cotton and the working of iron when neither could be produced at the cost which remunerated the European artisan? How could Massachusetts compete with Manchester and the crowded population of England, where every man is bound to work or starve? By her influence in the halls of Congress and over the political theories which directed the protective policy of the government; so that it was not the inventor nor the mechanic, but the law-maker who fostered Connecticut until it became rich upon a rock. What gave the shipping of Rhode Island its strength? Not the skill of its ship-builders merely, but the discriminating protection to American bottoms which its voice in the national council secured. The educated men which those colleges have thrown out, year after year, over the country, have made the whole of it finally and immensely tributary to a most inconsiderable portion of itself. The two thousand millions of bonds which are now held by Eastern capitalists are but a part of the tremendous results of the position which New England has held for the last hundred years as the principal educater of the youth of the entire country. Whether in peace or war, whether in industrial or social matters, the principal thing which determines the character and fortunes of a people is the development of its brain power. A very few millions were spent at an early day upon Cambridge, Dartmouth, Amherst, Yale, and the university at Providence, the fruit of which, estimated in money, is the ownership of one-eighth of the nation's capital—hold without interest—the possession of one-half of its executive offices, and an all-controlling vote in its domestic and foreign policy.

We of the South shall certainly hereafter not swell the streams of this immense power, which has been wielded not for the good of the whole, but for the benefit of the few. We will take care that our Southern colleges shall not sink, but present a bulwark against that demoniac philanthropy which would ruin everything it cannot control. Mr. Greeley will excuse us if we thank him for putting the matter so much better than we could have stated it for the instruction of our people.—The "agent" is a poor one if he does not realize the full worth of the expected $100 out of the answer of the chief exponent of the Radical policy and animus. And we are thankful to a kind Providence which has enriched the South with at least enough to educate her own offspring in colleges at home.

SOME of the best men in England are studying the inebriate asylums in America with much interest.—Such institutions are scarcely known in Great Britain.

OUR FOREIGN MISSIONS.

In another column will be found a notice of Dr. Munsey's visit to Nashville. The collection is spoken of as "quite handsome." We wish Dr. Summers had said precisely how much, so that our people might know what is handsome in this line, and that all the church might be keyed up and encouraged. It is time to begin to devise liberal things, for we have not done it hitherto.

The secretary's communication to the Georgia Conferences is "a word in season" which all should ponder. Any one of the older and stronger Conferences ought to support the entire China mission as now organized. The secretary truly says that "this mission has never been supported by the church as it ought to be—before the war, during the war or since the war." Before the war a good deal of missionary money was raised, but the most of it was expended at home. It is a happy thing that the foreign missions are now entirely separated from the home work. We can now see how much of the real missionary spirit there is in the church. We should like to restrict the term "missions" to the foreign fields, and let the domestic organization, if continued in its present form, take some other name. Then the idea would be pure and simple, without complication. "Foreign," as an expletive, would be needless, since the accepted import of missions would be to send the Gospel to "the regions beyond." At any rate, we are convinced that the Foreign and Domestic Boards should keep wide apart, and that their objects should be presented as having no necessary connection with each other.

For variety sake, if for nothing else, we need a new field. Hold and strengthen our position in China, and seek, besides, to occupy some other outpost. The recent proclamation of religious liberty in Cuba opens a door for immediate entrance. The Methodist Church South ought to be the first to enter it; but we are crippled with debt, and suffering the work in China to languish for want of as much money as many a Methodist could give every year without being embarrassed thereby. The fault may be not altogether in the people, though we believe there is no distrust with reference to the Foreign Board and its management. It is a good while since we have seen a report—annual, or any other sort. Our people generally, and many of the preachers, are not informed and kept sufficiently in communication with the Missionary Board. We all need enlivening and brightening up by a fresher and closer contact with missionary persons and facts. The "report in detail" which the secretary promises is what we want—a pamphlet of information, containing also appeals and instruction on the subject—a document that may be put in the hands of every member of the church, showing precisely what we are doing, how much we owe, and what is expected of us as a church.

The secretary advises that all collections be sent "through the Board of Foreign Missions. It is the safest and most economical method, and is in harmony with the polity of the church." In some instances individuals and societies forward contributions direct to the missionaries. To no great extent is this done; but there are certain advantages in it. In the Sunday school of our own charge the money is remitted in this manner, and the school is kept in constant communication with the missionaries. Interesting letters from them, addressed to the children, are frequently received and read, and quite a collection of Chinese curiosities has been presented to the school. The little daughter of one of the missionaries has been made a life member of the Sunday school and missionary society, and her photograph is amongst the most cherished treasures of the society. These intimate personal communications have proved exceedingly stimulating and vitalizing. The missionary spirit is cultivated, and the minds of the young are enlightened. Some plan which shall secure these results, and at the same time be in complete harmony with the polity of the church, as embodied in the organization of the Missionary Board, is much to be desired. Frequent and full reports from the board, constant correspondence of the missionaries, and the faithful representation of the cause by the preachers will contribute largely to divest our missions of their character as obscure abstractions, and give them a living and concrete existence in the minds and hearts of the people. Somehow the far off must be made nigh, and what has too long been a cold and distant object, lying beyond the pale of ordinary moral responsibility, must be brought within the range of our apprehension and sympathies. Dr. Munsey's unrivaled eloquence could not move us more profoundly than did the photograph of the little missionary girl. If that household should be forgotten by the rest of the church the boys and girls of this single school would take care of them.

We are glad to mark the high grounds on which the gifted secretary makes his appeal. The missionary resources of the church have been cursed and impoverished by the low considerations and motives which have often been invoked. We like such terms of appeals as these: "For the sake of our fallen and benighted humanity; for the sake of our blessed Master; for the sake of the pledged word and honor of our beloved church; and in gratitude to God for our Gospel privileges."

Such a platform may stand in harmony with Paul's noble and comprehensive declaration: "For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge that if one died for all, then were all dead; and that he died for all that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them and rose again."

LAY DELEGATES.

We clip the following paragraph from the Nashville Christian Advocate. We believe Bishop Pierce made the same decision at the Missouri Conference. We do not see how the law can bear any other construction. So far from the delegates to the General Conference being necessarily members of the Annual Conference, we are not quite sure that their church membership must be within the bounds and jurisdiction of the Conference which they are elected to represent. The intention of the law may have been that the lay delegates should be chosen from members of the church within the limits of the Conference electing them. But is it plainly the requirement of the law?

The question is asked whether lay delegates to the General Conference may be chosen from the church at large within the bounds of the Annual Conference electing them, and not exclusively from the delegates to the Annual Conference. Bishop Paine decided at the Tennessee Conference, and Bishop McTyeire at the Illinois and Louisville Conferences, that they may be chosen from any of the laity within the bounds of the Annual Conference, who are duly qualified, being at least twenty-five years of age, and of six years' standing in the church.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

FAYETTEVILLE CIRCUIT, Oct. 30, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: I am now on the last round of the third year on this circuit. These have been years of toil. While the passing year has been one of greater labor and anxiety, it is also one of greater success. I have attended punctually and diligently to all the interests of the circuit, and report fair results in every department. I have just closed a series of five protracted meetings, of from five to ten days' continuance each, the visible fruit of which is twenty five conversions, and twenty added to the church. There is a manifest improvement at every appointment except one.

A circuit of about four hundred colored members has been formed. They were received with great care. Of these I baptized by conversion thirty-one, and by affusion ten.

The circuit is properly officered, having a colored pastor of good repute, and ready to report to Bishop McTyeire on the 25th of next month, at this place. In conclusion I report "still at the front," with the reasonable hope that I may receive and faithfully and fruitfully fill many more appointments from the Bishop. In itinerant faithfulness, yours, etc.,

DANIEL DUNCAN.

BLADON SPRINGS CIRCUIT, October 15, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: While the Lord has been dispensing his blessings to others he has not forgotten to be gracious to us. We have held some meetings in this work that have resulted in quite a number of conversions, and seventy-four accessions to the church. We hope and pray that the work may continue until the whole church is alive.

Yours in Christ,

C. W. CALHOUN.

BANKSTON CIRCUIT, Oct. 24, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me to say to the friends of the church and lovers of Christ, that the Lord has graciously revived his work on this circuit. One hundred and eight have been added to the church. Three of that number are old persons—one eighty-four years, one seventy three, and the other sixty nine. The membership has been greatly blessed.

JAMES G. CARLISLE.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The Nashville Christian Advocate says:

Dr. Munsey delivered a telling missionary discourse in McKendree church on Sunday morning, October 24, to an immense audience. All the other Methodist churches in Nashville and Edgefield were closed, and their pastors, as well as others from a distance, were present. The address was perhaps the finest effort made by the distinguished orator, and the collection which followed was quite handsome. Drs. Green and McFerrin were present, and assisted in the collection. He is to preach to-morrow in Tulip street church.

Dr. Munsey's health is better, and his whole soul is interested in the work to which he has been called. He has handed us the following communication, which, mutatis mutandis, suits the entire connection as well as the two Georgia Conferences:

TO THE MINISTERS OF THE SOUTH GEORGIA AND NORTH GEORGIA CONFERENCES.

DEAR BRETHREN: You have promised to endeavor to raise this year for our China mission $4,500. I expect to visit the ensuing sessions of your Conferences. Be ready to place in my hands the above amount, that it may be sent at once to China. Our mission there needs money. The mission houses need repairing; the missionaries need enough money to relieve them from secular employment for their daily bread, that they may address themselves, unembarrassed, to their great work.

This mission has never been supported by the church as it ought to be—before the war, during the war, or since. It must have money now. For the sake of our fallen and benighted humanity; for the sake of our blessed Master; for the sake of the pledged word and honor of our beloved church; and in gratitude to God for our Gospel privileges, make a united, mighty effort to redeem your pledge, and place in our hands the necessary funds to maintain and strengthen this missionary post.

Let all the money you collect in China, or any other department of our missionary work, go through the Board of Foreign Missions. It is the safest and most economical method, and is in harmony with the polity of the church. Your money will be properly receipted for, and appropriated at once to the purpose you intend.

The officers of the board conduct its affairs according to the strictest business principles, and intend to give the whole church a report in detail of all moneys received and expended, together with all other matters connected with the missions of the church. T. J. Magruder, the present treasurer of the board, is a successful merchant of high repute in commercial circles in the city of Baltimore, and is one of the first laymen in our church.

Dear brethren, shall our mission in China be a success worthy of evangelical Southern Methodism? Let us give an affirmative that hell and heaven cannot mistake.

W. E. MUNSEY,
Corresponding Secretary.

BISHOP MARVIN.

Bishop Marvin reached his residence in this city on Sabbath morning last. He has been absent for more than fifteen months in the performance of the duties of his episcopal office on the Pacific coast. The office is "a good thing." The career of the Bishop shows it to be conspicuous in abundant labors and severe privations, as well as abounding with privileged opportunity and large measures of usefulness. We met him at his home in the midst of a rejoicing family, and the family of Methodism in the city joins in the glad welcome. His health is much improved, and with the exception of a cold contracted on the journey it begins to show something of former strength and elasticity. He intends to take the winter for rest and attention to his private affairs. This is needed and deserved. His service will be greatly desired throughout Missouri, but we venture to suggest that brethren exercise discretion and forbear solicitations, which, under the circumstances, ought not to be made. We could give him plenty of work, and at the same time work him down. The Bishop's report of the state and work of the church on the Pacific coast is full of interest, and we hope it may be given to our readers at a suitable time in a communication from him. The late session of the Pacific Conference was most interesting and important. We regret not to be able to furnish a list of the appointments, which was, in a part of his baggage, delayed on the route. The following are the delegates elected to the General Conference: Clerical—O. Fisher, E K Miller, T C Barton. Reserve—George Sim. Lay—W. E. Cooke of Santa Rosa, Joseph Rucker of Santa Clara, and W. E. Bain of Gilroy.—St. Louis Christian Advocate, October 27.

THE STONEWALL DISASTER.

Cairo, Oct. 28.—I learn from Mr. Clem Nolte, clerk of the steamer Cairo, who has just arrived, that the steamer Stonewall, from St. Louis, and bound for New Orleans, caught fire early this morning and burned in a very few minutes. She was about fifty miles above this port at the time of the appalling disaster. She had a large passenger and freight list. It is reported that the passengers and crew numbered upward of three hundred, of whom but very few were saved.

Cairo, Oct. 28.—10 15 o'clock.—The Stonewall, heavily laden, from St. Louis to New Orleans, burned last night at Teatable, eighty miles above Cairo.

Of three hundred and twenty persons constituting the crew and passengers, only forty are believed to have been saved.

Captain John Doty, of Red river, is lost.

All the Stonewall's officers are lost, except Pilot Ed. Folkerson, Engineer Frazier, and her carpenter, Andrew Shultz.

A commission merchant of New Orleans saved the niece of Captain Scott.

Shultz goes home on the Olive Branch to-night.

The fire caught from a candle dropped among the hay in the deck room by a passenger.

The Belle Memphis passed soon afterward. The boat found only four of the survivors on shore, as the remainder had been taken to farm houses. It is, therefore, hoped more were saved than have been reported.

Cairo, Oct 30.—As steamer after steamer arrives from above, I have clung to the hope that more than the first number reported (forty) had been saved from the Stonewall, and that when all had been gathered from the farm houses on shore there would be an increase in survivors. I hoped also that the number on board had been exaggerated.

The first news is confirmed as to the saved, but there were only two hundred and eighty souls on board, instead of three hundred and twenty. All who survive have been heard from, and are included in the list I send you, except Lewis Young, cook of the Stonewall, and Anna Gurney, which makes a total of forty. The following is the list referred to:

E. Folkerson, pilot; George Fulton, first engineer; John H Lyon, second engineer; the carpenter, name unknown; Philip Frisbee, boy; N M Masberg, Andrew Schultz, L T Sloan, Michael Marx, Mike Bresner, J Sisare, D Jones, Boone, of New Orleans; W S Cook, of Virginia; V Cook, of Texas; M C Swing, S Herrin, T Stevens, J Conway, G Edinburg, Lewis Peret, Geo. Peret, Nick. Peret, B Peret and wife, N H Mashing, L Swan, James Schwarz, Herman Loulonsse, Phelps, of Shreveport, J Connors, James Griffin, John Pearce, Dennis Morarity, Dr. A W Washburn, Dr. S B Innel, T H Carroll.

The following history of the disaster is compiled from various sources: The Stonewall was under way, and the passengers eating supper, at seven o'clock, when the alarm was given. The first cry was unheeded, as a false alarm had been given the same day. This caused delay in the movements of the cabin passengers, who did not realize their danger until the smoke filled the cabin.

The officers were cool, and endeavored to induce the passengers to get life preservers, doors and blinds, and jump overboard, but the horror-stricken crowd only screamed the louder, or clung to the officers until the cabin fell in and the smoke mercifully suffocated many before the flames finished the slaughter.

But the scene on the main deck was a thousand fold more awful. There were one hundred and fifty passengers, men, women and children, of all nationalities—men going South to labor on the railroads and levees, taking wife and children along. There were also thirty negroes and ten white men composing the crew of the boat, and nearly two hundred mules and horses crowded on her main deck. The mules were loose in pens and soon broke down all barriers, frightening the horses until they broke loose also, and the affrightened animals charged back and forth through the human crowd, killing many outright, and maiming others so that they lay in agony until the still more terrible death by fire overtook them. As we listen to the horrible recital of the survivors, we almost put our hands to our ears to shut out the soul-rending cries which the story nearly makes us hear. A crowd collect on the bow and endeavor to launch the staging, but there is not standing room, except on the staging, and the attempt is abandoned. Just then the mules, which had been charging back and forth in the deck room, found the way forward, and drove the crowd overboard. On rushed the mules, jumping on the poor souls in the water, crushing and drowning them. Some attempted to save themselves by catching hold of the mules in the water, but the mules were so frightened they kicked and bit everything which touched them.

By the time the mules were off, the boat, persons had but little standing room left from the flames. Mothers threw their children in the river, leaped in after them and perished with them. Ten men jumped in the yawl, capable of holding fifty, cut it loose and paddled away. One of these left his wife to take care of herself, which she did, and reached the shore on a spar. There she found her husband, not even wet, and the noble woman immediately repudiated him. Her husband's name is Gurney, an Italian. They were going to New Orleans, where she has a sister engaged in the millinery business. Gurney's father and mother and seven brothers and sisters were on the Stonewall. The brothers and sisters were all lost. Mrs. Gurney has not spoken to her husband since his inhuman conduct.

The scene in the river at this juncture surpasses description. Far and near the water is covered by struggling men and animals, and the hoarse cries for the help which cannot reach them, the yells and shrieks of those who struggle for the possession of bales of hay, sticks of wood, or anything which promises a support, are heard on every side, mingled occasionally with the piercing note of despair, as some poor wretch throws up his arms, sinks for the third time, and is gone forever. Four men are seen fighting for a bale of hay, when a knife gleams a moment in the firelight, and is plunged into a human heart. As the water is dyed with the victim's blood the hale turns, throws the murderer off, and after a few struggles he sinks and follows his victim.

G. W. Fulton, the engineer, states that he tried to get the hose back to the fire, but could not get through the crowd of frightened deck passengers until it was too late to do good. His partner told the pilot to run the boat ashore, as the deck room was on fire. The pilot attempted to do so, and ran on the gravel bar, whence he hoped the passengers could wade ashore. Unfortunately, a pocket or slough behind contained deep water, and cut off all escape. Just below was a swift eddy, which carried many out into the river when they had nearly reached the shore. It is thought many more would have been saved but for this fatal eddy.—New Orleans Times.

Some kerosene lamp chimnies crack upon the slightest expansion by the heat on first lighting the lamp. These chimnies are made of silicate of lime instead of silicate of lead, because the former material is much cheaper. They are the "shoddy" in glass manufacturing, and have no strength to withstand the expansion and contraction. Those made of silicate of lead may be known by their clear, ringing, bell-like sound, one of which will outlast a dozen of the others.

Massachusetts has got a new indigestion. First, that the memorable fourth Thursday of November is not named for the day by President Grant; and second, many clergymen there have signed a petition for presentation to Governor Claflin, praying him not to issue a proclamation for Thanksgiving at all, unless he can initiate measures which will command a better observance of the day.

A CARD.

DR. ROBERT HUNTER,

OF NEW YORK,

Editor of the "New York Specialist and Journal of Diseases of the Chest," and author of "Practical Letters on the Nature, Cause and Cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma and Catarrh, by Inhalation," has arrived in New Orleans and opened an office at No. 165 Canal street, for the treatment of affections of the Throat, Lungs and Heart.

Dr. Robert Hunter is the inventor of the Inhaling Instrument and Catarrh Syrup in general use by the profession.

The Inhalation Treatment of Throat and Lung diseases was introduced by him into this country, and for the past twenty years he has devoted himself exclusively to this branch of his profession.

As many persons have adopted his treatment, copied his letters, and in some instances unwarrantably used his name, he desires to state that this is his first professional visit to New Orleans since 1861.

The following extracts from leading New York papers will show the estimate in which his writings and practice are held in that city:

[From the N. Y. Herald.]

"No man, we will venture to say, in the whole annals of the profession, has ever introduced a more important innovation on the old system of practice, or gained in a shorter time more converts to his opinions. But the most incontrovertible evidence of the efficacy of Dr. Hunter's system of practice is furnished by the City Inspector's reports. By these it is shown that since the introduction of inhalation the deaths from consumption have decreased upward of thirty per cent. Now we know, from the great number of cases treated and cures effected by Dr. Robert Hunter, that his labors contributed, if not to effect all, at least the greater share of this benefit."

[From the N. Y. World.]

"It is a novelty to see a man of Dr. Hunter's learning and experience engaged in the great work of popular medical instruction. All the light that can possibly be thrown on the nature, causes and treatment of consumption—the scourge of our race—will, we feel sure, be gratefully received by the public."

[From the Home Journal.]

"We have repeatedly stated that we regard Dr. Robert Hunter as a public benefactor, and we hope to see his common sense ideas prevail not only to the extinguishment of consumption, but to the utter breaking down of all stupid deference to old ideas."

[From the N. Y. Express.]

"The fact is now too well established for dispute that the inhalation of medicated vapors, as recommended and practiced by Dr. Robert Hunter, is the most simple, rational and successful treatment for diseases of the lungs yet reached."

Dr. Hunter can be consulted at No. 165 Canal street—office formerly occupied by Dr. Moss.

SOUTHERN METHODIST HIGH SCHOOL,

NEW ORLEANS.

The exercises of the first session of this institution will commence on MONDAY, the 4th day of October next, in the basement of the German Methodist Church, Dryades street, between Felicity and Euterpe.

In founding this institution our purpose is to supply the desideratum long felt in this city, viz: an acknowledged Protestant School of a high order, in which boys and young men can be thoroughly prepared either for college or the active business of life.

The government of the School will be strict and firm, yet mild and parental in its administration. Thoroughness in the preparation of lessons will be uniformly required of all pupils.

The sons of ministers engaged wholly in the work of their Church will be received at half price; and young men preparing for the ministry without charge.

A Preparatory Department and an Evening School are attached.

In the selection of Teachers the greatest care will be exercised, not only in regard to their mental qualifications, but also in reference to their ability to impart instruction to their pupils.

For further information apply at the School.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

BABY'S FIRST TOOTH.

BY FRUDY.

Come, look at the dainty darling!
As fresh as a new blown rose,
From the top of his head so golden,
To the dear little restless toes;
You can tell by the dancing dimples,
By the smiles that come and go,
He is keeping a wonderful secret,
You'd give half your kingdom to know.

Now kiss him on cheek and forehead,
And kiss him on lip and chin;
The little red mouth is hiding
The rarest of pearls within.
Ah, see! when the lips in smiling
Have parted their tender red;
Do you see the tiny, white jewel,
Set deep in its coral bed?

Now where are the sage reporters,
Who wait by hamlet and hill,
To tell to the listening nation
The news of its good or ill?
Come weave with your idle gossip
This golden blossom of truth—
Just half a year old this morning,
And one little pearly tooth!

THE CAT AND THE GOLDFISH.

BY FRANK CHURCH.

Speaking of cats, I once had a cat that was a victim of misplaced confidence. In those days I could mew nearly as well as she herself could. One evening I was amusing the children by counterfeiting the voice of a kitten in distress. Puss was greatly excited, and looked everywhere and ran everywhere to find the kitten. She looked in the bed room, prowled under the bed, then back to the parlor, under sofa, piano, book case and everywhere else. She looked about me, under my skirt, into my lap, mewing pitifully all the time. Then she sprang into my lap and looked wistfully into my face. Evidently I had, according to her theory, either eaten a kitten, or it was at that moment suffering agonies in my mouth. She put one paw on my shoulder, and with the other patted my cheek, crooning to the invisible kitten all the while.

This was too much for my gravity. I threw back my head and indulged in a hearty laugh. Puss looked into my mouth and sprang off my lap.

"It is all over with the kitten," said she to herself, (that is, I suppose she did,) "and it's the last time I ever have anything to say to that deceiver."

At any rate it was the last, for I never could coax her on my lap again. She was an embodiment of virtuous indignation and offended dignity.

I wish you could have seen how the goldfish frightened Mrs. Tabitha Tortoiseshell Velvet. She wanted to catch him, but cats don't like to wet their feet. So she pretended that she just wanted a drink out of the top of the globe. The goldfish, who isn't such a fool as he looks to be, sank instantly.

"That's nothing," thought puss, "I can catch you through the side of the water." (You see cats don't know much about glass.)

So she stooped down to catch him through the side, when he swam toward her with his mouth open. I never saw such a frightened cat in my life! She sprang off the table and never tried to catch Goldie again.—Little Corporal.

The Pacha rested by the fountain, the flowing waters of which made an oasis in the desert. His horse and his camel cropped with delight the green herbage near the fountain. Their shadows lay strongly and darkly upon the grass.

"How beautiful," said the horse, "is that dark form which moves as I move; what grace, what symmetry it shows! I can hardly cat for looking at it."

"It is well enough," said the camel, "but look at this one which moves with me. It has all the symmetry and the grace of the other; and then too it has that pretty little hump on its back."

A Dervish passing by, who knew the language of all the beasts, exclaimed: "How good is Allah, who gives to every creature its due share of vanity, so that defects seem to their owner especial beauties and merits!"—Realmah.

Nelly's Temptation.—Little Nelly was five years old. Her mother had taken great pains to instill into her mind principles of right and truth.

One day she stood at the door of the dining room looking with great earnestness at a basket of fine peaches which was on the table. Nelly knew she could not touch them without leave, but the temptation was strong. Soon her mother, who was watching her from an adjoining room, saw her bow her head and cover her face with her hands. "What ails you, Nelly?" she asked. The child started, not knowing she was watched. "Oh, mother!" she exclaimed, "I wanted so much to take one of the peaches, but first I thought I would ask God if he had any objection."

SCIENTIFIC.

ANÆSTHETICS.

THE DISCOVERIES OF ANODYNES.

At the late meeting of the British Association in Exeter, England, Dr. Richardson made a report on the new anæsthetic agent called chloral. This substance was discovered by Liebig in 1812, and was afterward investigated by Dumas. It is made by acting on alcohol with dry chlorine gas. It is a colorless volatile liquid of a specific gravity of one thousand five hundred and two degrees, and boils at two hundred and two degrees Fahrenheit. Its vapor has a pungent odor. When chloral comes in contact with water it turns into a white crystalline solid substance called hydrate of chloral, which is the substance Dr. Richardson subjected to experiment. When this substance is treated with an alkali it is decomposed into chloreform and into formiate of the base of the alkali. Blood possesses alkaline properties due to the presence of soda, in which Liebreich speculated that if the hydrate of chloral were introduced into a living body chloroform would be gradually liberated within the body under the influence of the blood, and that sleep would follow as from chloreform, but for a longer time. Liebreich made many experiments in regard to this; putting animals and even human beings to sleep for long periods; in one case a dose of forty-five grains produced sleep in a man for sixteen hours.

Dr. Richardson, in his researches, first tested whether chloreform is given off when the hydrate of chloral is mixed with blood, and proved it was so by distilling over the liberated chloroform from the blood. He next made a standard solution, which consists of one part of chloral to two of water. Afterward he put Liebreich's experiments to the test, following his descriptions. After this he made his own distinct series of special investigation. The results of his researches were that chloral is decomposed in the living body, as Liebreich affirms. It gives off chlereform, and forms a formiate of sodium with the blood. The action of the chloroform thus liberated produces sleep, which is in every sense the same as the sleep from chloroform itself. The substance can be given either by the mouth or by sub cutaneous injection. Two parts of hydrate of chloral are equivalent, in physiological value, to seven of chloroform; the sleep it produces may be made to extend over four and even five hours; but vomiting is frequently produced previous to sleep, and there is only a brief period of actual insensibility, the body being, if anything, hypersensitive to touch and pain even during the stupor. With great care in regulating the dose recovery may be pretty certainly insured, but death is very liable to be induced by slight excess of quantity administered; the act of death is by the continuation of sleep, with rapidly falling temperature of the body.

Having discovered the physiological value of hydrate of chloral in comparison with the like application of pure chloroform, Dr. Richardson next investigated the relative dangers and advantages of these two anæsthetic agents. He further compared the hydrate of chloral with bichloride of methyline, tetra-chloride of carbon, and carbon, and chloride of amyll, and came to the conclusion that all the effects of the hydrate of chloral could be obtained by those other agents simply and with greater safety. While, therefore, recognizing that Liebreich has brought out a very valuable physiological truth, namely, that the animal body is capable of decomposing some chemical compounds, and that the symptoms in the animals may be due to the formation of what are termed secondary products, he does not think that the hydrate of chloral will practically supersede opium, chloroform and similar narcotizing agents now in medical use. On the contrary he believes that the decomposition of blood, which it induces by the formation of formiate of sodium, is detrimental.

Dr. King, Dr. Foster and others highly complimented Dr. Richardson on the value of these prompt and exhaustive researches.

Dr. Tyng met an immigrant family going West. On one of the wagons there hung a jug, with the bottom knocked out. "What is that?" asked the doctor. "Why, it is my Taylor jug," said the man. "And what is a Taylor jug?" asked the doctor again. "I had a son in General Taylor's army in Mexico, and the general always told him to carry his whisky jug with a hole in the bottom; and that's it. It is the best invention I ever met with for hard drinkers."

"I DESPISE MANKIND," said an arrogant millionaire to a noted clergyman. "I see you have studied your own nature deeply," was the quiet reply.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Lime Around Apple Trees.—We have known some farmers to make it a practice for a succession of years to throw caustic lime around their apple trees in the spring and summer. We once noticed that a tree standing in the immediate vicinity of our dwelling had all at once put forth with renewed energy, and we were at a loss for some time to define the cause. On examination we found that a quantity of lime, which had accidentally been spilled and rendered worthless by becoming mixed with the refuse on the stable floor, had been thrown at the foot and around the tree; and to this, as the principal cause, we immediately accredited the revivescence and renewed fructification of the tree.

Taking the hint from the accident, we purchased twelve casks of lime, and applied half a bushel to each of the trees of our orchard, and found that it produced immediate beneficial effects. Not the health of the trees only, but the quality of the fruit also, was greatly improved. This application will be especially beneficial to soils where there is a redundancy of vegetable matter. We would advise our farmers, in some places, especially in new forest lands, recently cleared, and on low lands, to make a trial of this experiment, and see whether it is not deserving of the high recommendation it secures.—Exchange.

The Tomato as Food.—The annexed is strictly true, and worthy of careful attention by our readers:

Dr. Bennett, a professor of some celebrity, considers the tomato an invaluable article of diet, and ascribes to it very important medical properties:

1. That the tomato is one of the most powerful aperients of the liver and other organs; where calomel is indicated, it is probably one of the most effective and the least harmful remedial agents known to the profession.

2. That a chemical extract will be obtained from it that will supersede the use of calomel in the cure of disease.

3. That he has successfully treated diarrhea with that article alone.

4. That when used as an article of diet, it is almost sovereign for dyspepsia and indigestion.

5. That it should be constantly used as an article of daily food; either cooked, raw or in the form of catsup, it is the most healthy article in use.

A correspondent of the New England Farmer says:

"I often make use of ashes around my trees, certainly as often as once a year, and believe it to be of great benefit to them. But, like some of your other correspondents, I have learned not to apply it in contact with the bark of the trees, as they become moistened and form lye, often too strong for the growing wood. I generally use about one quart of ashes to a tree, scattering it around them as far as the roots are supposed to extend underneath. My large trees, in bearing ten or twelve years, receive an application of from six to eight quarts of unleached ashes to each tree, scattered in same manner. I never permit the ashes to lie upon the ground in any place more than one inch in depth."

Cultivation of Strawberry Plants. The Fruit Recorder says: "We have found the practice of running close to each row with a subsoil plow, immediately after bearing season, to work like a charm on the strawberry plants. By doing this the ground is loosened to a good depth, so that the new, tender fibers and rootlets find easy access through the soil to a great depth, and are better prepared to yield a full crop the ensuing season. Work the soil as deep as possible after the crop is gathered, and follow it up with a thorough system of culture. Scatter well-rotted compost among the vines, and hoe them out occasionally with a fork-hoe; and our word for it you will get as fine a crop of fruit the second and third years as the first."

Blackberry Wine.—There is no wine equal to blackberry wine, when properly made, in flavor or for medicinal purposes; and all persons who can conveniently do so should manufacture enough for their own use every year, as it is invaluable in sickness as a tonic, and nothing is a better remedy for bowel complaint. Measure your berries and bruise them; to every gallon add one quart of boiling water. Let the mixture stand twenty-four hours, stirring occasionally; then strain off the liquor into a cask; to every gallon add two pounds of sugar; cork tight, and let it stand till the following October; and you will have wine ready to use, without further labor, that every family will highly appreciate and never do without afterward, if they can help it.

Loss by Insects.—It is estimated by the American Entomologist that on an average the United States suffer an annual loss of $300,000,000 from the depredations of insect tribes. From what source it derives its data upon which to base these estimates is not stated. They, however, may not be far out of the way, when we consider how vast is the throng of insects which prey upon vegetation. Locusts, grasshoppers, Hessian flies cut cotton-army worms yearly make sad inroads upon the products of the soil. And whoever can invent means and appliances for checking their ravages will indeed prove a public benefactor.

The sunflower is very useful. Its leaves soon become large enough to be used as a covering for young cabbage and tomato plants. Its stem affords an excellent hop or bean pole, and when dead in the fall, if cut up and kept dry, it answers well for kindling wood. The leaves can be plucked off through the summer without injury to the plant, and dried for fodder or fed green to milch cows or horses. Its seeds make a fine oil, or chicken feed. It is said to be an absorbent of malaria, and is often cultivated as a preventive of fevers near dwellings that occupy low places.

A Virginia correspondent of the Rural New Yorker has fed his horses a raw potato once or twice a week for the past twelve years, and they have never been troubled with the ascarides or pin worms. His grandfather, who had an extensive experience with horses, considered it a sure preventive.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

To Raise the Nap on Cloth.—When woolens are worn threadbare, as is often the case in the elbows, cuffs, sleeves, etc., of men's coats, the coats must be soaked in cold water for half an hour, then taken out of the water and put on a board and the threadbare parts of the cloth rubbed with a half-worn hatter's "card," filled with flocks or a prickly thistle, until a sufficient nap is raised. When this is done hang the coat up to dry, and with a hard brush lay the nap the right way. This is the method which is pursued by the dealers in old clothes.

Gooseberry Jam.—Select ripe red gooseberries, as many as you require, and after removing the stalks place the berries in a preserving pan. As they warm stir and bruise them to bring out the juice. Let them boil for ten minutes, and add sugar in the proportion of three-quarters of a pound to every pound of fruit, and place it on the fire again; let it boil slowly, and continue boiling for two hours longer, stirring it all the while to prevent burning. When it thickens, and is jelly-like on a plate when cold, it is done enough. Put into pots, and allow it to remain a day or two before it is covered.

Cream Cakes.—For the crust take three-quarters of a pound of flour, half a pound of butter, one pint of water and ten eggs. Boil the water and butter together, stir in the flour while it is boiling, and then let it cool. When cold add the eggs, well beaten. To make the custard use one pint of milk, four eggs, two cups of sugar, and half a cup of flour. Boil the milk, and while it is boiling add the sugar, eggs and flour, and flavor it with lemon. Drop the crust on tins, and bake them in a quick oven for fifteen or twenty minutes. When they are done open them at the sides, and put in as much custard as possible. It is a great improvement to the appearance of the crust to rub it over with the white of an egg before it is baked.

We learn that the late Japanese Congress decided that Buddhist priests were not to be allowed to take any more scholars to train to their profession. Probably this has reference especially toward a revival of Shintoism, the older and purer Monotheism of Japan; but the Buddhist priests seem many of them to believe that it also points toward a more favorable consideration of Protestant Christianity, and not a few are purchasing the Scriptures so as to be ready for the change when it comes. Mr. Cornes, a Presbyterian missionary in Yedo, writes that their Bibles are all sold mainly to Buddhist priests, and they have been obliged to send to China for a new supply. In his letter of August 14 he tells of a teacher in Yedo, not a Christian, who has sent to him repeatedly for Bibles and "Evidences of Christianity," which he is using as text books, and which are studied by his ninety pupils. The Presbyterians have four missionaries in Yokohama.

In the Sooahelee language of Africa, God is "Mooigniazimoongo;" original sin, in the Ottomi-Indian, "tlacatzintitiztlatlacolli;" and repentance, in Delaware, "schimelendamowitchewagan."

THE BEST COOKING STOVE

FOR WOOD NOW IN USE.

THE FASHION.

We call especial attention to this Stove, which has been produced at great expense, combining all the new and important improvements; also to the extra height of the Oven under the fire chamber, the Patent Air Chamber Front Doors, and Patent White Enameled Iron Knobs, the improvements in the covers and centre pieces, all of which have been covered by Letters Patent, and are used in no other Stove. They are warranted to stand fire, or others sent free of charge in all cases. We have all sizes of this justly celebrated Stove, both

PLAIN AND EXTENDED BACKS,

the Extended Back with cast iron Enameled Reservoir and Faucet, Tin Warming Closet, Gridiron Cover, etc. The part of the top supporting the Reservoir is raised so that the flue is above the top plate, instead of below, as is the case in most of the Stoves now used, and the heat is forced directly against the whole surface of the bottom of the Reservoir. The Reservoir being detached from the pipe, can be removed at pleasure, thereby forming a six-hole Stove—the best in use, as the back ones will heat as well or better than the middle ones. which can be seen at 62 Camp street. The advantages possessed by this Stove over all the other Coal Cooking Stoves are so numerous, and so patent to every sensible observer, that it is only necessary to examine it in order to be convinced of its superiority.

All of the above Stoves are fitted with extra care, Oven Doors lined with tin, and furnished with William Resor's Patent Air Chamber, sliding front doors, patent centres, covers and White Enameled Knobs.

The operation of every Stove guaranteed. Directions for putting up and using same accompany each Stove.

The College of the Baltimore Conference, M E Church South.

Rev William A. Harris, President, with thirteen professors, teachers, etc.

Will begin its next session SEPTEMBER 20, 1869, and close June 30, 1870.

Thus this no College for young ladies in the South ranks higher. It is attended by pupils from various Southern States. System of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Society is refined, scenery beautiful and health unsurpassed. A marked feature in this institution is the rapid promotion of the physical health and vigor of its pupils. Young ladies who come here from the South, with feeble constitutions, are entirely restored to health.

Charges for the scholastic year:
Board and tuition in the Collegiate Course. $225
Music and other extra studies, moderate.

BRAN NEW LETTERS!

FRESH TESTIMONIALS.

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

THE ASTONISHING FAMILY MEDICINE.

Saved from Death!—Read!

MONTGOMERY, ALA., June 28, 1869.

MESSRS. J. DARBY & Co., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: Yours of the 23d is before me, and has attention. It gives me pleasure to say that my belief is that your "Fluid," under the supervision of a kind Providence, saved the life of my youngest child, some six years ago. the child being wasted to a skeleton by the effects of teething, and an affection of the bowels therewith. I had never seen any one reduced so low to recover.

"Physlo" had been tried in vain, until the physicians stated it was useless. A friend recommended your "Fluid," or Ozone, which he stated was one of the component parts of it. I did so, and the effect was like magic, plainly discernible in one hour in its good effects, producing quiet and sleep almost at once, where irritation and sleepless restlessness had previously possessed the child to nearly entire exhaustion.

I at first administered it in a small way, two and three drops in a spoonful of water, and increased it to six and ten drops. It completely checked the bowels, and had the happiest effect, the child rapidly recovering.

I have tried your "Fluid" on animals, with the same effect—both horses and cows—mingling more or less in water, and letting them drink.

I have no hesitation in saying I believe it a specific for Chronic Diarrhea, or any violent affection of the bowels.

I would not be without it in my family under any consideration. Yours truly,

WILLIAM FOWLER.

Mr. Fowler is a member of the celebrated Banking House of Fowler & Somerville, Montgomery, Alabama.

AND AGAIN!

Read the following letter from Mr. Frank Saunders, a well known citizen, and brother-in-law of the beloved Bishop Paine, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

180 BROADWAY, N. Y., July 29, 1869.

MESSRS. J DARBY & Co., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: About the 10th of June last one of my children was taken with Scarlet Fever in its most malignant form, and as soon as I could I procured your valuable disinfectant "Darby's Prophylactic Fluid." Although it was several days after the appearance of the disease before I began using the Fluid, still, by a free use of it, the disease was not only confined to the one case, but the malignity of that case somewhat mitigated.

During the use of the Fluid as a disinfectant in my family it was also tried in a case of headache, and one of toothache, the results in each case being instantaneous relief. It was afterward tried in a case of Erysipelas, with almost equal success.

It is due to the merits of this compound also, to state that the case of Erysipelas in question, being located in the feet, the Fluid, in its application, was brought in frequent contact with a troublesome corn on one of the feet, to the utter discomfiture of said corn, for, upon subsequent examination, it had disappeared, and though it was sought for diligently, it could not be found.

I hand you this, hoping it may be the means of inducing others of earth's poor sufferers to test for themselves, as I did, the great merits of this great remedy.

Very respectfully yours,

FRANK SAUNDERS.

Never was a medicine so universally esteemed and extolled. It never fails. It may be depended on.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited a moderate degree of animation since our last report, without much activity in any branch of the wholesale trade. The receipts of sugar and molasses are steadily increasing, but the demand has not been very active, and prices have ruled still more in favor of buyers. Operations in Western produce have been mostly confined to the local trade, but with a more ample supply of tonnage we may soon expect easier freights and a fair foreign demand for grain and flour.

The weather has continued clear and pleasant, and the accounts from the country are encouraging. With regard to sugar, in particular, we hear that the yield from the cane is much greater than was expected at the commencement of grinding.

The river is twelve feet six inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 29th ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales.	15449
Lake	30
Mobile	657
Florida	72
Texas	127
Total	16535

On Saturday the movement commenced at previous rates, but the telegrams from Liverpool being favorable, factors subsequently raised their pretensions ⅛ to ¼c., and as the demand was quite animated and the supply fair, the sales summed up 5,300 bales, at irregular prices, but showing at the close a net advance of fully ⅛c., low middling being quoted at 24¼ to 24½c., and middling at 24¾c. On Monday the movement was still more active, and factors were enabled to establish a further improvement of ⅛ to ¼c., while the supply being copious, ample scope was afforded to buyers, and the business proved to be the heaviest of the season, comprising 6,700 bales, low middling closing at 24⅜ to 24⅝c., the latter for strict, which had sold to some extent as high as 24¾c. On Tuesday the market opened with much less spirit, and prices barely maintained, but, under a false gold dispatch from New York, factors soon assumed more confidence, and although it was generally discredited, yet prices exhibited more firmness until toward the close, when the decline reported in gold, and its effect on foreign exchange, had a depressing influence. Under these circumstances there was some irregularity in the prices paid, but the demand was fair, and with an ample supply the sales amounted to 5,000 bales, an unusually large proportion of which was taken for France and the Continent.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 17,000 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 155,324 bales, against 156,546 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 104,495 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 45,515 bales to Great Britain, 1,865 to France, and of 17,276 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	— to —
Good ordinary	24 to —
Low middling	24½ to 24¾
Middling	24¾ to 25
Strict middling	25¼ to 25½

Sugar.—The receipts of new are yet light, but the demand continues only moderate.

Monetary.—Gold opened at 128⅝ to 128¾ (against 128 at New York,) and closed at 127⅝ to 127⅞.

Operations in silver have been of moderate extent. The sales include $2,300 in American half dollars at 128½ to 129, $500 at 128½, and $500 at 128.

There has been rather more inquiry for favorite stocks, but the sales have been of limited extent, the only transactions reported being about 200 shares Slaughter House at $19 75, $20 and $20 25, and at auction 1 share Varieties Association at $769, 1 Opera Association at $495, and 4 Mechanics' and Agricultural Fair Association at $16 50; also 300 shares Ship Island Canal Company at $2 20, $2 27½ and $2 30; 18 shares New Orleans City Railroad Company at $166; 15 Bank of New Orleans at $42 50, and 200 Ship Island Canal Company at $2 40.

READVILLE SEMINARY.

This is a private institution, with its number of pupils limited, and is authorized by the Legislature of Louisiana to confer degrees, diplomas and literary honors. It was in successful operation from 1843 until interrupted by the events of the war in 1862, and reopened January, 1867.

Teachers of a high grade of talent and merit are in charge of the different departments—English, Ancient and Modern Languages, Music, Painting, etc.

Pupils charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session. All pupils received with the understanding that they are to remain and attend the examination at the close of the session in which they enter, and no deduction made on the bills for absence, except in cases of protracted illness, when the loss may be divided between the institution and the patron.

In her outfit each pupil should be provided with toilet boxes, towels, napkins, sheets, pillow cases and blankets or comforts. She should also bring knife, fork, spoon, cup and napkin ring.

All articles and clothing brought to the Seminary should be distinctly marked, lists of which should be permanently placed on some part of the trunk convenient for reference. The scholastic year commences October 1 and ends in July.

EXPENSE.

Board and Intition per year $275 00
The Modern Languages a small extra charge.
Music, per year 75 00

Payments due a half session in advance.

Monthly reports of the studies, health and general deportment of the pupils are sent to the parents or guardians at a distance.

The main Seminary building, recently destroyed by fire, will be replaced by one of ample accommodations, now in process of construction, which will be ready for the reception of pupils at the opening of the next session.

E. A. GRANT, LL. D., PRINCIPAL.

This institution occupies the large and elegant building lately known as Grant & Butler's School. The grounds are situated on Sixth street, between Walnut and Chestnut streets, and extend back to Centre street. They are elevated several feet above the street, thus making the large and beautiful lawn a most desirable place for healthful outdoor exercise.

The building, furniture and apparatus of the school are among the most complete and valuable in the West.

Experienced teachers, residing in the institution, will devote their time to the moral, intellectual and physical improvement of the pupils.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Nov 1—Among a number of interesting decisions made to-day by the Supreme Court, the most important was delivered by the Chief Justice, in a case from Alabama, involving the validity of contracts between citizens of the Confederate States entered into during the war, and payable in or requiring the payment of Confederate money. The court held that although the Confederate government was an illegality and a nullity under the laws and Constitution of the United States, it was, nevertheless, a de facto government, as respects those States over which its authority in fact extended, and that the citizens of those States, being compelled to obey its laws and carry on all the business of life under them, might lawfully contract under and with reference to those laws, and to the money which they created and legalized. Contracts entered into for the mere promotion of the Confederate cause would not, of course, be enforceable in the Federal courts, but those between private individuals, for private purposes, were in the same category as fair contracts made in an invaded country, according to the laws imposed by the invader during his occupation.

The opinion of the Chief Justice, which was elaborate and able, entered fully into the consideration and classification of de facto governments, several sorts of which were enumerated and historically illustrated. The two cases to which the present was particularly likened were those presented by the British occupation of Castine, in Maine, during the war of 1812, and our own holding of Tampico during the Mexican war. In both of those cases the Supreme Court had held that obedience and temporary allegiance were due to the government by which the territory was occupied and controlled for the time, and that its laws and regulations, as enforced, determined the rights of parties within the limits of occupation.

The contract in the particular controversy at bar was for "dollars," and the court held that parole evidence was admissible to show that confederate, and not Federal, dollars were meant.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4—The Attorney General is not disposed to argue the Yerger case further. It is now believed that the decision of the Supreme Court upon the point of granting the writ of habeas corpus will be delayed until Mississippi is "reconstructed," when Yerger will be delivered to the State courts for trial.

The Controller of the Currency will recommend to Congress the enactment of a law to permit the unlimited establishment of national banks on a gold basis.

Certain parties held an interview with the President, to-day, during which they took occasion to urge him to recommend to Congress the annexation of San Domingo. The President replied that he had that subject under serious consideration Picayune.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 6—Mr. Corcoran has a dispatch regarding Mr. Peabody's death, which states his death was caused by congestion of the lungs. He died without any suffering.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9—The President began the preparation of his message yesterday. Visitors were consequently excluded.

Fifteen female clerks of the Currency Bureau have been sent to New York to count the money in the Sub-Treasury there, and verify Butterfield's accounts.

Folger was to-day appointed Butterfield's successor in office.

Judge Embry, of Kentucky, was appointed to-day minister to Ecuador, vice Munn, declined.

Sir Isaac Barger, minister to Portugal, is coming home because of continued ill health.—Picayune.

NEW YORK, Nov. 9—Cotton is declining in consequence of unfavorable advices from Liverpool.

Gold is firm. The following telegram has been received here:

"LIVERPOOL, Nov. 9, P. M.—Cotton is declining. Uplands are quoted at 11¾d., and there is a great pressure to sell."—Picayune.

WASHINGTON, Nov 9—On the 10th of December the colored lighthouse tower on Loggerhead Key, Dry Tortugas, will be white to half height, and the remainder, including the lantern, will be black.

Internal revenue receipts to-day, $490,000.

A full cabinet, except Creswell, met to-day.

There have been no disasters to coast steamers from the recent storms.

The New York Herald, of to-day, says: Fisk has gone up the Erie road to solve the difficult problems of wages and strikes. He takes with him, as followers, a number of buffers, bummers, shoulder-hitters, eye-gougers and other experts of that sort.

GEARY'S official majority in Pennsylvania is four thousand six hundred and ninety-six. A Pennsylvania Radical paper says: "That Pennsylvania, which in 1866 gave seventeen thousand Republican majority, and in 1868 nearly twenty thousand, should now give but five thousand, does not seem much of a victory to celebrate."

THE Surveyor General of Colorado has sent to the Land Office at Washington specimens of gold and silver bearing ores, from several prominent lodes of very peculiar character. Their compositions embrace sulphurets of iron and copper, zinc, lead and silver, which obscure the more precious metal. Some of them yield over two thousand dollars to the ton.

COOLIES IN BRITISH GUIANA—A Warning.—A gentleman in Iberia parish, in whose word and judgment we place implicit confidence, informed us lately that he lived in British Guiana, South America, when British law encouraged bringing coolie labor to that colony. He says the coolies were the greatest thieves, cut throats and rascals he ever saw, that nothing but brute force could control them, that no planter's wife or daughters were safe when beyond the protection of white men, and that they would kill a white man for pay, or kill each other, with no more horror than they would feel in cutting off a chicken's head.—Planters' Banner.

THERE have recently arrived in New Orleans, from the West, about one thousand skilled German laborers, who have at once been sent to the Teche and other portions of the State, where their labor is so greatly needed. The cost of transporting these laborers, we learn, is but $12 per head, the railroad (Illinois Central) charging $6 to Cairo, and the steamers $6 from Cairo to this point. Of course this does not include rations, which, we presume, may be reckoned at about fifty cents per day.

It is asserted that our planters can readily obtain from the West any amount of skilled and reliable labor at very reasonable rates, and the large arrivals referred to above prove that their eyes are being opened to the fact. In every way these white and intelligent laborers are preferable to Asiatic importations, and it affords us pleasure to note the setting of the tide of emigration from the West to the South. Our lines of transportation, and our Southern people, should encourage it; for the South needs millions of sturdy yeomen to till her fertile fields, and to convert our wildernesses into agricultural Paradises. To the laboring men of the West the South extends a hand of welcome. Here they will find a soil richer than any they have ever dreamed of, and chesp; and people with whose customs they can readily assimilate.—Picayune.

LEGAL EFFECT OF THE YERGER DECISION.—The Washington Republican, of the 26th of October, referring to the recent decision in the Yerger case, says:

The legal effect of the decision given yesterday will be to bring all the arrests made by military authority in the rebel States, and all sentences by military commissions in those States, under the supervision of the Supreme Court. The court, by this decision, claims that the repeal of that clause of the reconstruction act of March 7, which gave jurisdiction to the United States circuit and district courts in unreconstructed States, and of course appellate jurisdiction to the Supreme Court, (under which the McCardle case was brought up and dismissed because the clause was repealed,) was not necessary to give the court jurisdiction in the rebel States. The court claims that the United States had jurisdiction there without the repealed act, and that, therefore, the repeal made no difference. In other words, they decide that the civil authority exceeds over the rebel States, and that the military power is subservient.

The actual point decided is that the Supreme Court has the right to issue a writ of habeas corpus to bring Yerger here, and then to order his unconditional discharge if it sees proper, although he has been tried and condemned of the murder of a military officer who was at the time in the discharge of his duty. The decision occasioned a good deal of interest in legal circles, and a large number of prominent lawyers were present.

MADRID, Nov. 4.—Admiral Topete insists upon resigning.

LONDON, Nov. 4.—The Emperor Francis Joseph, of Austria, and King Victor Emanuel, of Sardinia, will meet at Brindisi.

LONDON, Nov. 6.—Mr. Peabody's death is universally regretted. The News says: Mr. Peabody was not a man of impulsive or emotional benevolence, but was of a rather judicious and widely spread beneficence. His liberality was not posthumous; he gave from his own substance and did not surrender what death wrested from him. His services, both to his native land and to his adopted country, were willingly and graciously recognized in royal letters and by the thanks of Congress.

Merchants in passing his statue daily do not need to learn from the consummate man of business how to gain money, but his career may teach them how it may be wisely spent.

Queen Victoria directs that George Peabody's remains be honored by public services in Westminster, and to be afterward deposited in the royal vault, pending the removal to America.

PARIS, Nov. 9—General Prim stated in the Cortes that Admiral Topete's resignation was owing to the opposition to the Duke of Genoa, but that Topete was still in favor of the revolution, and would aid Prim in the discharge of his official duties.

FLORENCE, Nov. 9.—The physicians report that King Victor Emanuel is out of danger.

PARIS, Nov. 9—The city is now entirely quiet.

ARKANSAS CONFERENCE.

The thirty-third session of the Arkansas Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South—Bishop Pierce presiding—was held in Fayetteville, Arkansas, October 20-25, 1869. Present during the last day of the session only, we are indebted for our report almost entirely to the minutes of the session, kindly furnished by the secretary, our well beloved brother and friend, James Wickersham, of Jacksonport.

The church in every presiding elder's district, if not in every appointment, appears to be improving in many respects, pertaining alike to spiritual and temporal matters. Abundant labors, sacrifices not a few, and privations without number, have been generally rewarded during the past year, as they will be in the future while fidelity to the Master is the watchword of Methodism in the ministry and membership.

A memorial to the General Conference was adopted in favor of a division of the Arkansas Conference, on account of the size of the territory and the difficulties of travel from point to point—if divided, one body to be called the Arkansas Conference, and the other the White River Conference. The next session of the Arkansas Conference, whether divided or not, will be held at Clarksville. The first session of the White River Conference, if formed, will be held at Mount Zion.

The delegates to the General Conference are: Clerical: J. M Steel, G. A. Dannelly and James Mackey—Reserves: J. J. Roberts, M B. Pearson and W. M. Mathes. Lay: James Wickersham, of Jacksonport; Charles F. Harvey, of Van Buren, and L L. Mack, of Gainesville—Reserves: George W. Featherston, of Waldren; E B. Kuite, of Fayetteville, and Jerome Haralson, of Cotton Plant.—Memphis Christian Advocate.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

CAMDEN DIST., MONTGOMERY CONFERENCE.

FARMERSVILLE CIRCUIT, Oct. 28, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: While we cannot give as cheering reports as some we have read, we are happy to state that God has been with us in converting and saving power, and the present Conference year is closing with a great spiritual as well as a great temporal harvest.

I have four appointments on my work, at each of which I have held a protracted meeting with complete success. At two of my appointments the houses were insufficient to accommodate the congregations, which forced us to hold our meetings under brush arbors, reminding me much of good old camp-meeting times, where the forest rang with shouts of new-born souls and rejoicing Christians, at which heaven bows, and angels sing in happy concert around God's throne above. There have been thirty-two accessions to the church and about twenty conversions—most of them good material. All my churches have been greatly revived.

I have in progress two new churches, which is no little evidence that there is prosperity in Zion.—The finances of the circuit have greatly improved.

There are nine NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATES taken, one Southern Christian Advocate and one N. Christian Advocate. I am much grieved to see our people so indifferent to our church literature. I have urged its great importance upon the church. I trust in the future it will receive more attention.

Yours in Christ,

D. J. WRIGHT.

REV. DR. MUNSEY.

RESULT OF HIS MISSION IN NASHVILLE.

We refer with great pleasure to the visit of Dr. Munsey, as he has delighted large and intelligent audiences with his matchless pulpit efforts, and has left behind him an impression that will endure for years after he has passed from this to another world. Those who have enjoyed the privilege of hearing his inimitable sermon and his missionary address will never forget it, and in after years they will tell it to their children.

He is secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and his special mission now is to raise money to pay an old debt due by the board on account of its operations previous to the war; and our own fair city and our sprightly neighbor, Edgefield, have done nobly in paying their proportion of the debt, and we feel proud of the result, and challenge any other city to do better. The following are the amounts paid to him before leaving the city:

McKendree church, Nashville....	$1,401 90
Tulip street church, Edgefield....	305 95
Hobson chapel, Edgefield.....	55 00
North Edgefield church.....	20 00
Trinity church, Davidson county.	85 00
Elm street church, Nashville.....	12 00
Franklin station, Franklin, Tenn.	100 00
Lebanon station, Lebanon, Tenn..	100 00
	2,079 75
To which add unpaid subscriptions	400 00
Making a total of.....	$2,479 75

which was raised at three meetings, two in McKendree and one in Tulip street church. What city in the South will do better than this?

At one of the meetings at McKendree a gentleman of this city, well known in business and social circles, gave $50, and asked that the subscription be entered as coming from the Central Baptist church, and another gave $10 from Christ church of this city. As both gentlemen declined to have their names announced at the time of giving the subscriptions we suppress them here, but take pleasure in recording the facts as an evidence of the liberality and good Christian sympathy of the donors.

Dr. Munsey will soon visit other cities in the South, and in advance we bespeak for him and his cause a hearty welcome, and hope he will soon find it convenient to visit our city and give his many friends and admirers another chance to hear him preach. He is truly a wonderful man and powerful preacher. When shall we see his like again?—Republican Banner, Nashville.

PROF. CONINGTON, of Oxford University, died on Sunday, October 24, aged forty four years.

Southern Methodism in Indiana.

Bishop McTyeire, by invitation, met the Indiana Conference of the Evangelical United Brethren, at Clifford, Indiana, October 27, 28, 29. He was accompanied by Dr. McFerrin. They both preached in Clifford, and on Saturday evening reached home, pleased with their visit, and entertaining hope of good results to the church in that quarter. The body of Christians visited, is Methodistic in creed and discipline, and is a standing and earnest protest against the political Gospel to which Indiana has been treated, until not a few of her thoughtful and substantial people stand aloof alike from church and Gospel. Methodism, as represented by our Northern co-religionists, is at a sad discount with many of the best and leading citizens of that great State. They associate it with radical preaching, radical praying, radical printing and radical propagandism generally. Methodist doctrine and polity, uncommitted to a party platform, is wanted there, and will be welcomed. The way is opening, and in some quarters is already prepared. The Conference visited at Clifford, at a special meeting, represents a body of excellent ministers and members, who would be valuable auxiliaries, and with such help as we could mutually give and receive, through an organic union, would soon give us a Conference in Indiana like that originating under similar circumstances in Illinois. The meeting, after pleasant and free consultation, adjourned to convene on the second Thursday in April, 1870, at the same place, when it is expected that preliminaries will be so advanced and arranged as to secure the desired object. We have no ambition for territorial extension, for mere Annual Conferences on paper, like some Northern organizations in the South; but we do desire to see a form of Methodism which we believe to be the old and the true, prevail. The people need it; they ask for it; and we may soon chronicle, in our minutes, an Indiana Conference.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

POSTHUMOUS BENEVOLENCE—The Christian Standard says: We cannot join in the indiscriminate censure which is sometimes indulged in against posthumous benevolence. Oftentimes men, while they live, cannot withdraw their capital from use, and a wise disposition of it at death is commendable. Yet the frequent frustration of their plans should lead men of wealth to go as far as possible in appropriating their means while they live, and can execute their own will. Read the following: "Mr. McMicken, of Cincinnati, left $800,000 to found a university in that city. After two years of delay the trustees have asked for permission to use the Orphan Asylum for college purposes, and have been refused. So Mr. Deadlock has things his own way. It is strange that rich men do not learn wisdom from experience, and imitate the sagacity of Cooper and Peabody in spending their fortune for the public good themselves, instead of leaving it in the charge of do-nothing trustees, and to all the uncertainties of constantly changing circumstances and conditions."

THE GOOD WORK GOES ON.—Last Sunday was an interesting day in our Zion. There were no less than five churches dedicated on that day. Four in Maryland, viz: East Harford; Calvert; Bladensburg; Freedom, Carroll county; and one in Woodstock circuit, Virginia. Others are in process of erection and will be completed before the close of the Conference year. St Paul's, in this city, is progressing finely. So is Frederick Avenue, and the new church on the Hookstown road. All over our Conference territory churches are going up, and they are greatly in advance of the old houses that had to be abandoned.—Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, Nov. 4.

A SPECIAL dispatch from Zanzibar conveys very pleasing and interesting intelligence from Dr Livingstone, dated August 8, 1868. He was then in good health. He requested that supplies of nautical instruments and almanacs for 1869 and 1870 should be forwarded to him, thus indicating, as was supposed, an intention to remain in the country some time longer. He claims to have discovered the source of the Nile.

MR. SAMUEL A HITCHCOCK, of Broadfield, Massachusetts, has given $40,000 for the endowment of a Hebrew professorship in Andover Seminary, and he also gives $40,000 to Amherst College.

STATISTICS OF THE BIBLE.—The Scriptures have been translated into 148 languages and dialects, of which 121 had, prior to the formation of the British and Foreign Bible Society, never appeared; and 25 of these languages existed without an alphabet, in an oral form. Upward of 43,000,000 of these copies of God's word are circulated among not less than 600,000,000 of people.

The first division of the divine oracles into chapters and verses is attributed to Stephen Langton, Archbishop of Canterbury, in the reign of King John, in the latter part of the twelfth century or the beginning of the thirteenth. Cardinal Hugo, in the middle of the thirteenth century, divided the Old Testament into chapters, as they stand in our translation. In 1661 Athias, a Jew of Amsterdam, divided the sections of Hugo into verses—a French printer had previously (1561) divided the New Testament into verses, as they are at present.

The entire Bible contains 66 books, 1,188 chapters, 31,185 verses, 770,692 words, and 3,566,480 letters. The name of Jehovah, or Lord, occurs 6,555 times in the Old Testament. The shortest verse in the Bible is John 11: 35. The nineteenth chapter of Second Kings and Isaiah 36 are the same. There is a Bible in the library of the University of Gottingen written on 5,476 pulp leaves.

In 1272 it would have cost a laboring man years of labor to purchase a Bible, as his pay would be only one and a half pence per day, while the price of a Bible was $100.

DR HEMAN BANGS.—Our friend, G. C. Halsted, Esq, sends us the following note in relation to the venerable Heman Bangs: "On Sunday, October 24, I called on the venerable Heman Bangs at his residence in New Haven. He is sinking very rapidly, but his mind is perfectly clear and his soul exultant. When asked how he felt, he exclaimed: 'Triumphant, triumphant.' He has left with his family minute directions respecting his funeral, and given them the names of a number of laymen whom he desires to act as his pall-bearers."—New York Methodist.

SUNDAY has hitherto not been generally observed in France by a complete cessation from labor.—Recently, however, a decided movement has been made in that country by mechanics, workingmen and attendants in stores to obtain a holiday on the first day of the week, and extensive strikes are now threatened to secure this object. This movement is warmly supported by the religious press of France, who assert that the working people desire to enjoy the privilege of attending church.

WE LEARN through a letter from Rev. W. D. F. Hafford, that Rev. W. N. Morgan, of the Memphis Conference, died very suddenly, at his residence in Somerville, Tennessee, on the 18th of October. This sad news will weigh heavily upon many a heart. But the good and true man now enjoys his reward. Obituary notice will appear when furnished.—Memphis Christian Advocate.

A NEW MISSION IN SOUTH AFRICA. A Fingoo chief, named Zibi, some time since expressed an earnest wish that a mission station might be commenced among his people. In the months of April and May last two Moravian missionaries visited these people. The journey was a very fatigning one, and was not unaccompanied with danger. The result of the observations of the brethren is that they have recommended the board to establish a station. This is now to be done.

"I THANK GOD," said Richard Baxter, "for that word whosoever. If God had said that there was mercy for Richard Baxter, I am so vile a sinner that I would have thought he meant some other Richard Baxter; but when he says whosoever, I know that includes me; the worst of all Richard Baxters."

THE LILY OF THE VALLEY.

I thank my God, I feel that not alone
On mountain peaks his blessed sunshine glows,
And dews drop sweetness; even here, far down
In meads, a lily grows.

I am his work who made the evening star;
Wherefore I lift to him my flowerets bright;
They die to-morrow, but to-day they are Beautiful in his sight.

I look upon the hills, and sometimes dream
How they rejoice in morning's earliest light;
And how serene and strong and still they seem
To guard the valleys all the gloomy night.

'Tis said the heights are cold—it may be so;
That winds are keener there, and winters drear.
I know not how it is; I only know
My God has placed me here—

Here in this little nook of earth—my own—
And sent a sunbeam—mine—to cheer my heart;
He bids me bloom—perhaps for Him alone;
Is there a better part?

I bloom—stars shine—we bloom and shine for him.
We give our best—grand world and humble flower—
A light through ages never growing dim—
The fragrance of an hour.

So then He smiles, and takes with equal love
Our equal gifts, nor knows no great or small;
But in his infiniteness reigns above,
And comprehends us all.

A LEARNED MINISTRY.

Mr. Editor: I perceive there is a strong tendency in our church at present to require educational tests of those whom we authorize to preach among us, and to make radical changes in the principles and polity of Methodism, so as to adapt it to the progress of the age. Now, sir, no one believes more in the progress and development of Christianity than myself; but all changes are not improvements, and there is some danger of sacrificing the true strength and vitality of our system to its outward polish and popularity. There never has been a system of church organization and polity comparable to Methodism as it emanated from our fathers, and it has proved its efficiency by outstripping all others in the great work of spreading scriptural holiness, and winning souls from the destructive ways of sin to the path of peace and righteousness.

When Mr. [illegible] 156,546 bales to the same date last year, and the increase [illegible] ceipts at all.

Wesley instituted Methodism the clergy were all educated—graduates of the highest literary institutions. The Church of England would have disdained the idea of initiating an unlearned man into the ministry. Most of the other denominations of England and America have required educational qualifications of the highest grade in their ministry all the time, and yet Methodism has outstripped them all, and filled the world with her trophies, so that even those who have hitherto contemned the system, and endeavored to pour contempt upon it, are waking up to its superiority, and borrowing its peculiarities to aid them in their efforts to do good.

The principle on which Mr. Wesley acted bears some analogy to that of Bonaparte in his military appointments—he did not inquire if an officer was of the nobility or had been trained in a military school; but can he take the fort? Can he accomplish the object and conquer the enemy? If so, he was the man for him. All that Wesley required, as evidence of a call to the ministry, was: Does he know God as a pardoning God? Has he the love of God abiding in him? Does he desire nothing but God? And is he holy in all manner of conversation? Has he gifts, as well as grace, for the work? Has he, in some tolerable degree, a clear, sound understanding, a right judgment, in the things of God, a just conception of salvation by faith? Does he speak justly, readily, clearly? Has he fruit? Are any truly convinced of sin and converted to God by his preaching? When these evidences were presented he recognized them as being called of God to preach, and sent them into the work without requiring them to go to a theological school to be qualified to preach. It is true he urged them to study and improve their minds to the utmost, but never made an educational test for his laborers.

The plea that education is now more generally diffused, and therefore we must have educated ministers, is no reason for a departure from our principles. If the people are all educated, God will be at no loss for such persons, and he will call them to the work. But, according to my experience and observation, our best educated men have not always proved our most useful and successful ministers. Many have been of that class; but the mass of our membership and ministry have not been raised up through the highly educated so much as through men taken from the common walks of life, and who have had but few literary advantages. Many of them, it is true, have made themselves distinguished, and have even risen to the rank of doctors of divinity.

It is our great misfortune that so large a proportion of our learned men, after they enter the ministry, get a call to the work of teaching, and feel the importance of education so much as to quit the work of the ministry to teach seminaries of learning, while they leave the drudgery and hardships and poverty of the regular work to those who do not boast such high literary attainments. They do not seem to feel that a layman can fill such positions, or that a call to the ministry is not essential to qualify for a school teacher. We do not pretend to say that our educated itinerants are not useful in schools and colleges; but would they not be more useful to the church if their talents and learning were wholly consecrated to the work of preaching and building up the church of Christ?

It is to be feared that many of our highly educated men [illegible] feel they were wasting [illegible] ness. [illegible] Castings, American [illegible] their sweetness in the desert air if they should be appointed to a backwoods circuit, among the illiterate laboring masses, who could not appreciate their talents, to occupy their little smoky cabins and participate in their rough fare and unpolished conversation.—They would feel themselves buried alive, and that the Bishop had done them great injustice. But it is said we must be learned in order to teach. So we must. We should understand the way of salvation; we must know Christ in order to teach him. But does this require a collegiate education? If ministers are to be teachers of literature and science, scientific and literary qualifications would be essential; but this is not the case. We are to teach the science of salvation by faith in our Lord Jesus Christ—the doctrine of holiness, consecration and sanctification. Must a man go through a college course to qualify him for this work? Not necessarily; otherwise the apostles were badly qualified for their work. With the exception of Paul they were unlearned and ignorant men; but God was with them, and made their preaching the power of God unto salvation to their hearers; and there are thousands of living witnesses to prove that this was not confined to the days of the apostles. The great Toplady, it is said, was converted under the preaching of an illiterate lay preacher in a barn in Ireland.

REVIVAL AT CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: Why do we not always have a revival at Conference? Perhaps it is our fault. Should we not examine and see?

It has been suggested that our sermons at Conference are less spiritual and powerful than on other occasions. To remedy this the Advocate advised us last fall to take our last sermon with us to Conference, even if it was not the best, as it was fresher in our minds, and we could preach it with more success.

The Mississippi Conference will assemble in Jackson on the 8th of December next. The pastor and members of that church are desirous that it may be made an occasion of revival to the church.—Perhaps there is no place in our Conference where a revival is needed worse than in Jackson. Let us use the means to promote the cause of Christ while at Conference. Let each preacher and delegate pray for it, and pay due attention to personal piety. Let those who may be appointed to preach, preach with a view to immediate results—"in the demonstration of the Spirit and with power." In our personal intercourse with each other, and with the families we stay with, let us always have the cause of God at heart, and make everything subservient to the interests of pure religion.

O! brethren, let us have a glorious revival at Conference. Pray for it from now on. May it be the occasion of building up the church there, of the conversion of many souls, and of our own advancement in scriptural holiness.

A Member.

Collegiate Institute at Baton Rouge.

Mr. Editor: In this time of noisy self-announcement and egotistic trumpetings of doing and no-doing, it is refreshing to find a silent, earnest worker—one who accepts his work as divinely appointed, and performs it in an humble, bravo and brotherly spirit. Such [illegible] Samuel [illegible] Such an one is found in Prof. W. H. N. Magruder, principal of the Collegiate Institute at Baton Rouge. Concerning a man so widely and so favorably known informational statement is needless; but friendship permits and justice demands the public acknowledgment of his worth.

A few days passed at the institute afforded the opportunity to observe somewhat of its management. Fifty boys were in attendance, and yet there was more of quiet than in many families in which the juvenile element is made up of only two or three boys. The quiet, too, was the quiet of vigorous, working life. At the appointed hour the boys promptly entered the school room, studied well, and at the close of the school day came out seeming satisfied with what had been done, and ready for the sports of the campus. There appeared nothing of the weariness or ill nature so frequent at the end of school hours, and which so often explodes in snarls and quarrels on the play-ground or by the wayside. In their egress there was nothing of the tumultuous rush so suggestive of jail delivery, nor anything of the constrained order required by pedagogic martinets.

The institute is a classical school of more merit than many readily perceive or clearly appreciate. The course of study is liberal, the instruction thorough, the discipline wise, buildings comfortable, grounds ample and situation pleasant. In the principal of this school there is that which eminently fits him to instruct and govern. His power in dealing with his pupils is not the power of mere position, sustained by artificial props and secured by official fences; but the power of intellectual superiority and moral excellence. The boys feel in him the might of goodness. They know him to be real, and trust him. Such is his influence that every boy in whom there is nobleness enough to receive the truth, feels that he has a right character to form and sustain, and that he shares the responsibility of maintaining the honor and good name of the school. Many of these boys possess a spirit and exhibit a bearing which has gained for them the distinction of real gentlemen.

When authority can get its You must translated by the subject into I ought, and then I will, it seems to me the perfection of government is reached. Authority is acknowledged to be lawful, requirement is admitted as obligation, and voluntarily fulfilled. This is the obedience which is the outer law translated into an inner force. Now precisely this often occurs in that school.—The professor does not propose nor attempt pedagogic thaumaturgy. He means simply to do his work well and truly. Whoever wishes a boy to be deformed into a sciolist, and wants flippancy instead of culture, and pertness rather than attainment, cannot get such work done there. Whoever wishes a boy well instructed, and seeks for him the influence of a manly piety, will find there the thing he desires.—Since the days of the great Dr. Arnold, of Rugby, I think there has appeared no better trainer of boys than the principal of the Collegiate Institute at Baton Rouge.

A Sympathizer with True Teachers.

Where is the Lord's Portion?

Mr. Editor: January, 1869, found a large proportion of the planting members of Christ's church involved in debt, caused by the continued failure of crops since the surrender. Commission merchants and village storekeepers had furnished supplies, and payment was impossible. The missionary, Bible and Conference claims had been duly presented every year, and even interest on these debts not paid. Ministers' salaries were acknowledged as just claims, but "Inability to Pay" signed receipt of payment. Solemn invocations to God for help were offered. Sacred promises to discharge every debt are on record. God had faith in those promises—a bountiful crop of cotton, corn and sugar, the answer visible every [illegible] where. Accounts of [illegible] merchants and storekeepers are being called for and settled. Already the farmer is happy, feels independent, is thinking about adding acre to acre, exchanging poor land for that which is more fertile. New coats, bonnets and all the paraphernalia of dress are being purchased. The wagon, now loaded with good things to eat—flour, mackerel, cheese, etc.—is waiting at the merchant's door, soon to leave town; happy hearts, anxious eyes wait its return. The farmer's cup of joy is full. A voice inquires: "Where is the Lord's portion?" It speaks in this wise: "Your minister has been serving you in spiritual things as faithfully as heavy debts (incurred in serving you) and pinching want (staring him in the face continually) have permitted him."

His wife and little ones have been told: "All will be well when the crop is made and cotton is sold; then a few new garments for all; a small share of nice things to eat shall grace our table." O, what a blessed thing is hope; but "hope deferred maketh the heart sick!"

The last round of appointments is being made; Conference is near at hand. The last chance to pay the Lord's portion is now being presented. "The widows and orphans of the holy men of God, fallen in the work," are to pay debts, buy food and raiment out of the amount due them from the Conference fund. Just think of it. Two bales of cotton at twenty-five cents per pound, a half pound of tobacco, two dozen eggs or two pounds of butter, value of each fifty cents, if singly appropriated, would cancel the debt. The same for missions would send cheer, where moral darkness and true sorrow reign.

Don't send your minister away with any part of his salary due him. Let him go to Conference with a cheerful heart, knowing that his debts are paid, and loved ones at home are comfortable.

God is keeping a strict account of all you have received, and of the manner you use it. Rob not God in tithes and offerings, else a curse will rest with all you have. Render unto the Lord his portion, then you can honestly sing: "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow." The minister will quit his trade, profession and farm, and enter fully into the work. The widows and orphans will thank God they are not forgotten. The heathen, at home as well as abroad, will rejoice throughout all eternity, that "those who had more gave unto those who had less."

Letter from East Tennessee.

Mr. Editor: You have already seen accounts of the last meeting of the Holston Conference. The whole session was one of the most pleasant and harmonious I ever attended. All the interests of Southern Methodism are improving and coming up in this hill country. It is astonishing to see with what rapidity our church is recovering from the terrible disasters that befell her during and since the war in this field.

The Northern Methodist Church, which, you know, never existed south of the division line, came here before the smoke of battle had fairly cleared away, and organized, first, a mission, then a Conference; took possession of about $75,000 worth of our church property, and, in thirty counties of Tennessee, did their utmost to make the impression that it would be viewed as an act of disloyalty to the government for our people to continue in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, some intimating that the property of those who attempted to do so would be unsafe, thus threatening the people with the loss of what little they had, unless they would leave the church where God converted them and join that radical, negro equality organization known as the Methodist Episcopal Church. Others said that certain ministers in lower East Tennessee, who had refused to join them, would be killed. They told the people everywhere that the Methodist [illegible] Episcopal Church South could never again exist in this country. On one hand they made threats to intimidate and deter both ministers and people from any attempt to remain in the Church South; on the other, held out inducements of missionary aid to the preachers, many of whom were in great need at that time. So that if there were any cowardice or love of money in a man, or if his necessities were pressing him sore, they played upon all these cards with tremendous force, and used them to compel men to join them.

After they had gathered in all they could by all these unfair means there was a certain element turned loose to persecute and mob out of the country all those ministers who had the courage and resolution to hold on to the church of their fathers.

While the courts were Radical, and in their favor, they used on the few defenseless preachers who remained in the country the rail, the club, the withe, the pistol and the lawless mob. This worse than heathen treatment, which has been perpetrated in the interests of Northern Methodism in East Tennessee, has been continued in some localities until within a few months past. The unprincipled abusers of an apostle quit beating him and fled when they saw the officers of the civil law approaching. So there, after continuing their cruel treatment for four years in time of peace, they now see a tide of public sentiment rolling up and overspreading the land that will forever condemn their conduct, and they leave off beating us, and, turning round, offer us their hand and profess to love us, and desire a union with us. But where is there any evidence of their sincerity while they still hold on to every church and every dollar of our money? Let our people in Athens, Knoxville, Kingston, Jonesboro and other places be allowed to go back into their churches, from which they have been excluded every day for the last four years, and then they will believe that some good and right principle is beginning to control them in this matter. But the coming of their Bishops to ours, and then the preaching and talking about union with our property still in their hands, is to us less than nothing.

I only refer to these things now to show what Southern Methodist ministers have had to contend with in this field.

I allude to them in no ill spirit, but in a spirit of thankfulness to God that out of all he has so mercifully brought us, and that many, in the darkest hour that ever passed over us in this country, could say in truth, "None of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself."

Very truly, your brother in Christ,

J Atkins.

Cleveland, Tenn., Nov. 4, 1869.

EAST TEXAS CONFERENCE.

The twenty-fifth session of the East Texas Conference met in Henderson, Wednesday, October 20, at nine o'clock A. M. Bishop William M Wightman in the chair. After opening Conference with the usual religious exercises, roll called and Jeff Shook elected secretary, and J. F. Riggs assistant secretary, the regular business was taken up. We had lost one of our number, Brother J. R Burk, who, his presiding elder reported, died in great peace and Christian triumph. May we all be ready when called away.

The numerical strength of the church has been greatly enlarged; finances are improving, and a healthy state of spirituality and religious devotion characterizes our Zion generally; hundreds have been converted and added to the church the past year. The subject of education received a liberal share of attention, and the plan suggested and adopted, if carried into successful, systematic execution, will work out an endless and untold amount of good to the generations following. We had a pleasant session; the Bishop was always up with his part of the work. This time the preachers got into such a hurry to get home they would not, or at least did not, give him time nor chance to give us and leave with us his last parting blessing in the form of a deliberate and religious exhortation, as he would freely have done.

I regret that brethren will go so hastily for another reason, which is, that it unavoidably brings complaint against the promptness of the secretary, who cannot do everything at once.

OCTOBER THOUGHTS.

I.

Still falls the leaf; on golden sheaf
The harvest suns no longer shine;
In ruddier brown the suns go down,
And ruddier tinge the far sea line;
And each fair fading of the day shows plainer
yet the year's decay.

II.

Soon from the West, in angrier quest,
The chariots of the wind shall sweep;
Soon down the shore, with hoarser roar,
Shall sound the trumpets of the deep,
Till autumn's vesture disappear, and the dirk storm-cloud's path be clear.

III.

Then, while her eyes to leaden skies
The patient earth no more may raise,
E'en tempest's power in that drear hour
Shakes not her hope in gladder days—
She deems that spring will come anew and deck her in fresh robes of dew.

IV.

So, o'er her soul, when thick clouds roll,
And youth's bright pageants sink in shade,
When pressed with care, we woo despair,
As dreams we closest cling to fade—let some such gracious thought of spring rise hopeful to our imaging.

THE YOUNG IN THE SERMON.

Many ministers are in the habit, at stated periods, of preaching sermons to the children of the congregation, giving them a conspicuous position in front of the audience. These services have been found profitable both for children and parents. But there is a less formal way of reaching the object sought after, and at the same time securing another not less important one.

Theirs is just the age when we should wish to awaken the warmest interest in the service of God's house, and to attach the hearts of the children to the ministry of the word. How can this better be done than by a constant recollection of their presence, and by an often and direct address to them in the progress of the discourse? Dr. Adams, of Boston, said that once, while he was preaching, he happened to glance over his manuscript, and saw a little fellow, so small that his feet could not touch the floor, with his eyes intently fixed upon him. He was so much affected by the eagerness of the little lad's manner, that he laid aside his sheets for a few moments and addressed himself to the anxious little hearer before him.

It would be well if ministers more frequently recognized the youth in the congregation, and directed their affectionate counsels to them. It would draw the heart of the child to the minister, to the church and to Christ. Upon the death of the late lamented Dr. Kennedy, at the memorial service held in the preachers' meeting, one of our honored brethren, in rendering his tribute of grateful remembrance to this beloved servant of God, referred to his own experience. He was a Sunday school scholar in the Allen street church, and sat with others in the gallery. The public service had not interested him particularly heretofore, because it had not specially addressed childhood. But when Dr. Kennedy stood up to preach in the pulpit, in the midst of his discourse he said, "I am going now to speak to the children in the gallery," and in his winning way, and with his pleasant voice, he preached the Gospel to them in a manner that they could understand.

That minister, then a child, had never felt before that the preaching was meant for him. It never came to his mind that he had any interest in the service. The sitting still in the gallery was the thing to be done on the Sabbath. But now the minister was looking at him, and was talking to him, and the Gospel reached his heart that day. Thus a life of usefulness was saved to the church by this episode in the sermon.

That minister must be greatly wanting in Christian sensibility who can look unmoved upon the children of the flock growing up amid the perils of these times. It would be certainly a wholesome test by which to try discourses when prepared in the minister's study to ask the question, How much of it can be understood and will impress the mind of a child? The direct and affectionate address that never fails to hold the attention of a young person, is after all the most effectual form of approach to the mature mind.

Remember, then, the children in the regular administration of the word; and he that does may rest assured of this, that neither the children nor their parents will fail to remember him.—New York Christian Advocate.

"Though it may not be in your power," said Marcus Aurelius, "to be a naturalist, a poet, an orator or a mathematician, it is in your power to be a virtuous man, which is the best of all."

A REMARKABLE CASE.

A few years ago an old man died in London, who was a remarkable instance of the mutability of human affairs, of the long-suffering and the grace of God, and of the benefits arising from special and extraordinary efforts for the salvation of men. He was born in 1770, and when twenty years of age he went to London to seek employment as a journeyman tailor. In a few years he commenced business on his own account, and he was so successful that in 1824 he was the owner of one of the largest establishments in the most fashionable part of the city, with an income of nearly £10,000 a year, a capital of £100,000, an expensive establishment in the country, and considerable influence.

But he was not satisfied with what he possessed, and his desire to increase his wealth led him to poverty. He became a speculator in the Stock Exchange, and investing his money unwisely, he in one year lost three-fifths of his property. Other losses followed, the remnants of his wealth soon dwindled away, and he who had lived in a fashionable square had at length to take up his abode as a weekly tenant in a miserable attic in the most wretched part of the city. He was at this time nearly eighty years old. A few years after this his wife, who was a Christian woman, died, and his cup of sorrow, already filled to the brim, seemed to overflow. With his home comforts diminished, he was reduced to a miserable pittance, doled out to him by the parish authorities and some relatives.

In these trying circumstances he had not the privilege which Christians enjoy in seasons of difficulty and sorrow. As a man of business he had been esteemed for his integrity and uprightness, and he had striven to maintain his character, and had prided himself upon it. He had been accustomed to attend the services of the established church, and thought he was doing his duty. But he had not submitted himself to God, he had not received salvation through Jesus Christ, and hence, instead of trusting in God in the time of his extremity, and looking to him for help, he could only curse himself for his imprudence and folly, which had brought him into these straits.

Reduced from affluence to the most abject poverty, burdened with sorrow, without friends, without hope for the present or the future, an old man nearly ninety years of age, he went about like one beside himself. One Lord's day evening, in the summer of 1860, he resolved to commit suicide, and left his miserable room with the intention to return to it no more. His destination was the square called Lincoln's Inn Fields. It was nearly nine o'clock, and to his surprise, instead of finding it nearly deserted, he saw a crowd of persons there. On going up to them to ascertain what was going on, he found a city missionary in the midst, who was reading the account of the conversion of the jailer at Philippi, and the words, "Do thyself no harm," forcibly arrested his attention. He listened with interest to the address which followed. He saw that he himself was on the brink of ruin, that he needed salvation, and that only Jesus could save him, and instead of rushing into the presence of God, he returned home to cry to God for mercy. In a few days he was led to trust in Jesus as his Saviour. Poor and wretched as he was, he learned that Jesus was his friend, and this knowledge made him happy. He enjoyed peace in believing. He now became very earnest in his attendance on the means of grace, and almost every evening in the week found him at some religious meeting, and in the summer he was a constant attendant on the open air services of the square where he first realized his condition as a sinner, and was thus led to Christ for salvation. On one occasion he told the city missionary and his pastor that he had enjoyed more real happiness since his conversion, notwithstanding his loneliness and poverty, than he had experienced in all the years of his worldly prosperity; that he continually blessed God, that in order to save his soul he had permitted his riches to fly away; and that although that day he had had only two baked apples for his dinner, he would rather have that, and Christ with it, than to have all his former superfluities without Christ; and he said that he was then the happiest man in London, although a short time before he had been the most miserable.

The day before he completed his ninety-third year he became sick, and was confined to his bed. It soon became evident that he was near his end; but he was happy. He knew that Jesus was his Saviour, and that absent from the body he should be present with the Lord; and in seven days he passed away.

God is the safety of his people, but we tempt Providence if we do not make use of the necessary means for our preservation.

PACIFIC CONFERENCE.

The Spectator of October 21 has the proceedings in full. We extract items of general interest and the appointments.

This session was one of the most pleasant we have ever held. Perfect harmony of feeling prevailed from the first to the last. Not an unkind or discourteous expression was heard. Brotherly love ruled supreme.

The religious services of "Conference week" were attended by large audiences. The religious interest of the session culminated in a wonderful outpouring of divine grace during the love feast exercises and the Bishop's sermon on Sunday morning. That love feast and that sermon will never be forgotten by any who were present. A year of religious prosperity was crowned with a Conference session attended with extraordinary interest. A sacramental service closed the services on Tuesday night, in connection with which seven persons united with the church.

Under the first question, Who are admitted on trial? W. A. Spurlock presented the name of John Allen from the Los Angeles district. He was received.

The election of clerical delegates to the General Conference, being the special order at eleven o'clock, was taken up, with the following result: O. Fisher was elected on the first ballot, T. C. Barton on the second ballot, and E. K. Miller on the fourth ballot. George Sim was elected alternate delegate.

The election of lay delegates to the General Conference was taken up, with the following result: On the first ballot William T. Rucker and W. E. Cocke were elected. On the second ballot W. R. Bane was elected. John M. Swinford was elected alternate delegate.

George Sim, statistical secretary, read his report, from which it appears that the number of church members is three thousand three hundred and eighty-five—an increase of five hundred and seventy-two during the year; deaths, forty-four; local preachers, fifty-three; adults baptized, three hundred and fifty-eight; children baptized, two hundred and eighty-six; churches, twenty-eight—valued at $79,300; parsonages, twenty-three—valued at $20,509. This shows a decided and encouraging advance in all the interests of the church.

Total amount of the preachers' claims for the past year was $29,543. Total amount received $24,636. Showing a deficiency of $4,907.

Total amount collected for domestic missions $737 81¼, which has been paid to the treasurer of the Conference Board of Missions.

Total amount of Conference collection $575.

Total amount of Bishops' fund reported $1,172.15, total amount received $1,175.65, leaving a deficiency of $28.35 in the amount due on this fund.

The New English Bishops.—Mr. Gladstone has nominated to all the vacant bishoprics in England. His selection is as follows: The Rt. Rev. Samuel Wilberforce, Bishop of Oxford, is translated to the See of Winchester. The Rev. Lord Arthur Hervey, Archdeacon of Sudbury, is appointed Bishop of Bath and Wells. The Rev. Frederick Temple, D. D., now head master at Rugby school, is appointed Bishop of Exeter. The very Rev. Harvey Goodwyn, D. D., Dean of Ely, is appointed Bishop of Carlisle. The Rev. John Fielder Mackarness, Rector of Honiton, is appointed Bishop of Oxford.

—Bishop Wilberforce, who is too well known to require further mention, is sixty four years of age, and has been Bishop of Oxford since 1845. Lord Arthur Hervey and Dr. Goodwyn can hardly be said to belong to any particular church party. Mr. Mackarness is a moderate High Churchman. He is a son-in-law of Sir John Taylor Coleridge, and therefore brother-in-law of the Solicitor General, Sir John Duke Coleridge. None of these appointments would cause opposition from any section of the church. Very differently, however, is the nomination of Dr. Temple received. This gentleman, one of the ablest men in the church, was one of the contributors to the famous "Essays and Reviews," and, although his essay was the least pronounced of all, yet his leanings toward the Broad Church party are well known, and his name seems to have called forth very strong opposition; for very excited must be the feelings which cause two such men as the Earl of Shaftesbury and Dr. Pusey to act together on ecclesiastical matters. Unless, however, the English church is to cease being catholic and comprehensive, she cannot afford to lose such a man as Dr. Temple, and no Broad Churchman can be found whose executive ability, liberality and piety better fit him for promotion to the episcopal bench, than the distinguished head master of Rugby. The most marked thing in the list of new bishops is the absence of the name of Dean Stanley, who it was supposed would certainly, by special royal favor, be appointed Bishop of Oxford, in whose diocese Windsor Castle is situated.

Peter Cartwright on his own Jubilee.—Through the mercy of God I have survived the operation of the jubilee at Lincoln, and I am glad to know that while the heavenly bodies run their appointed and brilliant courses, and God rules supreme, that I shall never see another jubilee on earth. But do not think me ungrateful to my brethren and friends at large, for I have no language at my command to express my gratitude to them for the honor done me on the occasion, such was the sudden transition from frontier, backwoods life in which I had served the church for sixty-five years as a traveling Methodist preacher, to this golden and silver age in which my fiftieth year as presiding elder expired. Add to this the eloquent addresses made on the occasion, well calculated to make me doubt my identity. It is true I had read of Peter the Great, Peter the Hermit and Peter the Apostle, but Peter the Cartwright, I said to myself, who is he? It is also true the golden and silver tokens of respect were abundant. All honor to the donors; their names will go down to generations yet to come, and while I remember the good word, "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation," yet the thought would rise, What shall I and my old faithful wife eat and wear? for all the available means received on the occasion that could be used in that way with any consistent propriety would not secure a comfortable overcoat or warm shawl to breast the winter storms of Illinois.—Central Christian Advocate.

The Empress Eugenie, during her recent stay of five days at Venice, declined the offer of the use of the royal palace, and lodged on shipboard. She was visited on the vessel by the King and Crown Prince of Italy, General Menalrea, Signor Minghetti and Admiral Ribotti. During the day time she visited the picture galleries and other attractions of Venice.

New Hampshire may be called the old folks' State. The Concord Statesman gives a list of eighty-five women and fifty-one men who have died in New Hampshire one hundred years old and upward.

FARM AND GARDEN.

FOREST GROWTH.

One of the most lamentable effects of our system of labor was the destruction of our beautiful and useful forest growth. One of the first acts of restitution for the injury should be to cover again the desolate acres with trees. In the "haste to be rich" the Southern people felt they had no time to plant trees, and, indeed, many who made fortunes boasted that they never had planted a tree. The comfort of home and the cultivation of rural taste were made to bend to king cotton, who ignored everything but an open field. Planters have been deprived of their negroes by act of government, and thereby compelled to abandon thousands of acres of open fields, and, in many instances, find that there is a scarcity of good fire wood and timber suited to the wants of a farm—not to say anything of the destruction of the rich mast which the wooded land once afforded hogs. I propose to suggest a plan which will remedy, in part, these evils.

Let the farmer, who has a worn out field near his dwelling, collect this fall chestnuts, white oak acorns, pecan nuts, china berries and peach stones. When he has gathered in his crop let him break up this field—lay it off in rows ten feet one way and five feet the other, and plant the above seeds in the following order along the rows, the ten feet way: First row, acorns; second row, peach stones; third row, pecan nuts; fourth row, china berries; fifth row, chestnuts; sixth row, peach seed; seventh row, again white acorns, following the same order of from one to seven.

By this order it will be observed that rows of trees of slow growth and permanent character will be twenty feet apart. I would plant the field in peas the following spring after the usual crop is planted, and give them one or two workings during the season. The peas will pay all the expenses for seed and plowing in fattening hogs; no other stock should be allowed on this field at least for five or six years. When the crop is disposed of I would replant missing places, and trim up such young trees as had been growing the past season. In the following spring plant again in peas and cultivate as before. The previous crop of pea vines and dropping of hogs will ensure a better crop, which of course will pay better for labor bestowed. In the course of three years the peach trees will begin to bear fruit, which, added to the peas, will make more pork. These peach trees will bear more and more, year by year, until they begin to decline, when they should be cut out for wood. The trimming and thinning will furnish wood for burning by the fourth year. From this point it can be depended on for fuel, and even for rails and posts.

Let no one regard this as extravagant. During the last spring a "cold snap" in April caught me without wood. I had two China trees cut down, which were nine years old from the seed. These trees measured fifteen inches across the stump, and made a cord of wood, which I found to burn equal to ash, and more like it than any other with which I can compare it. Another China tree on the place, which was not more than fifteen years from the seed, measured twenty-two inches in diameter, and would, without doubt, have made a cord of wood—equal to any fuel ever used in any country.

The thick planting and trimming will cause the trees to grow straight with long bodies—better suited for all purposes about the farm.

By the time the peach and China trees mature and are used, the white oaks, pecan nuts and chestnuts will be in bearing, and afford mast for hogs, as well as timber for all the purposes of the farm, with judicious thinning. Of course the cultivation of peas must cease as soon as the land becomes crowded with trees. The land might then be sown in blue grass, which will add greatly to its value as a "range" for hogs.

That class of Southern men who never would plant fruit trees, because they "did not know that they would live to eat the fruit," will sneer at the proposition I make to cover our worn out land with forest growth. I will simply say to these gentlemen, I am not talking to you, but am addressing myself to such men as love their native State and their old homestead, and are willing to labor to make them again blossom as the rose.

Let sneerers pursue the folly of their fathers in cutting down and wearing out their land, and then moving West to destroy other beautiful forests. It may be that the prophecy of Isaiah will be fulfilled in them: "The land shall be utterly emptied, and utterly spoiled. The earth mourneth and fadeth away; the world languisheth and fadeth away; the haughty people of the earth do languish."—Isaiah 24: 3, 4.

Short Rules in Rural Economy.—Paint all tools exposed to the weather, and if with a light colored paint they will not heat, warp or crack in the sun.

Dip well seasoned shingles in a lime wash and dry them before laying, and they will last much longer and not become covered with moss.

Dip the ends of nails into grease, and they will drive easily into hard wood, where they would otherwise double and break.

In plowing or teaming on the road in hot weather, always rest the horses on an eminence, where one minute will be worth two in a warm valley.

In setting out young orchards always register the varieties immediately in a book, where they may be referred to in a few years, when the trees commence bearing, and the labels are lost and names are forgotten.

In laying a garden for fruit and vegetables place everything in drills or rows, so that they may be cultivated by a horse, and thus save the expense of hard labor.

When board fences become old and boards begin to come off, nail upright, facing strips upon them against each post, and the boards will be held to their places, and the fence will last several years longer.

Salt for Peach Trees.—Downing, in his work on fruit trees, speaks of the application of salt to peach trees as a very effectual agent for the destruction of the peach worm. He says: "In a neighborhood where the peach worm usually destroys one-half the peach trees, we have seen them preserved in the healthiest condition by the annual application of a handful of coarse salt about the collar of the tree, at the surface of the ground."

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

Cream Cakes.—Melt as much butter in a pint of milk as will make it rich as cream; make the flour into a paste with this, knead it well, roll it out frequently, cut it in squares and bake on a griddle.

Common Hard Soap.—Put in an iron kettle five pounds unslacked lime, five pounds soda and three gallons of soft water; let it soak over night; in the morning pour off the water, then add to the water three and a half pounds of grease, boil till thick, and turn into a pan until cut in bars.

White Hard Soap.—Seven pounds of soda, three of lime, four gallons of water; boil together till dissolved. Let this stand to settle, then pour off as long as any remains clear, and add water to make four gallons. Boil this, adding four pounds of grease and two tablespoonfuls of borax; boil till thick. Take up and put away to cool.

Good Way of Cooking Onions.—It is a good plan to boil onions in milk and water; it diminishes the strong taste of that vegetable. It is an excellent way of serving up onions to chop them after they are boiled, and put them in a stew pan, with a little milk, butter, salt and pepper, and let them stew about fifteen minutes. This gives them a fine flavor, and they can be served up very hot.

French Rolls.—Mix a quart of lukewarm milk with a quart of flour that has been sifted, a couple of spoonfuls of melted butter, just lukewarm, a teaspoonful of salt, half a cup of home-brewed yeast, or a large spoonful of distillery yeast, and keep it warm till risen. When light, work in flour to render it sufficiently stiff to mold up; let it remain until risen again, then roll it out, cut it in small pieces, and mold them into small rolls; lay them on buttered tins, and let them remain for a few minutes before baking.—Bake them in a quick oven.

How to Get Rich.—A certain man, who is very rich now, was very poor when he was a boy. When asked how he got his riches he said: "My father taught me never to play until my work was finished, and never to spend my money until I had earned it. If I had but an hour's work in a day, I must do that the first thing, and in an hour. And after that I was allowed to play; and then I could play with more pleasure than if I had thoughts of an unfinished task before my mind. I early formed the habit of doing everything in time, and soon it became easy to do so. It is to this I owe my prosperity." Let every one who reads this do likewise.

The Vienna opera singers have very queer ideas in regard to refreshments for keeping the voice in order. Each one has his or her peculiar specific. The Swedish tenor Labatt takes "two salted cucumbers;" Santhoirn drinks cold lemonade and takes a pinch of snuff. Watchel eats the yolk of an egg beaten with sugar, and Walter drinks cold black coffee.

UNION SPRINGS, ALA., Oct. 26.

New Orleans District Meeting.

This meeting was held on Saturday, the 6th instant. Dr. J. B. Walker presided. W. H. Foster, Esq, was chosen secretary. The morning session was devoted to receiving reports from the various charges of the district. The night session was occupied in receiving reports from committees and in the election of lay representatives to the Annual Conference. The meeting was harmonious, pleasant and profitable. The following gentlemen were elected as lay members of the Louisiana Conference, to be held at Shreveport, January 12, 1870: W. H. Foster, R. L. Robertson, J. L. Dunnica, J. C. Miller. Alternates: J. H. Keller and the nominee of Baton Rouge.

NEW ADVERTISEMENT.

COLEMAN'S CORN AND WHEAT MILLS. It is over twenty years since the late Colonel Willis P. Coleman started at New Orleans a factory for making corn and wheat mills, under a patent of his own, and their superior merit soon made them an especial favorite throughout the South and Southwest. At the last Louisiana State Fair this mill took the highest premium over the best mills from the other leading factories of the United States. See advertisement in to-day's paper for further information.

ATTENTION is called to the notice of a fair to be held in Algiers, during the coming week, for the benefit of our church in that place. The object is a worthy one, and we commend the undertaking to the liberal patronage of our friends of the city.

THURSDAY, the 18th instant, is appointed by the President, and also by our Governor, as a day of thanksgiving.

REV. HENRY BOEHM.—This venerable minister spent Sunday, October 17, in Pittsville, Pennsylvania, and was called upon to baptize some children of the fourth generation. Since he ministered there before, sixty-five years have elapsed.

GEORGE PEABODY.

The death of Mr. Peabody will awaken regret in the minds of many millions of people. His fame is wider than that of most crowned heads, and his name will be as "familiar as household words" when other celebrities shall be forgotten. People of every faith throughout the civilized world have done homage to his virtues, and now that he is dead he is mourned as no other contemporaneous personage will be. His life was not eventful. The exciting and stirring affairs and scenes which impart interest to the lives of soldiers and statesmen do not belong to his history. The most that is generally known of him is that he made a great deal of money, and that he expended it in princely benefactions.

A native of Danvers, Massachusetts, it appears that his early educational advantages were limited to the common school. In his boyhood he was clerk to a grocer, and afterward to his elder brother in a dry goods store; and in the course of years he became the successful merchant and banker. He was, under Providence, the architect of his own fortune, and was, in the strictest sense of that term, "a self-made man." He was doubtless peculiarly endowed by nature for business, and possessed, in its highest perfection, the art of accumulating money. There is in this field of enterprise range for some of the highest powers of intellect. The truly great merchant and financier displays something not far removed from genius, and exhibits mental gifts which command our respect. In Mr. Peabody this consummate skill in making money was associated with the most perfect integrity. His uprightness and rectitude of character were never sacrificed in the smallest degree.

His example is a rebuke to that moral skepticism which makes honesty incompatible with success in business, and is, for this reason, an excellent model for young men. The colossal fortune of this eminent man was made honestly, and without detriment to the severest morality. Had it been acquired by the jugglery, jobbing and gambling which are so common in business affairs, we should question the propriety of commending the generous deeds which it enabled him to perform. That Mr. Peabody was a millionaire does not lift him above hundreds of others who have been or are as rich. Several, if not many, in Europe and America are worth as much. But it is rare to find money-fame associated with a character so eminent for business integrity and every virtue. His successful career as a merchant and the possession of large wealth would have given him a comparatively limited celebrity. That which astonishes the world and challenges universal admiration is the fact that George Peabody gave away millions of money for benevolent objects. We do not know how much was left at death by this generous giver, but it is thought that the bulk of his fortune was disposed of. Much as this fact redounds to the credit of the giver, it is at the same time a sad reflection upon the world at large. The example of Howard is conspicuous because the world contains few or none like him; and here is another great and good man made illustrious by the rarity of the beneficence which he has exhibited. If simple honesty makes a man noted, we must conclude that society is wanting in integrity.

That the times afford but this instance of such great wealth, devoted to judicious benefactions, is a significant comment upon the godless money-getting and avarice of the age. Mr. Peabody has perhaps done his duty in the disposal of his fortune before he was called away from earth. God gave it, and he has returned it to Him in the endeavor to promote the well-being of his fellow-men. In this he has simply done his duty—nothing more. If people generally were in the habit of "honoring the Lord with their substance," would this example stand out as the moral wonder of the day. Where are all the other rich men, whose delinquency makes such an incident past apprehension and almost past belief? All, in their measure, are required to go and do likewise. The standard of duty and responsibility has not been exceeded. Exceptional as this generosity is in human and in Christian practice, it is not above the divine requirement of all who have received of God "the unspeakable gift." From the point of religious obligation, we find ourselves asking the question: "Why do not all, according to their circumstances, do as George Peabody has done?" We know nothing of his religious opinions and faith, but we are sure that the measure and expression of his benevolence is a rebuke and exposure of that covetousness which prevails to an alarming extent in the church.

Great catholicity of spirit is displayed in his benefactions. Benevolence, in its highest aspects, lifts the soul above all that is politically sectional or religiously sectarian. So far as we can now recall his gifts, there is no narrowness, no bigotry indicated by them. The Old World and the New shared in the benefits he dispensed, and all believers unite in revering his character and in doing honor to his memory. We of the South, especially, have cause to affectionately cherish the remembrance of his name. His friendship for us, exhibited in contributing to build up our institutions of learning, and to secure education impartially to all, has occasioned the only censure which has ever been uttered against him. Only the most bitter representatives of New England fanaticism have showed themselves capable of attempting to cast reproach upon him. Mr. Peabody's acquaintance with the South, and his naturally noble and elevated spirit, enabled him to appreciate the character of our people and to sympathize with them in their calamities. *

"The Holy Roman Church" and the Circus.

The circus the other day gave a grand matinee exhibition for the "benefit" of Father Moynihan's church (St. John's) of Dryades street. This is a new use to which to put the circus, and the church too, we might add, for that matter. We doubt not it was fully understood by "the high contracting parties" that neither were to be losers by their mutual concessions and contributions—Father Moynihan on his part advertising his "benefit" at the circus in the daily papers, and by innumerable handbills thrown into the street cars for the enlightenment of travelers—These advertisements told what circus it was, and wherein it held service for the benefit of his church. These special advertisements reached a large class never reached by the stunning and highly colored placard notices, on the walls and fences, of the perilous feats of "ground and lofty tumbling." The man of the circus having an eye to business the while, is sharp enough to see that this will pay. Besides this he puts the circus in the "odor of sanctity," and makes it a colaborer with pious Romanists in the work of church building, and commends it to the sympathies and patronage of the Roman Church, which is numerically strong in this city.

This strikes us as a new and strong illustration of the Jesuitical maxim that "the end sanctifies the means." This maxim might be pushed a little further in milking and shearing other "gosts" for the benefit of the "shepherd" and the pecuniary advantage of the holy Roman Church.

We have in this city several large gambling establishments, licensed by our late "truly loyal" Legislature. They do, we hear, a heavy "business." Might they not be induced, if some reciprocal advantage could be secured, as in the case of the circus, to give their winnings for a night? The sum likely would contribute materially toward "building the wall" of Father Moynihan's church. We take it these skillful and sharp gentlemen would be rather gratified at the favorable aspect it would put upon a "profession" which some good people think (as they do of the circus) is one of questionable morality. As Father Moynihan is rather in this raiding and foraging way, we just throw out this as a suggestion worthy of his consideration. In time, too, successful incursions might be made "over the border" into the territories of the drinking houses.

As Protestants do not adopt the maxim that "the end sanctifies the means," they are restrained from availing themselves of Father Moynihan's method of raising money. Besides, as they are not restrained from reading the Scriptures, they are familiar with various texts which tell them that they must not be conformed to the world, must come out from the wicked, and to avoid the appearance of evil, and to refuse to take the hire of unholy employments for holy uses.

Seriously, we must think that the skeptic world smiles in scorn at Christian pretences to unworldliness and sanctity when they see the church use the circus as an agent to collect money for holy uses.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

SONGS OF THE NEW LIFE. Designed for public, social and private Christian uses. Edited by Rev. Darius E. Jones. Chicago: Published by Root & Cady, 67 Washington street.

This is a hymn and tune book, and one of the best, as far as we are able to judge after looking through it with considerable care. The best of the old tunes and hymns are in it, and there is a good number of new hymns and tunes, which competent judges pronounce excellent. We welcome all books thus arranged, because they promote good congregational singing.

DAME NATURE AND HER THREE DAUGHTERS. A grandpapa's talks and stories about natural history and daily use. Translated from the French of X. B Saintine, author of Picciola. New York: Published by Hurd & Houghton. Cambridge: Riverside Press. 1869

An elegantly bound volume of two hundred and sixty pages. Type and illustrations of the choicest. A great deal of information for the young—the very young—served in a style to interest. We shall try to give our young people occasional samples from this beautiful and attractive work. For sale by George Ellis, opposite the post office, New Orleans.

THE TWO BARONESSES. A romance. By Hans Christian Andersen. New York: Published by Hurd & Houghton. Cambridge: Riverside Press. 1869

This noted author has no superiors in the art of writing for children, and we believe his works of fiction for older people are entitled to a high place in public estimation. This book affords vivid and agreeable impressions of scenery and society in the north of Europe. For sale by George Ellis, opposite the post office, New Orleans.

THE QUEEN OF THE ADRIATIC, OR VENICE PAST AND PRESENT. By W. H Davenport Adams, author of "Buried Cities of Campania," "Record of Noble Lives," etc. London: T. Nelson & Sons, Paternoster Row; Edinburgh and New York.

This beautiful volume of three hundred and sixty-five pages is highly embellished with finished engravings, and printed on cream tinted paper, in the best English style. It contains all that the general reader will care to know about the strangest and most interesting of cities. For fifteen hundred years, or thereabouts, Venice was a sovereign power. Her influence, for much of that period, upon European affairs was decided. Her impress upon the commerce, art, science and literature of the world is still seen and felt. Part first of this volume treats of Venetian history. Part second relates to the fine arts, literature, manners and customs of Venice. Part third describes the public buildings and memorable places. A complete index adds to the value of the work, and we believe the author has performed his entire task in a most satisfactory manner. We are indebted to Rev. R. J. Harp, of our Depository, 112 Camp street, New Orleans, for this valuable work.

THE HUMAN INTELLECT. With an Introduction upon psychology and the soul. By Noah Porter, D. D., Clark professor of moral philosophy and metaphysics in Yale College. Fourth edition. New York: Charles Scribner & Co. 1869. One volume, 8vo, nearly 700 pages.

We have received this work from the publishers through R. J. Harp, of the Southern Methodist Depository, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

It is claimed for this work, and we believe justly, that it is the most thorough and comprehensive work upon mental science ever published in this country. The method and arrangement are admirable, adapting the work as a text book for colleges, and presenting the whole subject in the form most convenient for the student and general reader. We have especially marked the fact that the materialistic and anti-theistic notions, so prevalent in the writings of many metaphysicians, have no countenance in these pages. The author has done a timely service to truth in his refutation of these pernicious errors. The opinions of most of the leading writers and thinkers are passed in review, and we believe fairly stated, although often opposed. Sir William Hamilton comes in for a large share of notice, and some of his more prominent views are earnestly, and perhaps successfully, combatted. His principle or "law of the conditioned," we think, is disposed of. Dr. Porter resolves the matter thus: "We assert that the mind intuitively believes that every event is caused." Here is one argument of several directed against Hamilton's principle of the conditioned, with reference to causation:

"It is still more incongruous with any right notion of creative causality The creation of matter, or of mind, implies the production or origination into existence of that which did not exist in any of its constituents. It is called by Hamilton 'the evolution of a new form of existence by the fiat of the Deity.' But evolution ought, in consistency with his theory, to signify the changing of the materials already existing under one form into some new form; the kind of existence being already in being. This would require either that we believe in the co-eternity of matter with God, and that we restrict the agency of Deity to the exercise of a merely plastic or formative energy, or it would involve the pantheistic view, that in the spiritual nature or constitution of God there was also present a material substance from which, by a new evolution of divine action, the created universe emerged, as a new form of the matter which had from eternity existed in God. From spirit as such, from a pure spiritual essence, it cannot be conceived that matter should be evolved in any consistency with the theory of Hamilton, as defined by himself."

Under "the finite and conditioned, infinite and absolute," we find these suggestive paragraphs:

"In both finite and infinite there is a common mystery which cannot be overcome, and that is the mystery of self-existence. Whether we transform the finite into the so-called infinite by making of its powers and capacities of self-development an ideal absolute without intelligence or personality, or whether we accept as the real absolute a rational person, either must be self existent. It does not relieve the mystery to accept the fact of self-evolved and self evolving facts and laws; nor does it increase it to accept the fact of self-existent creating intelligence, whom we assume to explain the order and thought of the finite universe. The absolute is a thinking agent. The universe is a thought, as well as a thing. As fraught with design it reveals thought, as well as face. The thought includes the origination of the forces and their laws, as well as the combination and use of them. These thoughts must include the whole universe; it follows, then, that the whole universe is controlled by a single thought, or the thought of an individual thinker. If gravitation everywhere prevails, and gravitation is a thought as well as a thing, then the universe, so far as it depends on and is affected by gravitation, is a single thought But a thought implies a thinking agent, and if the universe is a single thought it was thought by one thinking agent. That this thinking person should be self-existent is, as we have seen, no greater mystery than a self existent thing."

Those who have a taste for mental philosophy cannot obtain a more comprehensive and satisfactory work upon the subject. The author's style is always clear, and abounds, wherever attainable, with copious and concrete illustrations. Works on this subject are numerous and voluminous, but for arrangement, comprehensiveness and manner of treatment, we prefer this to any other.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL TO THE ROMANS. By J. P. Lange, D. D., and the Rev. F. R. Fay. Translated from the German by J. F. Hurst, D. D. With additions by P. Schaff, D. D., and the Rev. M. B. Riddle. New York: Charles Scribner & Co., 654 Broadway. 1869

We are indebted to R. J. Harp, of our Depository, 112 Camp street, New Orleans, for this valuable work, through whom we have received it from the publishers. This is the only volume of Lange's great Commentary which we have been fortunate enough to possess. For a sample of the whole we could not have fallen upon a volume more to the purpose. The general editor truly characterizes "the Epistle to the Romans as the Epistle of the Epistles, as the Gospel of John is the Gospel of the Gospels." Meyer has characterized it as "the grandest, the boldest, and, in all its depths and heights, the most complete composition of the great apostle."—Coleridge pronounces the Epistle to the Romans "the most profound work in existence." This is probably the most complete commentary on this most important scripture. It is, in fact, a copious cyclopedia of knowledge and literature on the subject in hand. It is not the work of one man, but of many of the ablest scholars and divines of the age. Every important and difficult passage is subjected to the critical acumen and learning of several of the most erudite and vigorous biblical scholars; and a luminous and comprehensive digest of the various opinions of all the eminent writers is given. The arrangement is such as greatly to facilitate the work of examination and reference, and leaves nothing to be desired in the methodical division of the comment in the following heads: Textual, exegetical and critical, doctrinal and ethical, homilitical and practical. It is a work for ministers, scholars and students, rather than for the general reader. To those for whose use it is chiefly adapted it will prove invaluable.—Judging from the volume before us, the entire work, when completed, will be a library of commentaries in one. German and American scholarship and industry have been expended upon it; and as a cotemporary has truly said: "Its piety is simple and fervent, its orthodoxy pure and unquestioned." Dr. Hurst, a Methodist, is responsible for the translation of this volume and for the valuable homiletical selections from the best English sources. The "many things hard to be understood" in this Epistle are perhaps as satisfactorily explained as the nature of the subjects admit of. Everything of value which has been contributed to their solution is brought together, and the reader, while left to choose, is aided and guided in his pursuit of the truth. No minister of the Gospel can afford to be without the work. The entire work of Lange, as far as published, is for sale by R. J. Harp, Depository, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

COMMENTARY ON THE GOSPELS. By Thomas O. Summers, D. D. Vol. I.—St. Matthew. Nashville, Tennessee: Southern Methodist Publishing House. 1869. 12mo, pp. 368.

Our Publishing House has issued no work in better style than this. Paper, print and binding are all good; the latter, perhaps, not as substantial as it ought to be. Commentaries are necessarily subjected to much and hard usage. The author has accomplished his task in a very satisfactory and judicious manner. We have been able to give the work but a hasty examination, but we have reached the conviction that the author has succeeded admirably in what he has undertaken. We have in it "a condensed commentary on the Gospels," in which the results of modern, as well as ancient, learning and criticism are given. We have examined the notes upon some of the most important and difficult passages, and find that the exegesis is marked by sound judgment and rare discernment. Of Methodist commentators, Wesley, Clark, Watson and Whedon have gone over the same ground. All are excellent, but for the use of the general reader, Sunday school teachers and young preachers Dr. Summers' work is, in some respects, better than any. Everything is noticed and explained which the reader could desire, and, at the same time, there is no needless prolixity. In terseness and directness we are reminded of Wesley's notes, whilst there is abundant amplification and fullness where the subject demands a larger exposition. The notes have a contemporary freshness about them, which continually reminds us that the author is of our own time, and well up with the age in which he lives. This volume contains a map of Palestine, which will make it more acceptable and useful to the young; and is also accompanied by a small Book of Questions adapted to the commentary. All of our youth, Sunday school teachers and Methodist families should have this work, and we hope that all will obtain it soon.

BURKE'S WEEKLY FOR BOYS AND GIRLS. An illustrated journal of instruction and entertainment. T. A. Burke, editor. October, 1869 — Macon, Georgia: John W. Burke & Co., publishers.

The numbers for October have just reached us. This periodical for the young is a Southern production and worthy of patronage. If it received the hearty support to which it is entitled, we have no doubt it would soon equal and possibly excel everything of the kind now published in the North.

BRAINARD'S MUSICAL WORLD.

The November number is on our table, and is most attractive, filled with beautiful new music and interesting reading. The Musical World is one of the best and most popular musical magazines in the country. Each number contains twenty pages of new music and valuable reading.

THE NEW ECLECTIC MAGAZINE, NOVEMBER, 1869.

This periodical is growing in popularity, and is becoming in all respects the equal of the best, and in some things, to the Southern reader, is better than any of the magazines. This number contains a rich and varied table of contents.

The Alabama Colored Conference.

The presiding elders of the Mobile and Montgomery Conferences will please bear in mind the request, some time ago made, to send, if they cannot personally attend, to Talladega, Alabama, by November 25, a full account of the state of the colored churches within their bounds, who are under our charge. The Alabama Colored Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South will (D. V.) be organized at that time and place. In carrying out this plan of the General Conference, which has already been favorably inaugurated in Tennessee, Kentucky, Georgia and Mississippi, we must have and we expect the sympathy and co-operation of our white membership. The accounts desired should describe the preachers who may be available, as well as the congregations and churches organized among our colored members.

H. N. MCTYEIRE.

NASHVILLE, November 2, 1869.

LAY DELEGATES.—Bishop McTyeire has handed us the following decisions in regard to lay delegates:

"The lay members of an Annual Conference are entitled to be recorded on its journal, as such, whether they are present or absent; as is the case with ministerial members. And, in the absence of their alternates, they are to be reckoned in the basis of constituency for representatives to General Conference.

"Where there are less than four delegates from an Annual Conference, a local preacher cannot be a member of the delegation. The lay delegates to the General Conference need not be members of the Annual Conference. It is only required by law that they be members of the church within the bounds of the Conference, and fulfill the qualifications required in the Discipline (College of Bishops, 1869.")—Nashville Christian Advocate.

THE Pope has ordered a statue of Mr. Peabody.

Fair for the Benefit of the Methodist Church in Algiers.

This fair is one of several measures adopted by the congregation of this church to revive and recover it from the languishing condition into which it has fallen since the commencement of Southern troubles—the principal object at present being to sustain a pastor.

The fair will take place on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, the 17th, 18th, 19th and 20th of November current, at the Masonic Hall, Algiers. The hall will be opened from twelve to two o'clock for lunch on each day that the fair is held.

The fair will be entirely free from that species of imposition which has sometimes been practiced through mistaken ideas of charity. The aid and co-operation of all who take an interest in enterprises for the promotion of religion is solicited.

MOBILE CONFERENCE.

TO THE MOBILE CONFERENCE: Arrangements have been made with the Selma, Rome and Dalton, the Selma and Meridian, the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, and boats on the Alabama river, by which members of the Conference will pass on half fare.

The members of the Conference and visiting brethren will report themselves in the basement of the Methodist church immediately on their arrival. E. M. BOUNDS.

OBITUARIES.

Died, near San Antonio, Texas, on the 2d of September, 1869, MRS. SARAH R. DUNN, wife of F. T. Grayson.

Sister Grayson was born on the 22d of July, 1814, in Claiborne county, Mississippi. She was for many years a consistent member of the Methodist Church, and a most estimable Christian lady. Having been for some time in declining health, she visited western Texas with the hope of finding relief. For some months her health was much improved by the change, but her prostrated constitution suddenly sunk under an attack of fever, and she passed peacefully to her home in the skies. The writer of these lines saw her in this city when on her way to Texas. She was then cheerfully resigned, and expressed herself as entirely ready for the divine disposal, whether it should be for life or death. None who knew her can doubt that her chastened and sanctified spirit is now with "the saints in light," and happy in "the paradise of God." LINUS PARKER.

The privilege of coming in contact with so bright and pure an example of deep-toned piety as was found in the experience, life and character of LUCY JANE CONNALLY is seldom the lot of man. She did and suffered the will of God to such a degree of perfection as rendered her life beautiful and her death sublime. A more perfect example of fidelity to God, and patience, resignation and humble submission under affliction, perhaps was never found in a descendant of Adam. She was during her whole life a stranger to robust health, being greatly afflicted for ten years previous to her death. A consumptive nearly all her life, she was daily dying, yet she was alive to God, and the life that she lived she lived by the faith of the Son of God, who loved her and gave himself for her. She embraced Christ when thirteen or fourteen years of age, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and ever afterward held fast her profession of faith without wavering.

The church had in her a living witness to holiness of heart, without which no man shall see the Lord. She died in great peace at the residence of her brother, Calvin Connally, at Silver Run, Talladega county, Alabama, August 2, 1869, aged about thirty seven years, and was buried in the Presbyterian cemetery at Lebanon church.

"There sweet he her rest till Christ bid her arise,
To hail him in triumph descending the skies."

W. R. KISK.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease, Consumption, is anxious to make known to his fellow sufferers the means of cure.

To all who desire it he will send a copy of the prescription used, free of charge, with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, etc. The object of the advertiser in sending the prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable; and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address

A CARD.

DR. ROBERT HUNTER,

OF NEW YORK,

Editor of the "New York Specialist and Journal of Diseases of the Chest," and author of "Practical Letters on the Nature, Cause and Cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma and Catarrh, by Inhalation," has arrived in New Orleans and opened an office at No. 165 Canal street, for the treatment of affections of the Throat, Lungs and Heart.

Dr. Robert Hunter is the inventor of the Inhaling Instrument and Catarrh Syrup in general use by the profession.

The Inhalation Treatment of Throat and Lung diseases was introduced by him into this country, and for the past twenty years he has devoted himself exclusively to this branch of his profession.

As many persons have adopted his treatment, copied his letters, and in some instances unwarrantably used his name, he desires to state that this is his first professional visit to New Orleans since 1861.

The following extracts from leading New York papers will show the estimate in which his writings and practice are held in that city:

[From the N. Y. Herald.]

"No man, we will venture to say, in the whole annals of the profession, has ever introduced a more important innovation on the old system of practice, or gained in a shorter time more converts to his opinions. But the most incontrovertible evidence of the efficacy of Dr. Hunter's system of practice is furnished by the City Inspector's reports. By these it is shown that since the introduction of inhalation the deaths from consumption have decreased upward of thirty per cent. Now we know, from the great number of cases treated and cures effected by Dr. Robert Hunter, that his labors contributed, if not to effect all, at least the greater share of this benefit."

[From the N. Y. World.]

"It is a novelty to see a man of Dr. Hunter's learning and experience engaged in the great work of popular medical instruction. All the light that can possibly be thrown on the nature, causes and treatment of consumption—the scourge of our race—will, we feel sure, be gratefully received by the public."

[From the Home Journal.]

"We have repeatedly stated that we regard Dr. Robert Hunter as a public benefactor, and we hope to see his common sense ideas prevail, not only to the extinguishment of consumption, but to the utter breaking down of all stupid deference to old ideas."

[From the N. Y. Express.]

"The fact is now too well established for dispute that the inhalation of medicated vapors, as recommended and practiced by Dr. Robert Hunter, is the most simple, rational and successful treatment for diseases of the lungs yet reached."

Dr. Hunter can be consulted at No. 165 Canal street—office formerly occupied by Dr. Mott.

"WHO WOULD SUFFER?"—IT is now twenty two years since Dr. Tobias first introduced the "Venitian Liniment" in the United States, and never in a single instance has his medicine failed to do all, if not more than is stated in his pamphlet. As an external remedy in cases of Chronic Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Bruises, Burns, Cuts, Sores, Swellings, Sprains, Stings of Insects, and Pains in Limbs, Back and Chest, its wonderful curative powers are miraculous.—Taken internally for the cure of Cholera, Colic, Diarrhea, Dysentery, Sick Headache and Vomiting, its soothing and penetrating qualities are felt as soon as taken. The cloth with which each bottle is accompanied will show that there is nothing injurious in its composition. Thousands of certificates have been received, speaking of the rare virtues of this valuable article. Any person after having used it once will never be without it. Every bottle of the genuine has the signature of "S. I Tobias" on the outside wrapper. Sold by the druggists and storekeepers throughout the United States. Price, fifty cents. SOUTHERN METHODIST HIGH SCHOOL,

NEW ORLEANS.

The exercises of the first session of this institution will commence on MONDAY, the 4th day of October next, in the basement of the German Methodist Church, Dryades street, between Felicity and Erato.

In founding this institution our purpose is to supply the desideratum long felt in this city, viz: an acknowledged Protestant School of a high order, in which boys and young men can be thoroughly prepared either for college or the active business of life.

The government of the School will be strict and firm, yet mild and parental in its administration. Thoroughness in the preparation of lessons will be uniformly required of all pupils.

The sons of ministers engaged wholly in the work of their church will be received at half price; and young men preparing for the ministry without charge.

A Preparatory Department and an Evening School are attached.

In the selection of Teachers the greatest care will be exercised, not only in regard to their mental qualifications, but also in reference to their ability to impart instruction to their pupils.

For further information apply at the School.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE NARROW WAY.

BY JULIA M. THAYER.

Far from my heavenly home,
With young and careless feet,
Thro' life's bewildering ways I roam,
Where sin and pleasure meet.

I love the narrow way,
By holy pilgrims trod;
Nor ever willingly would stray
From duty and from God.

But oftentimes, alas!
In my unthinking hours,
Beyond the sacred bounds I pass
To pluck forbidden flowers.

And yet full well I know
Sharp thorns those flowers conceal,
And tears of penitence must flow
Before their wounds will heal.

And oftentimes I creep,
With slow and painful tread,
Along some bare and rugged steep,
Whence every joy seems fled.

And yet full well I know
That angels round me throng,
And should my footsteps backward go,
'Twould sadden their sweet song.

Thou who wert once a child,
Where'er thou leadest me,
O'er flowery slope or rugged wild,
I still would follow Thee.

No earthly joy can charm
If far from Thee I rove,
And not an ill my soul can harm,
When sheltered by Thy love.

—Little Corporal.

Little Vials, or Children's Prayers.

Did you ever think, children, of the beautiful image in Revelation, "Golden vials full of odors, which are the prayers of saints?" It shows us that the Lord truly welcomes, accepts, values real prayer—that which is sincere, earnest and trustful.

"Does this verse mean children's prayers?" some little girl may ask Why not? What are saints but those who love the Lord with all their hearts and their neighbor as themselves? And cannot children do this? You know in this world the tiniest vial often contains the rarest and costliest perfume. And you may be assured that our Father in heaven counts the prayers of these little ones among the sweetest and most precious offered to him. Not more dear to his heart of love is the song of angels than the hosanna of the children.

Maurice was a little boy three years old, and he had a baby sister that he loved very dearly. One night, when his mother was putting him to bed, he saw that she seemed very sad and her eyes often filled with tears. The baby, he knew, was sick, and he asked if that was what troubled her so much.

"Yes," she replied; "we are afraid she is not going to stay with us."

Maurice felt very badly on hearing this, but brightened up in a moment, as a thought came into his mind:

"I'll ask our Father to make her better—may I, mamma?"

His mother told him he might He had said his evening prayer as usual and lain down in his crib, but he knelt again and said, "Please, our Father, make baby better and don't take her away."

"There, mamma," he said, as he lay down, "I'm sure he will," and kissed her good night. In the morning his first question was about the baby, and his mother, glad and grateful, told him she was very much better.

"I knew God would hear me," he said, in a satisfied tone.

Let me tell you of two little girls who thought God did not hear them.

In the Sunday school where Annie went it was a custom to give every little girl who was attentive and diligent a blue ticket; when she had four of these, a large pink one; and when four pink ones were owned, a book with stories and pictures to keep. One Sunday the words, "Ask and ye shall receive," were in the lesson, and the teacher talked with the children about it. She told them it would do them no good to ask for anything in words, if they did not in their hearts desire it, and trust their Father's love and willingness to bless them When school was closed, after saying the Lord's prayer together as usual, Annie pressed to her teacher's side and asked earnestly:

"Miss A., will God really give me what I ask for?"

"Yes, dear," was the reply.

The next Sunday Annie came, but not with her usual cheerful face. The teacher saw that something was wrong, and she detained her a moment after the others left, and putting her arm around her, said: "Now, darling, tell me all about it." Tears filled the little girl's eyes and her lip quivered as she answered:

"Oh, Miss A., you did not tell me right last Sunday. You know next Sunday the books are to be given, and I want one—oh so much! But I have been sick and had to be absent, and I have only three pink tickets and three blue ones. I hurried home last Sunday and went up stairs and laid all my tickets in a chair, with the white sides up. Then I prayed that the Lord would make one of the blue ones pink. But when I looked at them they were just the same. I turned them down and prayed again; but it did no good; see, there they are, three pink and three blue ones, and I cannot get a book."

The teacher quietly took one of the blue tickets, and put in its place a pink one, on which were these words:

"I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake."

"Annie," she said, "this ticket is yours. Has not God answered your prayer, dear, though not in the way you expected?"

The sunshine came quickly back to the little girl's face as she thanked her kind friend; and the next Sunday she received the much-desired book. The Lord did not turn the blue ticket pink, but he put it into Annie's thoughts, to tell her teacher her trouble, and moved Miss A.'s heart to do this kindness; so the little girl's desire was granted in a better way than her own.

Another little girl, named Kitty, made a similar remark. She was promised she should go out with her mother if she would get ready in season. In her hurry she knotted her boot lacing. She tried to get out the hard knot, but only drew it tighter.

She remembered what her mother had told her of the Lord's answering prayer, and she asked him to help her and tried again. But she could do nothing with the knot, and after several efforts she gave it up and began to cry. Just then her mother came up stairs.

"What is the matter, Kitty?" she asked.

"Oh, dear! this ugly knot," said Kitty; "I've tried and tried, and it won't come out; and I asked God to help me, and he wouldn't."

Her mother made no reply at first, but carefully picked out the lacings; and then asked the little girl if there was any one she would rather have had sent to help her than her own mother.

Rest assured, dear children, a sincere and earnest prayer is never lost. The answer may be delayed for some wise reason; but wait patiently and hopefully—it is sure to come in good time. You may ask for something which would do you harm; as a little child might ask for a shining pen knife, which would quickly cost him tears if his father were not too wise and kind to give it to him. If you do, the thing you seek will not come, but something better in its place. And very often, as with Annie and Kitty, the answer may be so different from what you expect that unless you watch for it you will not know it when it is given. But God's promise never fails: "Ask and ye shall receive."—The Children's Hour.

Conscience.—Brethren, you all possess that mysterious power called conscience, and its testimony is always on the side of truth and righteousness. In the great conflict with sin and unbelief, conscience is ever on the Lord's side, notwithstanding the vain attempts that are made to silence it. Hence we meet with the troubled conscience, and the accusing conscience, and the guilty conscience; the conscience which can render the most gay and attractive scenes miserable and unbearable, and the conscience which disturbs the bed of down, and adds so many terrors to the approach of death. Thus conscience is that spirit in man which is as the candle of the Lord and which searcheth "the thoughts and intents of the heart." Beware, then, of trifling with conscience Listen to its still small voice; obey its dictates. It will give you its cheering approval as you humble yourselves for all your sins, and seek that repentance that needeth not to be repented of. It will speak peace to you, as you believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and take up your cross to follow him. It will ever smile upon you as you seek to walk in the paths of righteousness, and to keep the commandments and ordinances of God blameless.—Nivens.

How to Perpetuate Methodism.—In 1783 the Rev. Robert Miller asked Mr. Wesley: "What must be done to keep Methodism alive when you are dead?" Mr. Wesley gave the following answer: "The Methodists must take heed to their doctrine, their experience, their practice and their discipline. If they attend to their doctrines only they will make the people Antimonians; if to the experimental part of religion only they will make them enthusiastic; if to the practical part of religion only they will make them Pharisees; and if they do not attend to their discipline they will be like persons who bestow much pains in cultivating a garden, and put no fence around it to save it from the wild boars of the forest."

SCIENTIFIC.

WHAT IS FOUND IN THE AIR.

Quite as much might be written upon the composition of the air we breathe as upon that of the water we drink. But it happens that muddy water is more visible than dirty air, and generally attracts more attention, though in reality foul air is far more injurious to man than foul water, for the latter comes first of all in contact with the digestive organs, which have the power of repelling, to a certain extent, any noxious or poisonous ingredient, whilst impure air is, on the contrary, intimately mixed up with the blood at every inspiration, and introduced at once into the system by thousands of minute blood vessels.

The refined chemical processes that have been brought to bear upon the analysis of water, and have proved so useful in a sanitary point of view, have been no less successful with regard to the atmosphere. By washing or filtering large volumes of air we find, besides the gases oxygen, nitrogen and a considerable amount of organic matter, germs and spores of fungi, certain acids, ozone, nitric acid, ammonia and several other substances may be detected in greater or less quantities, according to the localities, the season of the year, the direction of the wind, the proximity of the sea, etc. Arago and De Fonvielle have written upon the sulphur which lightning finds in air and deposits upon the objects which it strikes; Baron Liebig and Lassaigne have found nitrates and ammonia in the air, which are washed down by thunder storms. Prof. Barral has noticed that phosphate of lime is likewise present to a certain extent in the atmosphere, and Dr. Phipson, in his curious little work on meteors, describes an experiment in which a sheet of glass covered with glycerin, and exposed to the wind after the great fall of shooting stars in November, 1866 collected certain blank corpuscles, which, on being treated with hydrochloric acid, gave yellow chloride of iron, and were, probably, some of the substance of shooting stars.

The passing of the alkali act of 1863, which compels manufacturers to consume ninety-five per cent. of the hydrochloric gas evolved from the sulphate of soda furnaces, has gone far to purify the air of large manufacturing towns, and to protect the vegetation that exists around them, and contributes pure oxygen to their atmosphere. The reports published by Dr. Angus Smith on the operation of this act show that its beneficial effects continue. The last report, recently issued, contains the results of some interesting observations on the air of cities, and gives some notion of the ordinary state of the atmosphere of towns

The refinements of modern science are enabling us to grasp a class of facts hitherto unknown except by the effects which they produce. The air seems now to be undergoing an investigation similar to that which was commenced some years ago in regard to the water supply. "Horrors" hitherto unknown burst upon mankind when the microscope revealed the animal organisms which reveled in the polluted water of the Thames. More recently science has been able to detect not merely the signs of actual and present contamination, but the tokens of a previous pollution. Hence the analytical chemist is able to give us the history as well as the character of the water we drink, and can tell whether in its course down the stream it has at any time been in contact with decomposing animal matter. The question is not merely curious, but of great sanitary value, since there is reason to believe that sewage sometimes gives to water a species of poison which remains even when the sewage itself is destroyed. Something of the same kind is now being revealed in regard to the atmosphere. By examining rain we are enabled to discover what are the gases and substances which float in the air. When there is no rain it is possible to wash the air in bottles, and so make it yield the foreign matters with which it is impregnated.

Rain varies greatly in its character according to the source from whence it proceeds, and the locality where it falls. Falling on the coast, and coming from the sea, it contains chiefly common salt, which crystallizes readily. The proportion of sulphates to chlorides is larger in rain than in sea water. This is a general rule, holding good from central Germany to the most northern Hebrides, and, as we advance inland, the rain water sulphates increase. These sulphates are derived from the sulphureted hydrogen, which otherwise would be intolerable, and which is given off by decomposing matter. The pure oxygen of the air combines with the stinking gas, oxidizes it, and makes it harmless, so far as the gas itself is concerned.

Just as the nitrates in the water supply of London are a measure of the "previous sewage contamination" of that fluid, so the sulphates washed out of the air by rain are a measure of a similar contamination affecting the atmosphere. There is, indeed, a disturbing cause in reference to the air. The sulphates are largely increased in the atmosphere of towns by the combustion of coal. From the same cause, coupled with the decomposition of certain substances, there is an increase of the ammoniacal salts in the rain as towns increase. Rain may also become acid from the presence of sulphur, combined with oxygen.—Towns vary in their atmosphere and their rain. Civilization not only pollutes rivers, but pollutes likewise the aerial currents. The rain of Manchester turns the blue litmus paper red, and where most soot is found there is much acidity. Sulphuric acid exists as the result of a large consumption of coal. Rain coming after a period of drought is particularly rich in acid, while continuous rain reduces the quantity.

Even where there are no alkali or glass works there is a certain amount of chlorides in the air in excess of that which the sea contributes. This is rather a puzzling circumstance; but Dr. Angus Smith offers an explanation of it. He suggests that the extra chlorides come from the burning of coal, and have their origin in the common salt of the ancient seas.

But there is much more in the air than acids and salts, and a day will come when the Registrar General will publish monthly analyses of the London air, like the present returns with regard to the water supply.

Tons of solid impurity may doubtless be found in a month's supply of air to the metropolis. Not long ago an enthusiastic projector proposed to "lay on" fresh air from Hayes Common, in Kent, to be conveyed into metropolitan houses by means of pipes. If ever this idea becomes an accomplished fact it may be proper to analyze the air as "drawn from the company's mains." At present we have to rely on aerial reservoirs in the nature of parks and open spaces, the value of which is undoubted.

Mr. Dancer has studied the character of the solid particles contained in the air of Manchester. Samples of the air were washed by Dr. Angus Smith, and the fluid was afterward microscopically examined by Mr. Dancer. A single drop of the water was computed to contain no less than a quarter of a million of fungoid spores. The fact was verified by examining an extremely small particle, and multiplying the result. The bottle of water having been kept for thirty-six hours the quantity of fungi, already so great, "visibly increased," and on the third day minute creatures were observed moving about in the fluid Keeping, however, to our former figures, we find that one hundred and fifty drops of water would contain more than thirty-seven millions of the fungi, these one hundred and fifty drops being the washings of two thousand four hundred and ninety-five liters of the air of Manchester, which is about the quantity of air passing through the lungs of a man in ten hours!

The drops of water yielded a kind of dust, which in the space of three or four days produced considerable numbers of animalculæ, in which monads were most conspicuous. In this dust were particles of partially burned wood, fragments of vegetation, filaments of cotton and granules of starch.

Dr. Angus Smith has also experimented on smoke of various degrees of blackness and brownness, and shows that the difficulty of consuming smoke does not commonly arise from a deficiency of air in the furnace, but from the fact that a rapid draft often fails to allow time for proper combustion. It is now certain that the black smoke prohibited by act of Parliament, contains carbonic oxide, one of the most poisonous of gases. Carbonic oxide is only detected in smoke by the illegal density, and when we find this black smoke is really an expensive article to produce, we seem to be furnished with every reason why such a nuisance should be prohibited.

But though man and his works tend constantly to render the atmosphere dirty and unfit for life, nature on the other hand tends to counterbalance the evil. The constant production of ozone and nitric acid in the air of the country, the presence of iodine and ammonia and sweet scented essences occasionally met within our atmosphere, the evolution of oxygen by trees and shrubs, are so many beneficial influences which contribute to purify the air.—Scientific Review.

A Scotchman having put a crown instead of a penny on the plate, in church, one Sunday, asked to have it back, but was refused. "In once, in forever," said the collector.—"I'll get credit for it in heaven, then," answered the Scotchman. "Na, na," said the other, "ye'll get credit only for the penny ye meant to gie."

THE BEST COOKING STOVE

FOR WOOD NOW IN USE.

THE FASHION.

We call especial attention to this Stove, which has been produced at great expense, combining all the new and important improvements; also to the extra height of the Oven under the fire chamber, the Patent Air Chamber Front Doors, and Patent White Enameled Iron Knobs, the improvements in the covers and centre pieces, all of which have been covered by Letters Patent, and are used in no other Stove. They are warranted to stand fire, or others sent free of charge in all cases. We have all sizes of this justly celebrated Stove, both

PLAIN AND EXTENDED BACKS,

the Extended Back with cast iron Enameled Reservoir and Faucet, Tin Warming Closet, Gridiron Cover, etc. The part of the top supporting the Reservoir is raised so that the flue is above the top plate, instead of below, as is the case in most of the Stoves now used, and the heat is forced directly against the whole surface of the bottom of the Reservoir. The Reservoir being detached from the pipe, can be removed at pleasure, thereby forming a six-hole Stove—the best in use, as the back holes will heat as well or better than the middle ones.

BRAN NEW LETTERS!

FRESH TESTIMONIALS.

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

THE ASTONISHING FAMILY MEDICINE.

Saved from Death!—Read!

MONTGOMERY, ALA., June 28, 1869.

MESSRS. J. DARBY & CO., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: Yours of the 23d is before me, and has attention. It gives me pleasure to say that my belief is that your "Fluid," under the supervision of a kind PROVIDENCE, saved the life of my youngest child, some six years ago, the child being wasted to a skeleton by the effects of teething, and an affection of the bowels therewith. I had never seen any one reduced so low to recover.

"Physic" had been tried in vain, until the physicians stated it was useless. A friend recommended your "Fluid," or Ozone, which he stated was one of the component parts of it. I did so, and the effect was like magic, plainly discernible in one hour in its good effects, producing quiet and sleep almost at once, where irritation and sleepless restlessness had previously possessed the child to nearly outire exhaustion.

I at first administered it in a small way, two and three drops in a spoonful of water, and increased it to six and ten drops. It completely checked the bowels, and had the happiest effect, the child rapidly recovering.

I have tried your "Fluid" on animals, with the same effect—both horses and cows—mingling more or less in water, and letting them drink.

I have no hesitation in saying I believe it a specific for Chronic Diarrhea, or any violent affection of the bowels.

I would not be without it in my family under any consideration. Yours truly,

WILLIAM FOWLER.

Mr. Fowler is a member of the celebrated Banking House of Fowler & Somerville, Montgomery, Alabama.

AND AGAIN!

Read the following letter from Mr. Frank Saunders, a well known citizen, and brother-in-law of the beloved Bishop Paine, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

189 BROADWAY, N. Y., July 29, 1869.

MESSRS. J. DARBY & CO., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: About the 10th of June last one of my children was taken with Scarlet Fever, in its most malignant form, and as soon as I could I procured your valuable disinfectant, "Darby's Prophylactic Fluid." Although it was several days after the appearance of the disease before I began using the Fluid, still, by a free use of it, the disease was not only confined to the one case, but the malignity of that case somewhat mitigated.

During the use of the Fluid as a disinfectant in my family it was also tried in a case of headache and one of toothache, the results in each case being instantaneous relief. It was afterward tried in a case of Erysipelas, with almost equal success.

It is due to the merits of this compound, also to state that the case of Erysipelas in question, being located in the feet, the Fluid, in its application, was brought in frequent contact with a troublesome corn on one of the feet, in the utter dissolution of said corn, for, upon subsequent examination, it had disappeared, and though it was sought for diligently, it could not be found.

I hand you this, hoping it may be the means of inducing others of earth's poor sufferers to test for themselves, as I did, the great merits of this great remedy.

Very respectfully yours,

FRANK SAUNDERS.

Never was a medicine so universally esteemed and extolled. It never fails. It may be depended on.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has shown only a moderate degree of animation since our last report, most branches of the wholesale trade complaining of a falling off in the country demand. Sugar and molasses have come forward more freely, and met a fair demand at about previous rates. Louisiana rice, also, has been in good request at steady prices. The movement in Western produce has been of limited extent, and mostly confined to the local trade and the execution of Gulf orders. Flour is now in fair supply, but rules a little too high to admit the execution of orders for foreign markets.

The accounts from the country are encouraging. With regard to sugar, however, they are hardly as favorable, and from nearly every point we hear reiterated complaints of the poverty of the cane, which has suffered from a late season and insufficient culture.

The river is eleven feet five inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 5th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi ....bales..	17338
Arkansas	1378
Lake	99
Mobile	984
Florida	38
Texas	111
Total	19948

On Saturday the movement commenced with only a moderate inquiry, but, as factors were quite stringent in their pretensions, a few sales were made at full prices. Later in the day, however, as the demand continued limited, the advantage was on the side of the buyers, and 2,250 bales changed hands, mostly at a further decline of ⅛c. On Monday, under the depressing influence of decidedly unfavorable accounts from Liverpool and New York, and an increasing stock, prices exhibited a continued downward tendency throughout the day, giving way ⅛ to ¼c. during the morning, and closing at a net decline of fully ¼c. The business, however, was on a more liberal scale, summing up 5,500 bales, nearly half of which was taken toward the close, the reduction in prices admitting several orders which could not have been executed at the morning rates. On Tuesday the market opened with a decided tendency to lower prices, but toward noon assumed more firmness, and the sales were the children.

[illegible] rates and partly at a partly at previous [illegible] which would [illegible] falling off of ⅛c. The accounts from Liverpool and New York being decidedly unfavorable, it then took an unfavorable turn until the close, when it exhibited a net decline of ¼c. in good ordinary and low middling, and ⅛ to ¼c. in the better qualities. The supply, however, being ample, and the demand stimulated by the concessions of factors, as well as by an improvement in foreign exchange, the sales summed up 8,000 bales.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 15,750 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 194,317 bales, against 188,804 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 125,521 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 60,677 bales to Great Britain, 7,743 to France, and of 13,009 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

READVILLE SEMINARY.

This is a private institution, with its number of pupils limited, and is authorized by the Legislature of Louisiana to confer degrees, diplomas and literary honors. It was in successful operation from 1843 until interrupted by the events of the war in 1862, and reopened January, 1867.

Teachers of a high grade of talent and merit are in charge of the different departments—English, Ancient and Modern Languages, Music, Painting, etc.

Pupils charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session. All pupils received with the understanding that they are to remain and attend the examination at the close of the session in which they enter, and no deduction made on the bills for absence, except in cases of protracted illness, when the loss may be divided between the institution and the patron.

In her outfit each pupil should be provided with toilet boxes, towels napkins, sheets, pillow cases and blankets or comforts. She should also bring knife, fork, spoon, cup and napkin ring.

All articles and clothing brought to the Seminary should be distinctly marked, lists of which should be permanently placed on some part of the trunk convenient for reference. The scholastic year commences October 1 and ends in July.

EXPENSE.

Board and tuition per year	$275 00
The Modern Languages a small extra charge.
Music, per year	75 00

Payments due a half session in advance.

Monthly reports of the studies, health and general deportment of the pupils are sent to the parents or guardians at a distance.

The main Seminary building, recently destroyed by fire, will be replaced by one of ample accommodations, now in process of construction, which will be ready for the reception of pupils at the opening of the next session.

For other information desirable in reference to the school apply to

SEMINARY FOR YOUNG LADIES,

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

E. A. GRANT, LL. D., PRINCIPAL.

This Institution occupies the large and elegant building lately known as Grant & Butler's School. The grounds are situated on Sixth street, between Walnut and Chestnut streets, and extend back to Centre street. They are elevated several feet above the street, thus making the large and beautiful lawn a most desirable place for healthful outdoor exercise.

The building, furniture and apparatus of the school are among the most complete and valuable in the West.

Experienced teachers, residing in the institution, will devote their time to the moral, intellectual and physical improvement of the pupils.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—The New York World has an editorial asserting positively that, by virtue of a secret treaty, the steamer Albany, loaded with arms and ammunition, sailed for St. Domingo via the Dry Tortugas, where she will ship five hundred soldiers.

She will take possession of the island in the name of the United States.

The Treasury Department will be closed to-morrow in respect to the memory of the late Hon. Robert J Walker.

General Sherman, with a large party, will leave on Monday to attend the reunion of the Army of Tennessee at Louisville, Kentucky.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—Attorney General Hoar has decided to resign his portfolio on the 1st of January next. It is believed, in high Radical circles, that he will be elevated to the Supreme Bench.

Secretary Boutwell intimated today that, in his annual report, he would recommend the resumption of specie payments on the 1st of July, 1870

It is ascertained from official sources that the naval expedition which left New York, on Wednesday last, was dispatched to take possession of the Bay of Samana, for a United States naval station, as per treaty negotiated, but not yet ratified.

A portion of a self-constituted delegation from Canada had an interview with the President to-day on the subject of annexation of that country to the United States. It does not appear that any encouragement was given for a serious consideration of the gratuitous propositions

Judge Dent called upon the President this evening, and found him indisposed to give General Ames any instructions concerning the conduct of the election in Mississippi. The judge will return to that State next week.—Picayune

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 12.—The Presbyterians here are jubilant over the reunion. The Presbyterian newspapers are flying blue flags, the colors of the old Covenanters.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 12.—After joint devotional exercises, the two assemblies formed a procession in file and joined. On reaching the threshold of the church they were greeted with the clapping of hands and the waving of handkerchiefs by the immense crowd assembled.

Cable dispatches were sent to the European Presbyterians announcing the union.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 14.—At ten minutes past nine o'clock A. M. the eastward bound train on the Western Pacific Railroad, composed of eight cars, including one sleeping car, collided with the Alameda ferry train of four cars, near Leandro Both trains were going at the rate of twenty five miles per hour. The engines are a perfect wreck and the cars are completely demolished.

The Western Pacific train left at the prompt time; but the morning was so foggy the engineer had difficulty to see a distance ahead. On arriving at the switch, where the Western Pacific connects with the Alameda road, the train slowed, and the switch tender was questioned whether the Alameda train had passed, and answered, "All right; go ahead." Soon after the trains came together with a terrific crash. The first passenger car on the Western Pacific train was driven through the smoking car. Other cars were badly damaged.

The killed and wounded are variously estimated at from thirty to fifty persons. It is impossible to obtain a correct list at present.

When the trains collided the passengers were driven together and crushed among the ruins, and it was with great difficulty that many could be extricated. The legs of one man were amputated before he could be released from the cars. A sleeping car was filled with the badly wounded and sent to Alameda.

Great excitement prevailed during the day. The catastrophe cast a gloom over the entire people of the city. The announcement of the accident was read from the pulpits during the morning service.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—The Supreme Court refused to enter the resolutions of the bar, on the death of Hon. Robert J. Walker, on the minutes of the court.

Judge Dent will be in Jackson on Sunday and will reopen the Mississippi canvass on Monday. He has received additional assurances from General Ames' supervisors that a fair election will be held.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—One portion of the financial policy of the Administration is at last agreed upon, and that is a recommendation against any change in the internal revenue system which will reduce the rate of taxation.

The President, Secretary Boutwell and Commissioner Delano appear to be united on this, though the two latter officials will suggest some changes in the administrative features of the law.

There was some hope the commissioner would favor a reduction of the income tax to three per cent.; while the speculative interest desired him to recommend that the tax on distilled spirits should be placed at $1, but in his report just completed he ignores both, and suggests that no changes be made in the law.

The object alleged is to give the present rates a fair trial for the rest of the fiscal year.

FOREIGN.

PARIS, Nov. 16—Twenty-eight of the Opposition Deputies have issued a manifesto demanding the right of the people to govern themselves. They will use peaceful means unless an attempt is made to silence them by force.

Henri Rochefort's election is considered certain.

Troops are being quietly concentrated in this city.

The prospect of any disorders are exceedingly remote.

LONDON, Nov. 16.—The English ship Monarch will bring Mr. Peabody's body home, and will be attended by an American vessel. It is probable several French vessels will join the funeral fleet.

PARIS, Nov. 16—At the opening of the Suez Canal to-day, France will be represented by the Empress Eugenie, who, in her steam yacht, the Oriole, will lead the way in the grand opening procession. Austria will be represented by the Emperor Francis Joseph, Prussia by the Prince of Prussia, Italy by the Prince Amadeus, and a host of smaller nations and tribes will have representatives to swell the pageant.

The first great gathering will take place at Port Said to-day, 16th instant. On the 17th there will be a grand ball, and on the 18th there will be a great gathering of tribes at Ismailia, where a grand entertainment will be given, one feature of which will be evolutions on horseback by the Arabs. On the 19th the grand procession will start for Suez, when the canal will be formally opened. On the 20th the leading feature of the day's proceedings will be the erection of a monument to Woychien, who first proposed the idea of establishing a route to India via the Isthmus of Suez.

These graceful acknowledgments of the services of an Englishman will show that no ill will is borne to England, although she did not render any assistance to Lesseps.

TEXTS IN GOLD.—There is a beautiful thought of the lamented Dr James Hamilton: Suppose that every one were to mark in golden letters the text which has been the means of saving his soul. The apostle Paul would mark the words, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" for it was these words spoken by Jesus from the dazzling light that made him a new creature. In the Bible of the Macedonian jailer, the letters would be found at Acts 16, 31: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved;" for embracing this simple offer he rejoiced, believing in God with all his house. Martin Luther would print the text, "The just shall live by faith," in gold, for the text, spoken by the gentle lips of the vicar-general, guided him to peace; and the young monk of Erfurth, reduced by fasts and tears and struggles, to the verge of the grave, found rest in the wounds of Jesus In the Bible of Bunyan the mark would be found at "Yet there is room."

It was through the lattice of these words he first saw the cross, and he thought God put them into the Bible to meet his special case. And the ironside soldier would indicate Eccl. 11, 19, for it was there the bullet stopped, which but for the interposing Bible would have pierced his bosom; and when the battle was over he read: "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes; but know thou that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment."

We may add that if all the saved should thus print in gold the saving words of the book, it would be all gold. It is all gold.

PRESBYTERIAN REUNION.

The overture adopted by the Old and New School Presbyterian Assemblies and sent down to the presbyteries has been adopted by the requisite vote of two-thirds of the latter in both branches of the church. The work of reunion is therefore accomplished. We congratulate our Presbyterian brethren on the important and grateful event.

The rupture occurred thirty years ago, and not a few of the strong men who participated in the discussions connected with the unhappy controversy are still living. Time has modified and subdued, if it has not wholly removed, the partisan animosities between them The vote in favor of reunion has been overwhelmingly large. Only a few of the old leaders in the controversy were willing to put their names on record against it. In the presbytery of New Brunswick, which embraces the Princeton institution, the vote was strongly in the affirmative. President McCosh and Professors Atherton, McIlvaine and Duffield, of the college, and Professors Green and Moffat, of the seminary, voted aye; while Dr. Hodge voted nay, and Dr. Magill did not vote. The great unanimity manifested everywhere on the question is a very noteworthy and an exceedingly grateful fact.

Each of the two branches of the church now contains a larger number of synods, presbyteries, ministers and lay members than the whole church at the date of the division. The following figures show the strength of each:

	Old Sch'l.	New Sch'l.	Total.
Presbyteries...	143	113	256
Synods	27	24	51
Ministers	2,381	1,848	4,229
Members.....	258,903	172,560	431,463

The number of presbyteries and synods of the united church will, of course, be less than those given in the last column, as both branches have mainly occupied the same territory. The figures, giving the total number of ministers and members, show the present strength of the church.—New York Christian Advocate.

THE TRUE CHURCH.—We were considerably amused, the other day, on the reception of a brochure by Dr Thompson, consisting of five papers from the American Churchman, and attempting to define the relation of the Protestant Episcopal Church to other Christian bodies in the United States. It might have passed for an excellent joke, but that doctors of divinity do not usually print their jokes at such great length, and distribute them to the neighboring clergy free of expense. But this is almost too absurd for a serious answer. Here is a little body—the Benjamin of our American Israel—whose entire contributions to foreign missions last year were not $130,000, and which, small as it is, will hardly hold together without a few extra hoops, so violent is the contest between the ritualistic and evangelical parties, gravely claiming to be the predestined absorbent of American Christianity, responsible for this whole people, and the only power that can confer upon us the inestimable boon of a Catholic and Apostolic Church. Now this tremendous claim is somewhat less ridiculous in the mouth of a Romanist than of a Churchman, as the bay of a mastiff is more dignified than the clamor of a Scotch terrier. But we enjoy the singular spectacle of two Catholic churches, each claiming that the other is a sect, and each pretending to be the one original and apostolic body. The misfortune of which is, that if we outsiders should allow ourselves to be absorbed by either, the unity sought would still be as far off as ever The Pope generously offers Protestants a share in his Ecumenical Council, if they will cease to be Protestant; the Churchman promises them a kind welcome within the jurisdiction of the House of Bishops, and even has the audacity to propose some consideration for weak consciences in the important matters of the surplice and the prayer book. It is certain that both these tempting offers will be respectfully declined. Meanwhile we have no especial quarrel with the Churchman, but when little Mercury mistakes itself for the sun, the other planets may be allowed to smile.

A WILD FLOWER.—A bold Frenchman, while hunting in the Alps for the mountain goat, fell over a precipice upon a ledge, back of which was a little cave. How to get away he knew not. A day and a night passed, and he was still a prisoner, expecting to be starved to death. But, just as his heart began to fail, he saw a tiny turf of the blue fringed gentian.

That little flower saved his life! How? He knew that the wind must have blown the seed from a distance, and that God's sun and rain must have made it grow. This thought made his heart swell, and he said, "God has cared for that little wild flower which grows where none can see it but himself. Shall he not care for me also?"

Filled with this thought, he grew happy, and began singing a song. His voice was heard by some shepherds on the mountain top.

They shouted. He answered. Guided by his voice, they lowered ropes down to his prison house and drew him up. And thus, you see, his life was saved by the little blue fringed gentian—one of the slender wild flowers you may find in the woods.—Children's Guest.

THE ULTIMATE TRIUMPH OF PROTESTANTISM.—Whether we look to the reason of the thing itself or to the ascertained facts of the religious world, we shall find ample grounds for believing in the progressive march and the ultimate triumph of Protestant Christianity in the world. We cling very closely to the divine promise, that the future of our common humanity will yet see the prevalence of true religion over the earth as universal as the waters that cover the deep. We have faith, too, that popery and Protestantism differ from each other essentially on this very point—that popery contains in itself the elements of destruction, while Protestantism contains in itself the elements of constant renovation, and of a perennial regeneration. The Church of Rome is an inflexible, unchangeable, ecclesiastical corporation, professing to be infallible, and accordingly constrained to be immutable in her principles and profession. From this, its very immutable nature, this ecclesiastical organization cannot adapt itself to the progressive movements of humanity, or to the social and intellectual forces, which are rapidly creating a new future for the world. Either popery must arrest the advance of our civilization and of our science, or the latter will surely arrest the advance and destroy the existence of popery. The creed of Rome is pledged, irrevocably pledged, to the unchangeable; and, if she cannot bend to the forces that oppose her, she must break before powers that are only strengthened by time. The chair of the Pope will become what the throne of Canute was before the advancing tide.—The Rock.

LOVE OF HOME.—The affections which bind a man to the place of his birth are essential in nature, and follow the same law as that which governs every innate feeling. They are implanted in his bosom along with life, and are modified by every circumstance which he encounters from the beginning to the end of his existence. The sentiment which, in the breast of any one man, is an instinctive fondness for the spot where he drew his early breath, becomes, by the progress of mankind and the formation of society, a more enlarged feeling, and expands into the noble passions of patriotism The love of country, the love of the village where we were born, of the field which we first pressed with our tender footsteps, of the hillock which we first climbed, are the same affection, only the latter belongs to each of us separately; the first can be known but by men united into masses. It it founded upon every advantage which a nation is supposed to possess, and is increased by every improvement which it is supposed to receive.

HOW GREENLANDERS TRAIN THEIR CHILDREN.—The following illustrates the vigor with which the Greenland boys are trained up:

"The father of Matthias was a stern Arctic parent, and brought up his son in the way he should go When the dreaded southwest wind was driving the breakers high over the rocks at Claushavn, he would place his son in the kayak (canoe) and throw him into the surf. The little fellow, with the double paddle in his hand, would watch his opportunity and right himself as he descended, and then triumphantly paddle through the boiling sea to the little haven where the canoes land. * * * * People used to say to Matthias pere: 'You will drown your boy;' to which advice this sage hunter of seals and white whales replied: 'If the boy cannot right a kayak in a stormy sea he cannot kill a seal, and if he cannot kill a seal he cannot live in Greenland, in which case he might just as well die.'"

WHAT IS WANTED.—The Holy Spirit is able to make the word as successful now as in the days of the apostles. He can bring in by hundreds and thousands as easily as by ones and twos. The reason why we are not more prosperous is, that we have not the Holy Spirit with us in might and power as in early times. If we had the Spirit sealing our ministry with power, it would signify very little about our talent. Men might be poor and uneducated; their words might be broken and ungrammatical; there might be none of the polished periods of Hall or glorious thunders of Chalmers; but if the might of the Spirit attended them the humblest evangelist would be more successful than the most eloquent of preachers. It is extraordinary grace, not talent, that wins the day. It is extraordinary spiritual power that we need. Mental power fills a chapel; but spiritual power fills the church. Mental power may gather a congregation—spiritual, power. Oh! we know some before whom we shrink into nothing as to talent, but who have no spiritual power, and when they speak they have not the Holy Spirit with them; but we know others—simple-hearted, worthy men—who speak their country dialect, and who stand up to preach in their country place, and the Spirit of God clothes every word with power. Hearts are broken, souls are saved and sinners are born again. O, Spirit of the living God, we want thee! Thou art the life, the soul, the source of thy people's success Without thee they can do nothing; with thee they can do everything C. H Spurgeon

FAITH.—What is faith? I have never heard but three definitions that satisfied me. One, of course, stands upon a level infinitely above our poor criticism; that is the inspired definition of the apostle, that "faith is the substance"—that is, the confident realization—"of things hoped for, the evidence"—that is, a conviction reaching to demonstration—"of things not seen." But there is another definition which I have often spoken of, and which, from its exceeding simplicity, has thoroughly satisfied my mind. It is the one of the old Scotch woman, who heard persons disputing long as to what faith was. She answered: "Well, to me it seems a very simple thing; it is to take God at his word." And yet there is another definition which struck my own mind very much It is that of an Irish child. I had this from the lips of a missionary who was examining the school. He was asking what faith was, and one child said "Trust," while another said "Belief," and so on. At last he saw a thoughtful girl, and she said, "I think, sir, I can tell you what it is." "What is it, my child?" he asked. "It is the Holy Ghost," said she, "moving the soul to lean upon Jesus Christ." I think, my friends, that is a beautiful definition of faith—the Holy Ghost moving the soul to lean upon Jesus Christ.—Rev. E. H. Bickersteth.

FOOLISH EXPENSES.—Once in a while a pensive man may be heard to say: "I wish I had all the money back that I have spent in drinks for the past ten years." Not one man in twenty who, retrospectively gazing, gives utterance to that wish, has in his mind an approximating estimate of the amount which a person of even moderate bibulous propensities may spend upon drink in the space of ten years. Leaving wines and expensive liquors quite out of the question, let us see what a modest imbiber of old rye is likely to disburse on his favorite refreshments in the course of a year. Take a very moderate man as a sample.

Assume that he drinks every day one glass of beer at ten cents, and four glasses at fifteen. That amounts to seventy cents a day, which makes $4 90 a week Multiply by four, and you have $19 60 a month, which comes, you know, to $135 20 a year. Thus, if the man who had carried on at this rate for ten years had all his liquor money back, his pocket would be inflated to the tune of $1,352. This is only a small beer calculation; but think of the men who spend five times this amount on liquors, and remember that their name is legion.

IN THE voyage of life we should imitate the ancient mariners, who, without losing sight of the earth, trusted to the heavenly signs for their guidance.

WHILE a postmaster was stamping a letter, recently, it exploded and injured his left arm severely. It contained percussion caps.

WHERE THE SUN DOES NOT SET.—The following graphic passage is from the description of a scene witnessed by a Mr. Campbell and his party, in the north of Norway, from a cliff one thousand feet above the sea: The ocean stretched away in silent vastness at our feet; the sound of its waves scarcely reach our airy lookout; away in the north the huge old sun swung low along the horizon, like the slow beat of the pendulum in the tall clock of our grandfather's parlor corner.—We all stood silent, looking at our watches. When both hands came together at twelve, midnight, the full round orb hung triumphantly above the wave—a bridge of gold running due north spanned the water between us and him. There he shone in silent majesty, which knew no setting. We involuntarily took off our hats; no word was said. Combine, if you can, the most brilliant sunrise and sunset you ever saw, and its beauties will pale before the gorgeous coloring which now lit up the ocean, heaven and mountain. In half an hour the sun had swung up perceptibly on his beat, the colors changed to those of morning, a fresh breeze rippled over the flood, one songster after another piped up in the grove behind us—we had slid into another day.

THE PHENOMENA OF THE BRAIN.—One of the most inconceivable things in the nature of the brain is that the organ of sensation should be insensible. To cut the brain gives no pain, yet in the brain alone resides the power of giving pain in any other part of the body. If the nerve which leads from it to the injured part be divided, it becomes instantly unconscious of suffering. It is only by communication with the brain that any kind of sensation is produced, yet the organ itself is insensible. But there is a circumstance more wonderful still. The brain itself may be removed, may be cut away down to the corpus calcarum, without destroying life. The animal lives and performs all its functions which are necessary to simple vitality, but no longer has a mind; it cannot think or feed. It requires that the food should be pushed into its stomach; once there, it is digested, and the animal will even thrive and grow fat. We infer, therefore, that the part of the brain, the convolutions, is simply intended for the exercise of the intellectual faculties, whether of the low degree called instinct, or the exalted kind bestowed on man, the gift of reason.—Wagon on the Mind.

LONDON MIDNIGHT MISSION.—This mission has rescued upward of one thousand girls from a life of shame—either restoring them to their friends, or securing them work at home or in the colonies. Upward of fourteen thousand have attended meetings held. One hundred and seventy-four were reclaimed in the year ending on the 1st of March last, of whom but fifty six were natives of London, while fifty-eight were orphans.

A CONFERENCE OF RABBIS, from various parts of the Union, met in Philadelphia, has repudiated the use of Hebrew in prayer, the doctrine of the resurrection of the body, Jewish segregation and the obligation of the Levitical law. But the Rabbis do not recognize the Messiahship of Jesus. They will probably become deists.

THE AMERICAN BOARD.—The Prudential Committee of the American Board of Foreign Missions have authorized an expenditure of $520,000 next year. The board owes $5,925 44, which sum is not included in the amount appropriated. An appeal is made for a prompt contribution of the entire amount, $525,925 44.

A NEGLECTED cough, cold or sore throat, which might be checked by a simple remedy, like Brown's Bronchial Troches, if allowed to progress may terminate seriously. For bronchitis, asthma, catarrh and consumptive coughs, the Troches are used with advantage, giving oftentimes immediate relief. Singers and public speakers will find them also excellent to clear the voice and render articulation wonderfully easy.

PROFESSORS HUXLEY, Guthrie and Oliver are soon to commence, at the South Kensington Museum, England, a course of lectures to women on natural science.

ONE of the newspapers of Syracuse reports the discovery of what is supposed to be a petrified giant, a manly figure in stone, over ten feet high.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1869.

WHEN THE TIDE GOES OUT.

Through the weary day on his couch he lay,
With the life-tide ebbing slowly away,
And the dew on his cold brow gathering fast,
As the pendulum numbered moments passed,
And I heard a sad voice whispering say,
When the tide goes out he will pass away.
Pray for a soul's serene release!
That the weary soul may rest in peace,
When the tide goes out.

When the tide goes out from the sea-girt lands
It bears strange freight from the gleaming sands:
The white-winged ships that silent wait
For the foaming wave and a wind that's late;
The treasures cast on a rocky shore,
From the stranded ships that shall sail no more;
And hopes that follow the shining seas,
Oh! the ocean shall win all of these
When the tide goes out.

But of all that drift from the shore to the sea,
Is the human soul to eternity—
Floating away from a silent shore,
Like a faled ship to return no more—
Saddest, most solemn of all, a soul
Passing where unknown waters roll.
Where shall the surging current tend,
Slowly drifting friend from friend,
When the tide goes out?

For our parting spirit pray, oh! pray,
While the tide of life is ebbing away,
That the soul may pass o'er sunnier seas
Than clasped of old the Hesperides;
A bark whose sails by angel hands
Shall be furled on a beach of golden sands;
And the friends that stand on a silent shore,
Knowing that we shall return no more,
Shall wish us joy of a voyage fair,
With calm, sweet skies and a favoring air,
When the tide goes out.

Wetumpka District, Montgomery Conference.

MR. EDITOR: "For as much as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which" have transpired among them, "it seemed good to me also to write," that the brethren might know of our prosperity and rejoice with us in the Lord.

I.—OUR TEMPORAL PROSPERITY.

Except in a few localities the Lord has smiled upon our fields, our vineyards, our cattle and all our temporal interests. Our barns are full, our wine is rich and good, and to the mart we take our cotton and drive our bleating lambs and kids.

I say we—I mean not so much the ministry as I do the laity. The latter live well generally, while the former have managed so as to live after some sort.

The assessments on the various charges are good—generally above the assessments of former years; but collections, in most cases, have so far been short. Nearly every charge, however, has appointed a steward's meeting, near the close of the Conference year, at which the brethren hope to pay the workmen their wages.

In one charge the Quarterly Conference passed a resolution instructing the stewards to raise one-half of the preacher's assessment and pay it to him in the beginning of the year. Very good! But I like much better that Kentucky or Tennessee plan adopted by some charge up there: Pay the whole assessment in advance! Surely the church ought to be willing to credit the ministry some, inasmuch as the ministry have been crediting the church from time immemorial! "It is a poor rule that will not work both ways."

At the request of the District Meeting, and in compliance with my own convictions upon the subject, I have preached, where I thought it was most needed, on the support of the ministry. I have endeavored to bring forth the teaching of the Scriptures upon the subject, and to show the people that the support of the ministry lies at the foundation of the practical operations and success of the church. Some good, I humbly hope, has been done. It is very plain to my mind that the ministry should preach the whole Gospel—the support of the ministry as well as every other part of the Gospel. If they would do this in the right way—there is a right and a wrong way to do almost everything—the people would soon learn, appreciate and do their whole duty. They would pay, as well as pray and rejoice! Then "the windows of heaven," which are now locked by the failure to "bring all the tithes into the storehouse," would be opened wide that the blessing of the Lord might descend upon us!

II.—OUR SPIRITUAL PROSPERITY.

This has not been as great as we had fondly hoped; yet, nevertheless, we have had spiritual prosperity.

The preachers have all been faithful laborers. They have generally succeeded in arousing the brethren to come "up to the help of the Lord against the mighty." The church in the bounds of the district, I think I may safely say, is going onward and upward. Souls have been converted in nearly all the charges, but the most wonderful displays of saving power have been in the revivals on the Tallassee and Pleasant Hill circuits. On the latter circuit, at Pleasant Hill, the Spirit seemed to be poured out almost as it was on the day of Pentecost. About a score of souls embraced religion and joined the church.

On the Tallassee circuit many have been converted and received into the church.

At Autaugaville and Ivy Creek the brethren have enjoyed excellent seasons of refreshing. Many received pardon and cast in their lot with the people of God.

At Lowndesboro the Lord has in some measure blessed the church, and brought in souls to assist in the labor of love.

At Prattville no pent up waters have burst forth in rushing torrents, but steadily onward their peace and joy have flowed as a river in majesty and irresistible power. Some have entered the church there and found rich pasture.

On the Autauga circuit, owing to the affliction of the preacher, Brother Deusler, the work has not been carried forward as we desired I hope to have a good report from him yet.

At Wetumpka we have had a good meeting. Some good has been accomplished. During the year some have been received into the church. O, that the Lord would "rain righteousness" upon us here!

On Sooopatoy and Carolina circuits prosperity has smiled and shed some rich blessings. On the former the preacher reports accessions. As I have not held the last Quarterly Meeting in the latter charge I am not informed as to the sheaves gathered.

Special attention has been given by all the preachers to the Sabbath school cause. In that department I rejoice to report prosperity.

We have this year made efforts to revive old-fashioned love feast meetings with good success. They have usually been well attended and very profitable.

In conclusion let me say: First Amid all our prosperity we have some things that sober our joy. There is much to be done in this field. Some of the churches need to be brought up to a higher standard in everything; some of the individual members must be brought back from their worldliness, where they are almost "in endless mazes lost;" and the souls for whom Christ died, who are "without God and without hope in the world," are numerous, and are to be called unto repentance.

Many of our good members are moving by scores to the great West, leaving some of our churches few in numbers, and weak in financial ability. Brethren of the West, look out for those who are on the way to aid you in your great work. I need not bespeak for them a cordial welcome, for you will give it.

Second. We will take courage and rejoice. Hitherto God has helped us. We will praise him! With the dying Wesley we will say: "The Lord is with us!" In his name will we set up our banners. We will show our gratitude and our joy by the abundance of our labors, and by bringing our offerings to his holy altar. We will continue to urge all our collections. Then shall there be "meat" in the Lord's house for pastors, missionaries, superannuates, widows, orphans, Bishops and presiding elders. Surely when this is accomplished "the set time to favor him" will have come! Amen. WM. S. TURNER, P. E.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. WILLIAM H. CARTER.

I do not propose to write an obituary or an extended biographical sketch of this eminent Christian minister. I leave this work for some member of the Mobile Conference. Knowing Brother Carter as I did, being intimately associated with him for several years, and being one to whom he frequently unbosomed himself, I wish to bring to light some things concerning him, which I think worthy of consideration. I esteem Brother Carter the most holy man with whom I have ever associated. To say that he enjoyed religion, in the common acceptation of the term, would give but a faint idea of his religious enjoyment. The great idea with him was not to possess enough religion to save him, but to enjoy all the religion possible to be realized on earth. In reading the Bible he was not so much carried away by proof texts upon some favorite doctrines, as by those passages which would reveal to his heart the depths of piety.

His favorite doctrine was holiness. This, with him, was the central idea of Christianity. About this he read, about this he studied, about this he preached, about this he prayed, about this he exercised faith. No wonder he enjoyed it! He professed what he called purity of heart about the year 1856, and some two years thereafter his faith claimed something far superior to anything he had before experienced, which he called "the entire death of self." I do not mention this because I think the distinction is of any worth, but to show the internal workings of his mind. His ideas of Christian perfection accorded well with those of Wesley and Fletcher, authors with whom he was quite familiar.

His habits of private devotion are worthy of our patronage. He came as near reducing these to system as the nature of the case would permit. His special hours of retirement were as follows: On lying down at night and rising in the morning, and immediately after each meal. He was remarkably punctual in observing these hours, so much so that it attracted attention. On one occasion I was in conversation about Brother Carter, while seated at a dinner table of a gentleman with whom he had formerly boarded, and this gentleman remarked: "If Brother Carter has eaten his dinner by this hour I'll venture he is now praying." In connection with these regular times for prayer, he prayed much by way of ejaculation. I have heard him lecturing his congregations on the subject of prayer, and, after telling them his rule, he would urge upon them the necessity of adopting the same rule, or a similar one, and enforce it by saying that after he prayed so many times he was scarcely a Christian. "But," he would add, "may be it is easier for you to live a Christian than it is for me. I am so mean and wicked that it requires a constant effort to keep me right; God may be better to you than he is to me."

In addition to his other devotion, for a good portion of his ministerial life he retired about sundown every evening to ask God to give him power in his pulpit efforts. As a preacher he was not deep in theology, nor eloquent in delivery, and yet in many respects he was truly a powerful preacher; when, in some of his happiest moods, I have seen him hold his congregations spell-bound for nearly an hour, during which time you would not think so much of the preacher as of the subject, and the prevailing impression would be, "God is in our midst." I am perfectly satisfied that Brother Carter's pulpit power was attributable alone to his religion. He himself was sensible of this. I have heard him say: "Some men can do good by means of their learning, others by their eloquence, but if I do anything at all it is by the power of God." "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

A very striking peculiarity in the man was that he had to be at the helm, or he was of but little service. As a visiting brother in a revival meeting his powers were never seen. He had to have the whole meeting upon himself, and conduct it in his own way, and the latter he generally did very successfully. Hundreds in the final day, no doubt, will bless God that William H. Carter held a protracted meeting in their neighborhood. In his meeting he was not very fond of preaching; this he would have done by almost any preacher who might happen to be present. His main forte was in holding prayer meetings, in which he frequently delivered lectures of the most soul-stirring character. His favorite doctrine, holiness, must have place in all his meetings. It was very common for him to have two classes of persons at the altar at the same time, the one seeking pardon, the other seeking holiness, and as a consequence many professed to enjoy the latter blessing, and gave signs that they really possessed it. This accounts, in part, for his having to conduct a meeting in his own way. He most commonly picked his preachers so as to have those who would preach holiness. Enjoying this blessing himself, he wished to labor with those who either enjoyed it or were seeking it. He had more confidence in a man who enjoyed this blessing. With such a man he would confide almost any secret, and move on with the most unbounded confidence, being assured that there was no danger of giving offense. With other men, though they enjoyed religion, he was guarded, thinking that they might not understand him.

When he decided to take a companion for life, he had direct reference to these views. I do not know that he would have married any woman under heaven who did not enjoy holiness. In the fall of 1857 he married Miss Rebecca Cox, a young lady who, during the same year, under his ministry, embraced religion, and also professed perfect love. After-life proved the wisdom of his choice. She made him a good wife and a faithful colaborer in the Gospel.

He did not do all his preaching in the public congregation. He felt it to be his imperative duty to converse with every one privately upon the subject of religion. He would do this even at the neglect of making preparation for the pulpit. Frequently he would urge upon Christians the duty of talking to sinners about their souls' salvation, and by this means procured many others to assist him in his beloved employ. His heart was truly burdened with the weight of immortal souls. In his prayers, both private and public, he would frequently say: "O, Lord, give me souls, or I die!" The very atmosphere with which he was surrounded, and the spirit which he breathed, seemed to be conducive to the great work of furthering the cause of God. To be in his presence and hear him talk would inspire in almost any one a determination to draw nearer to God. Many of us who feel ourselves greater men than Brother Carter would do well to take up his fallen mantle, and pray for a double portion of his spirit to rest upon us. Holy man, as I knew him to be, I was not surprised that it should be written: "His end was tranquil, peaceful and triumphant."

"Servant of God, well done,
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy."

EACH of the nuns of Spain, taking into consideration the value of the buildings and properties she occupies, costs the State about $2,600 gold a year, and there are more than twelve thousand of them throughout the country. It is not strange that the Spanish Minister of Grace and Justice proposes to reduce considerably the number of convents, in some of which there is actually only one nun living. The buildings will be employed for charitable purposes and for public offices.

The Annihilation of the Christian Church.*

What would become of human society if the notorious Carl Vogt had his wish, who longs for "the annihilation of the Christian church," no one acquainted with history can for a moment doubt. A new heathenism would emerge and a moral pestilence sweep over the world. For, first, the Christian religion is the religion of humanity. It inculcates the duty of recognizing in every man the image of God. Materialism, one of the most anti-biblical and anti-Christian systems of the day, knows no true humanity, because it recognizes and knows no true divinity. It degrades man to a mere animal, having no free will, and consequently irresponsible for his actions. An animal knows nothing of good and evil, of virtue and vice. Moral ruin is the inevitable consequence of materialism. Next, Christianity is the religion of love, which resists and conquers selfishness. Apostacy from Christianity makes egoism the ruling principle. A furious enemy of Christianity, Max Stirner, preaches in our day this absolute egoism in a way that sinks man lower than the beasts, who at least love their kind. With the most absolute recklessness this Titan says: "I will be and will have all which I can be and have, entirely careless whether it is human or inhuman; enough that it stands in my power to will and to have. Right is for me what I make right." This is the right of the strongest. The history of mankind becomes a struggle of beasts for prey. Such phrases as "liberty, equality, fraternity," have no power to check the furious outbreak of these wild beasts, as the history of the French revolution clearly shows. The "holy guillotine," the thirst for blood, the madness of rage and hate of those who would abolish Christianity, will never be forgotten.

Again, the Christian religion has brought the purest morality into the world. Apostacy from Christianity is also a breaking loose from morality. Voltaire, whose motto was, Ecrasez l'infame, was a man who wallowed in the mire of sensuality. La Mettrie, who sympathized with him in his bitter hatred of Christianity, had the shamelessness to write: "God, conscience, providence, judgment, eternity, are chimeras, which terrify no truly reasonable man; * * * virtue and vice are empty words. The chief care of a reasonable man should be to satisfy his desires." What will become of marriage and domestic life if men bid farewell to Christianity, such men as Enfantin, George Sand, Heine, and the adherents of "Young Germany" have told us without blushing. With the utmost frivolity they repudiate the sanctity of Christian marriage; they pronounce it Philistinism and preach the so-called geniality of love, i. e., that man and wife should live together so long as they are attracted toward each other, and if this ceases they should separate. Enfantin desires free sexual mingling, like that of cattle. Heine, who lived with a woman of bad repute, pleads "for the rehabilitation of the flesh," as a "deliverance from the offensive serionaness of Christianity." He pronounces sensuality justifiable. Christianity preaches: "They who are Christ's have crucified the flesh with its affections and lusts." Heine says in conscious opposition: Away with self-denial; let us have pleasure, the dancing of nymphs, nectar and ambrosia.—Young Germany would be glad to rear "a new Greek paganism," with all its goddesses and temples for lust. That education dissevered from Christianity has no power to preserve domestic life is illustrated by the family of Rousseau. This man, who in his Emil presented himself as a reformer in education and is still regarded by many as authority in such matters, lived in concubinage and sent four out of his five children to the foundling hospital, with no sign of recognition and without ever caring for them again. Christianity tends to regulate the relation of capital to labor in accordance with the principles of righteousness and benevolence. Let Christianity be forgotten, and egoism would become the ruling principle of both the rich and the poor, and so the disruption of society become inevitable. The egoism of the rich, wealthy manufacturers and others, seeks to reduce the working classes to mere machines, and to exact from their labor the utmost possible gain. The egoism of the working classes, in return, seeks a shelter in communism. The prophets of communism, Fourier, Cabet, Proudhon, who proclaim property to be theft and declare war against all who have it, well know that Christianity is the only firm barrier against their destructive ideas. Hence the constant endeavor to make men regard it as "a pest to society." Let them succeed, and such barbarism would appear as the world has never yet seen; "lust in place of charity, might in place of right, will in place of duty, selfishness in place of love."

The Christian religion is the guardian of private life, the foundation of civil society, the indispensable support of the public welfare. It never outlives itself, never grows old. It is the same now that it was in its early days. It preserves through all time its holy and renewing power. Would that all who bear the name of Christ sought to show more of his spirit.—Theological Eclectic.

FAITH THE GLORY OF MANHOOD.

The soul that does not practically look beyond this world, and live in the strength and glory of the world to come, must have a poor and cheap existence. Take human life at its very best; accumulate about it everything which men call great; gather its riches, its honors, its pleasures in full and overflowing measure; remove far away its heavier burdens and griefs; make it all that, in its most favored conditions, it ever is or can be, and still, regarded as a portion for the soul, how meager and unsatisfying!

And in saying this we do not mean that earthly good is not a real good, or that the blessings of human life are to be lightly esteemed; but only that the soul, in its secret desires and wants, in its secret yearnings and anticipations, is something so great that it longs forever to overleap all these mortal boundaries. Attempt to shut it up within the narrow confines of earth, and a life even of "threescore years and ten," and it is like taking a bird from the free ranges of the forest, and confining it in a narrow cage. It has wings to fly far abroad in the heavenly spaces; it has songs to sing which can only be at home amid the full harmonies of the field and wood. And so the soul, if it be crowded into the narrow confines of our earthly and human life, if its longings after immortality be repressed, has only a poor and half-way existence. It was made for something higher, nobler, better.

How false, then, is all that philosophy which would teach us that faith is weak and childish, and unworthy of full grown men! A man can never be full-grown—never be anything but a dwarf without it! Faith bridges over the mighty chasm which separates the seen from the unseen, and opens a path outward, along which the soul can range according to its irrepressible longings. What would even human life, in the strict sense, be without faith? What can any individual man, without help from others, know of this world in its present condition, or of the ages of human history which have preceded? It is because we believe, not because we know, that we are put in possession of all that has gone before. We reach out to take hold of the mighty wonders of the world, we grasp the secrets of distant lands; what would all this be to us if we were required to search it out for ourselves, and could not take it upon the word of others? Because we believe, we are heirs of all the ages of human history. Because we believe, we look out and behold what is going on to-day in the mighty empires of China and India; we look into shadowy lands of the far north and south, "we take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea;" all because we believe, as God made us to do. If we must know everything of ourselves, then our life must run in the narrowest channels, and we could hardly reach out, in our grasp of thought, beyond the cattle which feed peacefully upon the hills; but God made us to take in this present world by faith, and in a still higher and grander sense, he made us to take in the "unseen and external world."

Let no man, then, deceive us with the idea that faith is unfitted to a being endowed with reason. Reason is good, but without faith the whole reach of life and thought is shut within the smallest circle. The real glory of a man is his faith. By this his being is enlarged, and he shares with angels in an immortal inheritance. The man of earthly experience, who prates with his dogmas about reason—making belief to be weak, and absolute knowledge only to be great—does not, perhaps, stop to think that he dishonors himself and dishonors his race in the most effectual way possible. If he himself were actually reduced to live on his own absolute knowledge, it would be a life within such contracted limits as to be contemptible. God has made him to soar far and wide and long on the wings of faith. He has given him a world vast enough to allow of such flights. He has communicated enough respecting the universe as a whole, past, present and to come, to give a free and large range to the soul. "We walk by faith, not by sight."—Congregationalist.

AUTUMN.

Now all the trees are bright with gorgeous tints,
And sweet and cool these fair autumnal days;
Summer is gone, but far o'er vale and hill
October spreads her wealth of purple haze.

A strange, sweet sadness fills the balmy air,
A wondrous calm pervades the earth and sky,
As if the summer days, with loitering feet,
Lingering awhile, as loth to say good by!

Through golden clouds the early sun sinks down,
With splendor bathed, behind the western hills;
And large and round the mellow harvest moon
The landscape with its fairy radiance fills.

My heart responds to nature's varying moods,
And tears unbidden gather in my eyes,
For tender memories and fond regrets,
And longings vain, within my heart arise.

Longings unuttered for the present sweet
Which would have been my sunshine all the year—
But cheerful faith and love shall still be mine,
For earth is fair, and heaven is very near.

NATURE IN EDUCATION.

The first book the eye opens upon when we enter our present life is one written by the Divine Hand, in the fairest hieroglyphics, and illustrated with living pictures. If one only has its alphabet at hand there is no difficulty in reading it, no end to its variety, and no possibility of exhausting its interest. Wherever we move new leaves of it are turned over, and no book of instruction has its power to enlarge the mind and to minister to its enjoyment. The key to this inexhaustible treasure of knowledge and pleasure our schools fail to place in the hands of children. It is true that we have treatises upon botany, upon the natural history of animals, of birds, of insects, and volumes upon stones, and shells, and fishes; but too often our young people come away from our seats of learning without being able to distinguish one star from another; without enthusiasm in the examination of vegetable life; without being able to call a bird, save the robin, perhaps, by name, or to recognize its distinctive note; without having the ability to form an opinion of the geological structure of the country about them, or of finding delight in the study of the habits of the innumerable forms of insect life, calling in whispering music for attention everywhere.

The text books are dull and dry, and rendered forbidding by unpronounceable technical terms; but nature is printed in colors, and full of harmonies. The book must be only an implement, like the heavy hammer that breaks open the rock to disclose its crystals. It must be rendered valuable by the previous taste which has been formed, and the enthusiasm which has been aroused by carrying the child first to nature herself. The young pupil first learns things, and loves them; then the child readily inquires for names, and remembers them. The teacher, full of the theme, familiar with natural objects, fond of birds and flowers, and animated life, with the names upon his own lips, must first, by his own interest, kindle the soul of the pupil, and then the dryest text books will become the means of affording aid and pleasure to the young scholar.

This failure to educate—to draw out the mind of the youth toward natural history, and to enable him to acquire a correct and positive knowledge of the world in which he lives—is not seen merely in these branches of study, but in almost all the rudimental courses. The same results are seen in the study of geography, history, chemistry, etc. Indeed, how uninteresting these studies, which in themselves combine the most entertaining elements that the mind can contemplate, are made, as usually taught from text books in our schools! How few young persons follow out these studies after they leave the scene of early instruction, or preserve any distinct notions of the subjects, which they simply committed to memory to meet the requisitions of the class room, and to secure an honorable standing among their mates!

Many of the text books we necessarily leave behind with the school, and we wish to carry with us only the discipline we have received in their study, such as our mathematical treatises; but this book of nature is never closed before us until our own eyes are veiled by the shadows of the grave. Indeed, the book is not closed to us then; but a wider and more glorious page will open before our wondering vision.—Into our family life, into our professional routine, into our daily labor, we may profitably and gratefully carry this study of natural history. It will form the most refreshing kind of recreation from any onerous pursuit of business, and afford a constant source of inexpensive but exquisite enjoyment.

Happy is that minister, or physician, or lawyer who has for his "hobby" some branch of natural history, and, next to his library in interest, arranges his cabinet of minerals or insects, or birds, or shells, or covers his tables with well and widely selected herbaria.

The newspapers contained an interesting account, a short time since, of an uneducated young man, who in the hours of weakness and convalescence from some lingering physical disease, to while away his time began the out-of-door study of cryptogamic plants, mosses, lichens, etc. He became greatly interested in these miniature evergreen forests growing upon the rocks, and now, to fully understand them, no labor was aught but pleasure; so without a teacher, and with the poorest facilities, he made himself familiar with Latin and French and German, because the first language gave him the names of his beloved plants, and the modern languages afforded him the best treatises upon their nature and characteristics.

The hour to develop this taste is early childhood, not at college. However we may differ from Spencer and Huxley in their speculations as to the origin of life, and as to their materialistic views of religion, we must agree with them in their earnest appeals that adequate attention should be given in the earliest years of life to the study of the real world around us. It is a world which, like the Sabbath, in one important sense, was "made for man," not simply as a place of residence, but for the discipline and development of his mind. The study of its laws are the most natural, as they are the divine, provisions for its wholesome enlargement.—New York Christian Advocate.

THESE LITTLE ONES.

As a general rule we are not half thoughtful or courteous enough in our manners toward our children. We are too apt to content ourselves with a general consciousness of being right in the main with theoretically intending that they shall grow up to be good Christian citizens and an honor to ourselves. We make big sacrifices in their behalf, revolve fine schemes, and bring out the heavy artillery of our nature on very slight occasions. But our graces, our courtesies, our delicate acts of appreciation and lofty consideration are not for them. These are reserved for adult friends and select acquaintances, as if to any one living were due more of the best and sweetest that is in us than to those whom we have brought into the world to meet its jars, temptations and cruelties!

Think of the really coarse way in which the fondest of us sometimes wound our children's sensibilities. How we parade their special traits and accomplishments, and ignore their individuality; how recklessly we break in upon their little plans and pleasures; how carelessly we comment upon their defects; how we laugh at their childish distresses, because the grieved look or the tragic little scowl is "so cunning;" how we visit our vexation of spirit upon their innocent heads; how we resent their inexperience; how needlessly or sharply we deny their little petitions, and how we ignore our "Thank you," and insist upon theirs; how we jerk or push them in our impatience: how we flout their earnest questions, and deal out cutting, cruel words of "wholesome reproof," when, perhaps, the little heart is quivering under some real or fancied wrong! It is terrible to think of.

Many, seeing these charges in the aggregate, will indignantly deny them. Yet we venture to assert that no parent, answering each in turn, can plead guiltless to them all.

We shall not dwell upon the monstrous wrongs of chastisement too often inflicted upon children—such as beating, threatening, frightening, and that meanest act of all, the "boxing" of ears. The dear Christ teaches no hard lesson of harshness or brute force toward the little ones committed to our care. Even as he was "subject unto" his parents, returning meekly with them from Jerusalem while his child-soul yearned to be about his Father's business, so would he have our little ones subject unto us. They are ours to lead and protect, to teach and warn and cherish; ours to love wisely, to deal with firmly and reverently—mirrors of our example, gleaners of the harvest of our home life—not ours to pet and rebuff, and sacrifice to our hundred weaknesses. Well for the father and mother to whom their child's heart is as a holy of holies, and their child's foibles and human tendencies as stumbling blocks, not to vex and upset them, but which the little one must wisely and lovingly be taught to overcome. Heaven bless the always cheerful, gentle-voiced, conscientious parent! And heaven help all those who, when it is too late to atone, remember with anguish the quivering lip and pleading eye of a little face that has passed away!

TELEGRAPHINO PULSE BEATS AND HEART THROBS.—At one of the sessions during the late meeting of the American Association of Science, Dr. Upham announced that a telegraphic wire connecting New York, New Haven, Boston and Salem had been generously devoted to the use of the association for that evening, and that arrangements had been made to attempt the experiment of telegraphing from the City Hospital, Boston, the movements of the heart and pulse of a variety of subjects, both in normal and abnormal conditions, which should be observed simultaneously in the four cities. The telegraphic instruments were connected with the wire, and the physicians in attendance at the City Hospital, Boston, answered "Ready." Mr. Farmer arranged the electro magnetic recording apparatus and lighted the magnesium lamp, (the gas lights being turned down,) throwing a beam of light on the mirror attached to it, and which was thus reflected as a spot of brilliant light upon the wall, visible to the whole audience. In a moment connection was made with the pulse of a healthy subject in Boston, and sixteen miles away. Presto! the spot of light vibrates up and down—up and down on the wall; we see the motion in Salem; the audience counts sixty to the minute. Next the wire is connected with the wrist of an excitable young disciple of Esculapius, and we are amused to see the spot of light vibrate up to ninety. The next case was that of the movements of a patient with chronic pneumonia, followed by one having organic malformation of the heart. In both these cases the irregular action was, of course, accurately indicated.

We were informed from the hospital that the nervous gentleman had consented, for the sake of science, to give an exhibition in his own person of the effects of veratrum viridi in reducing the action of the heart.

The drug was taking effect; the connections are made, and the beam of light beats to the slower time of sixty four instead of ninety. A few minutes later it declined to forty eight, which, considering the peculiarities of the individual, was startling.

At the close of this interesting session Dr. Groux telegraphed the motion of his own heart to Boston, New Haven and New York, from which reports will doubtless be made by the accomplished observers stationed at those points.—New York paper.

BE KIND TO CHILDREN.—Blessed be the hand which prepares a pleasure for a child, for there is no saying where and when it may again bloom forth. Does not almost everybody remember some kind hearted man who showed him a kindness in the quiet days of his childhood? The writer of this recollects himself at this moment, as a barefooted lad standing at the wooden fence of a poor little garden in his native village; with longing eyes he gazed on the flowers which were blooming there quietly in the brightness of a Sunday morning. The possessor of the garden came forth from his little cottage. He was a wood cutter by trade, and spent the whole week at his work in the woods. He was coming into the garden to gather a flower to stick into his coat when he went to church. He saw the boy, and breaking off the most beautiful of his carnations—it was streaked with red and white—gave it to him. Neither the giver nor the receiver spoke one word—and with bounding steps ran home; and now, here, at a vast distance from that home, after many events of so many years, the feeling of gratitude which agitated the breast of that boy expresses itself on paper. The carnation has long since withered, but it now blooms afresh Douglas Jerrold.

DIPLOMACY may work as much calamity as a battle; a few ink drops may cost a nation more misery and exhaustion than a river of blood.

JOHN BUNYAN.

To the names of Baxter and Howe must be added the name of a man far below them in station and acquired knowledge, but in virtue their equal, and in genius their superior, John Bunyan. Bunyan had been bred a tinker, and had served as a private soldier in the Parliamentary army. Early in his life he had been fearfully tortured by remorse for his youthful sins, the worst of which seem, however to have been such as the world thinks venial. His keen sensibility and his powerful imagination made his internal conflicts terrible. He fancied he was under sentence of reprobation, that he had committed blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, that he had sold Christ, that he was actually possessed of a demon. Sometimes loud voices from heaven cried out to warn him. Sometimes fiends whispered impious suggestions in his ear. He saw visions of distant mountain tops, on which he was separated by a waste of snow. He felt the devil behind him pulling his clothes. He thought that the brand of Cain had been set upon him. He feared that he was about to burst asunder like Judas. His mental agony disordered his health. One day he shook like a man in the palsy. On another day he felt a fire within his breast. It is difficult to understand how he survived sufferings so intense and so long continued. At length the clouds broke. From the depths of despair the penitent passed into a state of serene felicity. An irresistible impulse urged him to impart to others the blessings of which he was himself possessed. He joined the Baptists, and became a preacher and writer. His education had been that of a mechanic. He knew no language but the English, as it was spoken by the common people. He had studied no great model of composition, with the exception, an important exception undoubtedly, of our noble translation of the Bible. His spelling was bad. He frequently transgressed the rules of grammar. Yet the native force of genius, and his experimental knowledge of all the religious passions, from despair to ecstacy, amply supplied in him the want of learning. His rude oratory roused and melted hearers who listened without interest to the labored discourse of great logicians and Hebraists.

His works were widely circulated among the humbler classes. One of them, the Pilgrim's Progress, was in his own lifetime translated into several foreign languages. It was, however, scarcely known to the learned and polite, and had been, during near a century, the delight of pious cottagers and artisans, before it was publicly commended by any man of high literary eminence. At length critics condescended to inquire where the secret of so wide and so durable a popularity lay. They were compelled to own that the ignorant multitude had judged more correctly than the learned, and that the despised little book was really a masterpiece. Bunyan is indeed as decidedly the first of allegorists as Demosthenes is the first of orators, or Shakspeare the first of dramatists. Other allegorists have shown equal ingenuity, but no other allegorist has ever been able to touch the heart and to make abstractions objects of terror, of pity and of love.

It may be doubted whether any English Dissenter had suffered more severely than John Bunyan. Of the twenty-seven years which had elapsed since the Restoration, he had passed twelve in confinement. He still persisted in preaching, but that he might preach he was under the necessity of disguising himself like a carter. He was often introduced into meetings through back doors, with a smock frock on his back and a whip in his hand. If he had thought of his own ease and safety he would have hailed the indulgence with delight. He was now, at length, free to pray and exhort in open day. His congregation rapidly increased; thousands hung upon his words; and at Bedford, where he originally resided, money was plentifully contributed to build a meeting house for him. His influence among the common people was such that the government would willingly have bestowed on him some municipal office; but his vigorous understanding and his stout English heart were proof against all delusion and temptation. He felt assured that the proffered toleration was merely a bait to lure the Puritan party to destruction; nor would he, by accepting a place for which he was not legally qualified, recognize the dispensing power. One of the last acts of his virtuous life was to decline an interview to which he was invited by an agent of the government.

DEATH BED REPENTANCE.—A death-bed repentance is a dangerous speculation; 'tis true the thief on the cross was forgiven at the last hour, but it was intended as a singular instance, that none might despair—a solitary one, that none might presume.—Rev. S. Crowther.

THE DRUNKARD'S CHILD.—At the close of a sermon by Miss Geraldine Harper, of Bath, England, delivered to an audience of three thousand, she recited the following touching incident: "Some few years since the child of a drunkard went to a Sabbath school. She was between five and six years old, but, taught of the Holy Spirit, she had been brought to the knowledge of Jesus. She was an only child. Her mother was a godly woman, her father a drunkard and swearer. But he loved his child and Nelly loved him; for cruel and harsh in words to others, to her he was ever gentle and kind.

Not long after her attendance at the Sabbath school, Nelly was taken seriously ill, stricken to death. When the doctor came he told the father: "Your child is dying." "Nelly die!" said the father; "she mustn't die! she can't die!" He rushed to his child and said: "Nelly, Nelly, don't die! stay with me, won't you?" The child said, "Father, I am so happy. I am going to be with Jesus. Teacher told me,

'All who love the Lord below,
When they die to heaven will go.'

And I love him, and shall be with him."

"Nelly," said the poor broken-hearted father, as the tears rolled down his cheeks, "don't leave me. I can't have you leave me. I'll do anything for you, if you will only stay with me." "Oh, father! dear father! I must go, but I want you to promise me three things before I die." "Oh, tell me, Nelly, what you want"

Mark, dear hearers, her first wish. "Father, promise me that when I am gone you won't beat mother." And the heart-broken father said, "I'll promise you, I'll never beat mother again. Don't leave me. Don't die, Nelly." "Oh, father, I've something more I want you to promise. Don't drink!" And the poor man gave the required promise. "And now, father, one promise more. Meet Nelly in heaven." "Nelly, I cannot promise you this. I won't beat mother; I won't drink; but I'm too great a sinner to meet you in heaven." "Jesus can make you fit. Ask him now." The father knelt down, and from the depths of a broken and contrite heart went forth the petition, "God be merciful to me a sinner." How long he prayed he knew not; but soon light dawned upon his soul, and the night of weeping was turned into the morning of joy. He arose from his knees, gazed upon Nelly, but the lily was plucked out of this harsh, cold world, to bloom in a better land, where no sinner can mar its loveliness, where no sharp wind of sorrow or adversity can blight its joy.

GEOLOGY AT A DISCOUNT.—The geologist, if he be fairly in earnest, is far too tired, after his day's work, to trouble himself about the aristocratic air of his quarters, and besides generally manages to put his outer man into so uncleanly a condition that a grand hotel would have some scruples in taking him in. Professor Sedgwick, after a hard morning's work, betook himself to a village inn for a lunch of bread and cheese. When he asked what he had to pay, he was told four pence! He could not avoid remarking on the smallness of the charge. "Ah, sir," said the landlady, "I should ask eight pence of any one else, but I only ask four pence from you, for I see you have seen better days." At another time a lady stopped by the roadside, where he was working, made some inquiries, and gave him a shilling, because his answers were so intelligent for his station. He met the same lady at dinner next day, to her great astonishment. A well known geologist, long secretary to the Geological Society, was once taken up while at his vocation, and dragged to the Bristol Asylum for an escaped lunatic. On another occasion, tired, and with his pockets full of the day's treasures, he mounted a stage coach, and fell fast asleep. Waking at his journey's end, he was horrified to find his pockets as empty as when he set out. An old woman who sat beside him feeling the pockets full of stones, took him for a madman, who had loaded himself more effectually to secure drowning; so she slily picked out the fossils, one by one, from the drowsy philosopher, and tossed them on the roadside.—Musical World.

A CORRESPONDENT of an English newspaper, in a communication to his journal, speaks of the arrangement in America of the Baggage Express Company, by which passengers on railway trains can have their baggage taken to any point they wish in the cities and towns for the small amount of twenty five or fifty cents, without giving themselves any trouble. The correspondent thinks that a similar company in London would be an excellent thing, and so, too, says the Pall Mall Budget.

THE Dona Palace in Rome has been fitted up as a restaurant for the Ecumenical Council people.

IS ROMANISM WEAK?—We think it is, in spite of its confident tone and apparent progress in this country. The Pope declares a council necessary to rescue the church from impending dangers, and he should know, if any one does. It is well understood that his precarious tenure of the temporal power depends upon the whim of a French monarch. Her Catholic majesty, Isabella, has been compelled to fly from what was formerly the strongest bulwark of the papacy, and Protestant sermons are tolerated in the land of the Inquisition. Austria repudiates the Concordat, and even imprisons a recusant bishop. Italy has confiscated more ecclesiastical revenues within ten years than can be squeezed out of our servant girls for a generation to come. Mexico, we believe, has done the same, not quite as thoroughly, however. The estates of the church have been "disamortised," i. e., confiscated by a recent vote of the Portuguese chamber of deputies. So great has been the scandal of the imprisoned nun of Gracow, that the vicar general of the order has thought it necessary to deny on oath that he authorized the barbarity. Father Hyacinthe has sent a bombshell into the papal camp; what the explosion will be remains to be seen. Bavaria and Germany mutter significant protests against the probable dogmatic utterance of the coming Ecumenical Council. All these are not signs of that union which is strength, but rather of weakness and division.

It is worthy of notice, too, that the Catholic Church in America, while undeniably advancing in numbers and wealth, is admitting some features that have never proved safe allies of Romanism heretofore. The Catholic World is a brilliant periodical, but wit and knowledge are sharp-edged tools for hierarchy to play with. Father Hecker may prove to be another Erasmus. The church must furnish moderately respectable schools to keep its children out of the power of heretics, and schools have never long consisted with churchly authority. It is whispered at Rome that the Pope, while abundantly pleased with gold snuff boxes full of California eagles, is not more than half contented with his American dominions. The contest before us is, therefore, hopeful, if it is great.—Magna est veritas et prevalebit.

PRIVATE PRAYER.—We should pray statedly at least thrice a day. The widow of a godly man who died recently told the writer that he always went to secret prayer four times daily; in the morning before he went to his work, again in his dinner hour, once more when his day's work was ended, and at night before he retired to rest. There was a noticeable power in the piety of this man, and he died in great peace. Was not this attributable to his frequent fellowship with his Saviour!

It is very helpful to spend a few moments in preparation before we engage in secret devotion. "You cannot," says Flavel, "come reeking hot out of the world into God's presence, but you will find a taste of it in your duties." How excellent was the plan of the mother of the Wesleys, whose habit was, when she went alone for prayer, to sit down and think of God for some minutes before she addressed him! Many a golden opportunity of fellowship with Christ is lost for want of this. "Let us, when we enter our closet, and shut the door, think, 'I am now alone with God; no eye but his looks down upon me; no ear but his hearkens to my words. His presence surrounds me, and I kneel before him to implore his help. Let me, with deep seriousness and lively faith, address myself to the Supreme God.

"I ought to pray before seeing any one. Often, when I sleep long, or meet with others early, and then have family prayer, and breakfast, and forenoon callers, it is eleven or twelve o'clock before I begin secret prayer. This is a wretched system. It is unscriptural. Christ rose before day, and went into a solitary place. David says, Early will I seek thee; thou shalt early hear my voice. Mary Magdalene came to 'the sepulchre' while 'it was yet dark.' Family prayer loses much of its power and sweetness, and I can do no good to those who come to seek it from me. The conscience feels guilty, the soul unfed, the lamp not trimmed. Then, when secret prayer comes, the soul is often out of tune. I feel it is far better to begin with God, to see his face first, to get my soul near him before it is near another. 'When I awake I am still with thee.'"—Robert M. McCheune.

MEN are often capable of greater things than they perform. They are sent into the world with bills of credit, and seldom draw to their full extent.

THE sweetest word in our language is love. The greatest word in our language is God. The word expressing the shortest time is now.

MONTGOMERY CONFERENCE.

CHANGE OF TIME.

MR. EDITOR: Please announce that by urgent request Bishop Paine has postponed the meeting of the Montgomery Conference one week. It will assemble on Wednesday, December 8, instead of December 1, as first announced.

Truly your brother,
JOSEPH B. COTTRELL,
P. C. at Union Springs, Ala
UNION SPRINGS, ALA., Oct. 26.

REV. O. FISHER.

This venerable minister of Jesus Christ passed through our city recently. On Sunday night, the 14th instant, he preached in the Fellcity street church, much to the edification of the people. Considerably over twenty years ago we heard him preach in the old Poydras street church. Time seems to have dealt kindly with him, and he proclaims the Gospel message with scarcely less vigor than was his wont a quarter of a century ago. Brother Fisher is one of the delegates from the Pacific Conference to the General Conference, and will not return until after the session of the latter in May next. He left us on Tuesday last for Texas, whither he goes to visit his children and the friends and scenes of his earlier ministry.

OUR BOOK DEPOSITORY.—At 112 Camp street we have, perhaps, the best book store in the Southwest. The agent, R. J. Harp, besides having all the Methodist standard works, has also a large stock of the freshest and choicest literature of the day. All kinds of stationery are also kept, so that our country friends can have their orders in this line completely filled, at prices most reasonable and satisfactory.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONCERT OF PRAYER. The regular Sunday School Union Concert of Prayer is held every fourth Wednesday of the month.

The next meeting will be held in Carondelet street church on Wednesday, November 24, at seven o'clock P. M. All friends of Sunday schools are invited to attend.

WE CALL ATTENTION to the card of Mr. J. H. Campman, which appears this week in our columns. This gentleman has on hand the most popular stoves now manufactured, and a good stock of grates and house furnishing goods. His place of business is 133 Poydras street, New Orleans.

ANOTHER asteroid has been discovered by Dr. Peters, making the whole number known 109.

CHRISTIAN THANKFULNESS.

The gratitude of the Christian is distinctive and peculiar. Atheism is incapable of praise or thankfulness. We must believe in a God who is personal, intelligent, spiritual and benevolent. Even deism, in its best forms, as rejecting Christ, is capable of only the feeblest professions of gratitude. God must be apprehended, as in Christ, before we can reach the true character and measure of that love which the divine goodness should incite in all. In this apprehension of the infinite Creator we find the reasons of a uniform and ardent affection. The impersonal conceptions of pantheism, and the impalpable phantoms of rationalistic speculation, demand no return for benefits received and enjoyed. The most sincere deist would be embarrassed, amidst the problems of the moral and material world, by the inconsistency of his devotions. Revelation alone makes it clear that God is to be thanked, because "he is good, and his mercies endure forever." Moral evil and physical suffering, as explained by inspired authority, are in perfect consistency with the divine holiness and benevolence. Apart from the disclosures of the Bible, we might doubt whether existence itself be not a calamity, and whether the author of it be not malign rather than beneficent in his character and attributes.

The central point of revelation is Christ. Christ is the sum and essence of revelation, and, at the same time, the great medium through which God has manifested himself to us. "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." God is the object of grateful worship, as he is the giver of all. Before we can be truly thankful this view of the divine character must be profoundly impressed upon the mind. It must be so comprehended that all subordinate agencies, as our own cleverness and diligence, do not impair the completeness and directness of God's relation to us as the absolute bestower of everything. Christian faith recognizes "every perfect gift" as immediately from the Father of lights. In proportion as we recede from this ground of confidence and obligation, the principle of gratitude fades, and is at length totally obscured amidst the shadows and vapors of an inconstant faith. This truth clearly discerned, that God is the giver of all, is the root of the grace of thankfulness. Apart from Christ, however, what clear and consistent views can we entertain of the divine gifts? In Christ we have the highest expression of love. This gift of the "only begotten" certainly surpasses all other gifts. All things are in him and with him. Life, with its temporal mercies and spiritual benefits, is bestowed through the Son of God. Christ is the warrant of our confidence, in the providence which superintends the affairs of time; and he is also the pledge of that grace which must conduct the soul safely through its spiritual conflicts to the final victory. As Paul most conclusively argues: "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also give us all things?" It is evident that real gratitude must be connected with Christ as the highest expression and assurance of all good. We do not remember to have seen the Saviour's name in any thanksgiving proclamation. The only intimation of Christianity about these documents is the Anno Domini with which they are dated. The most of them might have been issued by Turk or Jew or pagan. Consistent scriptural thanksgiving cannot thus ignore Christ, since he is the ground and reason of all gratitude.

Christian thanksgiving is uniform and perpetual. "In everything give thanks;" and again, "In everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving." In the light of the Gospel perpetual thanksgiving is a reasonable service, because in Christ we have a perpetual occasion. Temporal blessings vary continually, and the allotment of sorrow casts its shadows upon the brightest experiences of time. The sacrifice of thanksgiving would be withheld by the pagan in times of calamity. Misfortunes tempt the Christian to murmur rather than adore. With a true apprehension of Christ these disturbing influences are overcome, and there is no day so dark as utterly to stifle the spirit of praise. As there are some stars which never go down, so there are within the empyrean of the cross mercies which shine most brightly when all temporal good seems to be wrapt in deepest shadow. If sickness, bereavement, business failures and other temporal disappointments restrain our gratitude, we are strangers to this Christian grace. If we are grateful only because of temporal prosperity, we are not, in its highest Christian sense, grateful at all. To give thanks in everything is possible only to the highest attainments of faith in Christ. With this faith in the soul the weight of affliction has been the means of manifesting the deep consolations of Christ; and the experience of temporal prosperity has touched a chord of grateful appreciation, which had been already thrilled by the grander benedictions of the spiritual life.

Christian thanksgiving, then, does not remand us and our faith back to the uncertainties and sophistries of natural theology; nor to the feeble sentimentalism of deistic poetry and philosophy. It rather sends us to the foot of the cross, where we find the occasion of thanksgiving, and the ground of its acceptance as the spiritual sacrifice of believing hearts. Jews, infidels, heathen and worldly-minded people are no more capable of thanksgiving than they are of love, faith and holiness. If Christ has not and cannot awaken the deepest gratitude, we may be sure that the material "glories of the circling year" will fail of this result. *

IN A STRAIT.

We are frequently expostulated with by very judicious persons, and from various quarters, for publishing so many and long reports of District Meetings. These reports are of interest to the limited sections which they represent, but they are of no interest to the majority of our readers. Everything in the shape of statistics, news items, revivals and the state of the church we are glad to receive, and our subscribers are thankful for them. But the details of these meetings, such as the names of those who are present, the matter and manner of the sermons preached, who were kept away by sickness, the style and number of the committees, and the deliverances of the meetings upon doctrines, discipline and church polity are of little interest to the church at large. The committee reports of the District Meetings are often able and important, but their utility is, for the most part, limited to the district, and often to those present. These reports are frequently long, altogether too long, for the columns of a weekly newspaper. Sometimes we receive half a dozen in a week upon the same subject from different meetings, and as much alike as so many peas. In the four patronizing Conferences there are probably as many as forty districts, and as many District Meetings or Conferences, and these are nearly all held in the last half of the year. What a flood of documents, reports, resolutions and deliverances upon every conceivable subject which can affect the local or general welfare of the church! If we were to publish all that is sent us our columns would often contain nothing else. From one direction a brother writes that "that report must appear or there will be loss of subscribers in his district," while several of its twin brothers are in the drawer. From another quarter a friend begs us, for the sake of the ADVOCATE and the good of its readers, to give them District Meetings only in homeopathic and broken doses. What are we to do? and who is sufficient for these things? We notice most gratefully that some District Meetings publish their proceedings in pamphlet form, or in some local newspaper, for circulation in the bounds of the district. In justice to all our subscribers the statistics and a brief abstract are all that ought to be expected of the ADVOCATE. This much we are always thankful to obtain. Editors are fallible mortals, but our editor is doing his best in his endeavor to satisfy the just expectations of all. In this particular strait we beg our brethren to be considerate and patient, and to believe that the conductors of the ADVOCATE are governed by the sincerest desire to serve the church and to glorify God. *

Death of Rev. W. A. Gamewell.

This esteemed minister and member of the South Carolina Conference died October 30. Dr. Whiteford Smith, in the Southern Christian Advocate of November 12, describes his end as peaceful and triumphant.

Our brother's end was just what might have been expected from this history of his life—calm, peaceful, happy. Last night he rejoiced in the Lord, exclaiming: "Glory to God!" This morning, at the close of prayer, he remarked: "Oh, how sweet it is to worship." Looking around at the friends whose kind attentions he so highly appreciated, he spoke of the sweets of friendship, and the goodness of God in providing such ministrations, and then repeated the lines:

"And if our fellowship below
In Jesus be so sweet,
What height of rapture shall we know,
When round his throne we meet."

He fell asleep in Jesus at a quarter past two o'clock this afternoon.

When a few weeks ago the news of Dr. Boyd's departure was read to him, he was deeply affected, even to tears. They were of the same class, of 1834. Of the nineteen then admitted on trial into the Conference, nearly all are gone. Two of them, Charles S. Walker and Henry H. Durant, sleep in our village graveyard, and to morrow another will be laid beside them. But one of the nineteen remains effective in our Conference.

It is a singular coincidence that Spartanburg, which was included in the first appointment of Brother Gamewell, should have been his last. Though he was classed among the old preachers of our Conference, Brother Gamewell was not an old man. He had only attained to fifty-five years, but thirty-six of them had been spent in the ministry. He loved the work to which God had called him, and only a few days ago expressed his earnest wish, if it were God's will, to preach again the blessed Gospel. But his voice shall be heard no more, till it is heard in the glorious song which the redeemed shall sing around the throne.

MEMPHIS CONFERENCE.

The Memphis Conference began its session at Holly Springs, Mississippi, November 3. Bishop Kavanaugh presided. The editor of the Memphis Advocate was, of course, chosen secretary. The book agent was present during a part of the session—he returned home on Monday, having preached at Humboldt on Sunday. He reports the business prospering finely—the members acting in great harmony. Extensive revivals had blessed the Conference—there had been in the Holly Springs district alone a net increase of more than one thousand three hundred. The agent was treated with great kindness—the preachers settled their accounts with the Publishing House with their wonted promptness, and promised continued efforts in the promotion of its interests. Dr. Munsey was present two days of the session. He addressed the Conference on behalf of foreign missions, and though he asked for no collection, the brethren forced some $700 or $800 upon him to aid in the liquidation of the debt of the Board.—Nashville Advocate

DEATH OF T. B. R. HATCH.—The Baton Rouge Advocate announces the death of this estimable gentleman. He died at his residence in that city on Monday morning last. The Advocate says:

Mr. Hatch for many years has been connected with the press of the State. The founder of this paper in 1843, for a number of years he was its popular editor and proprietor. In 1853 or 1855, disposing of the Advocate, he established the Herald at Lake Providence, and edited and conducted that journal until the breaking out of the late civil war. At the close of the war, ruined in fortune and health, he connected himself editorially with the Baton Rouge Gazette and Comet, which paper he was editing at the time of his death. As a writer he was fluent, chaste, sincere and honest to the letter.

In the social circle Mr. Hatch was a peer among peers—generous, humane and confiding. We knew him intimately, and sincerely bear witness to his noble nature.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

COLUMBUS DIST., MOBILE CONFERENCE
BEXAR CIRCUIT, Nov. 6, 1869.

MR EDITOR: I am just now closing up my second year's labor on this circuit, and thinking you would like to know what the Lord has been doing for us in this part of his vineyard, I have concluded to send you a brief statement of both years' labor.

We have had general success both years. There have been two hundred and fifty or sixty conversions during the two years' labor here. Two hundred and twenty out of that number have joined the church.

The Lord has been pleased to abundantly revive his work at almost every appointment on this circuit. Our people all manifest an increasing desire for the spiritual welfare of Zion; and while the influence of a general revival continues to spread, our converts are proving faithful. We have had the assistance of some very good local brethren, who have manifested an honesty of purpose and zeal for God and a sincere love for the church, and the great Captain of our salvation has traveled in the apparel of his own strength, destroying the works of the devil; so that we have come out victorious in every battle.

JAMES D. BUSH, P. C.

MR. EDITOR: This will inform you and my old friends in the Louisiana Conference that I am still in the service of my Master, trying, by the good Lord's help, to get to heaven, where loved ones have gone before me.

I have been preaching here in Arkansas three years, and I am getting anxious to come back to my old Louisiana home, where we have been blessed in other days.

We have had four camp meetings since I have been here. There have been great revivals and camp meetings all over Arkansas, and as an evidence of the spirituality of the work, there are more young converts coming into the ministry than I have ever known in this Southwestern country. We have had about one hundred converaions on the Princeton circuit this year. Was holding a town camp meeting at the same time Beulah camp meeting was being held, which brought to our mind the scenes and pleasant times of other days, and also to the mind of my old presiding elder, Brother Pipes, which made him say, in a communication to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE of October 2: "It occurred to us that if Brother Parvin knew this was going on here in the Louisiana Conference, Arkansas would not hold him another year." It happened that we were holding a camp meeting in Holly Springs, Arkansas, and I was thinking of my brethren who used to come to my aid in Louisiana; but here we are in Arkansas, without any ministerial aid but the local preachers of the neighborhood. But the best of all, the good Lord was with us to bless his truth in the minds and hearts of the hearers, in the sanctification of believers, and in the conviction and conversion of sinners. If you wish a correct statement of the condition of Arkansas in few words, read Bishop Pierce's, on his return from the Camden District Meeting.

Pray for the prosperity of Zion in Arkansas, that the day may not be far off when we will have colleges, finished chapels and parsonages, and a soul sanctifying religion throughout soul, body and spirit.

R. PARVIN.

REV. THOMAS E BOND, M. D., late editor of the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, and Rev. R. A. Holland, announce that they will publish, January 1, 1870, a new weekly paper, to be called the Baltimore Christian Advocate. It is to be a journal of sixteen pages, cut and stitched, and furnished to single subscribers at $4 a year. In their prospectus the publishers say "they intend" that the new paper "shall honestly exhibit their own honest convictions of the truth," and promise that whatever of experience, judgment, taste and assistance they can command shall be patiently and laboriously given to make it a paper creditable and useful to Southern Methodism and to Southern Christianity.—Christian Advocate.

HEMAN BANGS.

The following extract is from a notice of this venerable minister in the Christian Advocate of New York:

This venerated father in the Gospel, so long and favorably known in connection with the New York Conference until its last division, and subsequently with the New York East Conference, died at his residence in New Haven, Connecticut, on the 2d instant, aged eighty years.

He was born in Fairfield, Connecticut, April 15, 1789. While yet a child he removed with his parents and their whole family to Delaware county, New York. He was converted to God and became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at the age of eighteen, or, as he would state the case, he was then reclaimed, for he insisted that he was first converted at ten years old. Being zealous in the service of God, and somewhat gifted in his public exercises, he was licensed to exhort, and afterward to preach as a local preacher. He soon became impressed with a conviction that God was calling him, by the Holy Ghost, to the work of the ministry, to which, however, he felt a strong repugnance, and would yield to it only under the strongest convictions. To block up his own way in that direction he married, thinking that he would not be accepted with a family, and also engaged successfully in business. But the voice of the Spirit still called after him until he became satisfied that it was his solemn and imperative duty to become an itinerant minister; and encouraged by his brethren, and urged to his duty by his faithful companion, he entered the New York Conference in 1815. He remained in the active work of the ministry fifty-four consecutive years, retiring only last spring. Of these years thirty-three were devoted to the regular pastoral work; during eighteen years he filled the office of presiding elder, and for three years he served as financial agent of the Wesleyan University.

His religious experience, when it became evident that death was near at hand, was eminently in character. In August last he made a visit to his relatives in Michigan, returning about a month before his decease. Soon after he found that his strength was failing, when, taking an opportunity, he said to his two daughters, "Be prepared for a change. The Lord may be about to take me. I think I am failing. I am not anxious either way. It will do no harm to be ready." He then gave directions respecting his funeral; named the pall-bearers (all laymen) and some of the ministers whom he wished to officiate, adding the solemn injunction, "Don't eulogize me, but glorify Christ." During his sickness his mind was very clear, and his faith never clouded. He exclaimed at one time, "I am saved—not shall be; I am saved now." When his sufferings were referred to he answered, "It is all right; this tabernacle must be dissolved." To his pastor, Rev. W. F. Watkins, who had asked after the state of his mind, he said, "It triumphs; God lives in me, and I in God, and soon I shall live with him. * * * So unworthy am I; but the blood, the atoning blood—that meets my case. I have done nothing. The Lord has used me."

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

The stated meeting of the Board of Managers was held at the Bible House, Astor Place, on Thursday, the 4th instant. The decease of Hon. Heman Lincoln, vice president, and of Dr. James L. Phelps, manager, was announced. Rev. Cyrus D. Foss read the thirty-ninth Psalm and offered prayer.

Twelve new auxiliaries were recognized, of which five were in Arkansas, three in Georgia, and in Minnesota, Kansas, North Carolina and Alabama, one each.

Communications were received from Mr. Andrew M. Milne, Monte Video, stating the progress of the work on his field; from Mr. W. D. Rector, Acapulco, with an account of the distribution of books confided to him; from Rev. Dr. Jacoby, with encouraging statements as to the Bible work in Germany; several from Rev. I. G. Bliss, Constantinople, in regard to the work in Oroomiah and other portions of Persia, and showing the demands for the Scriptures in those regions, and from Rev. Dr. Perkins on the same subject; from Rev. D. Rood, Amanzimtote, stating the progress of printing the Scriptures in the Zulu language; also from Rev. Nelson Reasoner, agent of Nevada and eastern California, giving an interesting account of the canvass and supply of the entire route of the Central Pacific Railroad, and of his visit to Salt Lake City and arrangements for distributing the Scriptures in Utah.

Grants of books were made to the Presbytorian Committee of Home Missions; to the Presbyterian Board of Publication; to the Southwestern Bible Society for supplying destitute regions in their field; and other grants, amounting in all to three thousand one hundred and thirty one volomes in various languages, including twelve volumes in raised letters for the blind. Besides these, others were granted to the value of $1,044 25. In funds, $2,500 were granted to the American and Foreign Christian Union for Bible work in Mexico

A memorial paper on the decease of the venerable Dr. Cock, one of the vice presidents of this society, was presented and adopted.

Mr. Andrew J Taylor was unanimously elected assistant treasurer of this society, in place of Mr. Henry Fisher, deceased

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

ROMOLA By George Eliot. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers, Franklin Square. 1869

This concludes the publication of George Eliot's novels by the Harpers. Romola is volume five of the series, and of equal merit with the other works heretofore noticed by us. For sale by George Ellis, opposite the post office, New Orleans

A WREATH OF RHYMES By Millie Mayfield. Philadelphia: J B Lippincott & Co. 1869. 12mo, pp 386.

The publishers have done their part toward putting this volume fairly and attractively before the public. It is a volume of lyrics, many of them beautiful. Quite a number of them are devotional. We find in the book a good deal of true poetry, and some mere rhyme, which swells the volume without contributing to its interest Millie Mayfield is well known to the press and reading public, and we have no doubt that "A Wreath of Rhymes" will meet with a cordial welcome from those with whom the writer has been a favorite for some time For sale by A. Eyrich, 130 Canal street, New Orleans.

ABSTRACTION OF THE MIND.—Numerous instances have occurred resulting from intense abstraction of the mind and employment in one pursuit. Of Dr. Robert Hamilton, the author of a celebrated "Essay on the National Debt," it is said that he pulled off his hat to his own wife in the street, and apologized for not having the pleasure of her acquaintance; that he went to his classes in the college in the dark mornings with one of her white stockings on one leg, one of his own black ones on the other; that he often spent the whole time of the meeting in moving from the table the hats of the students, which they as constantly returned. He would run against a cow in the road, turn around and beg her pardon, and hope she was not hurt. At other times he would run against posts, and chide them for not getting out of his way.

MARRIED.

At the residence of the bride's father, Mr. John O. Hunter, October 19, 1869, by Rev. E H. Mounger, Mr. T. F. HORTON and Mrs. SUE GRUNDS, all of Yazoo City, Mississippi.

At the residence of the bride's mother, in Yazoo county, Mississippi, by Rev. E. H. Mounger, October 19, 1869, Mr. A. T. BURDINE, of Lafayette county, to Miss SUSAN L. COOPER, youngest daughter of Rev. Preston Cooper, deceased.

At the residence of Rev. Harvey Meritt, by the Rev. P. A. Johnston, on the evening of the 26th of October, Mr. THOS. E. MARSHALL to Miss S. J. EUBANK, all of Carroll county, Mississippi.

By the same, at the residence of O. Osburn, Crystal Springs, Mississippi, Mr. J. G. SIKES to Miss EMMA BADGETT, all of Crystal Springs, Copiah county, Mississippi.

OBITUARIES.

Died, on the 13th of September, 1869, near Coffeeville, Clarke county, Alabama, Mrs. SARAH A. WILSON, wife of Dr. C. H. Wilson.

She was born in 1817, married Dr. Wilson in 1832, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1856. She lived nearly thirteen years in the church without any satisfactory assurance of her acceptance with God. Many times she was serious, and seemed to be seeking religion; then again she would become careless and indifferent. Thus she lived until about two weeks before her death. About that time a meeting was held in the neighborhood. Owing to precarious health she was not able to attend; but while others were seeking and worshiping God at the church, she was seeking God at home. On the last night of the meeting she found the pearl of great price, and then for the first time in her life she felt that she was ready to die. Little did she think the hour was so near at hand. On Friday she was taken violently ill, and on the next Monday she lay a corpse. When the final summons came she was willing to go.

WILLIAM A. SAMPHY.

Died, from hemorrhage of the lungs, near Lancaster, Texas, October 4, 1869 Rev. G. W. GILLESPIE, in the fifty-third year of his age.

He was licensed to preach by authority of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in Pickens county, Alabama, about the year 1844; traveled eleven years in the Alabama Conference in the employ of the presiding elder; moved to Noxuba county, Mississippi, in 1863; thence to Dallas county, Texas, in November, 1868. During the past summer he was extensively engaged in a series of revival and protracted meetings, preaching with great power and acceptability. His lungs, previously enfeebled from bronchitis, gave way, which led to a fatal termination. He was well sustained in his affliction and in life's last conflict by the Gospel that he had so long preached to others, and died in full hope of endless life in heaven. He was a brother of the late Rev. W. H Gillespie, of the Memphis Conference, and will doubtless be warmly remembered by many of the preachers and lay members of the Alabama Conference.

T. W. HINES, P. C.

LANCASTER, TEXAS, Oct. 25, 1869.

The following resolutions were passed by the Quarterly Conference of which he was a member, convened at Lancaster, Texas, October 22, 1869:

WHEREAS, It has pleased almighty God, in his providence, to take from our midst our beloved brother, G. W. Gillespie; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we deeply deplore our loss by his death, for in him we recognized an efficient colaborer in the ministry.

Resolved, That although he had but so recently come among us, he had made many warm friends by his consistent walk and godly conversation.

Resolved, That he showed himself to be a warm friend to the church by supporting benevolent institutions and watching over her general interests.

SISTER JENNIE W., wife of Rev. R. Parvin and daughter of Rev. J. G. and Elizabeth Ward, was born in Hartford, Kentucky, on the 25th of April, 1838. She was the subject of early religious impressions. She embraced religion and connected herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church South when but eight years old.

She graduated at the Female Academy at Clarksville, Tennessee, in 1855, after which she engaged in teaching, first in Tennessee and afterward in Arkansas. She possessed those qualities of mind and heart that eminently qualified her for an instructress of youth. She ever held a high place in the affections of her pupils. The Subbath school was her home when ever situated, and she was over an efficient and useful teacher. She possessed an ardent zeal for the promotion of Christianity. She was a faithful and useful laborer with penitents at the altar of prayer.

She was married to Rev. Robert Parvin, of the Ouachita Conference, on the 13th of October, 1867. In this new and difficult relation she had ample opportunity to test her matured Christian graces and virtues. She became an untiring and valuable colaborer in the vineyard of the Divine Master.

She became deeply impressed with the idea that her race would be short and that her approaching end was at hand, and made all the preparations for her burial. When, on the 1st of August, 1869, contrary to the expectations of friends, it became apparent that her dissolution was at hand, she met death with Christian firmness and fortitude. When dying, though suffering much pain, she was inexpressibly happy, and with great composure repeated the twenty-third Psalm, and the hymn commencing

"Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly."

Also the couplet,

"My Father's hand prepares the cup,
And what he wills is best."

And thus our beloved Sister Parvin has passed from the evil to come, and rests from her labor and cares in the bosom of the Father. May this be our happy lot.

A CARD.

DR. ROBERT HUNTER,

OF NEW YORK,

Editor of the "New York Specialist and Journal of Diseases of the Chest," and author of "Practical Letters on the Nature, Cause and Cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma and Catarrh, by Inhalation," has arrived in New Orleans and opened an office at No. 165 Canal street, for the treatment of affections of the Throat, Lungs and Heart.

Dr. Robert Hunter is the inventor of the Inhaling Instrument and Catarrh Syrup in general use by the profession.

The Inhalation Treatment of Throat and Lung diseases was introduced by him into this country, and for the past twenty years he has devoted himself exclusively to this branch of his profession.

As many persons have adopted his treatment, copied his letters, and in some instances unwarrantably used his name, he desires to state that this is his first professional visit to New Orleans since 1861.

The following extracts from leading New York papers will show the estimate in which his writings and practice are held in that city:

[From the N. Y. Herald.]

"No man we will venture to say, in the whole annals of the profession, has ever introduced a more important innovation on the old system of practice, or gained in a shorter time more converts to his opinions. But the most incontrovertible evidence of the efficacy of Dr. Hunter's system of practice is furnished by the City Inspector's reports. By these it is shown that since the introduction of inhalation the deaths from consumption have decreased upward of thirty per cent Now we know, from the great number of cases treated and cures effected by Dr. Robert Hunter, that his labors contributed, if not to effect all, at least the greater share of this benefit."

[From the N. Y. World.]

"It is a novelty to see a man of Dr. Hunter's learning and experience engaged in the great work of popular medical instruction. All the light that can possibly be thrown on the nature, causes and treatment of consumption—the scourge of our race—will we feel sure, be gratefully received by the public."

[From the Home Journal.]

"We have repeatedly stated that we regard Dr. Robert Hunter as a public benefactor, and we hope to see his common sense ideas prevail, not only to the extinguishment of consumption, but to the utter breaking down of all stupid deference to old ideas."

[From the N. Y. Express]

"The fact is now too well established for dispute that the inhalation of medicated vapors, as recommended and practiced by Dr. Robert Hunter, is the most simple, rational and successful treatment for diseases of the lungs yet reached."

Dr. Hunter can be consulted at No. 165 Canal street—office formerly occupied by Dr. Moss.

Hours from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M. no6 1m

"WHO WOULD SUFFER?"—IT is now twenty-two years since Dr. Tobias first introduced the "Venitian Liniment" in the United States, and never in a single instance has his medicine failed to do all, if not more than is stated in his pamphlet. As an external remedy in cases of Chronic Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Bruises, Burns, Cuts, Sores, Swellings, Sprains, Stings of Insects, and Pains in Limbs, Back and Chest, its wonderful curative powers are miraculous.—Taken internally for the cure of Cholera, Colic, Diarrhea, Dysentery, Sick Headache and Vomiting, its soothing and penetrating qualities are felt as soon as taken. The oath with which each bottle is accompanied will show that there is nothing injurious in its composition. Thousands of certificates have been received, speaking of the rare virtues of this valuable article. Any person after having used it once will never be without it. Every bottle of the genuine has the signature of "S. I. Tobias" on the outside wrapper. Sold by the druggists and storekeepers throughout the United States. Price, fifty cents. SOUTHERN METHODIST HIGH SCHOOL,

NEW ORLEANS.

The exercises of the first session of this Institution will commence on MONDAY, the 4th day of October next, in the basement of the German Methodist Church, Dryades street, between Felicity and Euterpe.

In founding this Institution our purpose is to supply the desideratum long felt in this city, viz: an acknowledged Protestant School of a high order, in which boys and young men can be thoroughly prepared either for college or the active business of life.

The government of the School will be strict and firm, yet mild and parental in its administration. Thoroughness in the preparation of lessons will be uniformly required of all pupils.

The sons of ministers engaged wholly in the work of their Church will be received at half price; and young men preparing for the ministry without charge.

A Preparatory Department and an Evening School are attached.

In the selection of Teachers the greatest care will be exercised, not only in regard to their mental qualifications, but also in reference to their ability to impart instruction to their pupils.

For further information apply at the School.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE DARK.

Where do the chickens run
When they are afraid?
Out of the light, out of the sun,
Into the dark, into the shade,
Under their mother's downy wing,
No longer afraid of anything.

Dear little girl, dear little boy,
Afraid of the dark,
Bid you good by to the daylight with joy,
Be glad of the night; for hark!
The darkness no danger at all can bring;
It is the shadow of God's wing.

Where do the little violets creep
In the time of snow?
Into the dark, to rest and sleep,
And to wait for the spring they go
Under the ground where no storm can reach,
And God takes tender care of each.

Are you afraid, little girl or boy,
Of the dark of death?
Jesus will carry you, full of joy,
To the world of light, He saith;
Under the ground, where the violets sleep,
Your little body the Lord will keep.

LETTER FROM CHINA.

The following letter was addressed to the children of the Felicity street Sunday school of this city, and will, we doubt not, prove interesting to all the young readers of the ADVOCATE.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, Aug. 13, 1869.

MY DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS: In my last I promised to give some further account of the duplicity and deceit of this heathen people. The old devotee of whom I told you in my last has passed away, and has gone to try the realities of an unseen world. About one week since his neighbors noticed that he seemed to be in great pain. The barber was called with his long needles, but in a few minutes he was dead. He died in the corner of the room on his bed of straw. He was thought to be too good to be placed in a coffin, so he was placed in a squatting condition in an earthen kong, and another kong of the same kind was placed over that and cemented. He was then taken out and buried with all the honors of one of their high priests. So you see these people have great respect for those who are sincere in their belief.

A few days since a man was brought to one of the hospitals with a little child, whom he had been exposing on the street, reporting that it had been badly cut by the pirates at sea, and he desired some money to help him. The foreign surgeon was sent for in great haste, while every one near by greatly sympathized with the little sufferer. When the doctor came he looked at the wound, and it appeared to him to be a severe gash, all covered with blood, with the flesh standing on each side. The man would scream, and seemed greatly distressed when the doctor attempted to touch the bindings, and made every effort to prevent anything of the sort. The doctor brought his chloroform to bear upon the man without his knowledge, and soon he was in a stupor. He was then laid upon his back, and an examination was commenced upon the arm of the child, when, to his great astonishment, the whole wound came off en masse. Upon further examination he found it was dough, made of flour, and pasted on the arm, shaped in the form of a severe cut, and then smeered with the blood of a hog. The doctor carried off the wound as a trophy, and left the scene in perfect disgust, the man being still under the influence of chloroform. I am convinced I have often seen just such cases in Shanghai, but have made no examination, as the sight was sufficient to drive one away.

A few days since I saw a woman in the city of Shanghai with her child exposed on the street with its face quite flushed with fever, and pits, as one would at first suppose to be smallpox, but upon examination it was found to be bits of rice charred and stuck upon the face of the child. I have seen this for several winters, and seemingly the same woman and the same child. This is done to arouse the sympathy of those passing in their behalf, and many, being deceived by it, give bountifully of their money for their relief.

I will now give you an account of a grand procession which has just passed my door, of thousands of Chinese having all the hideous noise that could possibly be brought together. The occasion of this is to feed and make provision for the wants of all the ghosts of persons who have died, but to whom proper burial was not given. For this purpose large masses of paper money, or representation of money, is burned, especially at all cross-roads and bridges where these ghosts are supposed to congregate. At the head of this procession were three magnificent silk flags of several colors. There were large silk umbrellas carried by a number of men, and small boats, beautifully ornamented, carried by six and eight men, with young women seated aloft in rich attire, as if perched in the air without any visible support. A number of ladders were carried along, strung with lanterns and beautifully illuminating the street. The hideous noise which attended this procession awakened us from sleep at one o'clock in the morning. Many boats were arrayed in richly embroidered flags and numerous lanterns, running to and fro on the river in search of ghosts and spirits of the dead who had been drowned in the river. In the rear of this procession was a hideous image of paper, who was supposed to be the god of ghosts, who is said to have supreme control over all the wandering ghosts of the dead, and for eleven months of the year he is said to keep them locked up On the seventh month he is said to set them free for a while, that they may return from whence they came, and beg a supply of food and money to last them during their confinement for eleven months. In order that they may have abundance of the necessaries of life, paper sycee or money is burned in great abundance. Imitations of garments are also burned for their benefit, and tables are spread out and filled with all the best of food, of which these ghosts are supposed to partake. Sometimes $40,000, $50,000 and $100,000 are used in getting up one of these processions.

My dear young friends, you no doubt will say: "What ignorant and degraded people live in China;" but you must remember these people have not the Bible, and they have no knowledge of the revealed will of God and of his great love in sending Jesus to be their Saviour. Then, I beg of you, prize your Bible above all other books, and praise God that you live in a Christian land, and that you have Christian parents and teachers. I will write you again soon. Remember the missionaries among the heathen in every land, and pray for them, that God may abundantly bless them and the work in which they are engaged.

J. W. LAMBUTH.

P. S.—I send you by this mail the photograph of the old man who was so devoted to his idol god, and who is now dead. Also some paintings on rice paper, and a mulberry leaf for your missionary cabinet. I send also some Chinese books, such as are used in the schools in China. Some I send are Christian books, and some are purely Chinese, as taught in the native schools. I will, from time to time, send you other curiosities for your cabinet. I have the money which you sent for my school and for Brother Allen's school, and as Mrs. Lambuth's school is the only one we have now in operation, we have concluded to devote it to the support of her school. I am anxious to have an orphan school in the interior at one of our stations, and will when I can get funds sufficient. I have received from Brother Montgomery, of the Mississippi Conference, $8 in Mexican gold for that purpose. That is a beginning. We must have schools for the young, if China is to be converted.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Improvement in the Construction of a Sweet Potato House.

As you invite communications I have concluded to tell what I have done in the way of an improvement in the construction of a sweet potato house. I have been a successful potato grower for thirty years, and could always put them up in the old fashioned way and keep them—that is, bank them and shelter them to keep off freezes, but frequently the banks were robbed by night walkers, and since we have had such an innumerable host of new-made citizens, this habit becoming more general, set me to thinking if it was possible so to construct a house as to keep them under lock and key every night at least. This is my plan: Build a house in every particular as you would a framed dwelling, except the chimney only, out of four inch square scantling (mine is eighteen feet long, nine wide and seven feet from the floor to the ceiling) It can be built of any dimensions, but a capacity of five hundred bushels I think best. After laying down the floor lay across this another of four inch scantling sleepers; then level it with saw dust or any non-conductor; then on these sleepers and saw dust lay another floor, and in like manner fill in with saw dust between the weatherboarding and ceiling, also between overhead ceiling and upper floor. All this will prevent freezing, but in all this there is nothing yet new. Everybody who has had an experience in keeping sweet potatoes knows that as soon as they are put in bulk they will go through what farmers call a "sweat," and without some way for this sweat or vapor to escape rot is inevitable; hence so many failures in building potato houses with logs and daubing closely with mud. To obviate this difficulty I let in horizontal tubes every three feet, on both sides of the house, about one inch in diameter, made of strips of weatherboarding, and have them extend inside the house one-fourth its width (of the house,) and rest on the floor; hence, after putting up the frame the floor is the first thing I finish, then these tubes; then the weatherboarding and ceiling can be fitted over them. These tubes are to furnish a fresh current of air which will diffuse itself through the whole house, and drive off the steam and vapor as fast as it is raised by the sweat of the potato. Then, for it to escape, I place four upright tubes made of six inch weatherboarding, equidistant through the centre of the house, which rest on the floor and extend up through the overhead ceiling and upper floor about (any distance between the upper floor and roof) six inches, and then, with a two inch auger, perforate every side of these upright tubes, with as many holes as could be made well—say one dozen on each side. These upright tubes then act upon the same principle that a pipe does to a stove, carrying off all the steam and vapor arising from the sweating of the potatoes. To this house I have two shutters to the door, door in the end, two and a half by six feet; one inside, to which I put a good stock lock, the other outside. These should be made of well seasoned timber, and very tight to exclude the cold, but thrown open every day for three or four weeks after housing the potatoes, unless it is cold enough to freeze; and in very cold freezing weather the outside ends of the small horizontal tubes should be stopped with old rags or cotton.

After this plan I built a house in the fall of 1866; kept that and the two succeeding crops, and they were nice and sound, like corn in a dry crib, until May or June, and will be so, unless the potato is affected in some way when put there. Any one can see that a fresh current of air, coming in all around at the bottom of the potatoes, has a tendency to drive off that which is rarified, and through the upright tubes it escapes, and by this means preserves an equilibrium in temperature, which is the great desideratum in preserving the potato.

I put my house upon pillars eighteen inches high. The timber should be dressed, and the house painted, and by this means made an ornament about any homestead.—Correspondent of Southern Cultivator.

TAKE TIME.—Pastors, take time Be patient with your people. Teach them. Teach them continuously. Scolding, as a rule, is damaging. Do not stone the sheep Feed them. Do not rebuke much, but instruct. You cannot set a whole church to work in a minute, nor in a year. If you do it in five years you do well; keep working in that direction. Ply the truth to them vigorously. Stir them up on all sides. Study adaptation; that is, set each man at what he is adapted to do. Even a strong man, out of his adaptation, is weak.

A LATE fire in New Hampshire has caused a neighboring row of apple trees to bud and blossom.

SCIENTIFIC.

A NEW CHURN.—Paris has a new invention. It is a portable fresh butter churn, to be used at table each meal. It is made of crystal, and mounted on silver feet. A silver rod revolves quickly in the cream, and presents a pat of butter every three minutes.

TRANSPORTATION OF ARTIFICIALLY MADE ICE.—M. Toselli states that a solid block of ice, weighing twenty-three kilometres, and made in eighteen minutes by a process invented by him, has been sent from Paris to Algeria, and received there without more than a very trifling loss by melting during this long journey in hot summer weather.

SOME EFFECTS OF COMBUSTION.—It is asserted that one hour after the gas of London is lighted the air is deoxidized as much as if five hundred thousand people had been added to its population. During the combustion of oil, tallow, gas, etc., water is produced as well as carbonic acid; in cold weather we see it condensed on the windows. By the burning of gas twenty four hours in London more water is produced than would supply a ship laden with emigrants on a voyage from England to Australia.

NEW PROCESS OF GAS MANUFACTURE. A new gas-making machine has been patented in England, which, if it fulfills expectations, is likely to be attended with important results The new machine, which is portable in the smaller sizes, may be made of any size, and is adapted for use in houses, shops, churches, theatres or other public buildings, or ships. The gas is manufactured instantaneously, without the application of heat, by a self-acting machine, and consists simply of an admixture of atmospheric air with the vapor from mineral oil. The air is admitted into the machine while the gas is in process of consumption, and is regulated in accordance with the demands upon the machine. The cost of the gas thus produced cannot, at this early stage of the invention, be quite accurately stated, but a computation has been made that a gallon of rock oil, costing 2s. 6d., will make a thousand cubic feet of gas of fourteen to fifteen candle illuminating power.

ESTIMATION OF THE GOODNESS OF SOAP.—Prof. Shulze, of Rostock, starting from the view that the better the soap the less thereof will be required for the entire unhardening of water, employs the reverse of Clark's process, in the following manner: He applies a solution of lime in water containing excess of carbonic acid, so that a litre of water contains exactly 1 6 grm. of lime. Of this fluid he takes 3 c. c. (containing, accordingly, 4.8 milligrms. of lime,) and adds 20 c. c. of water, and a small quantity of soda solution; he further supplies an aqueous solution of 5 grms. of soft soap in 100 c. c., or of the same quantity of solid soap in 200 c. c. of water, and adds of these solutions from a burette in the aforesaid lime solution until a lather is fully and completely formed. The smaller the quantity of soap solution required for this purpose the better, of course, the soap is; and it is easy to calculate how much of the soap solution has been required for one part by weight of lime; a perfectly pure soap, however, will be required for comparison's sake.

KEEP ON PRAYING.—"Do you think," I asked, "that the Lord will let me see, in this life, the salvation of the souls for whom I pray?"

"I cannot say as to that. When I was a child in the Sabbath school in the old country," she continued, "my faithful teacher used to say, 'I have prayed too much for my class for one of them to be lost.' I was a thoughtless girl at the time, and remember wondering at it, and thinking it a very self-confident remark. She was so sure. 'I shall have them all,' she would say. 'I shall say to Christ at the judgment, Here am I, and the class thou hast given me.'"

"And were they all converted?" I asked.

"Yes; she did not live to see it, but my eyes have seen it—the last of the sixteen gathered into the fold."—Witnessing for Jesus.

FENELON.—Lord Peterborough, when on a visit to Fenelon at Cambray, was so charmed with the virtue and talent of the Archbishop that he exclaimed at parting: "If I stay here much longer I shall become a Christian in spite of myself."

THE violet grows low and covers itself with its own tears, and of all the flowers yields the sweetest fragrance. Such is humility.

THE BEST COOKING STOVE
FOR WOOD NOW IN USE.

THE FASHION.

We call especial attention to this Stove, which has been produced at great expense, combining all the new and important improvements; also to the extra height of the Oven under the fire chamber, the Patent Air Chamber Front Doors, and Patent White Enameled Iron Knobs, the improvements in the covers and centre pieces, all of which have been covered by Letters Patent, and are used in no other Stove. They are warranted to stand fire, or others sent free of charge in all cases. We have all sizes of this justly celebrated Stove, both

PLAIN AND EXTENDED BACKS,

the Extended Back with cast Iron Enameled Reservoir and Faucet, Tin Warming Closet, Gridiron Cover, etc. The part of the top supporting the Reservoir is raised so that the fire is above the top plate, instead of below, as is the case in most of the Stoves now used, and the heat is forced directly against the whole surface of the bottom of the Reservoir. The Reservoir being detached from the pipe, can be removed at pleasure, thereby forming a six-hole Stove—the best in use, as the back holes will heat as well or better than the middle ones. WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE, Staunton, Virginia.

The College of the Baltimore Conference, M E Church South.

Rev William A. Harris, President, with thirteen professors, teachers, etc.

Will begin its next session SEPTEMBER 20, 1869, and close June 30, 1870.

Than this no College for young ladies in the South ranks higher. It is attended by pupils from various Southern States. System of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Society is refined, scenery beautiful and health unsurpassed. A marked feature in this institution is the rapid promotion of the physical health and vigor of its pupils. Young ladies who come here from the South, with feeble constitutions, are entirely restored to health.

Charges for the scholastic year:
Board and tuition in the Collegiate Course. $225
Music and other extra studies, moderate.

Refer to Bishops Pierce, Wightman, Early, Doggett McTyeire, Dr. Thomas O. Summers, Dr. L. Pierce, Hon. B. H. Hill, Hon. Alex. H. Stevens, Georgia, Hon. J. S. Thompson, Mississippi, Mrs. General John E. Floyd, Faculty of University of Virginia, R. M. College.

Young ladies from the South received at any time during the summer months.

BRAN NEW LETTERS!

FRESH TESTIMONIALS.

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

THE ASTONISHING FAMILY MEDICINE.

Saved from Death!—Read!

MONTGOMERY, ALA., June 28, 1869.

MESSRS. J DARBY & Co., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: Yours of the 23d is before me, and has attention. It gives me pleasure to say that my belief is that your "Fluid," under the supervision of a kind Providence, saved the life of my youngest child, some six years ago, the child being wasted to a skeleton by the effects of teething, and an affection of the bowels therewith. I had never seen any one reduced so low to recover.

"Physic" had been tried in vain, until the physicians stated it was useless. A friend recommended your "Fluid," or Ozone, which he stated was one of the component parts of it. I did so, and the effect was like magic, plainly discernible in one hour in its good effects, producing quiet and sleep almost at once, where irritation and sleepless restlessness had previously possessed the child to nearly entire exhaustion.

I at first administered it in a small way, two and three drops in a spoonful of water, and increased it to six and ten drops. It completely checked the bowels, and had the happiest effect, the child rapidly recovering.

"I have tried your "Fluid" on animals, with the same effect—both horses and cows—mingling more or less in water, and letting them drink.

I have no hesitation in saying I believe it a specific for Chronic Diarrhea, or any violent affection of the bowels.

I would not be without it in my family under any consideration. Yours truly,

WILLIAM FOWLER.

Mr. Fowler is a member of the celebrated Banking House of Fowler & Somerville, Montgomery, Alabama.

AND AGAIN!

Read the following letter from Mr. Frank Saunders, a well known citizen, and brother-in-law of the beloved Bishop Paine, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

189 BROADWAY, N. Y., July 29, 1869.

MESSRS. J DARBY & Co., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: About the 10th of June last one of my children was taken with Scarlet Fever, in its most malignant form, and as soon as I could I procured your valuable disinfectant, "Darby's Prophylactic Fluid." Although it was several days after the appearance of the disease before I began using the Fluid, still, by a free use of it, the disease was not only confined to the one case, but the malignity of that case somewhat mitigated.

During the use of the Fluid as a disinfectant in my family it was also tried in a case of headache, and one of toothache, the results in each case being instantaneous relief. It was afterward tried in a case of Erysipelas, with almost equal success.

It is due to the merits of this compound, also, to state that the case of Erysipelas in question, being located in the feet, the Fluid, in its application, was brought in frequent contact with a troublesome corn on one of the feet, to the utter discomfiture of said corn, for, upon subsequent examination, it had disappeared, and though it was sought for diligently, it could not be found.

I hand you this, hoping it may be the means of inducing others of earth's poor sufferers to test for themselves, as I did, the great merits of this great remedy.

Very respectfully yours,

FRANK SAUNDERS.

Never was a medicine so universally esteemed and extolled. It never fails. It may be depended on.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has continued quiet since our last issue, with but little activity in any branch of the wholesale trade. The receipts of sugar and molasses have met a pretty ready sale at easier rates for the former, and a further decline in the latter. Louisiana rice has been in fair request, at about previous prices. The movement in Western produce has been of limited extent. Some few small lots of flour have been taken for shipment, and we hear of further freight engagements of wheat for Liverpool at 12d.

Nothing of any special interest has transpired with regard to the cotton crop, but the accounts from the country reiterate previous complaints of the irregularity and inefficiency of the negro laborers. From all points we hear that the whites have worked manfully, and, in many instances, on small plantations, their industry has been abundantly rewarded. With regard to sugar we hear reiterated complaints of the poverty of the cane, which has manifestly suffered from a late season and insufficient culture, owing to excessive rains at the commencement of the season and inefficient labor. Some parties estimate that the crop will not exceed 80,000 hogsheads.

The river is eleven feet eight inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 12th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales.. 11697
Arkansas	484
Lake	96
Mobile	1270
Florida	11
Texas	215
Total	13973

On Saturday the movement commenced with only a moderate supply, while factors raised their pretensions ⅛ to ¼c., and some few sales were made at ⅛c. advance, but as buyers refused to go on at any fuller prices, the former found themselves compelled to meet the demand more freely, and the business for the rest of the day was at about Friday's figures, with the advantage, however, in favor of the seller. The sales embrace 3,150 bales. On Monday the demand was more lively, and prices were stiffer, especially during the morning, and while it was difficult to find either good ordinary or low middling at the inside figure of the previous day, middling showed an actual advance of ⅛c. The business was on a more liberal scale, summing up 4,250 bales. On Tuesday the market opened with a good inquiry, and although the movement was checked by moderate supplies and a heavy storm of wind and rain, yet the business summed up 4,600 bales, at prices showing an irregular advance of ⅛ to ¼c.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 12,000 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 219,690 bales, against 215,052 bales in the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 150,580 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 68,713 bales to Great Britain, 11,196 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 4,886 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	22½ to 22¾
Good ordinary	23 to 23½
Low middling	23½ to 23¾
Middling	23¾ to 24
Strict middling	— to 24¼

READVILLE SEMINARY.
This is a private institution, with its number of pupils limited, and is authorized by the Legislature of Louisiana to confer degrees, diplomas and literary honors. It was in successful operation from 1843 until interrupted by the events of the war in 1862, and reopened January, 1867.
Teachers of a high grade of talent and merit are in charge of the different departments—English, Ancient and Modern Languages, Music, Painting, etc.
Pupils charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session. All pupils received with the understanding that they are to remain and attend the examination at the close of the session in which they enter, and no deduction made on the bills for absence, except in cases of protracted illness, when the loss may be divided between the institution and the patron.
In her outfit each pupil should be provided with toilet boxes, towels, napkins, sheets, pillow cases and blankets or comforts. She should also bring knife, fork, spoon, cup and napkin ring.
All articles and clothing brought to the Seminary should be distinctly marked, lists of which should be permanently placed on some part of the trunk convenient for reference. The scholastic year commences October 1 and ends in July.
EXPENSE.
Board and tuition per year $275 00
The Modern Languages a small extra charge.
Music, per year 75 00
Payments due a half session in advance.
Monthly reports of the studies, health and general deportment of the pupils are sent to the parents or guardians at a distance.
The main Seminary building, recently destroyed by fire, will be replaced by one of ample accommodations, now in process of construction, which will be ready for the reception of pupils at the opening of the next session.
For other information desirable in reference to the school apply to MRS. MARY W READ,
jy24 1y Principal, Baton Rouge, La.

SEMINARY FOR YOUNG LADIES,
LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.
E. A. GRANT, LL. D., PRINCIPAL.
This institution occupies the large and elegant building lately known as Grant & Butler's School. The grounds are situated on Sixth street, between Walnut and Chestnut streets, and extend back to Centre street. They are elevated several feet above the street, thus making the large and beautiful lawn a most desirable place for healthful outdoor exercise.
The building, furniture and apparatus of the school are among the most complete and valuable in the West.
Experienced teachers, residing in the institution, will devote their time to the moral, intellectual and physical improvement of the pupils.
For particulars address the Principal.

"THE TIMES,"
THE IMPROVED LARGE OVEN
COOKING STOVE,
with extended Fire Chamber and Feeder Top—one of the best Baking and most economical Stoves made.
The Flues are constructed so as to insure the most perfect draft. The heat of the Oven is so equal that when baking there is no need for removing anything until done.
"The Times"
is made of a superior quality of Iron, very heavy, of neat design, and fine finish. The Top Plate is put together in sections, to permit of the greatest expansion without cracking.
We invite the attention of Housekeepers to the advantages of this Stove. Remember, we guarantee them to give entire satisfaction. Duplicate parts can be had at all times, at small cost, by which repairs can be made which will frequently save the price of a new Stove.

ORGAN OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH FOR THE MOBILE, MONTGOMERY, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES

VOL. XV. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1869. NO. 45.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Washington, Nov. 22.—Secretary Boutwell has returned.

General Sherman and other officers have returned from the Louisville reunion. The affair is represented as having been quite tame.

General Q. A. Gilmore has been ordered to Charleston, to take charge of the coast engineering of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida.

Major Ruse will relieve Major Damrell at Mobile.

In responding to the remarks of the Haytien minister (colored) President Grant said: General—If any proof were wanting of the unfounded character of the prejudice which until recently prevailed, at least in parts of this country, against the race from which you are sprung, it might be found in the high tone and polished style of the remarks which you have just uttered. That, however, like all similar prejudices, no matter how deeply implanted, must sooner or later yield to the force of truth. The throes by which the new birth here was accompanied were indeed agonizing, and their effects are now scarcely over. Prudent statesmen, however, have neglected no fit opportunity for sanctioning and securing by law these privileges for your kinsmen which have been the inevitable and natural result of our great civil convulsion. Among them is their right to employment abroad as well as at home on the public service, a right which, as you say, has been acknowledged by the appointment of one of the formerly proscribed race to represent the United States in Hayti.

I congratulate myself for this occasion to render homage to the change in public sentiment, adverted to, by receiving you, as I cordially do, as the first envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary from that Republic.

The Comptroller of the Currency has received returns from one thousand six hundred and eighteen national banks to the 9th of October, showing their aggregate resources to be $1,500,000,000, including discounts $700,000,000, specie $23,000,000, legal tender notes $84,000,000, three per cent. certificates $46,000,000.

Among the liabilities are $86,000,000 surplus funds, $41,000,000 undivided profits, $293,000 circulating notes, $500,000,000 individual deposits.

Among resources to secure circulation and depositors are $450,000,000 Federal bonds.

There were no opinions delivered in the Supreme Court to-day.—Among the cases argued was James Hickman, plaintiff in error, vs. Betts and others.

Hickman, a citizen of Alabama, sued the officers of the court and grand jury of his county for arrest and imprisonment for treason against the Confederate States. The verdict below was for defendants, and from this an appeal is taken.

New York, Nov. 22.—The Herald's news summary says cholera, yellow fever and smallpox are raging fearfully at Santiago de Cuba, three hundred deaths having occurred from cholera alone within the period of thirty days.

It was found impossible to give the dead proper sepulture, the bodies being covered only with a few inches of earth. The stench from the cemetery has almost become a pestilence.

The Cubans in the interior profess to be confident of success, and are giving the Spanish troops much trouble.

Montgomery, Nov. 22.—Ex-Governor and ex-Senator Benjamin Fitzpatrick died at his residence in Elmore county, about eighteen miles from this city, yesterday. The Legislature adjourned until Wednesday in respect to his memory. The funeral will take place in this city to-morrow. Business will be suspended, and the flags on the capitol put at half mast. His death is greatly deplored. He was aged about seventy years.

The entries for the State fair are already larger than was anticipated. A great many visitors have arrived. The fair begins to-morrow and will continue for five days.

Augusta, Nov. 22.—The State fair at Macon still continues. The number, variety and character of articles exhibited exceed the expectations of the most sanguine. The Northern and Western men in attendance pronounce the exhibition magnificent, and express astonishment at the resources and mechanical ingenuity of the South, and Georgia in particular.

Washington, Nov. 23.—The Spanish minister makes no objections to legal proceedings regarding the Spanish gunboats. It is a mere question between the government and the contractors, a solution of which is desired by the Spanish authorities.

President Grant will urge an early movement for the ship canal over the Isthmus of Darien.

A. Henderson, with others, of Cincinnati, have been indicted for tobacco frauds.

The President proclaims that after date there will be a discontinuance of the discriminating duties heretofore levied upon merchandise imported into the United States in French vessels, either from the countries of its origin or from other countries.

One of the charges of the district attorney against the Spanish gunboats is that the vessels are intended for hostilities against the people of Cuba, with whom the United States are at peace.

The Supreme Court of Missouri unanimously legalizes the action of the Presbyterian General Assembly in 1866, and affirms its orders dissolving several synods and presbyteries adhering to the declaration and the testimony of the party. The effect of this decision in Missouri gives the church property to the adherents of the General Assembly in the divided congregations.

The Secretary of the Navy has instructed Commodore Poor, commanding West India squadron, to send a vessel to Nassau to bring such of the crew and passengers of the Lilian to Key West as will obligate themselves not to violate the neutrality laws.

New York, Nov. 23.—A large and enthusiastic meeting of merchants and brokers was held this afternoon at the banking house of Jno. Bloodgood & Co., at which a permanent organization was effected to carry out the movement to raise the Peabody monument fund. The monument will be erected in the Central Park.

Richmond, Nov. 23.—Arrangements were closed yesterday in New York with several prominent capitalists, by which the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad will be completed at once. Among the capitalists are W. H. Aspinwall, A. A. Low, H. Huntington, Fisk & Hatch, and others.

Montgomery, Ala., Nov. 23.—The city bells were tolled to-day during the funeral services of Governor Fitzpatrick. His body lay in state for two hours at the capitol. The funeral services were conducted by the Episcopal Church. A large procession followed his remains to the cemetery.

There is an immense crowd in the city to attend the State fair, but owing to the heavy rain a great many were deterred from going to the grounds.

The indications are fair that there will be several thousand visitors to-morrow. The entries are numerous from many States.

Washington, Nov. 24.—Cuban affairs are approaching a crisis. The Island of Porto Rico is perfectly tranquil, and the prospects for good crops are brilliant.

New York, Nov. 24.—Advices from Liverpool report the sale of a cargo of cotton, per ship named, from New Orleans, at 11¼d.

Over four thousand ladies in Baltimore and vicinity have signed a memorial to Congress for the recognition of the Cubans.

The President said yesterday he had not written a line of his message.

It is regarded as a certainty here that the Spanish gunboats will be released.

The libeling affidavit against the Spanish gunboats was made by Alfaro, of the Cuban Junta.

It sets forth the character of the gunboats—that their armament and munitions had already been conveyed to Havana; that the officers and crews for them were present in the harbor; that their purposes were not only to make war on an established government in Cuba, with which the United States is at peace, but also to relieve the Spanish squadron and allow it to resume hostilities against Peru.

The affidavit was placed in the hands of the district attorney, and the libel was ordered to be issued.

Memphis, Nov. 24.—A terrible affray occurred near Tiptonville, Tennessee. On Saturday night a party of disguised men went to the house of a planter named Willis Jones, for the purpose of disarming the negroes working on his plantation. Jones having had an intimation of their coming, had prepared to defend the negroes, and accordingly when the raiders came, they were met with a discharge from firearms, and fled, leaving Bob Dickinson dead, and Ben Bickham and young Hicks mortally wounded.

The most intense excitement prevailed in the neighborhood on Sunday. Jones was arrested, but at the urgent solicitations of his friends went to the river with the deputy sheriff, and took a boat for this place.

Six negroes who were concerned in the affray were also arrested and started for Troy, but on the road the sheriff's posse were overpowered by the friends of the maskers, and five of the negroes were shot down, the sheriff saving one by hard begging.

The excitement still rages there. All the parties are Southern.

Texas.—Reynolds decides that Confederate volunteers who had held no civil office are entitled to registration.

General Shields has withdrawn from the congressional canvass of the Houston district, leaving the field to Colonel Eliot, Conservative, against Clarke, Radical.

On the night of the 17th instant a division of the Sons of Temperance was organized in Houston.

The Calvert Enterprise says the following named parties, charged with being implicated in the Maxwell tragedy, were released from durance by order from military headquarters: H. Halligan, Philip Stonewitz and William Anderson.

FOREIGN.

Suez, Nov. 21, via Alexandria Nov. 22.—The inauguration fleet arrived here to-day; none of them were obliged to employ pilots. The only difficulty experienced was in consequence of the numbers; some were crowded upon the banks, but got off without much trouble, the sandy bottom neither holding nor hurting them.

Leaving Ismailia, several steamers fouled with each other, but doing no serious damage.

The water in the canal between this point and Ismailia is twenty feet at the shallowest points. These points can be easily deepened.

Steamers drawing fifteen feet can navigate the canal from Port Said to Suez with ease in fifteen hours.

The water does not wash away the banks as much as was apprehended.

The complete success of this great work exceeds all expectations. The canal is now clear of the shipping, the entire fleet having anchored in the harbor of Suez.

On Tuesday the fleet will start on their return.

The Empress Eugenie will return through the canal with the fleet, her yacht Aigle taking the lead.

Paris, Nov. 22.—The Emperor attended the Theatre Francais. The elections continue to-day. No disturbances.

Henri Rochefort and other Radicals are elected to the Corps Legislatif from three districts—the fourth undecided. City is tranquil.

There was a violent earthquake at Manilla; eight persons were killed and many injured, and a great destruction of property.

Paris, Nov. 22, midnight.—City remains perfectly tranquil. During the evening many people were on the boulevards and streets, but the heavy rain falling prevented a gathering. Some cries of "Viva De Rochefort" were raised, but, with this exception, no manifestation made. Few police seen in the streets, and whatever precautions the government has taken against disorder, they were nowhere apparent.

The emperor has decided to remain in Paris for the present.

The Bishop of Orleans reprimanded the editor of the ultramontane organ here, for an article in favor of the infallibility of the Pope.

Liverpool, Nov. 23.—There have been many failures of Liverpool grain dealers, including several firms with extensive American connections.

The ship Spendthrift, from Shanghai, with tea, was wrecked forty miles from a home port.

Paris, Nov. 23.—Ministers Bourbeau and Leroux are re-elected to the Corps Legislatif.

Some one hundred and fifty Bishops have arrived here; many of them are from America.

London, Nov. 23.—A communication from Dr. Livingstone, dated Ujeje, May 30, 1869, states that he is in good health and treated well everywhere.

Madrid, Nov. 23.—The Bishop of Havana was brought here to-day under guard.

Paris, Nov. 23.—Rochefort is elected from the first, Ceremeux from the third and Arago from the eighth. No candidate having a majority in the fourth, a new election will be held. The city is tranquil.

The meeting of the Italian ministry last night resulted in the dissolution of that body; all resigned.

The Suez Canal is not regarded as a complete success at London. Improvements will have to be made before the canal answers the full requirements of commerce.

Burlingame with his mandarins are at Berlin. The resignation of Consul General Plumb has been accepted. Consul Hull, at Matanzas, takes charge of the consulate.

London, Nov. 23.—The Times, on the political situation in France, says: "The lately raised reformation under Olivier has vanished. The emperor has resolved to retain his present advisers until the meeting of the Chambers, when new men may be required to initiate new relations. It is a matter of little consequence whether the new minister follows or precedes the opening, or whether he is the choice of the emperor, or suggested by the tone of the legislative bodies, the Legislature will, if true to itself, always have the last word."

The Sultan protests against the act of the Viceroy of Egypt in proclaiming the neutrality of the Suez Canal as a trespass on his sovereignty.

Madrid, Nov. 23.—In compliance with the Cortes call for information, the government was compelled to submit documents implicating the Spanish Republicans with the Cuban insurrection.

The government has resolved to adopt vigorous measures against certain Bishops who left for Rome without passports.

Madrid, Nov. 23.—Advices from Manilla report a series of violent earthquakes in Phillipine Islands, accompanied with loss of life and widespread destruction. At Manilla eight persons were killed and many injured.

Paris, Nov. 24.—The Paris Journal Official received the following dispatches:

Port Said, Nov. 24.—The imperial yacht Aigle, with the Empress on board, and the entire fleet, left Suez yesterday; will reach the Mediterranean to-day. The success of the inauguration was complete.

The Emperor of Austria will leave Cairo Thursday on his return to Europe.

Paris, Nov. 24.—Private advices from Italy contradict the report that Italy favors the Duke of Genoa for the Spanish throne. Dispatches from General Prim, however, reassert that Victor Emanuel favors the candidacy. One hundred and sixty-five deputies have been pledged to the Duke of Genoa.

Within the past three weeks twenty-four thousand troops have sailed from Spanish ports to Cuba.

Alexandria, Nov. 24.—The Empress Eugenie has arrived here.

Southern Representation in Congress.—The Lower House of the Tennessee Legislature has, by a voto of fifty-seven nays to twelve ayes, nearly five to one, refused to ratify the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution.

This is not because the Legislature proposes to limit the right of suffrage already made universal in that State, just as is proposed in the amendment. It is in the nature of an assertion of the right of a State to decide this domestic question for itself, and a refusal to empower the Federal government to impose it on others who do not desire it. The meaning of the Tennessee vote is that that State may be content with negro suffrage for herself, but will not aid in forcing it upon others. This restores the question to the attitude in which the Republican party placed it, in their platform, at Chicago, in which it was declared that the determination of this question "properly" belongs to the several States; and it shames the profligate tergiversations, with which, having obtained power on that pledge, they immediately propose a means for taking the subject out of the control of the States, and vesting it absolutely in the Federal government. This reassertion by Tennessee, in 1869, of the political position unanimously affirmed in 1868, by the Republican party in convention, is now pronounced by the same party to be proofs of disloyalty.—Picayune.

VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

SEVENTY-FIFTH ANNUAL SESSION.

We clip from the Richmond Dispatch the following items of the Virginia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

UNION WITH THE M. P. CHURCH.

Rev. W. A. Crocker, a representative of the Methodist Protestant Conference of Virginia, lately in session at Lynchburg, was introduced to the Conference by Bishop Doggett, who bespoke for him an attentive hearing. Mr. Crocker then made a brief address, giving a brief account of the condition of the branch of the church which he represented in Virginia, and detailed the reasons which induced them to believe that the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom may be promoted by a reunion of that body with the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He then read the resolution looking toward a reunion adopted by the Methodist Protestant Conference, with some remarks assuring the Bishop and members of Conference of the unanimity with which the step had been taken, and expressing the hope that the Conferences would be speedily united.

The Bishop said he rejoiced in this communication, and urged the Conference to give it careful consideration; for although it might prolong the session, there was reason to believe that the interests of Methodism and of the cause of Christ would be thereby promoted.

Rev. Dr. Lee expressed his gratification at the proposed union in a few remarks.

Rev. Robert O. Burton moved that a committee of three be appointed to prepare resolutions expressive of the sense of the Conference on the subject. Agreed to; and the following committee was appointed by the Bishop: J. D. Blackwell, G. W. Langhorne and R. N. Sledd.

CONFERENCE STATISTICS.

Rev. P. A. Peterson read a statistical report, embracing answers to the sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth questions of the Discipline, and also statistics in relation to church property.

This report shows the following totals: Local preachers, 153; increase, 6. Members, 39,611; increase, 2,754. Adult baptisms, 2,331; increase, 1,030. Infant baptisms, 1,110; increase, 213. Number of churches, 551; increase, 91. Value of churches, $805,865; increase in value, $26,030. Number of parsonages, 35; increase, 7. Value of parsonages, $65,700; increase in value, $4,000. Number of schools, 494; increase, 59. Officers and teachers, 5,024; increase, 863. Scholars, 26,933; increase, 4,111. Volumes in Sunday school libraries, 53,695; increase, 11,550. Every item exhibits a large and gratifying increase. * * * * *

THE COLORED PEOPLE.

Rev. R. N. Sledd presented a report from the Committee on the Religious Interests of the Colored People. The report was discussed at length by Rev. Drs. Lee, Rowzie, Smith, Bennett, Edwards and Rev. Messrs. A. G. Brown and Robert O. Burton, and was then adopted.

* * * * *

FINANCE.

The report of the finance committee was submitted by Rev. A. G. Brown, chairman. The report shows that of $4,850 assessed for superannuated preachers, widows and orphans, $4,018 42 was raised. This sum was applied as follows: To superannuated preachers, $860, and to widows and orphans, $3,050. The amount assessed for the support of the ministry for the year 1869 was $97,341 92, and the amount collected for this object was $78,444 08; leaving a deficiency of $18,897 84, or nineteen and a half per cent.

The amount assessed for Conference collections, for the year 1870, is distributed at the rate of sixteen cents per member, as follows:

Richmond district, $670; Charlottesville district, $630; Lynchburg district, $600; Danville district, $500; Farmville district, $660; Petersburg district, $640; Murfreesboro district, $850; Norfolk district, $780; Rappahannock district, $650. Total, $6,000.

The amount assessed for the Bishops' fund, for the year 1870, is distributed at the rate of six cents per member, as follows:

The amount assessed for Randolph Macon College is $2,500, at the rate of six and three-eighths cents per member, distributed as follows:

Richmond district, $279; Charlottesville district, $270; Lynchburg district, $239; Danville district, $214; Farmville district, $279; Petersburg district, $269; Murfreesboro district, $354; Norfolk district, $325; Rappahannock district, $271. Total, $2,500.

The amount received on the assessment ($1,800) for the support of the Bishop is $1,520 18.

DELEGATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Conference then proceeded to the election of alternate delegates to the General Conference, with the following result:

A. G. Brown, 52; G. W. Langhorne, 30; W. B. Rowzie, 30; L. Rosser, 19; E. P. Wilson, 17; D. P. Willis, 16; J. D. Blackwell, 16.

Messrs. Brown, Langhorne, Rowzie and Rosser were declared elected.

Anniversary of the Sunday School Union.—The Anniversary and Anniversary Institute of the Sunday School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church was held in Columbus, Ohio, on October 30 and 31, and November 1, 2 and 3. On Monday afternoon Rev. L. R. Dunn, of New Jersey, delivered an address, followed by Rev. Mr. Sinsebaugh, Dr. Pierce and Rev. J. H. Vincent. After singing and prayer the meeting was dismissed. The anniversary exercises proper took place at half-past seven P. M., Rev. Dr. Trimble presiding. After singing and prayer the report of the secretary was presented. Complete statistical returns could not be made, the Annual Conferences not having as yet made reports to the office of the Union in New York. The exact figures for 1868 reported by the secretary, J. H. Vincent, are as follows: Methodist Episcopal Sunday schools, 16,034; officers and teachers, 191,369; scholars, 1,165,914; volumes in library, 2,749,547; Bible classes, 24,232; infant scholars, 169,877; total expenses for schools, $424,696 59; raised for Sunday School Union, $21,286 02; conversions, 41,708. Addresses were delivered by Rev. W. H. Perrine, Rev. L. R. Dunn and Rev. B. K. Pierce. After the close of the speeches a collection was taken up for the mission work, and to defray the expenses of the speakers. After the singing of "America," and the announcement of the Anniversary Institute to be held on Tuesday, the meeting was dismissed.—Methodist.

A Remedy Wanted.—A pastor seeks a remedy for a disease which is not peculiar to a member of his flock. He states that there is a good sister living about three squares from the church, whom he often meets in visiting, half a mile from her dwelling; who attends public gatherings, such as church festivals, fairs, exhibitions, etc., but is entirely unable to go to church, and has been thus afflicted for several years. She "deeply feels the privation of not attending Sabbath morning and evening, and the prayer meeting during the week," but cannot possibly be present, though she has no small children, and can have good company, if she could only go. He desires to know what will remove this inability. Can't some of our physicians prescribe a remedy?

Cotton Stalk and Okra Paper.—Dr. J. B. Read, of Tuscaloosa, Alabama, who took out a patent, not long since, for okra paper, now announces that he has discovered a method of making excellent paper from the cotton stalk. An exchange, which has examined samples of okra paper made at the Chickassabogue mill, near Mobile, says it is much too good for ordinary printing purposes. It is like paper made from linen rags, and will find its proper place among the stationery and book work. Cotton stalk paper will more nearly resemble the article made from cotton rags.

Brown's Bronchial Troches, for pulmonary and asthmatic disorders, have proved their efficacy by a test of many years, and have received testimonials from eminent men who have used them.

Those who are suffering from coughs, colds, hoarseness, sore throat, etc., should try the Troches, a simple remedy, which is in almost every case effectual.

The first direct importation of tea from China arrived in San Francisco on September 23.

THE SHORE OF ETERNITY.

Alone! to land alone upon that shore,
With no one sight that we have seen before;
Things of a different line,
And the sounds all new,
And fragrances so sweet, the soul may faint;
Alone! O that first hour of being a saint!

Alone! to land alone upon that shore
On which no wavelets lisp, no billows roar;
Perhaps no shape of ground,
Perhaps no sight or sound,
No form of earth our fancies to arrange,
But to begin alone that mighty change!

Alone! to land alone upon that shore,
Knowing so well we can return no more;
No voice or face of friend,
None with us to attend
Our disembarking on that awful strand,
But to arrive alone in such a land!

Alone! to land alone upon that shore;
To begin alone to live for evermore!
To have no one to teach
The manners or the speech
Of that new life, or put us at our ease;
O that we might die in pairs, or companies!

Alone? No! God hath been there long before;
Eternally hath waited on that shore
For us who were to come
To our eternal home.
And he hath taught his angels to prepare
In what way we are to be welcomed there.

Like one that waits and watches, he hath sat,
As if there were none else for whom to wait;
Waiting for us, for us
Who keep him waiting thus,
And who bring less to satisfy his love
Than any other of the souls above.

Alone? The God we know is on that shore;
The God, of whose attractions we know more
Than those who may appear
Nearest and dearest here.
O, is he not the life-long Friend we know
More privately than any friend below?

Alone? The God we trust is on that shore;
The faithful One, whom we have trusted more
In trials and in woes
Than we have trusted those
On whom we leaned most in our earthly strife;
O, we shall trust him more in that new life!

Alone? The God we love is on that shore;
Love not enough, yet whom we love far more,
And whom we've loved all through,
And whom we love more true
Than other loves—yet we shall love far more:
True love of him begins upon that shore.

So not alone we land upon that shore;
'Twill be as though we had been there before;
We shall meet more we know
Than we meet here below,
And find our rest like some returning dove,
And be at home at once with our Eternal Love.

LETTER FROM CHINA.

ADDRESSED TO THE SUPERINTENDENT OF THE FELICITY STREET SUNDAY SCHOOL.

W. H. Foster, Esq. — My Dear Brother: Your letter of June 15 has just been received, and I am greatly gratified to hear of the prosperity of the Felicity street Sunday school, and of the active interest taken by your Sunday School Missionary Association in the heathen children which surround us. Hitherto our efforts have been devoted almost exclusively to preaching to the adults, but I hope the day is not far distant when sufficient means will be available to encourage the organization of schools for the young.

We should have at least one boarding school for boys at Shanghai, and a half dozen schools here and at our outstations at Nantsiang and Snchow. There are not less than fifty or sixty thousand children growing up to perpetuate heathenism in this populous city, while our aggregate efforts to abate it numbers less than two hundred pupils under instruction in all the mission schools.

A wide field for usefulness is open in this respect, and schools for the rising generation should be more generally esteemed, as they really are among our most aggressive agencies. No church is prepared to ignore them, but I am sorry to say but few appear to appreciate or use them to advantage. More attention has recently been devoted to them.

The missionary statistics issued this month show that the total number of communicants and probationers, now in connection with the Protestant mission in China, is nearly eight thousand. Three years ago the whole number did not exceed three thousand two hundred, so that the present aggregate indicates that from June, 1866, to June, 1869, the sum total has been more than doubled. Such progress should encourage the churches at home and liberalize their views toward the work in China. The field is now open before us—the largest field in the world. Toleration is promulgated throughout the eighteen provinces, and more than three hundred millions of heathen are made accessible to the Gospel messenger. The churches at home have long prayed for this result. Their prayers are now answered; but, oh, how few seem to heed the ascending Saviour's last command! We need more laborers, and they have been promised, but their departure is delayed. We cannot understand it. What if the Master should say unto them: Why stand ye here idle? What think you would be their reply under the circumstances? Oh for a revival of missionary zeal in our Southern Church. The elements of an aggressive work are now inaugurated, and if permitted to prosecute it vigorously, another three years perhaps shall witness the occupation of the whole empire, and thousands of converts turned to God. Pray for us. Your brother in Christ,

Young J. Allen.

Shanghai, China, Aug. 11, 1869.

HOLSTON CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. Editor: I have made a poor return for your kindness in sending me the Advocate for the past two years, but I am grateful for its visits nevertheless, and I assure you the few readers you have in this mountain-bound Conference appreciate your paper as highly as you could desire. Dr. Wilcy and Dr. Cunnyngham have both expressed their admiration for your vigorous and chaste editorials, as well as the general selection of valuable and readable matter with which your columns are filled. We know, too, the important geographical position which you hold, and in fact we look to the section of the country which you represent for the most valuable patronage of our schools and colleges.

It may be agreeable to your readers, in advance of the more Southern Conferences, to state that ours has been held already, and to give you some notes of our progress.

The past year, like the former, was marked with one instance of violent and bloody persecution, both of which occurred in the neighborhood of Knoxville, but, fortunately for our good name, in another county. The Revs. Henry C. Neal and Jacob Smith were the victims of these barbarous mobs. In the former instance, which occurred in 1869, the guilty parties went free so far as the law is concerned, though several of them, as has been already announced in the papers, have suffered the justice of an avenging Providence. The last act of violence, which was perpetrated in March or April of the present year, will be made the subject of judicial investigation, and the guilty parties have already been prosecuted by some of the best lawyers in the State. There is no doubt, under the present administration of justice, that they will receive their dues.

It has proved in this case, as in that of St. Paul, that these things have turned out for the furtherance of the Gospel. In this city, where our church is still illegally withholden from us, our roll of members has increased within two years from fifty to near three hundred. These have been received at regular services, the door of admission to the church being opened every Sabbath, and rarely closed without accessions. Last Sunday ten persons were received into full membership, five of whom were baptized. We have been able to erect a new house of worship, and to support our pastor and presiding elder and Sunday school as handsomely as it was ever done before the war. This has been the case in every part of the Conference where we have encountered opposition, (and this hostility, I must do the justice to say, has been confined to a few districts in East Tennessee,) while in southwestern Virginia and western North Carolina the church has enjoyed abundant peace and prosperity. Our net increase for the past year was three thousand five hundred souls. The accessions to the Conference, including several transfers and readmissions, numbered eighteen. The average salary of our preachers this year was $346.

Many of our leading preachers are engaged in teaching large and flourishing schools, but enjoy the privilege of preaching very often to much better congregations than you are accustomed to see farther South. Quite a number of our presiding elders and circuit preachers are men of independent property, who reside on their farms and serve the churches around them. They are as laborious as any class of ministers we have, and by the use of their own means have carried the church over the worst period of financial embarrassment, until now they are beginning to reap the reward of their self-sacrifice in a liberal support.

The church schools are more essentially a part of our ecclesiastical machinery in this Conference than is generally the case elsewhere. At Emory and Henry we had near two hundred students last year, under thorough Methodist training. The president and one of the professors are members of the Conference. At Martha Washington there are about sixty young ladies boarding in the college, under the charge of Brothers Arbogast and Cunnyngham. At Asheville, North Carolina, we have another admirable female school, under Brothers Kennedy and Stungfield. Two of the professors in the East Tennessee University are Methodist preachers, and one of them is a member of the Conference. Besides these the two Sullins, R. N. Price, J. H. Bruner and other members of the Conference are directly engaged in teaching, so that there is no danger of a divorce taking place in this Conference between religion and learning.

This has been said to be a man-producing country. I am sorry that the two best known, to wit, Andrew Johnson and William G. Brownlow, are not very popular in the South, but it is a pleasure to add that such men as General A. P. Stewart, Admiral Farragut, Senator Henderson, of Missouri, and Postmaster General Reagan, of Texas, were born on some of the poor farms of East Tennessee; while the incomparable Munsey is an undoubted product of the Holston Conference.

It is, however, of the women of this country that I would speak in terms of the highest praise. They constitute here the producing class in more senses than one, and their products are all of the best. Upon the farmer's wife of East Tennessee devolves a multiplicity of duties unknown to our fair sisters of the Gulf States. Here they spin, they weave, they cook, they wash, they manage the dairy, they dry the fruit, they raise for the market pigs, poultry, eggs, butter, vegetables and fruits of all descriptions, and literally clothe and feed their families by the management of their domestic economy, while the "husband and the father" only has to look after the larger farm products, and the more important affairs of Church and State. And, I may add, this thrift and industry are universal among the fair sex, reaching from the highest to the lowest class. It is not regarded as disreputable here to work in any of the walks of life, and the consequence is that good living and good health are the prevailing characteristics of all the families where I am acquainted.

A word on the political situation in this State. The reign of Radicalism is ended. But fourteen members in both houses of the Legislature claim to be Republicans. Even East Tennessee, which was strong for the Union, gave a handsome majority against disfranchisement. No man who was in any way connected with the hateful misrule of the past few years will stand a chance for office in this State for years to come. The mass of the people are thoroughly conservative, and while the revolution was perfectly peaceful, and I believe will prove its moderation in all things, it was as thorough and complete as could be desired. Would to God that Louisiana and Mississippi and Texas were as safe from the dangers of Radicalism as Tennessee! Yours truly,

F. M. Grace.

Ought our Young Preachers to Study the Dead Languages?

Mr. Editor: This is a question which sometimes receives a negative answer. Our young preachers are told that they have not the time for Greek and Latin; that they can study the Bible sufficiently well with helps in English, etc. Now, if any helps at all are needed, the best helps ought to be sought. I believe that upon the whole the ancient classics afford the best and readiest aids to a preacher's preparation and work. If the young preacher has the opportunity to spend some years in a good classical school, or a college, he will there be able to pursue these studies to the best advantage. And surely no young man intending to be a preacher of God's word can allow himself to rush into such a ministry without seeking the best preparation that he can possibly secure.

But even where, from want of means or from having entered the ministry too late, the benefit of a training school could not be had, these languages ought to be studied privately. This is practicable and highly useful.

First, these studies are among the very best for mental training—a thing which every man needs. There is nothing superior to the study of Greek and Latin for the cultivation of the analytical faculty and a delicate literary taste. At the same time the student is compelled to pursue the most searching investigation into the meaning of words, and their power and relations in the construction of sentences—that is, the transmission of thought and feeling. For words are the material that the mind makes use of in forming and revealing its own conceptions. And hence it is that the mind itself is viewed through its medium of expression. A great many of our English words are derived from Greek and Latin radicals, and bring with them a wealth of meaning which can be discovered only by tracing their origin and history in their native tongues. This pursuit is not to minister to pedantry, or to word-juggling, but for the attainment of accuracy in thought and expression.

Moreover, the New Testament was originally composed in Greek, and must be studied in Greek to be fully comprehended. If the Gospel of Matthew was first written in the language then spoken by the Jews, it was very soon after transferred to the Greek.

Now a careful reading of the Greek Testament will give one a better understanding of it than all the commentaries without such reading. Well, how long will it take a diligent adult student to compass such an end? Say two years, with an average of two hours' study per day. I venture to believe he can do it in less time than that; not perhaps thoroughly, but so as to render to him more service than all the commentaries he would read in that time; so that he could go on increasing in knowledge, and could avail himself of the aid of comments on the Greek text, such as Alford's and others. He would feel then that he was in the holiest place of the truth, and not standing in the outer court, forbidden to enter—the door shut. S.

Many years ago Robert Treat Paine (father of the poet) was one of the judges of the Massachusetts Supreme Court. He was very old, and the bar desired him to retire from the bench; so they appointed Harrison Gray Otis, who was very polite and accomplished, to go and see the judge and talk with him on the subject. He suggested to the judge that it must be a very great inconvenience to him to have to leave home so often and so long. "Oh! he was always ready to sacrifice his personal preference for the good of the country." "But," suggested Otis, "you are not in good health—you are infirm—aren't you afraid this excessive duty will kill you?" "Yes," said he; "but a man cannot die in a better cause than administering justice." "Do you see as well as you used to?" "Yes, I can see with my glasses very well." "Can you hear as well as you used to?" for it was notorious that he could not hear anything unless yelled through a trumpet. He said: "Yes, I hear perfectly; but they don't speak as loud as they did before the Revolution."

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Mr. Editor: We can truly say that this has been a year of great prosperity with the church on Greene circuit, Alabama. I have closed my round of protracted meetings with an addition to the church of about one hundred, and about one hundred and thirty conversions. The waste places have been built up. God be praised.

J. M. Johnson.

Mr. Editor: I am just closing my work on this (East Baton Rouge) circuit. We have had no great revival season or religious upheaving, but we have had from the beginning of the year a gradual good work. I have not had a protracted meeting in my work this year; first, for want of help, and second, that this is a frontier. During the war it was completely ruined and everything prostrated; then a succession of failures in crops ever since until this year. I thought that although it seemed at times that protracted effort would be profitable, yet I concluded that it would be impolitic to stop the people from labor, struggling as they were to get a start to live; but we tried to fix the leaven in the mind and keep it at work by prayer to God, while they are engaged in secular things, and by a word occasionally the work was gradually manifested by increasing congregations, patient, serious attention, and an occasional subscriber to our church papers, and accessions of from one to five persons on almost every round. And now we have orderly congregations, who receive the word joyfully, thankfully and tearfully. Having no presiding elder and no local preachers, I succeeded in procuring the assistance of Rev. B. Pipkin for two Quarterly Meetings. Hence I have heard only three sermons this year. We have received twenty-six into the church, baptized four adults and twenty-two infants; two Sabbath schools in good condition. During the war or since the church records were lost, and demoralization and disorganization was the result. I had to go to the parish records for some items, and gather up the fragments as best I could for reorganization, and must walk softly, cautiously, steadily and quietly in person. It was trying—being from forty to sixty miles from home, where I am greatly needed—to be traveling on horseback, but I have succeeded to get things straight, and shall leave a clear and clean record for my successor, for whom there is being prepared a parsonage. In two weeks I have my last Quarterly Meeting, as well as my last appointment in the parish. I am almost afraid to leave this kind people, but it seems that it is no greater sacrifice than the great Head of the church requires; yet I cannot promise to return, and I cannot say no. But as I believe, and wish to believe, that my appointments for twenty-seven years have all been of God, so I still leave myself in his hands, to whom I gave my soul, body and blood, with all I have, and I'll never take it back, but will always pray him to govern the mind and heart of both Bishops and Cabinet and Conference, which he is able to do, and will do; and although my family and myself have often been in straitened circumstances, yet we have not starved. Our trust is in God. This leaves me well.

Yours in Christ,

J. Nicholson.

P. S.—I have sent you twenty subscribers during the year, and I think the circulation will be enlarged greatly. J. N.

A Quaker Letter.—An English paper gives the following from a Quaker in the country to a friend in the city:

"Friend—John, I desire thee to be so kind as to go to one of those sinful men in the flesh called an attorney, and let him take an instrument with a seal fixed thereunto by means whereof we may seize the outward tabernacle of George Green, and bring him before the lumbskin men (the judges) at Westminster, and teach him to do as he would be done by. And so I rest thy friend in the light. R. G."

TO YOUNG MEN.

It is easier to be a good business man than a poor one. Half the energy displayed in keeping ahead that is required to catch up when behind will save credit, give more time to business, and add to the profit and reputation of your word. Honor your engagements. If you promise to meet a man, or do a certain thing at a certain moment, be ready at the appointed time. If you have work to do, do it cheerfully, and therefore more speedily and correctly. If you go out on business, attend promptly to the matter on hand, and then as promptly go about your own business. Do not stop to tell stories in business hours. If you have a place of business, be found there when wanted. No man can get rich by sitting around stores and saloons. Never "fool" on business matters. If you have to labor for a living, remember that one hour in the morning is better than two at night. If you employ others, be on hand to see that they attend to their duties, and direct with regularity, promptness and liberality. Do not meddle with any business you know nothing of. Never buy an article simply because the man who sells it will take it out in trade. Trade is money. Time is money. A good business habit and reputation is always money. Make your place of business pleasant and attractive; then stay there to wait on customers.

Never use quick words, or allow yourself to make hasty or ungentlemanly remarks to those in your employ; to do so lessens their respect for you and your influence over them. Help yourself, and others will help you. Be faithful over the interests confided to your keeping, and all in good time your responsibilities will be increased. Do not be in too great haste to get rich. Do not build until you have arranged and laid a good foundation. Do not—as you hope to work for success—spend time in idleness. If your time is your own, business will suffer if you do. If it is given to another for pay, it belongs to him, and you have no more right to steal it than to steal money. Be obliging. Strive to avoid harsh words and personalities. Do not kick every stone in the path; more miles can be made in a day by going steadily on than by stopping to kick. Pay as you go. A man of honor respects his word as he does his bond. Ask, but never beg. Help others when you can, but never give when you cannot afford to, simply because it is fashionable. Learn to say no. No necessity of snapping it out dog-fashion, but say it firmly and respectfully.

Have but few confidants, and the fewer the better. Use your own brains rather than those of others. Learn to think and act for yourself. Be valiant. Keep ahead, rather than behind time.

Young man, cut this out; and if there is folly in the argument, let us know.

Old Hickory on Astronomy.—The author of "Sittings with Powers, the Sculptor," publishes some very interesting reminiscences of Andrew Jackson in the last number of Appleton's Journal. Powers, on the occasion, was dining with the President. Astronomy was among the subjects discussed. Old Hickory came down with his opinion in his usual positive and determined manner, and as will be seen by the report of which Powers gives, he was about as fortunate in his conception and delivery as he generally was in his opinions respecting the Constitution and the nature of the government. Powers said:

"'In the course of the dinner Major Donaldson, I think, was talking very interestingly upon some recent discoveries in astronomy. After listening awhile the general raised his somewhat thin voice rather highly:

"'I tell you, major, that we don't really know anything about the weight and size of those distant heavenly bodies. It's all a guess and a pretence. It's nonsense, sir, to talk about a little spark twinkling away up in the sky, as if we knew just how far off it was.'

"'But, general,' returned the major, 'if we did not know the place and the disk of some of the distant planets and stars, how could their positions be calculated, and how could eclipses be predicted years ahead, with perfect certainty and exactness?'

"'That's all very easy, sir,' replied the general. 'It's done by tradition, sir. The stars move in regular orbits. Their places are observed and noted; and when they come again to the same places, it's observed and handed down, and so, sir, we know when they will be in those places again, it may be a hundred years hence. It's all very simple. I don't believe a word of what these astronomers say about the immense distance and size of the fixed stars. I shouldn't wonder if the moon was as big as any of 'em.'

"It was hardly deemed judicious to press the conversation on astronomy any further."

SOWING.

Are we sowing seeds of kindness,
That shall blossom bright ere long?
Are we sowing seeds of discord?
They shall ripen into wrong.
Are we sowing seeds of honor?
They shall bring forth the golden grain.
Are we sowing seeds of falsehood?
We shall yet reap bitter pain.
Whatsoe'er our sowing be,
Reaping, we its fruits shall see.

We can never be too careful
What the seed our hands shall sow:
Love from love is sure to ripen;
Hate from hate is sure to grow.
Seeds of good or ill we scatter
Heedlessly along our way:
But a glad or grievous harvage
Waits us at the harvest day.
Whatsoe'er our sowing be,
Reaping, we its fruits shall see.

"LET US WATCH AND BE SOBER."

This exhortation is no less necessary in these days than it was when written—eighteen hundred years ago. And there are special seasons when it should be marked with emphasis—and this is one of them. The condition of the country, beginning to recover from its long paralysis, yet with many dangers impending, likely at any time to renew the shock which all our interests have received; the growing prosperity, almost necessarily attended with a growing greed of gain, which constantly tends to secularize all our thought and to exalt unduly the value of material good; and the superabounding corruption prevailing, which places honesty and virtue at a disadvantage in the race of fortune—all these appeal to the Christian to "watch and be sober"—lest he, too, "being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from his steadfastness."

It is difficult to resist a strong current that is sweeping everything before it; and there are abundant evidences that it is an easy matter for one to surrender his conscience to popular opinion, and to go with the multitude to do evil. But the facility with which we sin is really no excuse for sinning. It does not abate the guilt of it; nor will it mitigate the punishment. If it be easy to sin and hard to resist; and if the solicitations thereto are more than usually multiplied, the necessity is all the greater that we watch against its approaches, and resist it with a firmer purpose.

Besides the general tendencies to evil that we have indicated, there are peculiar circumstances that render the exhortation to watchfulness and sobriety particularly appropriate just now, especially to that large number who have this year entered upon a religious life. The season approaches which is to try their steadfastness. The settled order of the past year is over; and in almost every department of life a renewal of the old order, or a change to something new takes place. Employments, situations, business connections are changed. New places are to be secured. The laborers of the year are to be paid; new laborers are to be engaged. Preparations of every sort for the twelve months to come are to be made; and it is to very many a season of annoyance, of trouble and often of anxiety and harassing care. To others who are not subject to such changes, and especially to the young, it is the season during which they are most likely to be enticed from religious duty by social pleasures. It includes the holidays with their round of feasting and merry-making; and the young Christian will need all watchfulness and sobriety to maintain his consistency amid all the allurements of a gay world.

Add to this the fact that in our Southern Conferences it is the time when our church is placed at great disadvantage, by the annual change of her preachers, just in the midst of this season. This is their vacation; and he who knows the people and their wants may not return, while the stranger who succeeds him will not grow acquainted with his flock in time to give them much aid or oversight in this particular crisis. Therefore the church must maintain itself against the world, largely without the pastor's help. This fact makes a strong appeal to the old members to "watch and be sober." A heavy responsibility is upon them to keep up the Sunday school, the class and prayer meeting, and to provide every possible means of establishing the young disciple in the faith. It will be a sad calamity if, at any point, the dissipations of the coming season go far toward neutralizing the work of the year, as may be the case where this injunction is not observed. It will take months to recover the lost ground—if, indeed, in many instances, it can ever be recovered. And we, therefore, appeal to every reader never for an instant, and amid whatever temptations, to relax his watchfulness or to permit any of the pleasures of the world, the care of business or the deceitfulness of riches to destroy that sobriety which becomes a candidate for a better inheritance than earth affords.

If the preachers can leave their work this year, with this purpose fully established among their people, the coming year will open well.—Southern Christian Advocate.

BISMARCK.—Quite a pleasant and characteristic anecdote is told respecting Count Bismarck. Everybody knows what an autocrat the count is. Well, it seems from a Silesian paper, that the peasants on the count's estate have got into the very bad habit of working on Sundays. The count hears of it, and writes in terse, Bismarck fashion: "There must be an end of that." Thus we may learn to be thankful for even Bismarck brevity, though Frenchmen don't like it. Remonstrates his audacious bailiff: "The people are not to blame. They work from morning to night for six days on the estate; and on the Sunday they look after their own bit of land. They have no other day for it." The dreaded count will listen to no such excuse. "From this time forward a new order is to be introduced. When my people have land, and their corn is ripe, they are to begin with their own first." This to the bailiff, then the bailiff to the people, with the addition: "Mind, no more work on Sundays." But the result? Not doubtful at all. For, say the peasants to each other: "The master shan't lose by caring for us first; so let us work with a will." And they do it too. Indeed, never was the work done so well. In gratitude, but with a thorough bailiff-like touch, the functionary reports: "This was a capital 'hit,' and nobody has had more advantage from it than we." The work was all finished in the twinkling of an eye. And thus Bismarck will become more popular than ever among Englishmen, much to the chagrin of Frenchmen, except perhaps those who work on Sunday.

THE NATIONS THAT EAT MOST.—The ruling people of the world, who have from time to time shaped the destiny of humanity, have always, so far as can be ascertained, been liberal feeders. This remark applies, of course, only to the ruling classes in these nationalities, and not to the slave or peasant class, who lived with them but were not of them. But of the patrician or governing orders of society—the leaders of the world in legislation, in war, in commerce, in science and literature—it is pre-eminently true. The dominant classes among the Babylonians, the Persians, and especially the Romans, were free and luxurious in their habits of eating, although in those days there was less variety of food than at present. Of the Romans it is said that no other people were ever so devoted to the pleasures of the table. Among modern nations the greatest eaters are the English, the Germans, the French and the Americans—the ruling people of our civilization. The diet of the Spaniards and Italians is notably less substantial than that of the English and Germans, just as their brains are less active and original. The Americans are, on the average, the greatest eaters in the world. Said Carlyle to Emerson: "The best thing he knew of that country was, that in it a man could have meat for his labor."—Hours at Home.

THE EFFECT OF NOVEL READING ON CRIME.—The reading of Eugene Sue's novels first suggested to the mind of the bloody hero of the Pantin tragedy the idea of it. This is certainly a new and startling fact. If all novels in which the villain is a hero are calculated to have a similar influence, then the influence of the cheap yellow-covered literature with which the country is flooded may be looked forward to in the future with some anxiety. It would perhaps throw some light on the subject if some attention was given to the previous habitual reading of noted felons, and an effort made to ascertain how far their intentions were molded or affected by the mental pabulum they had crammed their brains with. An insatiate novel reader, who reads every new book that comes out, might find some difficulty in choosing from among the heroes a suitable example to follow, and an ideal formed and selected to follow might be set aside for a new one. Thus, the constant panorama of villains passing before the mind's eye would form such a variety as to incapacitate him from giving the preference to any one character as a model.

DISAPPEARANCE OF THE DOG STAR.—A most startling astronomical fact—the explosion, or rather the conflagration, of Tau Coronæ—occurred some time since. It appears now that another and much more important star is slowly taking itself out of our system. By calculations of extraordinary minuteness and delicacy, Mr. Huggins and Father Secchi have demonstrated that Sirius and our sun are mutually receding from one another at the rate of two hundred and ninety-four miles per second. In the end, then, though the distance of time strains the imagination, we must lose sight of Sirius—that is to say, provided we have not by that time gained the capacity of watching the more distant universe toward which he must be receding—an improbability. Nothing seems so near its final limit as the power of astronomical telescopes, while the power of the human eye, if it alters at all, probably decreases.

THE BANDS OF ORION.—"Canst thou loose the bands of Orion?"—Job. The three bright stars which constitute the girdle or band of Orion never change their form; they preserve the same relative position to each other and to the rest of the constellation from year to year, and from age to age. They present precisely the same appearance to us which they did to Job. No sooner does the constellation rise above the horizon, however long may have been the intervals since we last beheld it, than these three stars appear in the old familiar position. They afford us one of the highest types of immutability in the midst of ceaseless changes. When heartsick and weary of the continual alterations we observe in this world, on whose most enduring objects and affections is written the melancholy doom, "passing away," it is comforting to look up to that bright beacon in the heavens, that remains unmoved amid all the restless surges of time's great ocean. And yet, in the profound rest of these stars, there is a ceaseless motion; in their apparent stability and everlasting endurance there is a constant change. In vast courses, with inconceivable velocity, they are whirling round invisible centres, and ever passing into new collocations. They appear to us motionless and changeless because of our great distance from them, just as the foaming torrent that rushes down the hillside with the speed of an arrow, and in the wildest and most vagrant courses, filling all the air with its ceaseless shouts, appears from an opposite hill frozen by the distance into silence and rest—a mere motionless, changeless glacier on the mountain side.

MONKS AND NUNS IN FRANCE.—In 1789, statistics which M. Sauvestre considers trustworthy, show that the monastic orders of France under the ancien regime comprised but fifty-two thousand men and women. From the census of 1861 it appears that at that date there were in France, officially recognized, one hundred and eight thousand one hundred and nineteen persons of both sexes bound to eventual life, and distributed among fourteen thousand and thirty-two houses, beside a large and indefinite number belonging to congregations which had not as yet obtained recognition by the State. It would thus appear that the ground lost at the Revolution has not only been regained, but that its boundaries have been doubled. How rapidly this growth is increasing is evident when we see that in eighteen years of Louis Philippe's reign, but fourteen authorizations for the founding of new congregations were granted, while in the first eight years of the second empire, from 1852 to 1860, nine hundred and eighty-two were recognized, being an average of one hundred and nineteen new orders per annum. In the approaching great Ecumenical Council of Latin Christianity, it will be interesting to observe the enormous influence which the papal court will derive from the numberless and energetic adherents which it has thus so laboriously recruited and organized. Putnam's Magazine.

BISHOP BEVERIDGE ON HIS DEATH-BED.—When the pious Bishop Beveridge was on his death-bed he did not know any of his friends or connections. A minister, with whom he had been well acquainted, visited him, and when conducted into his room he said, "Bishop Beveridge, do you know me?" "Who are you?" said the Bishop. Being told who the minister was, he said that he did not know him. Another friend came, who had been equally well known, and accosted him in a similar manner: "Do you know me, Bishop Beveridge?" "Who are you?" said he. Being told it was one of his intimate friends, he said he did not know him. His wife then came to his bedside, and asked him if he know her. "Who are you?" said he. Being told she was his wife, he said he did not know her. "Well," said one of them, "Bishop Beveridge, do you know the Lord Jesus Christ?" "Jesus Christ!" said he, reviving, as if the name had produced on him the influence of a charm. "Oh! yes, I have known him these forty years. Precious Saviour, he is my only hope!"

THE minister of the Interior, in Russia, forbids all Russian papers publishing extracts from literary periodicals, for the reason that the latter contain matter injurious to the masses, although harmless to educated persons.

REFINING VEGETABLE OILS.—Mr. C. Michand, of Honfleur, has discovered a new method of refining oil, which will probably eclipse all those in general use at the present day. This method has just been communicated by M. Chevalier, to the Societe d'Encouragement. While sulphuric acid is introduced into the oil in minute numerous streamlets, air is blown into the oil so as to produce a great commotion in the liquid and to fill it with air bubbles. The mucilage contained in the crude oil, being acted on by the acid, soon forms with the air a voluminous layer of scum at the surface, which is skimmed off as it forms. This insufflation of air is repeated several times in succession, and the scums cleared off every time until the oil is clarified. At this point of the operation it still retains free sulphuric acid. It is now run into a copper vessel, and steam is forced through it until the oil has reached a temperature of one hundred degrees C. The steam is then allowed to bubble through for half an hour or an hour longer. After the oil has cooled down some twenty or thirty degrees C., which may be done artificially, it is run through an ordinary filter. Two large refineries have lately been put up on the "Michand" plan, and the oil produced by them is so pure that the wick of the lamp burning it will not carbonize after many days' usage.

TEACH WITH TENDERNESS.—On a recent Saturday in the Chicago noon-day prayer meeting, where the Sunday school lesson of the morrow is more or less prominently brought forward by way of remark and illustration, one said:

"In reference to that expression in the lesson, 'The Lord is very pitiful and of tender mercy,' I think that our Sabbath school children have special need of the comfort of this truth. When a boy God was constantly presented to me in his judicial aspect. It was constantly held up before me that I was a criminal in the prisoner's box, railed out from all access to him, and he was the inflexible Judge, and not the pleading Advocate as well. The children of this day, I fear, are apt to realize this side of the case more than the other. It is love that melts the heart. The Lord is very pitiful. Let our scholars tomorrow judge somewhat of his tenderness by our own."

LOOKING UPWARD.—During Dr. Payson's last illness a friend, coming into his room, remarked familiarly: "Well, I am sorry to see you lying here on your back."

"Do you know what God puts us on our backs for?" said Dr. Payson, smiling.

"No," was the answer.

"In order that we may look upward."

His friend said to him: "I am not come to condole, but to rejoice with you; for it seems to me that this is no time for mourning."

"Well, I am glad to hear that," was the reply; "for it is not often that I am addressed in such a way. The fact is, I never had less need of condolence, and yet everybody persists in offering it; whereas, when I was prosperous and well, and a successful preacher, and really needed condolence, they flattered and congratulated me."

WEAR A SMILE.—Which will you do? Smile and make others happy, or be crabbed and make everybody around you miserable? You can live among flowers and singing birds, or in the mire surrounded by fogs and frogs. The amount of happiness which you can produce is incalculable, if you will only show a smiling face—a kind heart, and speak pleasant words. On the other hand, by sour looks, cross words and a fretful disposition, you can make hundreds unhappy almost beyond endurance. Which will you do? Wear a pleasant countenance; let joy beam in your eye and love grow on your forehead. There is no joy so great as that which springs from a kind act or pleasant deed, and you may feel it at night when you rest, and at morning when you rise, and throughout the day when about your daily business.

A COSTLY CEREMONIAL.—The Indian papers state that the Maharajah, of Travancore, is about to perform the ceremony of Thooloparumb. The process consists of his highness being placed in one scale with an equal weight of gold in the other. The gold thus obtained is afterward distributed among the Brahmins according to each one's privilege, and it is only after the ceremony that his highness is supposed to be sanctified. There is another ceremony which consists in his highness passing through the belly of a cow of gold; this is termed Erniagherpum. This it is proposed to celebrate next year. It is feared that these costly ceremonies, combined with the coming Moorajebum, will absorb a great portion of the surplus revenue of the State.

A TAME WHALE.—The harbor of Muscat for over twenty years was visited by a very peculiar guest. Every day a jolly old whale sails into the cove, and spends several hours in feeding and frolicking in its waters. He is always warmly welcomed by the natives, who have grown very fond of their old friend, and name him "Muscat Tom." A kitten could not seem more tame and playful than this large monster of the deep.

The sharks make way for his lordship, and while he is present the harbor is clear, to the joy of the delighted bathers, who all look on Tom as their friend. It would go hard with any one who was so reckless as to disturb his work or play, as all are anxious to encourage his visits. Sometimes a friend bears him company, but usually he comes alone. He takes no offense at ships which may happen to obtrude on his playground, rolls about, leisurely alongside of a vessel at anchor, as if there were no such things as harpoons in the world. A sailor once dropped a stick of wood into his mouth, as he rose beside the ship and threw up his head. The affront did not cause the slightest mark of displeasure in Tom, but it brought down the wrath of all the bystanders on the offender. He did not choose to repeat the experiment soon.

What a beautiful illustration is this of the text, "For every kind of beasts, and of serpents, and of things in the sea is tamed, and hath been tamed of mankind." Even the dull looking fish can be tamed, and made to come when called to get his food. Presbyterian.

OTHER PEOPLE'S SINS.—It is strange and saddening to see the low views which many have of God and heaven. They seem to consider the Holy One as altogether such a being as themselves; one moved by petty jealousies and revenges, ready to take sides with them in their animosities.

A converted Sandwich Islander came to his minister one day in great trouble. A man who had wished to unite with the church, but was rejected, came to him and said:

"I know that you were the cause of my not being received, and if I die before you do, I mean to go and tell God of it."

The poor man was greatly distressed by this threat, and came to ask the missionary's advice about it. He could not be brought to understand that God was not a man, to be prejudiced by what another might say to him, and that heaven was not a place for slander of one another. We smile at his simplicity, but we see much that corresponds with it in the prayers and behavior of some who have enjoyed far greater light. Like the little girl who, when displeased with her sister, said: "When I say my prayers to-night, I mean to tell God just how naughty you be." These people seem to enjoy confessing other people's sins much more than their own. The self-righteous spirit which prompts such prayer is most displeasing in his sight.—Sunday School Times.

DANGER OF EATING MOLDY BREAD.—The use of bread containing mold ought to be rejected; indeed, several cases of poisoning have been observed by the use of moldy bread. Johier has signalized the poisoning of three animals which had eaten moldy bread. Westerhoff has made known the case of poisoning of two children who had taken rye-bread containing the mucor mucedo, the most common species of mold. The mold commonly found in bread is the Ascophora mucedo, a species of minute fungi closely allied to the mucor mucedo named above. This last is the kind that is often found plentifully on ripe fruit, preserves, etc., and when observed should be removed at once, not only because of its deleterious nature, but also for the reason that it materially hastens the progress of decay.—American Artisan.

THE following is said to be an exact copy of the life of David, as written by an otherwise shrewd boy: "David was the son of Saul, and when he was yet quite young he could play upon the harp; when his father was in trouble he used to send for his son. But above, when Beltshazzar were having a large feast, they were an hand upon the wall, and Beltshazzar were afraid, but he called for his physicians together, so as he would get to know what the handwriting was. But they could not tell him, so then he said he would give any man a new suit of clothes that could tell him. So then he sent for David, and David told him."

A TRUE heart will work in some way for the master of its affections. Let the reader consider this and inquire: "Am I working for Jesus?"

INVIOLABLE fidelity, good humor and complacency of temper outshine all the charms of a fine face, and make the decay of it invisible.

Scientific.

On the Nature of the Aurora Borealis.

BY PROF. VANDER WEYDE.

The observation of Mr. D. K. Winder, of Toronto, communicated to the Scientific American, concerning the spectrum lines of the aurora borealis, correspond almost perfectly with those made by J. A. Angstrom, communicated to the London and Edinburgh Philosophical Magazine for September, 1869. The first found a distinct bright line in the yellow, and one faint in the green; the last found "a single bright line to the left of the lines belonging to the calcium group," wave length 556.7; and "traces of three faint bands nearly as far as F." As the wave length of the sodium line D, in the yellow, is 588.8, the line of M. Angstrom is near to it; and as the line F is in the limit of green and blue, his three faint lines appear to correspond also with the faint line of Mr. Winder in the green.

These observations are meritorious and their publication valuable; however, the conclusions these two gentlemen draw from them are open to criticism. The first named comes to the conclusion that polar light is incandescent oxygen gas; this I most emphatically deny, as the spectrum lines of oxygen are entirely different. Its brightest line is not in the yellow near D, but in the red; and after Mr. Winder's own statement, "the dim line in the green," he could "not identify as belonging to any known substance." How then he can conclude that it is oxygen gas, I must confess not to comprehend. The lines of oxygen are nine in number, the brightest has a wave length of 615, the next 532, then 513, and 436 millionth of a millimeter; of the remaining five faint lines none corresponds exactly with the lines observed in the aurora, which exact correspondence is an absolute requisite to draw conclusions. Besides this the hypothesis of the existence of such gas in excess, by decomposition of water, is rather far-fetched, principally when we consider that the auroral display sometimes reaches a height of some four hundred miles—far above our clouds or atmosphere—most likely never reached by watery vapor.

At the close of the article Mr. Winder attributes the fact that the solar spectrum lines are black to "absorption by passing through a deep luminous stratum of the earth's atmosphere." This is utterly erroneous; the common well known explanation why these luminous lines are dark in the solar spectrum being that the solar atmosphere, consisting as it does of the vapors of sodium, lime, etc., also incandescent in the body of the sun, act by interference, as the absorbing medium. The effect of our terrestrial atmosphere on the solar spectrum, and on that of the stars and nebulæ, is of an entirely different nature.

M. Angstrom comes to the conclusion that the northern light is not an electric luminosity, such as is produced in the electric egg or rarefied air, "because the lines he observed in the aurora do not agree with those produced by our experiments with electricity in rarefied air." Very interesting is his statement that he observed these same lines for a whole week in the zodiacal light, and I must confess that I felt at first disappointed that the whole of our electric theory concerning the aurora borealis, and our beautiful lecture room experiments imitating it in large tubes and egg-shaped glass vessels, partially exhausted from air, were set all at naught by this single observation with the spectroscope.

Very soon, however, it became evident to me that this conclusion arrived at by Angstrom was false, remembering that Masson maintains that the lines of the luminous spectrum, as seen in the spectroscope, depend only partially on the chemical nature of the molecules of the medium which radiates the light, and partially on the primitive source originating it. Foucault and Kirchoff proved, indeed, that the double line seen in luminous sodium vapor, for instance, was not changed in position if the vapor was illuminated by solar, electric or any other kind of light.

It is thus evident that the position of the lines observed in the aurora, zodiacal or any other luminous phenomenon, prove nothing in regard to its electric or non-electric origin, but are a criterion for the chemical nature of the illuminated transparent matter, the superatmospheric medium. They are also a criterion proving that the polar light is not derived from the sun, because in all substances illuminated from this latter source traces of the lines of the solar spectrum are always visible; this is the case with the reflected light of moon, planets, clouds, etc. The spectrum of the polar light, on the contrary, shows no trace of the lines belonging to the solar spectrum.—Scientific American.

MONTGOMERY CONFERENCE.

CHANGE OF TIME.

MR. EDITOR: Please announce that by urgent request Bishop Paine has postponed the meeting of the Montgomery Conference one week. It will assemble on Wednesday, December 8, instead of December 1, as first announced.

Truly your brother,

JOSEPH B. COTTRELL,
P. C. at Union Springs, Ala.

UNION SPRINGS, ALA., Oct. 26.

THE NEW LEAF.

Those who are fond of studying the face of nature will, we trust, spend a few moments in admiration of the clear type in which the present number appears. It has cost enough to excite some emotion. Those of our readers who use spectacles, who abominate blurred letters and small print, will doubtless welcome the improvement with heartiness. We have slowly gathered strength to cast our old shell, and now, though the new one looks very bright, we need comfort. Mere admiration and congratulations are not sufficiently bracing at this moment. Some solid assurance of say five hundred new subscribers will give the evidence of that profound satisfaction which, we suppose, our friends feel in what we have done. The old year is about to pass with those Conferences which own this paper, and we hail the new one in advance by shooting out a fresh foliage.

MR. WHITAKER'S LECTURES.

By request of many of his fellow citizens Mr. D. K. Whitaker has undertaken a course of literary lectures, the first of which is on the Genius and Writings of Sir Walter Scott. This lecture was delivered two years ago to a delighted auditory, and its repetition was requested by several gentlemen who were then so fortunate as to hear it. Mr. Whitaker has the well-earned reputation of a ripe scholar and an able lecturer, and we sincerely hope that the course of lectures just inaugurated will be amply encouraged and numerously attended.

J. O. FUQUA, ESQUIRE, was the nominee of the Baton Rouge Quarterly Conference as lay representative to the Louisiana Annual Conference. Brother Fuqua is consequently the second alternate elect to the Conference. The District Meeting, at the time of the election, had no information as to the action of the Baton Rouge Quarterly Conference.

THE LAST RALLY.

We hope that our people will pay their preachers in full, and then subscribe for the ADVOCATE. We have seen a few simple-hearted members who honestly thought that if the preacher failed to get his quarterage on the circuit he would be paid up at Conference. We can assure them that whatever used to be the case, the preacher has no such resource now. If he comes lean and unpaid to Conference, he goes away leaner; for instead of giving him anything, the order of affairs now is to get out of him all his ready money, and then give him an appointment. The Conference does not even pay the widows, orphans and superannuates of the church more than two-thirds of what is due them, and, of course, nothing remains for the preacher. No, don't trust to the Conference, but pay up your preacher at home; give him a substantial look, as if "warmed and filled," and dress him up in "store clothes"—that sort of a coat, at least. You may want your preacher back; if he looks well cared for it will encourage the Bishop to return him. You may not want him back; still, if he looks well some other presiding elder may set his heart upon him. The best way for all parties is to pay the preacher, and, if possible, let him appear as satisfied and decent as any other preacher, because at Conference he represents the temper and quality of the circuit where he has been working.

Also, send up a good list of subscribers to the ADVOCATE, because the editor will be at Conference, and has a good deal of influence with the Bishop. When the Bishop gets in a very tight place, and the cabinet cannot help him through, he is obliged to look, as it were, outside of his legal advisers and the Conference; and at such a juncture there is no telling what service a well disposed editor might render. We should have the work at heart and look with equal favor upon all parts of it; but it is very difficult not to take some additional interest in a circuit that acts handsomely toward the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

HOPEFUL PROGRESS.

"When about ten years of age he was born of the spirit, a convert to God. At that time, however, there were few among Christian pastors who admitted it to be competent for a child of that age to make a profession of religion, and to join the church. There were few at that period who obeyed the injunction of our Lord to feed such lambs, to care for them, to watch over them, to instruct them and to exhort them. At that period there were no Sunday schools or teachers. He passed the usual vicissitudes of childhood, he mingled with few religious associates, and was subject to the subtle advice of society, and under these influences he was led to give up the habit of prayer, and lost his religious feelings. At the age of eighteen he was again visited by the Spirit of God. His backslidings were overcome and his soul was restored. He united with the church there at that time, and was a true disciple of Christ."

The above statement was made by Bishop Janes in his sermon at the funeral of Dr. Heman Bangs, and is fruitfully suggestive. The contrast of the present state of the church, with its condition seventy years ago, is striking. The advance in reference to the religious education of children is noticeable. "At that period there were no Sunday schools or teachers." "What hath God wrought" in this respect in the lifetime of an individual? The Sunday school, as an institution, has grown to its present vastness in this brief space. Another statement of the Bishop should be pondered: "At that time, however, there were few among Christian pastors who admitted it to be competent for a child of that age to make a profession of religion and to join the church." If the pastors had no faith in the conversion of children, and did not regard them, when baptized, as members of the visible church, we may conclude that the people were behind their guides and instructors on this subject. We may hope that in this day of Sunday school activity both pastors and people are beginning to believe in the conversion of children. There is evident progress in Christian faith and practice in the religious training of the young.

Great advances have been made since the boyhood of Heman Bangs in everything which appertains to the spiritual welfare of children. "That which is perfect," however, has not yet fully come. The mind of the church is not sharply defined, and views are somewhat contradictory in reference to the status of children, both before and after baptism; but we feel that Christian knowledge and faith are traveling into a clearer atmosphere. Some of these days there will be a tolerably complete emergence from those antiquated notions and doctrinal errors which have long embarrassed our right conception of the religious condition and relations of the young. What is the condition of unbaptized children, and what are their relations to the kingdom of grace? The solution of this question ought to deliver us from the very nebulous apprehensions which still exist in the church. Watson expounds the subject clearly in explaining the passage: "Of such is the kingdom of God." "If little children are the subjects of his spiritual kingdom on earth, then, until the moment that, by actual sin, they bring personal condemnation upon themselves, they remain heirs of the kingdom of eternal glory; and if they become the subjects of the latter, by dying, then a previous vital relation must have existed on earth between them and Christ, as their Redeemer and sanctifier; or else we must assign the sanctification of the nature of man, which, even in infants, is fallen and corrupt, to a future state, which is contrary to the Scriptures." Little children, then, are internal members of the kingdom of grace, vitally related to Christ as their Redeemer and sanctifier. They are not born without sinful natures, but they are the subjects of the gracious and sanctifying operations of the Holy Spirit at a very tender age, and before they are capable of actual sin. We so understand Watson, and Dr. Whedon seems to maintain, throughout, the doctrine, and more thoroughly and consistently than any other commentator. This point conceded, that young children are internal members of the kingdom and in a state of grace, and that this is the state of all children, whether their parents be Jews, Gentiles or Christian believers, then the true effect of baptism is simply to constitute the child, in Whedon's language, "an external member of the kingdom."

There is no Pelagianism in this view of the scriptural condition of little children, but, perhaps, Arminianism alone can consistently receive and vindicate it. Our Calvinistic brethren are hampered by their peculiar doctrines of election and perseverance. Those who hold to the pernicious error of baptismal regeneration are also bound to reject the exposition of our Methodist standards. Final perseverance must fall before the statement that little children are internal members of the kingdom, "and that they are vitally related to Christ both as their Redeemer and sanctifier." There can be none necessarily excluded from either grace or glory. The child, in the highest spiritual sense, is already of the kingdom and baptism, so far from regenerating the soul, simply introduces the subject of it into the visible church. It seems to us that evangelical Arminianism is alone capable of apprehending and asserting the true moral condition of infants. The faith of the church is advancing toward clearness upon this subject. The errors to which we have alluded have indirectly affected us and retarded the development of those scriptural principles which are essential to the religious education of children. We are gaining ground in behalf of the young, and the complete victory will be achieved when the church shall understand and comprehend the Saviour's vindication of universal childhood: "Of such is the kingdom of God." Then the relation of baptized children to the church will be settled by that prior relation which all little children sustain to Christ as "their Redeemer and sanctifier."

GIVE YOUR PREACHER BOOKS.

You complain that your preacher is narrow in his range of thought—that he has but little variety. Now this must be so unless he is a man of long and varied experience, or of large reading. If he is a young man he cannot have a broad and mature experience. He must avail himself of the experience of others, as recorded in books, or his range of discussion must be narrow. Can any one reasonably expect a carpenter to do various and well finished work with no other tools than a chisel and a saw? Or a surgeon perform various delicate and difficult operations with one or two instruments? Certainly not. Books are the tools of preachers, and are as essential to them as tools are to any class of workmen.

The preachers need books to obtain information. The Bible lands are afar, and the preacher can only know them through the medium of books. He must have commentaries, travels, biblical dictionaries and cyclopedias of Bible literature. He ought to be familiar with the topography, the climate, productions and agriculture of ancient Judea and the adjacent countries. He ought to be familiar with the government, manners and customs and religions of Oriental lands, in order to the better understanding of the Scriptures. The preacher ought to have the best works on prophecy and the evidences of Christianity. He ought to have the best works on systematic divinity, with the sermons of the most gifted preachers and writers of the Christian world, as models for the formation of style. But the preacher should be well and largely read outside of mere technical and professional reading. He should be familiar with the best histories of ancient and modern times; should have and read the best poets and essayists. He also needs a good encyclopedia for general reference. But books are not only necessary to impart information, but they are essential to suggest new trains of thought, to polish and sharpen the mind.

Now if your preacher has not these books he will labor under a deplorable want, and it will be constantly and sadly seen in his lean and narrow ministrations. His mind will not develop; he will not keep pace with the mental progress of the age; his mind will be dwarfed, and permanent injury be inflicted upon his usefulness. Now is it not a thousand pities that all these sad results should come about for a want of $300 or $400 worth of books? How easy for you to correct this. You, and you and others, hand him $5, $10 or $20, and say: "Brother, take this to buy you such books as you need." You know his salary is too small to support his family, and buy such a library as he most imperatively needs. Do not throw down the paper and forget this subject. Be assured it is no trifling matter. See to it that your preacher has good books enough to meet the needs of his calling as a public teacher, that he may rightly divide the word of truth, and expound as one who needs not to be ashamed. You shall soon see, in his fresh and varied ministrations, his profiting by your timely aid.

NEW ADVERTISEMENT.

WILLIAM T. SMITHSON, banker and dealer in exchange, No. 14 Wall street, New York. The card of Mr. Smithson will enable his friends to find him when in New York; and every Southern Methodist is, we doubt not, a warm friend of one of the truest men, politically and ecclesiastically, that the South ever produced. No one is better known among us or more admired for his sterling integrity of character. Mr. S. is at the banking house of Lewis, Daniel & Co., New York. Address box 4730.

DESIRE not the little sins; they have ruined many a soul. Despise not the little duties; they have been to many an excellent discipline.

MEMPHIS CONFERENCE.

The reports of numbers in the church were uncommonly full and correct—every charge being reported, a fact highly creditable to the brethren. These reports were digested and systematized in first rate order by the Rev. J. W. Boswell, statistical secretary, who deserved a vote of thanks. There are in the bounds of the Conference 39,681 white members, and 434 local preachers—an increase of 2,830 in the former, and of 39 in the latter. The colored members are now nearly all reported to the Colored Conference.

Of baptisms there were reported—infant, 1,299, and adult, 2,723; a marked increase here also, but reports still quite incomplete.

The Sunday schools, likewise, have increased in number as well as in efficiency and usefulness; the number reported being—Sunday schools, 406; officers and teachers, 3,042; scholars, 19,028. Success in this important department is largely due to the Sunday school agent, Rev. J. T. C. Collins; though in the great day private members of the church, scores and hundreds of them, will share in the rewards due to faithful laborers in this plenteous harvest. For details, reference is made to the report on Sunday schools.

The reports on finance, missions, ministerial support, church extension and parsonage erection, all show improvement, and to them reference is made in evidence of progress, and for incitement to future effort.

Altogether, the statistical information collected during the session, and the spirit breathed by the brethren of the ministry and laity, in connection with the plans for the year to come, indicate not only health and growth, but for the future the graces of faith, courage, endurance, activity and fidelity, and from the prevalence of these graces we argue and predict a glorious success following the men of God to whom the church, as well as the great Head thereof, hath said: Go and preach—and they obey the command.—Memphis Christian Advocate.

INDIAN MISSION CONFERENCE.—Our friends who subscribed liberally last spring to the support of our Indian mission will be rejoiced to learn that the work of God is prospering among our red brethren. The investments made in this interest are well made. We are getting sure and quick returns. Just think of an increase the past year of eight hundred and fifty three native members and six local preachers. We know of no mission that pays better than this. We are encouraged to do more, and on a much larger scale, for the Indians, than ever before. The Conference held its session at Oemulgee, Creek Nation, September 30 to October 2. Bishop Pierce presided, and J. C. Robinson was secretary. We have not yet received the minutes, but hope they will be forwarded as soon as possible. From the Memphis Christian Advocate we learn that three Indian preachers, Heavy Butler, Charles C. Campbell and John Sevier, were admitted on trial. John T. Talbott was admitted into full connection, and James T. Brice readmitted. John T. Talbott and John Sevier, traveling preachers, were elected and ordained deacons; also, Lyman Harrison, Jefferson Long and Heavy Butler, local preachers. Walker Carey and Standing Man died during the year. The characters of the preachers were all examined and passed. The statistics show in the Conference fifty-nine local preachers, three thousand and seventy-nine native members, sixty white, and one hundred and thirty-one colored members—an increase in the year of six local preachers, eight hundred and fifty-three native members, twelve white, and six colored members. Infants three hundred and twenty, and adults four hundred and seventy-two, were baptized during the year. There were reported three Sunday schools, fifteen teachers and two hundred scholars. There was collected for missions, $260 60. The next session of the Conference will be held at Fort Gibson.—Nashville Advocate.

THE CHRISTIAN INDEX.—The first number of this paper for the colored people is before us. It is published by Rev. Dr. Watson, at Memphis, Tenn. Price, one dollar. This sheet is full of good reading, and is issued in the spirit of enterprise which has characterized the M. E. Church South in all our publishing interests. We hope that our preachers will tell the colored people of its existence, and secure for it a liberal patronage.

TRUST him little who praises all; him less who censures all; and him least who is indifferent about all.

A WOMAN'S Rights Convention at St. Petersburg is talked of, to which Mr. Mill is to be invited.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE ROMANCE OF SPANISH HISTORY. By John S. C. Abbott, author of "The French Revolution," etc. With illustrations. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers. 1869. 12mo, 462 pages.

No history has more romance in it than the Spanish, and the author has culled the choicest materials in this line. We heartily join the author in cherishing "the hope that this volume may aid in luring the eager readers of our land from the present engrossing devotion to fiction, to the far more instructive and not less romantic incidents of real history." For sale by George Ellis, opposite the post office, New Orleans.

THE POLAR WORLD. A Popular Description of Man and Nature in the Arctic and Antarctic Regions of the Globe. By Dr. G. Hartwig, author of "The Sea and Its Living Wonders," and "The Tropical World." With additional chapters and one hundred and sixty illustrations. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers. 1869. Octavo, 488 pages.

Everything appertaining to the polar world seems to be in this book. The sea, the air, the earth, the inhabitants of all the elements, are described. The natural history, ethnology, flora, fauna, geology of these hyperborean parts, are presented in a popular and sufficiently accurate and scientific style. These bleak regions of the earth abound in the most wonderful and sublime phenomena, and in scenes the most beautiful and sublime. The results of the most recent explorations and discoveries are given, and our recently acquired territory of Alaska is prominently noticed. The illustrations are numerous, and contribute much to the value of the work. For sale by George Ellis, New Orleans.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for December is at hand. Among other articles of interest we have specially noticed "The Coming Crisis in Canada." "The Vicar of Bullhampton" and "Beyond the Breakers" are continued in this number, with abundant illustrations throughout.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY for December, 1869, has also been received. The table of contents is, as usual, most varied and appetizing to the lover of fresh and able literature. The publishers assure the public that the Atlantic for 1870 "shall be at least equal to the past, and of special and permanent value in: 1. Serial and short stories. 2. Poetry. 3. Essays on literary, biographical, historical, scientific and social subjects. 4. Papers on political, sanitary, philosophical, religious and economical topics. 5. Sketches of travel, discovery and adventure."

THE GALAXY.—New York: Sheldon & Co. This magazine is out in good time, and full of fresh and instructive matter. The article on "The Morals and Manners of Jerusalem" is suggestive.

THE RIVERSIDE MAGAZINE.—For young people. Published by Hurd & Houghton, New York. December, 1869. Richly illustrated, as usual, and a very interesting number. The table of contents is varied and attractive.

ALEXANDRIA DIST. MEETING.

MR. EDITOR: Our District Meeting has just closed. It was quite an interesting season of grace and business. The meeting convened at the Big Creek church, on Brother Collier's work. Representatives and reports were present from nearly all the charges. The reports of some were unfavorable, especially that of Alexandria station, once the best station in this part of the Conference. The brother on this work is residing some distance, while he has much to contend with in getting to the work, and after he gets to it he has no church, the former one being destroyed. Alexandria is a fine field had we some one who could live there and attend to the work. There have been over four hundred accessions this year throughout the district. Numbers of places within the bounds of circuits are almost without preaching. The financial reports of the district are not yet complete, and we would be sorry for all the circuits if we knew they were. But we have confidence when we see Conference is two months off, and several charges have not had the last "agony." The stewards ought to know how the preacher feels when question seven is asked, as he looks round toward them with a countenance of mingled sorrow, despair, pity, love and fear, as well as shame, that seems to say: "Oh, how I hate to tell it!" Our presiding elder has not been paid up fully yet. We would say to any young brother who wants to preach to the poor: "Come over to Alexandria district and help us." We can give them their victuals and clothes, and the Lord will give the souls. We live on corn bread, bacon, faith and cold potatoes, receiving humbly many "cups of cold water" from a poor brother, now and then, who uses it out of his neighbor's spring, in the name of the Lord.

Rev. J. Smith, Brother John Barr, Rev. E. F. Pressley and Major Sims are the lay delegates. R. Price, Dr. J. P. Ward, Rev. Jacob Kile and J. W. Franklin, alternates.

PRAIRIE.

NOVEMBER 3, 1869.

BISHOP KAVANAUGH, after the adjournment of the Memphis Conference, made a visit to this city, where he received a very cordial welcome from old friends and new, and from the congregations worshiping in the Second street and Hernando street churches. Sabbath last, morning and evening he preached to very large audiences, and his discourses were instructive and edifying, and at the same time entertaining to many hearers.

Wednesday last the Bishop left for the South Georgia Conference, intending to visit the brethren in Columbus before the opening of the session in Cuthbert, December 1.—Memphis Christian Advocate.

WALTER LAMBUTH, son of our missionary in Shanghai, gave us a call last week. He left China in May, and came via California and New York—in which latter State he has spent some time with his relatives. He is about fifteen years of age, and was born in China. He has gone to Lebanon, and will reside with Mrs. Kelley, and pursue his studies at Cumberland University. The mission families were well when he left Shanghai. Charles Marshall, the young Chinaman who accompanied Mrs. Lambuth to this country, and who returned to China last year, is doing well—teaching young Chinese ideas "how to shoot" in English. We hope Charles will yet prove a power for good among his countrymen. John Lambuth, who came over with him to this country, and made a visit to China in 1863, and returned in 1865 to the United States, is now engaged as a printer in our Publishing House, and is doing remarkably well.—Nashville Advocate.

VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.—The Virginia Conference assembled in this city on Wednesday, the 10th instant. The attendance of preachers and lay delegates is full. Among the visitors are Drs. Smith, McFerrin, Redford, Munsey, Morand, Boud, Poisal, Tudor, Wilson and others.

The business has progressed well and harmoniously. The reports from the churches show a gratifying increase in the membership.

The preachers generally look well. Three have died during the past year.

Several young preachers have been received on trial.

The venerable Dr. William A. Smith was received by the Conference with the deepest affection and sympathy. He was himself much affected, and in his feeble state of health could not venture to address the Conference beyond a touching expression of his thanks. The doctor's health has improved during his sojourn in Virginia, and we sincerely hope he will be fully restored.—Richmond Advocate.

THE exclusion of the Bible from the public schools of Cincinnati, by the Board of Education, is certainly a step in the wrong direction. A knowledge of the Scriptures is as essential a part of the education of a child as is history, mathematics, or any other branch of learning, besides its most salutary effect on the morals, and consequently upon the discipline, of a school. The Education Board is composed of thirty-seven members. Twenty-two voted for exclusion. Of these, ten are Catholics, eight Free Thinkers, three Protestants and one a Jew. Of the fifteen opposed to exclusion, thirteen are Protestants, one a Free Thinker, and one a Jew. The board also went further than to simply exclude the Bible; they passed a resolution prohibiting the use of religious books and sacred songs in the schools!—Methodist.

THE Rev. W. H. Morgan, of the Memphis Conference, died suddenly in Somerville, Tennessee, October 18. So says the Memphis Christian Advocate.

THE MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO. In the course of less than twenty years this company have grown, from a very small beginning, to be the most celebrated and extensive makers of instruments of the organ and melodeon kind in the world, producing and finding demand for several times as many instruments as any other makers. Four large elephant tusks must be cut up every week to supply them with ivory for keys; so they must be said to consume two large elephants per week. Their organs rank highest, not only in this country, but also in Europe, where the demand for them is rapidly increasing.

This remarkable success is undoubtedly owing greatly to their superior skill in this specialty and to the very important improvements they have effected in this class of instruments; but it is the result, almost in equal measure, perhaps, of adherence to and energetic pursuit of certain principles. Inflexible rules with them are (1) to do the very best work only, availing themselves of every improvement, and being careful to suffer no inferior instrument to leave their factory; and (2) to sell always at smallest remunerative profits, having fixed prices which are alike to all.

Any one buying an organ made by this company has the satisfaction of knowing that he has one of the best instruments of the class which can be made, and this at the lowest price at which such work can be afforded.

DURING the Mechanics' Exhibition at Boston more than thirty-six thousand individuals were weighed, whose aggregate weight was four million seven hundred and eighty-eight thousand pounds. The average weight of the thirty-six thousand was one hundred and thirty-three pounds.

A SELF-STYLED general has been enjoying free board in good society in Quebec, by promising prominent men a free excursion to California.

Obituaries.

MRS. HARRIET FUQUA, the daughter of James O. Cosby and his wife, Margaret McCall, was born in Elbert co., Georgia, on the 14th of May, 1802. When about twelve years old, her parents moved to Wilkinson county, Mississippi. There in 1820 she was married to Drury B. Fuqua. Before her marriage she became a member of the Methodist Church. It was at the "Bethel" camp meeting ground; and there, too, she was subsequently converted. So clear was the evidence of her acceptance that through all the trials of widowhood and loss of dear ones she never for a moment doubted it. In 1852 she removed to Clinton, Louisiana, and resided there until 1865, when she removed with her son, James O. Fuqua, to Baton Rouge. There she died, on the twenty-sixth July, 1869. Of her four children, three lived to be grown. Her son Joseph died at the age of twenty-eight a very joyous death. Her life and character are pleasant to contemplate. She had the equal temper and gentleness of the Saviour in no common measure. The word of God, the house of God, and the people of God were her special delight. She was fond of a garden and lived much among the flowers, and her "adorning" was the incorruptible spirit of beauty. "For after this manner, in the old time, the holy women, who trusted in God, adorned themselves." She dearly loved her children and friends, and became the centre of a circle of loving ones, who now reckon it one of the greatest of Heaven's mercies to them that they ever had a mother and friend so pure and noble, so sincere and lovely. By woman the Saviour came, and in woman we see perfected the most exalted harmony and holiness of the Christian life. She looked upon death only as the opening of a door that would instantly introduce her to a fuller view of "the Beloved"—her Saviour.

J. C. KEENAN.

Died, at his residence, in the parish of Caldwell, on the thirteenth instant, OLIVER BOLAND HILL, in the sixty-third year of his age.

He was taken ill very suddenly on Wednesday night, and died from an attack of heart disease.

Colonel Hill has been a member of the church for upwards of forty years, and throughout life, since professing religion, evinced a strong attachment to and a sincere belief in the religion of Jesus Christ.

It was over his counsel to the young, and those with whom he conversed on the subject of religion, to regard the interests of the soul as infinitely superior in importance to all worldly interests, and that, though our motto should be to "aim high" in worldly things, we should at the same time never allow our religious principles to become subordinate to worldly aspirations.

His house has been at all times open to ministers of the Gospel, and among the happiest hours of his life were doubtless those spent in Christian communion with the servants of God.

He had a warm feeling of sympathy for the afflicted, distressed and unfortunate, and his hand was not unknown to deeds of private charity.

He had strong faith in Christ as the Redeemer of mankind, and relied on the efficacy of the atonement of Christ as a passport to the climes of eternal bliss. He appeared not to dread his departure from this world, and at times during life would dwell with delight on the prospect of a realization of the good things God has in store for those who live in conformity with the Gospel and persevere to the end.

His instructions to his children in the doctrines of Christianity were given in their early youth, and not without effect, as has been proved by the death of one of them, who died in the hope of a home beyond the grave, in heaven above.

His Methodist brethren, the Methodist itinerant preacher, and his Christian friends, will no more grasp his hand in Christian fellowship in this world, but will meet him again in a higher sphere of existence, to join in rendering praises of thanksgiving to Christ, the Lamb of God, in one continual hymn of praise, throughout eternity.

He has left an aged companion and four lovely sons, together with many friends, to mourn his loss. But they have the blessed assurance of meeting their sainted father and friend where parting is not known.

R. T. WILLIAMS.

OCTOBER 23, 1869.

Died, at the residence of her father, November 7, 1869, near Hopewell, Greene county, Alabama, of disease of the heart, Sister MARTHA A. R. FOSTER, eldest daughter of William H. and Epsybeth Foster. She was born in Gwinett county, Georgia, August 30, 1827. Her parents moved to Greene county, Alabama, in the year 1834. She joined the Methodist Church at about the age of twelve years, and was ever a devoted Christian. As we followed her to the grave, among a crowd of weeping friends, we heard it said that those who knew her longest loved her best for her many Christian virtues. She did not have the advantage of early opportunities for a good education, yet she was a woman of more than an ordinary mind. She was much devoted to the Sabbath school, both as a scholar and teacher, for which she was eminently qualified by her many Christian virtues.

In her nineteenth year her pious mother was called to her reward, leaving seven little brothers and sisters to her care, four of whom have preceded her, to join their mother in the saints' eternal home. The youngest, an infant, says that she never knew the need of a mother, for she always had one in her Sister Mattie. She was so much devoted to her father and brothers and sisters that she often denied herself of the company of the young, choosing to stay at home and act the part of a mother. Not only will father and sisters mourn her loss, but many of the ministers of the Mobile and Montgomery Conferences remember her hospitality and labor of love to make them comfortable at her home, which indeed has been a home for the messenger of the Cross.

Eight years before her death she was called upon again, in the providence of God, to take charge of a little niece, which her sister, in her last words, committed to her care. And she, too, can say that Aunt Mattie has always been a mother to her. Her aged father, who has been the subject of affliction for a number of years, says she never complained of trouble or self-denial when his wants were to be relieved at her hand, which was always ready, even at a whisper.

And last of all, though not least, when death came she was ready, though sudden, for her friends did not think she was dangerously ill until a few hours before the King of Terrors came. Her pain was so intense that she could scarcely speak; yet when her father asked her, "Martha, are you afraid to die?" she responded, "No, pa, I am not afraid to die. All is well." One of her sisters being from home, she was asked what must they tell Octavia. "Tell her I am not afraid to die."

THE MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO.,
WINNERS OF
THE PARIS EXPOSITION MEDAL,
WHO HAVE UNIFORMLY BEEN AWARDED THE HIGHEST HONORS
AT INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITIONS IN THIS COUNTRY,

so that their work is the acknowledged standard of excellence in its department, respectfully announce that, with extended and perfected facilities, and by the exclusive use of recent improvements, they are now producing yet more perfect Organs than ever before, in great variety as to style and price, adapted to all public and private uses; for Drawing Rooms, Libraries, Music Rooms, Concert Halls, Lodges, Churches, Schools, etc., in plain and elegant cases, all of which they are enabled by their unequaled facilities for manufacture to sell at prices of inferior work.

The recent improvements in these Organs have so increased their usefulness and popularity that they are unquestionably the most desirable instruments obtainable for family use, as well as churches, schools, etc., while the prices at which they can be afforded ($50 to $1,000 each) adapt them to the means and requirements of all classes. They are equally adapted to secular and sacred music, are elegant as furniture, occupy little space, are not liable to get out of order, (not requiring tuning once where a pianoforte is tuned twenty times,) are very durable, and easy to learn to play upon.

The M. & H. Organ Co. are now selling four octave Organs for $50 each; five octave Organs, five stops, with two sets of vibrators, for $125, and other styles at proportionate rates.

For testimony to the superiority of their Organs, the Mason & Hamlin Organ Co. respectfully refer to the musical profession generally; a majority of the most prominent musicians in the country, with many of eminence in Europe, having given public testimony that the Mason & Hamlin Organs excel all others.

A circular containing this testimony in full will be sent free to any one desiring it; also a descriptive circular, containing full particulars respecting these instruments, with correct drawings of the different styles and the lowest prices, which are fixed and invariable. Address

A CARD.....A CARD.
DR. ROBERT HUNTER,
OF NEW YORK,

Editor of the "New York Specialist and Journal of Diseases of the Chest," and the author of "Practical Letters on the Nature, Cause and Cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma and Catarrh, by Inhalation," has arrived in New Orleans and opened an office at 165 Canal street, for the treatment of affections of the Throat, Lungs and Heart.

Dr. Robert Hunter is the inventor of the Inhaling Instrument and Catarrh Syrup in general use by the profession.

The Inhalation Treatment of Throat and Lung diseases was introduced by him into this country, and for the past twenty years he has devoted himself exclusively to this branch of his profession.

As many persons have adopted his treatment, copied his letters, and in some instances unwarrantably used his name, he desires to state that this is his first professional visit to New Orleans since 1861.

The following extracts from leading New York papers will show the estimate in which his writings and practice are held in that city:

[From the N. Y. Herald.]

"No man, we will venture to say, in the whole annals of the profession, has ever introduced a more important innovation on the old system of practice, or gained in a shorter time more converts to his opinions. But the most incontrovertible evidence of the efficacy of Dr. Hunter's system of practice is furnished by the City Inspector's reports. By these it is shown that since the introduction of Inhalation the deaths from consumption have decreased upward of thirty per cent. Now we know, from the great number of cases treated and cures effected by Dr. Robert Hunter, that his labors contributed, if not to effect all, at least the greater share of this benefit."

[From the N. Y. World.]

"It is a novelty to see a man of Dr. Hunter's learning and experience engaged in the great work of popular medicinal instruction. All the light that can possibly be thrown on the nature, causes and treatment of consumption—the scourge of our race—will, we feel sure, be gratefully received by the public."

[From the Home Journal.]

"We have repeatedly stated that we regard Dr. Robert Hunter as a public benefactor, and we hope to see his common sense ideas prevail, not only to the extinguishment of consumption, but to the utter breaking down of all stupid deference to old ideas."

[From the N. Y. Express.]

"The fact is now too well established for dispute that the inhalation of medicated vapors, as recommended and practiced by Dr. Robert Hunter, is the most simple, rational and successful treatment for diseases of the lungs yet reached."

Dr. Hunter can be consulted at No. 165 Canal street—office formerly occupied by Dr. Moss.

"WHO WOULD SUFFER?"—IT IS NOW twenty-two years since Dr. Tobias first introduced the "Venitian Liniment" in the United States, and never in a single instance has his medicine failed to do all, if not more than is stated in his pamphlet. As an external remedy in cases of Chronic Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Bruises, Burns, Cuts, Sores, Swellings, Sprains, Stings of Insects, and Pains in Limbs, Back and Chest, its wonderful curative powers are miraculous. Taken internally for the cure of Cholera, Colic, Diarrhea, Dysentery, Sick Headache and Vomiting, its soothing and penetrating qualities are felt as soon as taken. The oath with which each bottle is accompanied will show that there is nothing injurious in its composition. Thousands of certificates have been received, speaking of the rare virtues of this valuable article. Any person after having used it once will never be without it. Every bottle of the genuine has the signature of "S. T. Tobias" on the outside wrapper. Sold by the druggists and storekeepers throughout the United States. Price, fifty cents. LITTLE BROWN HANDS.

They drive home the cows from the pasture,
Up through the long, shady lane,
Where the quail whistles loud in the wheat fields
That are yellow with ripening grain.
They find in the thick waving grasses,
Where the scarlet-tipped strawberry grows;
They gather the earliest snow-drops,
And the first crimson buds of the rose.

They toss the new hay in the meadow;
They gather the elder-bloom white;
They find where the dusky grapes purple
In the soft-tinted October light;
They know where the apples hang ripest,
And are sweeter than Italy's wines;
They know where the fruit hangs the thickest
On the long thorny blackberry vines.

They gather the delicate sea weed,
And build tiny castles of sand;
They pick up the beautiful sea shells,
Fairy barks they have drifted to land.
They wave from the tall rocking tree-tops,
Where the oriole's hammock-nest swings;
And at night-time are folded in slumber
By a song that a fond mother sings.

Those who toil bravely are strongest;
The humble and poor become great;
And from these brown-handed children
Shall grow mighty rulers of state.
The pen of the author and statesman—
The noble and wise of the land—
The sword and the chisel and pallet
Shall be held in the little brown hand.

LUCIA'S MISTAKE.

When Lucia awoke one Wednesday morning her first thought was, "Here's another day; now what can I do to-day that will be pleasant?" She considered the question for a while, and though her time was entirely at her own disposal, she seemed to have some difficulty in making up her mind how to employ it. The evening was provided for—she expected to go to a party; but what should she do all day long? "I suppose," said she to herself in a half dissatisfied tone, "that I can go to see Ellen Somers this morning, and after that I will play one game of croquet; I do not think I shall care to play more than one, and then—well, there doesn't seem to be anything else especially pleasant that I can think of to do. I wish there was a picnic, or a drive, or a row on the river, or something nice for this afternoon, something to amuse me and pass away the time until evening. It is so dull here."

But when we lay out such definite plans at the beginning of the day, it is a rare thing to have them all succeed. Ellen Somers was not at home when Lucia called, and this was a disappointment; she had her game of croquet, and won, but at the close of it she declared that she was "tired to death of croquet, and believed she would never play again, certainly not on such a ground as they had, so different from Julia Bliss', which was eighty feet long, and as level as a table." She did not enjoy the party as much as she thought she should; two or three friends whom she expected to meet were not there, and the hostess would not allow round dances at her house; so that when Lucia came home and went to her room at night, she felt somehow that her day had not fulfilled her expectations, and was in quite an unsatisfied state of mind. She found her sister Nellie sitting up for her, waiting to hear how she had enjoyed the party.

"Have you had a pleasant evening?" asked Nellie.

"Not particularly," answered Lucia in rather a desponding tone; "in fact, I have not had a good day at all. Things haven't seemed pleasant; and even this party, that I have looked forward to for two or three days, wasn't what I thought it would be. What kind of day have you had, and what have you been doing? I have scarcely seen you."

"Oh, a little of everything," answered Nellie pleasantly; "the day hasn't been half long enough for me. I did not get time for even one game of croquet, and I like it so much."

"Why didn't you have time?" asked Lucia.

"Well, you see this morning, just after I finished washing the breakfast things, all those cherries came, and had to be stoned for preserves, and I couldn't let mother do them alone; and by the time they were done little Dora waked up; she happened to see me as I was passing the nursery, and would come to me, and she was so cunning and sweet I could not refuse her. I enjoyed having her very much too."

"I can't bear taking care of children," said Lucia. "I should think Betty could have taken her."

"It is Betty's washing day," replied Nellie gently. "She could not take her; besides, I love to have her for awhile every day. Then I have sewed some."

"Sewed!" said Lucia; "I thought you said the other day that your sewing was all done."

"So it is," replied Nellie with a little hesitation. "I was sewing for Aunt Leonora."

"I don't see why you should sew for Aunt Leonora," said Lucia. "If her eyes are so bad that she cannot do her own sewing, I should think she might hire it done."

"My dear Lucia," replied Nellie, smiling, "you need not be so indignant on my account. She does hire it done; but this was just a little thing that she wanted in a hurry, and I offered to do it for her."

"If you will make a slave of yourself," said Lucia with a sigh, "I do not suppose I can help it."

"Then," continued Nellie, "after dinner I had my practicing, and just as I was finishing that Bridget came up to ask me to show her how to make these new rolls for tea, and by the time that was done it was time to dress myself. So I have had a busy day."

"You haven't done one thing to amuse yourself," said Lucia, "and yet you seem to have had a pleasanter time than I had."

"I don't know," answered Nellie; "I haven't thought anything about whether it was pleasant or not. I suppose it has been, for I have felt very happy all day. Good night, I am sleepy." And Nellie closed her eyes, and in a minute or two was in a sound slumber.

What was the difference between these two sisters? Lucia made pleasure her aim, and therefore she failed to obtain it; happiness that is pursued for itself almost always flies before us.

Nellie, as she herself said, never thought much about whether what she said was going to make her happy. She took up the simple duties of life that came to her, which Lucia rejected because they were not amusements, and found in the performance of them that happiness which her sister sought in vain. Amusement being not her occupation, but her recreation, she was ready to enjoy it keenly at the proper time. One cannot live on cake and sweetmeats; the palate soon loathes them, and they can continue to be relished only when they are eaten sparingly and seldom. Perhaps the secret of the difference between Lucia and Nellie went even deeper than this. Lucia lived for herself; Nellie to do her duty to others and to God; and the happiness which fled from the eager grasp of one sister came tamely and perched and sang on the unselfish hands of the other.—Observer and Commonwealth.

ORIGIN OF SOME WORDS.—Wrong is from wringan, to twist or turn, as in the Swedish and Danish vraug; hence that which is wrung from one by force, but does not convey the later ethical idea of inherent injustice.

Wicked is from the Anglo-Saxon wiccian, to bewitch, and a wicked person is one who is bewitched; but as such persons were thought to do all manner of evil things, the word, through metaphoric change, became a symbol of moral depravity.

Virtue, "moral purity," is from vir, a man, and manliness is but another word for virtue; but Christianity dignified virtue into true manliness, or the highest quality of a man. To the mind of the heathenish Roman, valor (virtus) was the highest quality of manhood; but the Christian thought moral goodness the true quality of manhood; hence the metaphoric meaning.

Heaven is simply raised up, from hebban, to raise up, from which we have heofen, heafen, perfect particles raised, which is from the same root as the Latin cœlum, hollow and contains nothing indicative of the Christian notion of heaven.

N. P. Willis discovered a remarkable element of social culture in the English as compared with the French. For example, he stated that the French cannot say at home, but say chez moi with me. Now, home is the Gothic haim, Anglo-Saxon ham, German heim, and signifies literally to or for lying, and is a contraction for the old dative heimme; hence heim. In this word there is nothing which would denote high social feeling, or the more recent endearing associations connected with the word home. There is certainly earlier culture displayed in the Latin domus, Slavic domu, Celtic dam, Sanscrit dama, from the root dam, or dem, to build, showing that, before the separation of the above named languages, the mother race had for home more than a mere place to lie.—Home Monthly.

TIME USED IS LIFE.—An eminent divine was suffering under chronic disease, and consulted three physicians. They declared, on being questioned by the sick man, that his disease would be followed by death in a shorter or longer time, according to the manner in which he lived; but they unanimously advised him to give up his office, because, in his situation, mental agitation would be fatal to him.

"If," inquired the divine, "I give myself up to repose, how long, gentlemen, will you guarantee my life?"

"Probably six years," answered the doctors.

"And if I continue in office?"

"Three years at most."

"Your servant, gentlemen," he replied, "I should prefer living two or three years in doing some good, to living six in idleness."

The Farm and Garden.

MULES OR HORSES.

No sensible farmer will deny that mules have some few advantages over horses. Then why not use mules instead of horses? When will they make the change? I answer, when they prefer utility, interest and a just taste to a diseased fancy. I know many farmers who would be ashamed to be caught riding in a carriage behind a pair of mules; and why? Is it because a mule has longer ears or smaller feet than a horse? I think it proceeds from a species of false pride. For although I admit that a good horse looks better than nine-tenths of the mules we see, yet I deny that a bad horse looks better than a good mule. And why is it that our horses look so much better than most of our mules? The reason is this—our farmers have a false notion that it is not necessary that a mule should be kept clean, therefore they always look rough and dirty. My belief is that if a mule had the same attention in every respect that is usually bestowed on a horse, he will look as well and in fact will outlook and outwork most horses of any breed.

But there are several other items besides appearance to be taken into consideration.

From the report of an agricultural committee in South Carolina, in the year 1824, I quote the following: "The annual expense of keeping a horse is equal to his value. A horse at four years old will not bring much more than his cost. Two mules can be raised at a less expense than one horse (?) The mule is fit for labor earlier, and if of sufficient size will perform as much labor as a horse; and if, attended to when first put to work, his gait and his habits may be formed to suit his owner."

I am convinced that a pair of mules may be kept in good condition, and do all the work usually required of a pair of horses on a farm, on three-fourths the hay and one-half the grain that would usually be fed to a pair of horses doing the same work.

The expense of shoeing a mule the year round is not more than one-third that of the horse; his hoofs being harder and more horny, and so slow of growth that the shoes require no removal, but hold till worn out; and the wear, from the lightness of the animal, is much less.

They are always found to be truer pullers and quicker travelers with a load than horses—they are more steady in their draught than horses, and are less likely to waste their strength, and therefore are more suitable to work before oxen. In hoe-harrowing, his feet being smaller and following each other more nearly in a line, he is not so likely to tread on the corn.

The longevity of the mule is proverbial. Pliny mentions one eighty years old; De Russ saw two in England which were seventy years old. Therefore the owner of the mule may reasonably look for the continuance of his mule capital for thirty years, while at the end of fifteen years the owner of the horse must look to his crops or his bank for renewing his. A correspondent of the Baltimore Patriot asserts that "Colonel John E. Howard had a pair of mules that worked thirty years, after which they were sold to a carter in the city, and performed as hard service for several years longer."

After so much said about mules it will be deemed folly, by some, to ask the question, What is a mule? The answer will, nine times out of ten, be, "a hybrid between the horse and the ass." Yet this is not exactly correct, for a hybrid between the horse and ass will produce two distinct races of animals, as different from one another as a horse is different from a mule. One of these, the offspring of the mule horse or stallion and the female ass, is the hinny, (from the Latin hinnus, the derivative of the word hinnire, to neigh.) This animal is characteristic of the horse, which he closely resembles in many qualities; but he also inherits the hardy constitution and activity of his mother, the ass. One distinguishing feature of the hinny is that he neighs like a horse, and his ears are smaller and his feet larger than the mule proper. In every respect he partakes more of the character of the horse than the ass. The second hybrid between the male ass or jack and the female horse or mare, is the mule, (from the Latin hemionus, or half ass.) This hybrid takes after his sire, as in the case of the former hybrid. I have never had any experience with the hinny, but have heard it said they were preferable to the mule for pleasure traveling, but not for heavy draught. Can any of the many readers of the Telegraph give us light upon this subject? I should be glad to have it.

My belief is that if a pair of mule colts were taken at weaning and brought up similar in every way to a pair of horses, they (the mules) would be much preferable for common farm work, and quite as good for road traveling. But we often see farmers keeping six or eight horses; why not change them for as many mules? Or, if too proud to ride behind a pair of mules, why not exchange six of the eight for as many mules? Why cannot our farmers raise mules more than they do?

But if we are to take the opinion of De Denyou, the celebrated French physiologist, as a guide, we must be careful what mares we use for one thing. No amount of blood on the part of the dam will improve the mule; for whether the mare be common dunghill breed, or as thoroughbred as Spiletta, the mother of Eclipse, the offspring is still a mule of the same ass type. De Denyon tells us that a mare which has once borne a hybrid becomes herself a hybrid, and can never bear a perfect animal of her own race afterward. Imagine our fates, then, if we stint such mares as Gray Eagle, Wagner, Lily Dale or Sallie Gray, to common jacks, and afterward breed them to a Revenue, a Lexington, a Monarch or a Sweeper, and find the progeny on its appearance to be a long-eared mule with a stripe along its back and a bar across its shoulders! Have any of the readers of the Telegraph, or can the editor give us any reliable data on this point? De Denyon's comes from too far off. After all the greatest part of our valuable knowledge comes from the experience of others. This is at least the case with me.—Correspondent of Germantown Telegraph.

DISINFECTANTS.—Some one says that noxious effluvia are absorbed in an incredibly short space of time, if two or three onions are cut in thin slices, and put on a plate, to be renewed every six hours. This is just as true as that the smarting from the scratch of a pin becomes instantaneously unfelt if the person is knocked down. The only safe, healthful and effectual method of keeping a sick room "sweet," is to keep everything scrupulously dry and clean; instantly remove every article of clothing or bedding which has an atom of dampness or moisture upon it; do not allow even pure water to stand a moment in the apartment; let the fireplace be always kept open, with a frequent and free admission of the pure and the fresh air from outdoors. This should be done every two or three hours during the twenty-four. It is the pure air that sick people want, not an atmosphere loaded with the fumes of onions, for in a pint of air they displace just as many particles of fresh air as would burnt sugar, cologne water or the sulphureted hydrogen of the privy; for, be it remembered, it is not the odor which does the mischief, so much as the deficiency of nutritious particles of the atmosphere which it takes the place of. We should rather think that every additional odoriferous article introduced into a sick room only added to the difficulty, even though it were the perfumes from "Araby the Blest." The greatest humanity we can show to the sick is to secure to them the most important remedies ever known, to wit, quietness, cleanliness and pure air; these alone would cure three-fourths of all our diseases, but we will not use them; yet they are everywhere attainable, and cost nothing but a little trouble. With the same physicians and the same medicines the mortality of the British army in the Crimea was diminished one-half, through the influence of Florence Nightingale, in the procurement of greater comfort and cleanliness among the sick.—Hall's Journal.

I HOLD that seeking the good of others gives a man tact, makes him amiable, and fills him with the most exquisite sense of propriety. He knows how to do good in the right way. There is ever so much Scripture against doing good with noise and racket.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

THE BEST COOKING STOVE FOR WOOD NOW IN USE.

THE FASHION.

We call especial attention to this Stove, which has been produced at great expense, combining all the new and important improvements; also to the extra height of the oven under the fire chamber, the Patent Air Chamber, Front Doors, and Patent White Enameled Iron Knobs, the improvements in the covers and centre pieces, all of which have been covered by Letters Patent, and are used in no other Stove. They are warranted to stand fire, or others sent free of charge in all cases. We have all sizes of this justly celebrated Stove, both the Extended Back with cast iron Enameled Reservoir and Faucet, Tin Warming Closet, Griddron Cover, etc. The part of the top supporting the Reservoir is raised so that the fire is above the top plate, instead of below, as is the case in most of the Stoves now used, and the heat is forced directly against the whole surface of the bottom of the Reservoir. The Reservoir, being detached from the pipe, can be removed at pleasure, thereby forming a six-hole Stove—the best in use, as the back holes will heat as well or better than the middle ones. THE POWER OF PRAYER.

PLAIN AND EXTENDED BACKS,

Prayer is as powerful as ever. The instrument has lost nothing of its ancient value, only we have not learned how to use it. No secret impediment, hid beneath the waves of mystery, has stopped the working of our telegraph, and there is no defect in the medium itself, that makes our feeble signals fail. Even now a true prayer whispered from the dust will thrill to the throne; and the word has not yet been recalled which says, "Before they call I will answer, and while they are yet speaking I will hear." We are straitened in God, but in ourselves. As at the cry of Moses the Red sea was parted by the rod of omnipotence; as after three years' drouth, when the bird dropped from the bough, and the leaf withered on the stem, and all Israel was but a dying nation in a dying land, the cry of Elijah brought down abundance of rain," the cry of the fever might still bring wonders to pass, and if prayer were put forth all its power we should see yet greater things than these." "Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, and see if I will not open the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, so that there shall not be room enough to contain it." Is this power of prayer is the very thing we want, and how can it be obtained? Can we forget that the power of prayer is the power of God, and that he is ready to impart it at our request? Even the patriarch of heathen lands had light enough to say, "Prayers are the daughters of God;" and the ancient Greeks thought all things were possible to the enthusiast—that is, to be filled with the Deity. "Be ye filled with the spirit," is the language of our more sure word of prophecy; and to be filled with the spirit is to be filled with light, filled with faith, filled with the divine life which will be ever ascending to its source, and breaking forth, in free, spontaneous prayer.

Brethren, we must pray for the power of prayer; we must ask for the Spirit, taught by whose infinite love we can never ask "amiss;" for is not the promise still in force, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you? * * * If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more will your heavenly Father give his Holy Spirit to them that ask him?" Only, as a father may seldom gives his best gift to his children the moment they begin to ask for it, we should not be discouraged if God should not answer us forthwith; we must persevere—we must, with the light he has already given, continue to pray for more. The cry of the individual suppliant, the cry of all the mourners in Zion together, should be, "Behold, O Lord, a poor company of creatures groping for life! Thy Spirit is vital breath; we are ready to die if thy Spirit breathe not. Pity thine offspring, thou Father of mercies. Take from us, keep from us what thou wilt, but oh, withhold not thine Holy Spirit." —Rev. Charles Stanford.

DULL HEARERS.—We once heard a person, while speaking of a certain preacher, style him a "dull preacher."

It was not the first time we had heard the remark applied to a class of preachers who, while they seldom deal in the ornamental, always provided their hearers with solid truth. Possibly, we thought, the fault is dullness somewhere else. We have seen dull hearers as well as dull preachers. It does a man good to preach to a man or woman who is wide awake—not only their ears, but their ears open, and their hands at work. A listening infidel is a better hearer than a drowsy christian. A stubborn shake of the head, as our clearest arguments are urged, has more animation in it than a dreary nod, which may express approval or conceal a yawn. When people are interested they will listen. When they recognize the message as from God, and hear, remembering that eternal interests are at stake, the preacher can feel that the intellect of the hearer grasps the truth, and his heart feels its power. Let hearers sharpen up, for there is no telling how much it will brighten the sermon. The upturned countenance of a listening congregation exalts the preacher, his mind takes in range of thought, and his tongue grows fluent as he tells it. He feels that his words take hold, and weave his arguments with vigor, he paints them firmly with strong appeals.

If your preacher is tame, perhaps it only reflects your dullness. Wake up! Help him, if not for your own good, for the sake of others. He may not do you good; but if God has called him to preach, he has a mission for somebody. Do not let your dullness blunt the edge of his sword.

BRAN NEW LETTERS!

FRESH TESTIMONIALS!

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

THE ASTONISHING FAMILY MEDICINE.

Saved from Death!—Read!

MONTGOMERY, ALA., June 28, 1869.

MESSRS. J. DARBY & CO., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y. Gents: Yours of the 23d is before me, and has attention. It gives me pleasure to say that my belief is that your Fluid, under the supervision of a kind Providence, saved the life of my youngest child, some six years ago, the child being wasted to a skeleton by the effects of teething, and an affection of the bowels therewith. I had never seen any one reduced so low to recover.

Physic had been tried in vain, until the physicians stated it was useless. A friend recommended your Fluid, or Dzone, which he stated was one of the component parts of it. I did so, and the effect was like magic, plainly discernible in one hour in its good effects, producing quiet and sleep almost at once, where irritation and sleepless restlessness had previously possessed the child to nearly entire exhaustion.

I at first administered it in a small way, two and three drops in a spoonful of water, and increased it to six and ten drops. It completely checked the bowels, and had the happiest effect, the child rapidly recovering.

I have tried your Fluid on animals, with the same effect—both horses and cows—mingling more or less in water, and letting them drink.

I have no hesitation in saying I believe it a specific for Chronic Diarrhea, or any violent affection of the bowels.

I would not be without it in my family under any consideration. Yours truly,

WILLIAM FOWLER.

Mr. Fowler is a member of the celebrated Banking House of Fowler & Somerville, Montgomery, Alabama.

"AND AGAIN!"

Read the following letter from Mr. Frank Saunders, a well known citizen, and brother-in-law of the beloved Bishop Paine, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

189 BROADWAY, N. Y., July 29, 1869.

MESSRS. J. DARBY & CO., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y. Gents: About the 10th of June last one of my children was taken with Scarlet Fever, in its most malignant form, and as soon as I could I procured your valuable disinfectant, Darby's Prophylactic Fluid. Although it was several days after the appearance of the disease before I began using the Fluid, still by a free use of it the disease was not only confined to the one case, but the malignity of that case somewhat mitigated.

During the use of the Fluid as a disinfectant in my family it was also tried in a case of headache and one of toothache, the results in each case being instantaneous relief. It was afterward tried in a case of Erysipelas, with almost equal success.

It is due to the merits of this compound, also, to state that the case of Erysipelas in question, being located in the foot, the Fluid, in its application, was brought in frequent contact with a troublesome corn on one of the feet, to the utter discomfiture of said corn, for upon subsequent examination it had disappeared, and though it was sought for diligently, it could not be found.

I hand you this, hoping it may be the means of inducing others at earth's poor sufferers to test for themselves, as I did, the great merits of this great remedy.

Very respectfully yours,

FRANK SAUNDERS.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

J. W. BLACKMAN'S

COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,

61 CAMP STREET,

Corner Commercial Place, N. O.

Open day and evening the entire year.

Penmanship, Book-keeping, Mathematics and Languages are practically taught by experienced professors. Persons from twelve to fifty years of age attend. The instruction is private, to each student. Persons who have neglected their education can here specially qualify themselves for good situations in business. Some from the country may obtain board in the family of the principal.

Prof. R. H. Montgomery, of this College, has always won the highest premiums for Penmanship and Pen-drawing, over all competitors, at all the State Fairs held in this city.

A liberal deduction made when three or more enter together. The principal has been a practical teacher in New Orleans since 1851. For circulars, giving terms, etc., address J. W. BLACKMAN, se11 1y New Orleans.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, JACKSON, LA.,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war, but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $35 per annum, payable semi-annually in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution in the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge of its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

W. H. WATKINS, President.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY,

GREENSBORO, ALABAMA.

The schools of Moral Philosophy, Ancient Languages, Modern Languages, Mathematics, Natural Philosophy and Chemistry are in successful operation. NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have no improvement to notice in the general market. The only exceptions to the prevailing apathy are cotton, sugar and molasses. From all other branches, including nearly every department of the wholesale trade, we hear complaints of increased dullness. Sugar and molasses have met a pretty ready sale, but, with quite liberal receipts, have ruled still more in favor of buyers. Western produce has continued quiet, with the business mostly confined to the local trade. In fact the only transaction reported of any magnitude is 10,000 barrels flour, taken on its merits by a speculator, at $5 75½.

We learn from some points that the recent heavy storm of wind and rain did considerable damage wherever the bulk of the cotton had not been gathered. We also hear repeated complaints of the inefficiency of negro laborers. The accounts with regard to the sugar crop are discouraging, and leave little or no hope of any increase over last year.

The river is twelve feet ten inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 19th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales 20254
Arkansas	628
Lake	50
Mobile	655
Florida	66
Texas	200
Total	21923

On Saturday the business opened with a moderate supply and more stringent pretensions on the part of factors, but, under the depressing influences of unfavorable telegrams from New York, a tight money market and a decline in foreign exchange, they were soon compelled to meet the demand more freely, and accept figures ⅛ to ¼c. under Friday's rates. Even the concessions, however, failed to impart any spirit to the movement, and the sales were confined to 3,350 bales. On Monday, with liberal offerings, buyers came forward more freely, and 5,750 bales changed hands, but at prices indicating a further decline of ⅛c., low middling selling at 23½ to 23⅝c. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair inquiry, which, in consequence of unfavorable telegrams from New York, factors met freely, but without submitting to any quotable reduction, and, the supply being more liberal, the sales summed up 7,000 bales. Early in the day strict low middling sold as high as 23¾c., but subsequently could not be quoted over 23⅝c. We also noted sales of strict good ordinary as low as 23c., and the outside quotation for that grade may be regarded as an extreme rate.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 16,100 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 253,897 bales, against 251,910 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 158,486 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 70,336 bales to Great Britain, 7,482 to France, and of 11,856 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	22¼ to 22½
Good ordinary	23 to 23¼
Low middling	23½ to 23⅝
Middling	to 24
Strict middling	24¼ to 24½

STOVES, GRATES AND HOUSE FURNISHING GOODS.

The undersigned would call the attention of city and country buyers of Cooking Stoves to the following list of Stoves manufactured by Mr. M. L. Filley:

The Philanthropist.

A first class Cooking stove, having all of the latest improvements that have so far been invented. Has a new arrangement for boiling; also an Ash-pan. The casting is heavier than any Stove sold in this market. Sold under a full guarantee in every respect.

The Diamond Rock.

A Stove well known in this market. Thousands of this Stove are in constant use throughout the country, which is a very good recommendation. Sold under a full guarantee.

Besides the above named Stoves, I have on hand the celebrated Cotton Plant, Charter Oak, True Kentuckian, Maid of Orleans, Queen of the South, Delta and others, all of which I offer at a low price.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

SOUTHERN METHODIST HIGH SCHOOL,

New Orleans.

The exercises of the first session of this institution will commence on Monday, the 4th day of OCTOBER next, in the basement of the German Methodist Church, Dryades st., between Felicity and Enterpe.

In founding this institution our purpose is to supply the desideratum long felt in this city, viz: an acknowledged Protestant School of a high order, in which boys and young men can be thoroughly prepared either for college or the active business of life.

The government of the School will be strict and firm, yet mild and parental in its administration. Thoroughness in the preparation of lessons will be uniformly required of all pupils.

The sons of ministers engaged wholly in the work of their Church will be received at half price, and young men preparing for the ministry without charge.

A Preparatory Department and an Evening School are attached.

In the selection of Teachers the greatest care will be exercised, not only in regard to their mental qualifications, but also in reference to their ability to impart instruction to their pupils.

For further information apply at the School. D. I. RAST, Principal.

READYVILLE SEMINARY.

This is a private institution, with its number of pupils limited, and is authorized by the Legislature of Louisiana to confer degrees, diplomas and literary honors. It was in successful operation from 1843 until interrupted by the events of the war in 1862, and reopened January, 1867.

Teachers of a high grade of talent and merit are in charge of the different departments—English, Ancient and Modern Languages, Music, Painting, etc.

Pupils charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session. All pupils received with the understanding that they are to remain and attend the examination at the close of the session in which they enter, and no deduction made on the bills for absence, except in cases of protracted illness, when the loss may be divided between the institution and the patron.

In her outfit each pupil should be provided with toilet boxes, towels, napkins, sheets, pillow cases and blankets or comforts. She should also bring her knife, fork, spoon, cup and napkin ring.

All articles and clothing brought to the Seminary should be distinctly marked, lists of which should be permanently placed on some part of the trunk convenient for reference. The scholastic year commences October 1 and ends in July.

EXPENSE.

Board and tuition per year	$275 00
The Modern Languages a small extra charge.
Music, per year	75 00

Payments due in half session in advance.

Monthly reports of the studies, health and general deportment of the pupils are sent to the parents or guardians at a distance.

The main Seminary building, recently destroyed by fire, will be replaced by one of ample accommodations, now in process of construction, which will be ready for the reception of pupils at the opening of the next session.

SEMINARY FOR YOUNG LADIES, LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

E. A. GRANT, LL. D., PRINCIPAL.

This institution occupies the large and elegant building lately known as Grant & Butler's School. The grounds are situated on Sixth street, between Walnut and Chestnut streets, and extend back to Centre street. They are elevated several feet above the street, thus making the large and beautiful lawn a most desirable place for healthful outdoor exercise.

The building, furniture and apparatus of the school are among the most complete and valuable in the West.

Experienced teachers, residing in the institution, will devote their time to the moral, intellectual and physical improvement of the pupils.

VOL. XV. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1869. NO. 46.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—The policy of Spain toward Cuba, as announced in the Sickles dispatch, is regarded here as a checkmate for Spain. The Cubans claim to hold twelve thousand miles more territory than the Spaniards.

One hundred and fifty-three plantations belonging to Cubans have been confiscated, and one hundred and sixty sugar estates owned by Spaniards have been burned.

In the cabinet meeting to-day the President's message was read and pretty thoroughly canvassed.

The Attorney General presented a list of candidates for nine new circuit judgeships, from which names were selected to be sent to Congress.

The President presented the petition of certain Hebrews of this city, asking his friendly offices with the Czar of Russia, to save several thousand Jewish families from the operation of the recent ukase, expatriating them to the interior of that kingdom.

Secretary Fish was instructed to prepare a State letter on the subject.

What purports to be a synopsis of the President's message has been made public. The message commences with a rapid resume of events for the past six months. It refers to the opening of the Suez Canal, and the project for cutting a canal through the Isthmus of Darien, under American auspices.

In reference to the fifteenth amendment the President takes decided stand with the Radicals. He thinks the amendment will be ratified.

The financial question occupies the principal space.

On the Cuban question the President says: "The administration endeavored to act up to the strict letter of the neutrality laws, and that if it should be proved, beyond doubt, that Spain cannot reconquer the island, it will be a question for the consideration of Congress whether an act recognizing the belligerency of the Cubans would not stop the useless effusion of blood."

Sickles is highly complimented.

The President deprecates the possibility of war with England, and indorses the course of Minister Motley. He thinks the Alabama claims will be settled in a manner satisfactory to both countries.

The message also touches on the new postal treaty, the reinvigoration of American commerce, and the death of Mr. Peabody.

MEMPHIS, Nov. 30.—Eight or ten negroes engaged in a difficulty at a ball last night. About a dozen shots were fired. Two of the participants were wounded.

Passengers from north Mississippi, who arrived yesterday, report that the state of affairs there is alarming; that a war of races is imminent, perhaps already inaugurated. Sunday night bands of armed negroes paraded the streets of Winona, insulting the whites and making night hideous with yells. The whites are becoming alarmed, and have sent a committee to Grenada to procure military assistance.

When about to leave town a collision occurred between the committee and the negroes. A number of shots were fired, but nobody is known to have been killed.

The same state of affairs exists at Water Valley. The place is overrun with negroes, who are parading the streets in a boisterous manner, threatening to burn the town if any resistance is offered to their voting.

Reports from Senatobia give the same account of affairs there. At the latter place Alcorn addressed a large number of negroes on Saturday, and the greatest excitement prevailed among them, owing to the incendiary character of his speech.

At Greenwood, a small town on the Yazoo, a desperate fight occurred between the negroes and the citizens, lasting an hour, and resulting in thirteen negroes being killed. They entered with the avowed intention of sacking it, but met a reception they little dreamed of.

The election throughout the State began to-day. Reports from Corinth, Jackson, and other points state that large numbers of negroes, who are provided with several sets of certificates each, are being transported from precinct to precinct, casting votes for Alcorn. In some instances railroads are used, and whole train loads are transported from point to point.

General Dent made a stirring speech at Meridian yesterday.—New Orleans Times.

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 1, 10.55 P. M.—The latest advices indicate that Alcorn will be elected by twenty thousand majority, as follows:

Wilkinson 2,000, Noxubee 2,751, Jefferson 1,513, Adams 2,475, Warren 3,800.

Amite has gone for the Radicals, but few whites voting.

Yalabusha gives seven hundred majority for Dent.

There was but a light vote in Tishomingo, owing to the bad weather, and the county is doubtful.

Rankin is doubtful.

AUSTIN, Dec. 1.—Hays, Williamson and Travis counties; all the whites and large numbers of colored are voting for Hamilton. The estimated majority for Hamilton in Travis county is 500; Hays, 400; Williamson, 700; Bell, 800. Haynes is certainly elected to Congress. Hamilton's friends claim the State by 30,000.

HOUSTON, Dec. 1.—Total vote for to-day, 1,519. Colored vote falling off to-day, and evidently divided—colored 900, white 600. Every effort was made to secure a full colored vote the first two days. The Conservatives are encouraged. Baker gets a heavy vote. Advices from all points show a falling off in the colored vote. Hamilton's election is considered certain by 20,000 majority.

Information received to-night from the Mississippi election leaves no doubt as to the statement in these dispatches that hundreds of negroes are being transported from point to point, voting for Alcorn. In some cases railroads are made use of, and car loads distributed, each being furnished with several certificates of registration.

SELMA, Dec. 1.—The first annual fair of the Central Agricultural and Mechanical Association of Alabama has thus far been eminently successful. Thousands are present from this and other States of the Union.

Articles representing the various branches of industry are on exhibition in great numbers, while the mineral department contains the finest specimens of iron, coal, marble, etc., from different parts of Alabama.

The art department is also very attractive.

An address was delivered to-day by the Hon. C. C. Langdon, of Mobile. To-morrow an address will be delivered by the Hon. Joseph W. Tayler, of Eutaw.

FOREIGN.

ISMAILIA, on the Suez Canal, Nov. 17.—The Imperial yacht L'Aigle, with the Empress on board and followed by forty vessels, has just anchored at Ismailia, having passed through the first part of the canal.

ISMAILIA, Nov. 17.—Evening.—The trip of the first part of the fleet with visitors was made from Port Said to this place in eight and a half hours. Four steamers have just arrived from Suez, the southern terminus of the canal, and met those from Port Said. The town, banks of the canal, and vessels are illuminated, and the night is given up to festivities and rejoicing.

To-day the Empress Eugenie arrived, and was received by the Viceroy and the Austrian Emperor, and landed amid the thundering of the cannon and the acclamations of the multitudes which lined the shore.

A flotilla of about fifty vessels, none of them drawing more than fifteen feet of water, will sail through the canal, bearing the Viceroy of Egypt, the Empress of the French, and the Emperor of Austria, with all the invited guests. The weather is most favorable.

LONDON, Nov. 25.—The Times, on the question of the Spanish throne, asks: Why should not Spain, as well as France and Sweden, have an upstart King? If Spain wants a royal King why go beyond her own Bourbons? Why not—resenting him from his mother's influence—recall Asturias to the station, which Asturias has not forfeited by any act of his own?

LONDON, Nov. 25.—The Shipping Gazette says: The return of specie payments in the United States could soon be effected. None of the debtor class would suffer by it. The South is generally well supplied with cash, and the Southern buyers are the main stay of the Northern market. They usually purchase with gold, and they leave their crops behind them.

The South now raises grain for her own requirements, and is in a position to resume specie payment when the less favored sections of the country can co-operate. Gold price for cotton will tend to this end.

The Peabody funeral fleet will sail on December 2.

LONDON, Nov. 25.—The completion of the Suez Canal has seriously affected freights, via the Cape of Good Hope.

PARIS, Nov. 25.—The Empress is expected in France on the 2d of December.

MADRID, Nov. 25.—The Republican Deputies who recently left their seats will return to the Cortes next week.

PARIS, Nov. 30.—Napoleon was received to-day by the joint session of the Senate and Corps Legislatif with cordial demonstrations of loyalty; the members rose and remained standing. The Emperor, after ascending the throne, and quiet being restored, delivered a speech in a clear and firm voice.

His speech sketches out an imperial reform bill for France, and is minute and exact in its specification of the points which he proposes for the correction of existing abuses, and the future elevation of the people in the municipalities, the schools, the workshops and on the farm.

The Emperor concludes by announcing the existence of friendly relations between France and all civilized countries, and recounting the aid and encouragement which the Empire renders to the development of the grand material agents of the world's progress—electricity, the Suez Canal, and steam.

The late receptions given to her majesty in the East constitute a subject for special congratulation.

The Radical "Reds" agitation in Ireland is continued.

LIVERPOOL, Dec. 1.—Evening.—Cotton closed firmer; uplands 12*a* 12¼d.; Orleans 12¾*a*12¾d. Sales 20,000 bales, of which 7,000 were for export and speculation. Corn 29s. 9d.

LONDON, Dec. 1.—Paris letters state that the Emperor's speech fell flat; the more it is read the less it is liked.

LONDON, Dec. 1.—The Times says: The Emperor has not mastered the full truth of the ministerial responsibility which he conceded. It is incompatible with the personal government which Napoleon would retain. He is embarrassed between two principles, and is undecided, halting and uncertain.

Schneider is re-elected president of the Corps Legislatif.

PARIS, Dec. 1.—Apprehensions of disturbances on the anniversary of the death of Bondin are existing here.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 1.—Prince Gortschakoff promises to support the scheme for raising cotton in Russian Asia, to compete with the South.

CONFEDERATE DEBTS IN COURT.—Two cases involving Confederate contracts have just been decided in the circuit court of this city, Judge Bolling presiding.

One was that of Wood vs. Meriwether, to recover the face value of three bonds of $4,000 each, given by the defendant in 1863 for a certain tract of land, payable in one, two and three years. The defendant plead a Confederate transaction, and sought to have the debt scaled accordingly. The jury, however, under the instructions of the judge that they might render a verdict for the value of the land, allowed the plaintiff $2,500 in gold, with interest.

The other case was that of A. F. Willis vs. William H. Rose, being a suit on three bonds of $872 each, given in January, 1863, and payable in four, eight and twelve months. The verdict in this case was that the bonds be scaled to the value of Confederate money at the time that they severally fell due.—Lynchburg Virginian.

A REVIEW of the elections during the year shows that the Democrats have captured four States from the Radicals, while they have lost none. In two other States they have driven the enemy to the wall. In Pennsylvania they have cut down the Radical majority from 28,000 to 4,500; in Massachusetts, from 77,000 to 9,000; in Wisconsin, from 24,000 to 9,000; in Ohio; from 41,000 to 8,000; in Maine, from 28,000 to 1,000; in Minnesota, from 15,000 to less than 1,000. In both branches of the Maryland and Wyoming Legislatures they have every member, while in the California, Tennessee and Virginia Legislatures they have gained over two-thirds majorities.

"A SLIGHT COLD," COUGHS.—Few are aware of the importance of checking a cough or "slight cold" in its first stage; that which in the beginning would yield to a mild remedy, if neglected, often attacks the lungs. Brown's Bronchial Troches give sure and almost immediate relief. The Troches have proved their efficacy by a test of many years, and have received testimonials from eminent men who have used them.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

SERMONS PREACHED BEFORE THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD. By H. P. Liddon, student of Christ church and chaplain to the Bishop of Salisbury. London: Rivingstons; James Parker & Co., Oxford. 1869.

We have this volume from R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street. It contains thirteen sermons of great breadth and power. It is quite impossible to reconcile the spiritual sentiment which pervades these discourses with the ritualistic inclination that discovers itself in several of them. We have long since learned to accept only so much of a book as seems to be true, and to let the rest of it go. And with this caution we recommend this volume as one highly suggestive and profitable, specially to ministers. We give below a description of who Mr. Liddon is, that appeared in the London Society for November:

We have heard Dean Stanley say—and we fully indorse the remark—that Mr. Liddon is the greatest preacher of the age. But it is not too much to say that if Mr. Liddon were not recognized as a great orator, he would be more widely acknowledged to be a great writer. He contradicts the shallow criticism that the great objection to the sermon is the objection on the score of length.

Whoever goes to hear Mr. Liddon preach makes up his mind that he is going to listen to a sermon of at least an hour's duration. "On the evening of Good Friday, last year, 1868, the author heard the Rev. A. P. Liddon, at St. Paul's, and listened to him with unabated interest for an hour and twenty minutes." Thus writes Mr. Binney, an eminent Nonconformist minister, who has himself written a volume of sermons or essays of a very high degree of excellence. Moreover, his sermons are by means of that merely hortatory character which might wisely be compressed within a few minutes, albeit, by weak preachers they are often spun out to any conceivable limits. We observe that when Mr. Liddon comes to publish his sermons he includes some passage or other within brackets, as being necessarily omitted at the time of delivery.

Mr. Liddon draws together such an audience as rarely excites the interests or anxiety of an orator. The announcement that he is to preach anywhere is one that widely excites curiosity and interest. A college don, Mr. Liddon has no regular charge, and he ordinarily reserves himself for great occasions, for cathedral or other preaching of the highest importance. The writer of this paper has traveled sixty miles to hear Mr. Liddon preach, and probably many persons have had a similar experience. Long before the hour of service commences, the cathedral or church is densely packed. If the admission is by ticket, the tickets have been disposed of days before, and hardly any amount of interest is sufficient to obtain one. On these occasions the clergy number very largely. The white ties and black coats are scattered everywhere about, including many of the most eminent clergy of the day, and at times various of our most eminent prelates.

Many other eminent men are gathered together, eminent in politics, in literature, in science and art. The people are there in their thousands, with an enormous preponderance of the educated classes. Mr. Liddon's great reputation commenced with the high church party; but since that it has grown familiar to every educated man, and is fast fermenting the great masses of our population. There is an indefinable thrill of emotion amid the vast crowd that assembles to hear words of truth and teaching from a great man—a contagion of emotion belonging to the hour and the scene. With a quiet, rapid tread the preacher makes his way to the pulpit. With a natural, earnest gesture he at once buries his face in his hands to pray. When he fairly faces you, you are at once impressed with his striking and somewhat monastic appearance.

* * * Almost in his first sentence we see the essential character of his oratory. His manuscript is by his side, but he is almost liberated from the chains which a manuscript imposes. He almost knows it by heart, and he declaims it in a grand but a peculiar kind of declamation. It is very remarkable how the greatest pulpit orators of the day are men who read their sermons, which is certainly contrary to the general idea and to ordinary experience. This was the case with such renowned pulpit orators as Dr. Chalmers and Mr. Melvill. The Bishop of Oxford is skilled in both plans, but seems to prefer the manuscript. The Bishop of Peterborough is strictly extemporary. Mr. Caird compounds, by learning his sermons off by heart. It is utterly impossible, the human mind being constituted as it is, that any sermon such as Mr. Liddon's could be spoken in extemporary sentences. You might as well expect a man to speak in lyrics or in epigrams. Those sermons have evidently been polished and repolished to the last degree of point and finish. This is an advantage which you may have with the written, but cannot have with the extemporized discourse. It is easy to see that Mr. Liddon's sermons have had an amount of thought and elaboration bestowed upon them which, in these days of swift writing and speaking, is, unfortunately, extremely rare. The leading characteristic of his oratory is the uniform high pressure of his impassioned speech. So to speak, there are no eminences or depressions in his oratory. He hardly ever slackens and then puts on speed. There is almost a monotony of eloquence. It is the equable speed and rush of the express train. The eye is kindled, the head thrown back as a war-horse; you detect the nervous, sinewy clutch of the fingers. No sooner have you been startled and attracted by the vivid original manner of the speaker than some modern name or allusion, some clear and trenchant thought seizes your attention, and at once brings you fairly abreast with some religious controversy of the time. As he clenches some argument or summarizes some analysis with a keen, remorseless logic, for a moment the face becomes illumined with a smile of thankful triumph. That noted electric link that exists between orator and auditory is touched and thrilled, and the speaker feels that he is carrying with him the convictions as well as the hearts of his hearers. There is a pause—only too slight—before the preacher branches into another section of his subject. The mind is at extreme tension as you attempt to follow the course of the argument through those terse, glittering, incisive sentences which follow so keenly and swiftly, like the steps of a mathematical demonstration. Presently that reasoning of the "severe impassioned" order has reached its climax. Hitherto he has been logical, but he is now slightly rhetorical. To use the Greek image, the closed fist is relaxed into the open palm. The orator now turns to the practical part of his subject and its peroration. If up to this point he has sought to convince the reason, he now concentrates his efforts on piercing the heart. There is some touch of exquisite pathos, of heart-stirring appeal, as when, last Easter day, at St. Paul's, he quoted the lines from the "Lyra Apostolica:"

"And with the morn those angel faces smile,
That we have loved long since, and lost, awhile."

And very probably the final peroration is thrown into the form of simple, earnest prayer to the Deity, with an effect of awe and sublimity almost impossible to be described.

As the congregation issue forth from the church or cathedral portals—and it is long before such masses are broken up—on every side you hear eager discussion of the sermon. There is no doubt, in the first place, but the preacher has supplied his auditory with an immense intellectual stimulus.

On the oratorical question there is, we think, no doubt; but great as the effect has been it would have heightened if the manuscript had been absent. We have been assured by an eminent dignitary, who had the rare good fortune of hearing Chalmers preach an extemporary sermon, that the effect considerably transcended even the immense effect of his written orations. This might have been the case with Chalmers, whose sermons, after all, are somewhat too expanded and verbose; but such a mode of address could hardly coexist with the literary and dialectic skill of Mr. Liddon. After you have heard Mr. Liddon preach you find considerable difficulty in reconstructing even the skeleton (to use that Simonian word) of his discourse. You remember many a striking phrase, apt illustration, powerful appeal, but your attention has been so overpoweringly absorbed by the magnificent oratory, by the rush of vivid musical language, that you would willingly listen again untiringly to the sermon, or would desire to read it over quietly again and again. When you really come to read it in print, you perceive how closely it is articulated into divisions and subdivisions, which the preacher omitted in the preaching, probably because in the lapse of time the system of divisions has grown somewhat pedantic and old-fashioned. With most popular preachers the sermon dies in its birth, and is lost into thin air. But in the delivery of Mr. Liddon's sermon is only comprised a sectional part of its office. Mr. Liddon is now a considerable theological writer. We have his large volume of the "Bampton Lectures," a volume of university sermons, various scattered sermons, and we have the intimation that another volume of sermons will be shortly forthcoming. Multitudes who do not know him as a preacher know him as an author. In sacred authorship he occupies a very peculiar and distinctive place.

PRESBYTERIAN REUNION.—The religious event of last week was the consummation of the reunion of the two great Presbyterian bodies—the Old and the New Schools. It was a sublime scene when the final ceremony of the occasion occurred, at Pittsburg, on November 12. The two assemblies met at their respective places, in the morning, for devotional exercises, and at last formally dissolved—thus ending, it is to be hoped forever, their separate and antagonistic careers. After this act each assembly fell into marching order, and moved in procession to the street fronting the First Presbyterian church, where the Old and New School commissioners greeted one another and locked arms amidst the grateful shouts of an immense throng of people, the clapping of hands and waving of handkerchiefs. The procession then marched to the Third Presbyterian church, where a grand union meeting was held. Telegrams flew over the wires to all parts of the country, and to the Presbyterians across the Atlantic. At the meeting the Holy Scriptures were read, prayers offered, hymns of joy sung, and addresses delivered by leading men—the two moderators of the late respective assemblies, Drs. Jacobus and Fowler, clasping each other's hands in the name of the reunited churches. Not only chief clergymen, but chief laymen, like Judge Strong, Senator Drake and Hon. William E. Dodge, shared in the addresses. At the instance of Dr. Fisher, a crowning practical ratification was voted in the form of a pledge to raise $5,000,000 for missions.—New York Methodist.

THE GREAT FIRE IN SIBERIA.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Eastern Budget, writing on the 20th of October, reports:

Full particulars have now arrived of the terrible fire at Yeniseisk. A tremendous storm was raging at the time, and, as the town consisted mostly of wooden houses, nearly the whole of it perished in the flames. Great numbers of persons took refuge in boats and other craft on the river, but the storm was so violent that many of these vessels went to the bottom, together with their occupants. Several hundred persons thus perished, either by suffocation in the burning houses or by drowning in the river. The number of houses destroyed was upwards of eighteen hundred, besides four churches, two monasteries, the government offices, with all the official documents, and the principal storehouse. A great deal of corn and two hundred thousand pods of hops were also lost.

The few houses that still remain standing were only saved from destruction by the energy of a good merchant, who offered three hundred rubies to his workmen as a reward if they would protect his property and the adjoining buildings.

THE authoress of East Lynne, Mrs. Henry Wood, speaks in her last novel, Roland Yorke, of "the not-attempted-to-be-concealed care" of Roland's face, which brings to mind Miss Barney's remarks on "the-sudden-at-the-moment though-from-lingering-illness-often-previously-expected death of Mr. Barney's wife. Aristophanes is said to have done even better than this, and to have coined a word of seventy-seven syllables.

THE world is more apt to reward appearances than desert.

HEAVEN.

Oh! heaven is nearer than mortals think,
When they look, with a trembling dread,
At the misty future that stretches on,
From the silent home of the dead.

'Tis no lone isle on a boundless main,
No brilliant but distant shore,
Where the loving ones who are called away,
Must go to return no more.

No, heaven is near us; the mighty veil
Of mortality blinds the eye,
That we cannot see the angel bands
On the shores of eternity.

The eye that shuts in a dying hour
Will open the next to bliss;
The welcome will sound in the heavenly world
Ere the farewell is hushed in this.

We pass from the clasp of mourning friends
To the arms of the loved and lost;
And those smiling faces will greet us there
Which on earth we valued most.

Yet oft in the hours of holy thought
To the thirsting soul is given
That power to pierce through the mist of sense,
To the beauteous scenes of heaven.

Then very near seem its pearly gates,
And sweetly its harpings fall;
'Til the soul is restless to soar away,
And longs for the angel's call.

I know when the silver chord is loosed,
When the veil is rent away,
Not long and dark shall the passage be
To the realm of endless day.

LETTER FROM FLORIDA.

GREAT EXCITEMENT.—ASSASSINATIONS. BRUTAL MURDER OF AN INNOCENT YOUNG LADY.—ESCAPE OF THE ASSASSIN.—ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS OFFERED FOR HIS ARREST.

Mr. Editor: Our community has been in a state of intense excitement for the last eight or ten days in consequence of several assassinations and attempted assassinations.

On Tuesday, the 28th of September, a party of negroes went out some four miles north of this place, on the Chipola river, to have a picnic. As they passed through an old field, skirted by a thicket, some person or persons concealed shot at a negro by the name of Calvin Rodgers. He took refuge behind the wheels of a wagon and returned the fire, in the meantime calling to one Wyatt Scurlock to come to his aid. Wyatt came running up, and while in the act of taking a child from the arms of a woman in the wagon, another shot was fired from the thicket, killing both him and the child.

As soon as the news reached town a large party of both whites and blacks proceeded immediately to the spot and made a diligent search, but could find no trace of the perpetrator of the horrid deed. Many of the negroes were exasperated and sullen—seemed to hold the whites alone responsible—said that "this work must be stopped," as though anybody can prevent what an assassin plans in secret and executes in a thicket.

Some of the negroes were determined to have revenge by killing some of the white people, however innocent. The next evening the Rev. C. C. Sullivan, a local preacher of our church, living about nine miles west of Marianna, was shot while returning from his plantation on his wagon, about dusk, by some one hid behind a clump of bushes. One eye was shot out and his face terribly mangled; his arm and shoulder also were badly shot. He will probably recover, but is disfigured for life. A negro man sitting near him received several shots, but was not seriously wounded. Brother Sullivan is a man of irreproachable character, and knew not that he had an enemy on earth.

On the following Friday night, October 1, the most diabolical and tragical murder of the whole series was committed, an innocent and lovely young lady being the victim. After supper a number of persons were sitting on the gallery of Mrs. Attaway's hotel, engaged in pleasant conversation, not dreaming of any danger being near, when a band of assassins stealthily approached the sidewalk, within a few steps of the hotel, and fired two shots. Miss Maggie McClellan was instantly killed, her breast being pierced with five buckshot. Her father, Colonel J. F. McClellan, was also painfully, but it is hoped not dangerously, wounded in the arm and shoulder at the same time. There is no doubt this horrid assassination was a premeditated and prearranged scheme, and no mistake was made in the innocent victims of the fiendish plot. Persons were seen to pass the sidewalk in front of the hotel several times, but as this was a common occurrence no particular notice was taken of it. That night, however, it was evidently done by the assassins to avoid suspicion and detection. When they crept up in such close proximity to accomplish their fiendish purpose, Colonel McClellan said he distinctly heard the voice of one in an undertone, and which he readily recognized, give the command, "Fire! fire!" simultaneous with which two shots were fired, doing the dreadful deed as above related.

There is satisfactory evidence that a negro by the name of Calvin Rodgers, and some accomplices, are the assassins, Calvin being the ringleader and planner of the deed. This Calvin was the negro Radical politician and stump orator here. He had for some time been bailiff, and rendered himself extremely odious in the hectoring and tyrannical manner in which he exercised the duties of his petty office. He is a large, heavy set fellow, coal black, and is a brazen, daring scoundrel. He made his escape on Saturday morning, and has not yet been overtaken. The pent-up indignation at the many outrages the people of Jackson county have suffered, which has been so long subdued by submission and unprecedented forbearance, now burst forth in all its intensity. Business of all kinds was suspended. Every store was closed. Armed men came in from the surrounding country. Squads of cavalry scoured the country around and adjacent, but failed to find the assassin. Several arrests have been made of parties connected with the murder, but the notorious villain who is the guiltiest of all is still at large.

The citizens held a meeting yesterday, and pledged themselves to make every sacrifice to aid the officers of the law in bringing to justice the perpetrators of these horrid deeds. They offer $1,000 reward for the arrest and delivery of Calvin Rodgers, and $1,000 for the arrest of the murderer of Wyatt Scurlock.

Oscar Granberry, colored, was shot and killed about a mile from town on Saturday morning, and although there are facts which almost unerringly connect him with the murder of the night previous, the act was greatly deprecated by all the sober, prudent citizens.

All these troubles are indirectly chargeable to the teaching and influence of two execrable adventurers from the North by the names of Hamilton and Purmah, who came here in connection with the negro bureau. They tyrannized over the people of the county to an extent that was intolerable. They arrested citizens and incarcerated some of them in an old, dirty smokehouse; upon the ex parte statement of negroes they issued peremptory orders for the planters to deliver up their corn; they held mass meetings among the negroes, and directed them to bring their guns; they made inflammatory and incendiary speeches, and did everything in their power to antagonize them against the whites by appealing to the ignorant prejudices and base passions of the negroes, and now we suffer the fruit of all this fiendish teaching and influence.

Surely there is a God who judgeth in the earth, and he hath said: "Vengeance is mine; I will repay."

WESLEY B. DENNIS.

MARIANNA, Jackson co., Fla., October 8, 1869.

A GERMAN REFORMED CHURCH in Philadelphia was to be sold for a debt of $35,000 a short time since. At a meeting of the members to consider an offer, one of them said: "Brethren, I am opposed to the sale of the church. Providence has put it into my power to relieve you of this indebtedness, and I feel it my duty to do so. It would, however, neither be just to me, nor best for you, that I should pay the debt alone. Do what you can toward reducing it, and I will assume the balance." The congregation raised about $10,000, and he pays the balance.

SHREVEPORT DISTRICT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: The first round of Quarterly Meetings was held in due form. Presiding elder in the chair, and the preacher in charge at his right hand.

The salaries of the preachers, as fixed by their boards of stewards, were liberal. Preachers and people seemed hopeful. The second Quarterly Meeting and the third were held by the several pastors, the presiding elder being employed in the Bible agency in a distant part of the State. But after an absence of seven months he returns for the fourth round; and this is inaugurated by a reunion with the brethren of the district in a District Meeting at Keachie, October 27. The reports from the various charges, showing the progress of the church in all its departments, were heard with peculiar interest and pleasure. We sum up as follows:

1. Every charge has been blessed with more or less revival influence. There has been a considerable increase in the membership, and improvement in the piety and zeal of the church.

2. The finances, as reported, are not in as good condition as could be desired. But few of the preachers have received more than one-third or one-fourth of their salaries. But they are confident that full reports will yet be made. The ministers will receive a better support than in any previous year since the war. We doubt not that, as heretofore, ours will again soon be the banner Conference of the church on this subject.

3. Collections for missions have been taken up in every charge, if not in every congregation. While on this part of his report a good brother said he had taken up one public collection, but that he did not intend to take up another; that he would do what he could to raise money for the various interests of the church in a private way; that if he failed he would give the proceeds of a bale of cotton which he had raised in his garden and gathered with his own hands; but that he would not attempt another public collection. Exceptions were taken to this, and a very animated debate ensued upon the abstract question of public collections. While the one party deprecated them as ineffectual for the end proposed and evil in their tendencies, the other party advocated them, not only as a quiet and easy mode of meeting church expenses, but also as actual means of grace and discipline. This latter view had the larger number of advocates, and men who had been longer in the work.

4. Measures were adopted that will, no doubt, secure the full amount of the Bishops' salary apportioned to this district.

5. The Committee on Public Worship considered this question: Shall the Sunday school, on Sabbath morning, conform to the usual exercises, to be closed with an address from one of the ministers, or shall the district love-feast be held at that hour, and in the presence of the school? The love-feast was held, and, we trust, greatly to the edification of the young and the old.

6. The secretary was not instructed to furnish anything for publication in the ADVOCATE; but if you had the report of the Committee on Education you would, no doubt, publish it very cheerfully. The conclusion of the whole matter, after an examination of the claims of all our male schools and colleges, was that Centenary is the college of this Conference, and that we are bound to see that it is liberally endowed and patronized.

B. F. ALEXANDER, P. E.

SHREVEPORT, LA., Nov. 1, 1869.

THE subject of "Recreations of the People" was recently discussed in the Congress, England, in which the opinion was advanced that pure theatricals, well controlled and unconnected with intemperance, might be a healthy and painless recreation, but, as it was at present, the theatre was one of the most fearfully powerful schools of vice. Archdeacon Denison spoke in favor of harvest homes, did not consider dancing an evil, and advocated cricket-playing between services on Sunday.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

PERSONAL AND OTHER.

Mr. Editor: In the beginning of the year I demanded, quarterly, enough money to feed wife and child, or in default of this I would leave the people without a servant in the Gospel. This, of course, gave offense to the masses, and an unpopularity from which I have not recovered, but have not receded one inch, nor will I ever do so. I am fixed as adamant, and I take my Master to record on my soul that this course was taken with open eyes, and a main desire to benefit the church—to save it from the loss of a preached Gospel, and myself from being driven from the work I so much love, and to which I have dedicated soul, body and spirit with delight. I did and do believe what I did to be the best means to that end. I was not mistaken. This raised a big stir, as you may have learned.

Well, after all I have had help from on high, and one blessed meeting—at Bellville—on the very battle-field of the war about money. The good Lord gave a most glorious victory over all. Glory to him all the rest of my days. I'll love him more and serve him better, and be more humble.

Not many accessions—only nine; but two of them I regard more than some whole charges I have served. I will not give names. As to collections: I have in hand within $6 50 of the Conference assessment, and three-fourths of the missionary assessment. The former will all be paid. As to my own, I don't care whether it is paid or not—no, not I. I have made $103 by hard labor; can make more, if need be; am out of debt, as I always intend to be; have a fine and fat horse, and to-day a sick wife, and an almighty God and Father in heaven, and no evil shall befall me.

I have worked harder this year than ever before; have not sermonized one hour that I know of; did everything contrary to flesh and blood; made everybody mad with me, except the Lord; have not even pleased myself according to the flesh; and, after all, am almost as happy as I well can be. Lord send salvation down. The circuit is improving. That's all, after my scribbling. Yours truly,

J. W. JORDON.

MONROEVILLE, Alabama.

Mr. Editor: Permit me to present a brief report to the readers of the ADVOCATE from the Sockapatoy circuit. This circuit lies in Coosa county, Alabama. It has seven appointments, and a membership of about two hundred; it has one local preacher—Rev. A. Kelley. The spiritual state of the work is medium.

I have held meetings of from three to five days' continuance at most of the appointments, at which meetings there were diverse spiritual manifestations—some revival, others of an awakening, convincing and converting character. Thirteen persons were converted and joined the church. I have baptized six adults and five infants; expelled one. The charge is greatly weakened by removals; many recent dismissions by letter. I have written some thirty-five certificates the past year.

The church at Sockapatoy is a brotherhood "wherein abound works of faith and labors of love." She has been engaged in that ever commendable business of imparting knowledge through the medium of the Sunday school. Success is her reward.

Pinegrove has had a season of refreshing. Love and unity abound. New Prospect and Mount Pisgah are healthy "branches," living by faith, and, like her sisters above, are dispensing the orient beams of hope among those around. Brooksville is very weak, caused by the invasion of the Northern element, from which she has not recovered. Emaus and Watsou chapel are classed with her, but with less cause. I will bring some new subscribers for the ADVOCATE to Conference.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

To enshrine the memory of the precious and cherished dead in our inmost hearts is not only a pleasant and graceful tribute to them, but furnishes a precious treasure to ourselves. It is not merely an act of kindness grateful to surviving relatives, but one that enriches the annals of the church, to keep a record of those who "have finished their course and kept the faith." The lives, faith and death of such is the common property of the church, and ministers to the edification of the whole body of the faithful. One of the highest and surest tests of Methodism has been furnished by the fact that its children "die well"—not its leaders only, but its more retired and quiet members have triumphed over doubt, fear and death. May it never be shorn of this glory.

Mrs. Lucy A. Jones, wife of the Rev. A. M. Jones, and daughter of Mr. R. T. and M. E. Forsythe, finished her earthly career near Pascagoula, October 30, 1869. Sister Jones was born in Mobile, October 2, 1846. Her parents being members of the church, she was brought up in the fear of the Lord. She was connected with the Franklin street Sabbath school from early childhood, and the truths she there learned became the basis and strength of her subsequent harmonious and beautiful character and life, and the songs she learned there are now sung by many children and youth in every community where she has resided during her married life.

Sister Jones was awakened and brought to Christ in the spring of 1860, at a revival in the church where she had been religiously trained. Her conversion was a genuine work, as was manifested through her whole after-life. In November, 1866, she was united in marriage to her now bereaved husband, and thenceforth her life and fortunes became identified with those of the itinerant ministry as shared by him. Her kindly and affectionate nature, and cheerful and happy disposition, and especially her piety, peculiarly qualified her for her new position. Her loving and kindly spirit called forth a responsive sentiment in the hearts of nearly all with whom she came in contact. Few knew but to love her; she made friends wherever she went. Happy indeed is the itinerant minister, in his moving, changing mode of life, with its attendant inconveniences and trials, who is blessed with a companion whose sunny spirit, accommodating disposition and religious convictions enable her cheerfully to adjust herself to the allotments of providence and vicissitudes of her changing life, and hold steadily to the truth that God "cares for" her. Such was our departed sister. Her presence was sunshine, and she made friends wherever she went. A kinder heart has seldom ceased to beat, and a more blameless spirit has seldom passed into the skies. She was a devoted wife, a tender and fond mother.

Her last illness was protracted and painful, but she bore it without murmuring and with resignation; and God granted her grace for the final hour. When informed by her physician that she could not recover, her reply was: "If it is God's will, I am ready to go." To her mother, who had the melancholy satisfaction of being with her in her last hours, she said: "Ma, I am glad you are with me in my last earthly moments. My mission on earth is done. Take my children and train them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. I gave Neely (her oldest child) to the Lord when he was born." It had been her constant prayer that he might be a minister of Christ. God looks graciously upon these pious gifts of departing mothers, and accepts and consecrates more of them than either the world or the church are aware of. They are a better heritage for surviving children than thousands of gold and silver. When the offering is rightly made it takes the high character of a covenant, the intent of which God will most assuredly fulfill.

After this she spoke consoling words to and endeavored to comfort her weeping husband and surrounding friends, as her failing strength would permit, and then fell asleep. There is a fragrance around the graves of the young who die in Christ, especially of those whose souls were animated by high and worthy aims. Heaven is the fitting place for such. Thou hast gone to an early but not unhonored grave, my sister. We bid thee adieu, but will remember thee till we meet above.

MOBILE, November 20, 1869.

The community of Durant has sustained a calamity in the death of Brother WILLIAM F. STROTHER, and his family an irreparable loss. He was born in Georgia April 21, 1811; emigrated to Mississippi in 1831; and married Miss Rebecca Norman November 14, 1835. He died December 14, 1868.

From years of acquaintance and pastoral intimacy we pronounce him the salt of the earth.

For twenty years he was a child of affliction, but manifested the patience of a true Christian. He leaves the wife of his youth now a bereaved widow, and six daughters, three of them not grown. The desire to educate his younger children caused him to cling to life with tenacity; but grace gained the victory. The last time his pastor, Rev. T. C. Parish, visited him he remarked: "I have desired to see all my children raised and educated; but I am in the hands of a wise Ruler of the universe, and my children are in his hands, and all is for the best."

He was energetic and thrifty in his business. He was an obliging neighbor, an affectionate husband, a kind and indulgent father, and a true member of the church. He is gone, and we submit to a wise and gracious Providence. May his death be sanctified.

MC. AND P.

JASPER DISTRICT, MOBILE CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: I sent you an account of three more camp meetings some days ago, but fear it has failed to reach you. I can only give you a short account now. Our second District Meeting was held at Zion camp ground, embracing the first Sunday in October. There was a fair representation of the official members present, considering the location was near the west line of the district. The usual business was dispatched in good order, and will be, no doubt, as bread cast upon the waters, which will be gathered up in days to come. The lay delegates for this year are: Dr. F. Prince, Dr. W. C. Rosamond, Thos. F. Rice and Rev. William Hullet. Alternates: Colonel G. W. Hewitt, J. W. Hampton, L. Cole and Rev. D. Wilson. The camp meeting continued twelve days. It was a decided success. Zion camp ground was gotten up this year through the energy of the pastor, W. E. Cameron; but the large, well built stand, and the commodious and comfortable tents, as well as the hospitable manner in which the District Meeting and other visitors were entertained, show that Brother C. was backed up by a Free-man, a Willing-ham, and a Little Cole with a big soul. Zion camp ground is now a fixed fact. I had to leave Zion before the meeting closed, in order to reach Centre camp ground, on the Littlesville circuit. This meeting lasted five days. There were thirty-six conversions. The next week I was back again with Brother Cameron at Bethel camp meeting. This meeting was succeeding finely when I left for other appointments. So far as I could see and hear, the general impression at each one of these meetings was that the church was greatly benefited by elevating the standard of Christian duty. Nearly all of the preaching was directed to this point. The preachers and people are waking up on this subject. The monetary interests of the church are coming up pretty well all over the district. The calculation now is to make the Cahaba mission self-sustaining next year. The prospects are also favorable for making the district self-sustaining.

Up to this time there have been eight hundred and fifteen conversions, and seven hundred and ninety accessions on the district. All the praise to the great Head of the church.

INDIAN SUMMER.

Just after the death of the flowers,
And before they are buried in snow,
There comes a festival season,
When nature is all aglow—
Aglow with a mystical splendor
That rivals the brightness of spring—
Aglow with a beauty more tender
Than aught which fair summer could bring.

Some spirit akin to the rainbow
Then borrows its magical dyes,
And mantles the far-spreading landscape
In hues that bewilder the eyes.
The sun from his cloud-shadowed chamber
Smiles soft on a vision so gay,
And dreams that his favorite children,
The flowers, have not yet passed away.

There's a luminous mist on the mountains,
A light azure haze in the air,
As if angels, while heavenward soaring,
Had left their bright robes floating there;
The breeze is so soft, so caressing—
It seems a mute token of love,
And floats to the heart like a blessing
From some happy spirit above.

These days, so serene and so charming,
Awake a dreamy delight—
A tremulous, tearful enjoyment
Like soft strains of music at night;
We know they are fading and fleeting,
That quickly, too quickly they'll end,
And we watch them with yearning affection,
As at parting we watch a dear friend.

O beautiful Indian summer!
Thou favorite child of the year,
Thou darling whom nature cherishes
With gifts and adornments so dear!
How fain would we woo thee to linger
On mountains and meadows awhile,
For our hearts, like the sweet haunts of nature,
Rejoice and grow young in thy smile.

Not alone to the sad fields of autumn
Dost thou a lost brightness restore,
But thou bringest a world-weary spirit
Sweet dreams of its childhood once more;
Thy loveliness fills us with memories
Of all that was brightest and best—
Thy peace and serenity offer
A foretaste of heavenly rest.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

HIGHLY INTERESTING OPINION DELIVERED BY CHIEF JUSTICE CHASE—ENFORCEMENT OF A VENDOR'S LIEN IN A CONTRACT ENTERED INTO UNDER THE LATE CONFEDERATE GOVERNMENT—THE CONFEDERATE DOLLAR AND ITS STATUS IN THE CONTRACT AND AFTER THE WAR.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1.—The following important opinion was delivered to-day in the Supreme Court of the United States:

No. 112.—Thorington vs. Smith & Hartley. Opinion of the Court by Chief Justice Chase. This is a bill in equity for the enforcement of a vendor's lien. It is not denied that Smith & Hartley purchased Thorington's land, or that they executed to him their promissory note for part of the purchase money, as set forth in his bill, or that, if there was nothing more in the case, he would be entitled to a decree for the amount of the note and interest and for the sale of the land to satisfy the debt. But it is insisted by the way of defense that the negotiation for the purchase of the land took place, and that the note in controversy, payable one day after date, was made at Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, where all the parties resided in November, 1864, at which time the authority of the United States was excluded from that portion of the State, and the only currency in use consisted of Confederate Treasury notes issued and put into circulation by persons exercising the ruling powers of the States in rebellion, known as the Confederate government.

It was also insisted that the land purchased was worth no more than $3,000 in lawful money; that the contract price was $45,000; that the price, by the agreement of the parties, was to be paid in Confederate notes; that $35,000 were actually paid in these notes, and that the note given for the remaining $10,000 was to be discharged in the same manner, and it is claimed on this state of facts that the vendor is entitled to no relief in a court of the United States, and this claim was sustained in the court below and the bill was dismissed.

The questions before us on appeal are these:—First, can a contract for the payment of Confederate notes made during the late rebellion between parties residing within the so-called Confederate States be enforced at all in the courts of the United States? Second, can evidence be received to prove that a promise expressed to be for the payment of dollars was in fact and for the payment of any other than lawful dollars of the United States? Does the evidence in the record establish the fact that the note for $10,000 was to be paid by agreement of the parties in Confederate notes?

The first question is by no means free from difficulty. It cannot be questioned that the Confederate notes were issued in furtherance of an unlawful attempt to overthrow the government of the United States by insurrectionary force; nor is it a double principle of law that no contract made in aid of such an attempt can be enforced through the courts of the country whose government is thus assailed. But was the contract of the parties to this suit a contract of that character? Can it be fairly described as a contract in aid of the rebellion? In examining this question the state of that part of the country in which it was made must be considered. It is familiar history that early in 1861 the authorities of seven States, supported, as was alleged, by popular majorities, combined for the overthrow of the national Union, and for the establishment, within its boundries, of a separate and independent confederation. A governmental organization, representing these States, was established at Montgomery, in Alabama, first under a provisional Constitution, and afterward under a Constitution intended to be permanent. In the course of a few months four other States acceded to this confederation, and the seat of the central authority was transferred to Richmond, in Virginia. It was by the central authority thus organized and under its direction that the civil war was carried on upon a vast scale against the government of the United States for more than four years. Its power was recognized as supreme in nearly the whole of the territory of the States confederated. It was the actual government of all the insurgent States, except those portions of them protected from its control by the presence of the armed force of the national government. What was the precise character of this government in contemplation of law? It is difficult to define it with exactness. Any definition that may be given may not improbably be found to require limitation and qualification. But the general principles of law relating to de facto government will, we think, conduct us to a conclusion sufficiently accurate. There are several degrees of what is called de facto government. Such a government, in its highest degrees, assumes a character very closely resembling that of a lawful government. This is when the usurping government expels the regular authorities from their customary seats and functions, and establishes itself in their place, and so becomes the actual government of a country. The distinguishing characteristic of such a government is, that adherents to it in war against the government de jure do not incur the penalties of treason; and, under certain limitations, obligations assumed by it in behalf of the country or otherwise will in general be respected by the government de jure when restored.

Examples of this description of government de facto are found in English history. The statute 11, Henry Seventh, C. I. (Brit. Stat. at large,) relieves from penalties for treason all persons who, in defense of the King for the time being, wage war against those who endeavor to subvert his authority, by force of arms, though warranted in so doing by the lawful monarch. (4 Bl. Comm. 77.) But this is where the usurper obtains actual possession of the royal authority of the kingdom; not when he has succeeded only in establishing his power over particular localities. Being in such possession, allegiance is due to him as King de facto. Another example may be found in the government of England under the Commonwealth, first by Parliament, and afterward by Cromwell as Protector. It was not in the contemplation of law a government de jure, but it was a government de facto in the absolute sense. It made laws, treaties and conquests, which remained the laws, treaties and conquests of England after the Restoration. The better opinion is that acts done in obedience to this government could not be justly regarded as treasonable, though in hostility to the King de jure. Such acts were protected from criminal prosecution by the spirit, if not the letter, of the statute of Henry Seventh. It was held otherwise by the judges by whom Sir Henry Vane was tried for treason (3 State trials, 119,) in the year following the Restoration. But such a judgment in such a time has little authority.

It is very certain that the Confederate government was never acknowledged by the United States as a de facto government in this sense, nor was it acknowledged as such by foreign powers. No treaties were made by it. No obligations of a national character were created by it binding after its dissolution on the States which it represented, or on the national government. From a very early period of the civil war to its close it was regarded as simply the military representative of the insurrection against the authority of the United States.

But there is another description of government, called by publicists a government de facto, but which might, perhaps, be more aptly denominated a government of paramount force. Its distinguishing characters are, first, that its existence is maintained by active military power within the territories and against the rightful authority of an established and lawful government; and second, that while it exists it must necessarily be obeyed in civil matters by private citizens, who, by acts of obedience, rendered in submission to such force, do not become responsible as wrong doers for these acts, though not warranted by the laws of the rightful government. Actual governments of this sort are established over districts differing greatly in extent and conditions. They are usually administered directly by military authority; but they may be administered also by civil authority, supported more or less by military force. One example of this sort of government is found in the case of Castine, in Maine, reduced to British possession in the war of 1812. From the 1st of September, 1814, to the ratification of the treaty of peace in 1815, according to the judgment of the court in the United States vs. Rice (4 Wheat, 253,) "the British government exercised all civil and military authority over the place." The authority of the United States over the territory was suspended and the laws of the United States could no longer be rightfully enforced there or be obligatory upon the inhabitants who remained and submitted to the conqueror. By the surrender the inhabitants passed under a temporary allegiance to the British government and were bound by such laws, and such only, as it chose to recognize and impose. It is not to be inferred from this that the obligations of the people of Castine, as citizens of the United States, were abrogated. They were suspended merely by the presence and only during the presence of the paramount force. A like example is found in the case of Tampico, occupied during the war with Mexico by the troops of the United States. It was determined by this court in Fleming vs. Page (9 Howard, 614,) that although Tampico did not become a part of the United States in consequence of that occupation, still, having come together with the whole State of Tamaulipas, of which it was a part, into the exclusive possession of the national forces, it must be regarded and respected by other nations as the territory of the United States. There were cases of temporary possession of territory by lawful and regular governments at war with the country of which the territory so possessed was part.

The central government established for the insurgent States differed from the temporary governments at Castine and Tampico in the circumstance that its authority did not organize in lawful acts of regular war; but it was not on that account less actual or less supreme, and we think that it must be classed among the governments of which these are examples. It is to be observed that the rights and obligations of a belligerent were conceded to it in its military character very soon after the war began, from motives of humanity and expediency, by the United States. The whole territory controlled by it was thereafter held to be the enemies' territory, and the inhabitants of that territory were held, in most respects, for enemies. To the extent, then, of actual supremacy, however unlawfully gained, in all matters of government within its military lines the power of the insurgent government cannot be questioned. That supremacy would not justify acts of hostility to the United States. How far it should excuse them must be left to the lawful government upon the re-establishment of its authority. But it made civil obedience to its authority not only a necessity, but a duty. Without such obedience civil order was impossible. It was by this government, exercising its power through an immense territory, that the Confederate notes were issued early in the war, and these notes in a short time became almost exclusively the currency of the insurgent States. As contracts in themselves, in the contingency of successful revolution, these notes were nullities; for, except in that event, there could be no payer. They bore, indeed, this character upon their face; for they were made payable only "after a ratification of a treaty of peace between the Confederate States and the United States of America." While the war lasted, however, they had a certain contingent value and were used as money in nearly all the business transactions of many millions of people. They must be regarded, therefore, as a currency imposed on the community by irresistible force. It seems to follow, as a necessary consequence, from the actual supremacy of the insurgent government, as a belligerent within the territory where it circulated, and the necessity of civil obedience on the part of all who remained in it, that this currency must be regarded in the courts of law in the same light as if it had been issued by a foreign government temporarily occupying a part of the territory of the United States. Contracts stipulating for payments in that currency cannot be regarded as made in aid of the foreign invasion in the one case, or of the domestic insurrection in the other. They have no necessary relation to the hostile government, whether invading or insurgent. They are transactions in the ordinary course of civil society, and, though they may indirectly and remotely promote the ends of the unlawful government, are without blame, except when proved to have been entered into with actual intent to further the invasion or insurrection. We cannot doubt that such contracts should be enforced in the court of the United States, after the restoration of peace, to the extent of their first obligation.

The first question, therefore, must receive an affirmative answer. The second question, whether evidence can be received to prove that a promise made in one of the insurgent States, and expressed to be for the payment of dollars, without qualifying words, was, in fact, made for the payment of any other than lawful dollars of the United States, is next to be considered. It is quite clear that a contract to pay dollars, made between citizens of any State of the Union maintaining its constitutional relations with the national government, is a contract to pay lawful money of the United States, and cannot be modified or explained by parole evidence. But it is equally clear if in any other country, coins or notes denominated dollars, should be authorized of different value from the coins or notes which are current here under that name, that in a suit upon a contract to pay dollars made in that country, evidence would be admitted to prove what kind of dollars were intended; and if it should turn out that foreign dollars were meant to prove their equivalent value in lawful money of the United States, such evidence does not modify or alter the contract. It simply explains an ambiguity, which, under the general rules of evidence, may be removed by parole evidence. We have already seen that the people of the insurgent States, under this Confederate government, were, in legal contemplation, substantially in the same condition as inhabitants of districts of a country occupied and controlled by an invading belligerent. The rules which would apply to the former case would apply to the latter; and as in the former case the people must be regarded as subjects of a foreign power, and contracts among them be interpreted and enforced with reference to the laws imposed by the conqueror, so in the latter case the inhabitants must be regarded as under the authority of the insurgent belligerents actually established as the government of the country, and contracts made with them must be interpreted and inferred with reference to the condition of things created by the acts of the governing power. It is said, indeed, that under the insurgent government the word dollar had the same meaning as under the government of the United States; that the Confederate notes were never made a legal tender, and, therefore, that no evidence can be received to show any other meaning of the word when used in a contract. But it must be remembered that the whole condition of things in the insurgent States was matter of fact rather than matter of law, and, as matter of fact, these notes payable at a future and contingent day, which has not arrived and can never arrive, were forced into circulation as dollars, if not directly by the legislation, yet indirectly and quite as effectively by the acts of the insurgent government. Considered in themselves and in the light of subsequent events these notes had no real value, but they were made current as dollars by irresistible force; they were the only measure of value which this people had, and their use was a matter of almost absolute necessity, and this gave them a sort of a value, insignificant and precarious enough, it is true, but always having a sufficiently definite relation to gold and silver, the universal measures of value, so that it was easy to ascertain how much gold and silver was the real equivalent of a sum expressed in the currency.

In the light of these facts it seems hardly less than absurd to say that these dollars must be regarded as identical in kind and value with the dollars which constitute the money of the United States; we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that they were essentially different in both respects, and it seems to us that no rule of evidence, properly understood, requires us to refuse, under the circumstances, to admit proof of the sense in which the word dollar was actually used in the contract before us.

Our answer to the second question is, therefore, also in the affirmative. We are clearly of the opinion that such evidence must be received in respect to such contracts in order that justice may be done between the parties, and that the party entitled to be paid in these Confederate dollars can only receive their actual value at the time and place of the contract in lawful money of the United States. We do not think it necessary to go into a detailed examination of the evidence in the record in order to vindicate our answer to the third question. It is enough to say that it has left no doubt in our minds that the note for $10,000, to enforce the payment of which suit was brought in the circuit court, was to be paid by agreement in Confederate notes. It follows that the judgment of the circuit court must be reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial in conformity with this opinion.

THE FORCE OF POPULAR OPINION.—It will be remembered that in May, 1862, the little army of General Banks, lying about Strasburg, in the Shenandoah, was unexpectedly taken in flank by Stonewall Jackson, and compelled to beat a rapid retreat toward Harper's Ferry. By the almost superhuman efforts of the general and his officers the bulk of the trains was got into the van and kept there until safety was reached with the Potomac. When the retreating column passed through Winchester, some twenty miles from the first point of attack, the advance of the enemy was in plain sight, but a skirmish line that had been deployed from our rear was gallantly disputing the ground and saving the golden moments for the retreating army. Although heavily outnumbered, the general was at first determined to engage with his whole force at this point; and he replied to some of his staff, who urged the contrary, "Gentlemen, I will retreat no further. The opinions of the people are more imperative than the bullets of the enemy!" The truth of history constrains us to add that the general was compelled to continue his retreat, notwithstanding; and thus was one of the most pungent expressions of the war robbed of half its effect.—Lippincott's Magazine.

Two young men in an Iowa town took out a license to marry the same lady one day recently.

THE BIBLE IN SCHOOLS.

"All roads lead to Rome." It was a singular combination just witnessed in Cincinnati between Roman Catholics and infidels to drive the Bible from the public schools. Pilate and Herod became friends once more over the prostrate word of God. It was no expression, however, of interest in the common school system, and anxiety to remove every possible objection from it in order to secure its general acceptance, that induced the Romanists in the City Council unanimously to vote for the exclusion of the Holy Scriptures. It was simply another step in advance, in their estimation, toward the entire destruction of the school system, and the division of the public money among sectarian institutions.

For any other but Romanists it would seem to be a singularly contradictory course at one moment to make a fierce attack upon these schools as "godless," and the next to join with confessed foes to all revealed religion in banishing the great inspired fountain of religious truth from these public institutions. The end, however, is supposed to sanctify the means; and whether in unison with an unscrupulous political party, or in combination with infidels, they stand ready to enter upon a crusade against these schools, which are now the pride, and in an important sense the salvation, of the Republic. Why should Romanists be more sensitive than the other sects? She has her children, as all others, under her nurture on the Sabbath, and subject to the controlling influence of their Catholic homes, except during six hours of the day. They hear no dogmatic discourses in the public schools, no discussions upon the merits of different versions of the Holy Scriptures, no allusion to varying religions views, nothing to awaken distrust or disgust with instructions given in other places. The Bible is used only as a means of devotion, to enlighten the conscience and secure the sanction of God upon its decisions, an appeal to which forms the legitimate discipline of the school; and also to enforce the accepted morals of daily and school life. For the denominational bias that it may be thought desirable to give the children, all but one body of Christians cheerfully look to their own religious institutions. As an evidence that they do not esteem this question lightly, and are equally anxious with Romanists to secure the early devotion of the young to God, we have only to point to the indefatigable labors of the Sunday school teacher.

It is a striking confession of distrust in the power of their religious culture, this manifestation of fear of the influence of intellectual development. Why may not a Catholic boy be submitted as safely as a Methodist or Baptist to the ordeal of academic training? It is simply because this ancient and fallen church, overridden with traditions and superstitions, dreads the advance of knowledge and the intellectual development of its communicants. A few men, like Pere Hyacinthe, still clinging to its communion, have received divine light enough to see the fatal error of such a course, and hope and pray still to bring this superannuated and demoralized system back to a pristine purity and to harmony with the enlightened civilization of the day. God help them! for only he who called a Luther out of the deepest darkness of his times, and can bring light out of night and order from chaos, can recreate and illuminate this church, so wide in its influence, and now so hostile to the simple "truth as it is in Jesus."—New York Christian Advocate.

THE identical towel which Hannah Dustin used to tie fifteen Indian scalps, at the time she escaped from captivity and returned to Haverhill, Massachusetts, is now in a good state of preservation, and is handed down as an heirloom in the family of Charles H. Rowell, of Randolph. Mrs. Dustin's maiden name was Hannah Cluff, the initials of which are marked on the towel by her own hand, which towel she herself spun and wove before marriage. She requested to have it given to the oldest daughter in each family. It has passed through four successive generations, and is preserved as a sacred relic of the brave woman. That's a first class Dustin' towel.

FAMILY GOVERNMENT.—The eccentric Elder S——, well known to many as an active and earnest Baptist preacher, once said from the pulpit: "They say there's no family government now-a-days. But there is—I tell you there is—just as much as there ever was; but," leaning over the pulpit, and lowering his voice into a quiet and confidential tone, "the difference is this—when I grew up the old folks governed the young ones, but now the young ones govern the old ones."

MONTGOMERY CONFERENCE.

CHANGE OF TIME.

MR. EDITOR: Please announce that by urgent request Bishop Paine has postponed the meeting of the Montgomery Conference one week. It will assemble on Wednesday, December 8, instead of December 1, as first announced.

Truly your brother,

JOSEPH B. COTTRELL,
P. C. at Union Springs, Ala.

UNION SPRINGS, ALA., Oct. 26.

The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

This committee has not been called together since the meeting of the General Conference, because in the financial state of the office there was nothing it could do. To be able to support an editor was one of the conditions necessary to the electing one. Then the expenses of such a committee should be borne by the office—another question of finance. These are simply the reasons why this call has not been made yearly. There was really nothing to do, or that could be done by the committee. As the ADVOCATE feels somewhat like standing on its legs, or at least like stretching them in a preparatory way, we give notice that there will be a meeting of the Publishing Committee directly after the patronizing Conferences shall have all adjourned—say on the second Saturday in February next.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE.—A letter from President Wiley informs us of the continued prosperity of this Southern Methodist institution. It is situated in a healthy region—southwestern Virginia—it is ably manned, and is filled with students from all parts of the South. The terms of the college and expenses of board and tuition are set down in the advertisement which we insert this day. The success of such a college is the success of the church. We wish its faculty and trustees "God speed!"

CONFEDERATE MONEY.—We give this week the full text of the decision of the United States Supreme Court upon the value of contracts made during the war in the Confederate States, for money there current. As various parties are pushing, and some being pushed, by enterprising lawyers, who propose to collect money out of those who have paid once the current value for farms, houses, etc., we publish this timely decision for the study and meditation of all such, with the hope that it will prove an additional aid to man's natural desire to be honest.

THE SPIRIT OF THE CONFERENCE.

Every organized body of men has an esprit of its own, that is felt to be something more than the individual sentiments of those who compose it. We are all so recently from camp that the illustration of the fact at once rises to the mind in the form of an armed corps or brigade, or regiment of patriots. But in the peaceable combination of guilds, of scientific associations, or of professional or literary circles, the same controlling influence is acknowledged. It is, therefore, but natural that men who have accepted the same condition of life, who promise to go in and out by the same rule, and, in no extraordinary sense, to eat, after the manner of the disciples, out of the same dish, should realize to an unusual degree this common force of an Annual Conference. It might be easily mistaken for a higher impulse. We can imagine that the vows of poverty and obedience, by which the followers of Loyola resign their personal property and freedom to their society, might be reckoned by them to be a purely religious impulse, even though the true end of their mutual devotion should be the acquisition of worldly power and wealth.

The natural esprit de corps is, indeed, a powerful agent, no matter where found; but it is earthly, and in degree and quality is far inferior to that pure, heavenly and mighty principle which breathes through "the body" of Christ—"which is the church." It is his presence that constitutes this principle: "From whom the whole body fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love." It is during the session of an Annual Conference that we ought to see this common "bond of perfectness" in its strength. Methodist preachers have taken no vows of poverty, they have not segregated themselves from their fellow citizens by any "voluntary humility," but, in so far as they are together, are one, not by any artificial habits of life, but by the one hope of their calling of God. The harmonizing, moulding Spirit of Jesus has brought them together, and holds them in its unity of baptism, of faith and of love. This Spirit of assemblies, met in the name of the Saviour, rests in the fiery smoke of his glory upon the elders of his people when they are in Conference. Let them be conscious of it. Let no carnal, selfish or worldly spirit appear to distract the flow and sweet concord of these sons of God in council!

A Conference without the presence of the Master is a wearisome thing; but when he is there it is an atmosphere only a little this side of heaven. We want wisdom to devise right things and to move forward, for we are not under a dispensation in which nothing wears out; but we want mainly the fire and the love of the Spirit—for with that we shall be able to command the "sandals" and the "staff only." As we believe that a Methodist Annual Conference is the legitimate representative and descendant of that company in the "upper room" that first received the baptism of fire, we cannot but feel that it is here, if ever on earth, the Holy Ghost is ready to enact over again that sublime evidence of his own life and presence. He is the "Spirit of burning"—of such hallowed sentiments as filled the minds of those who walked with Christ after his resurrection, and listened to the words that graciously demonstrated the certainty of his own anointing and glory. May such holy communion be the experience of every preacher who shares in the deliberations and association of our Conferences about to assemble.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH—TRUE AND FALSE.

At a meeting held recently in New York to advance the proposed assembling of the evangelical alliance of the world, during the next year, at some point in this country, a letter was read by Dr. Bacon, of Brooklyn, from Father Hyacinthe. It had no direct connection with the alliance, but was, in fact, written as an introduction to a volume of sermons, now in press, from the pen of that distinguished French preacher. It breathes an eloquent catholicity of soul, and shows of what material the spirit of the man is made who stands forward to protest against doctrines which are Roman and not Christian, and, in this critical hour, to rescue his church, if possible, from "excesses which have dishonored it, and seem bent upon its ruin."

That so great a spirit has been given to that church ought to be matter of rejoicing to all who pray for the advancement of Christ's kingdom. By the favor of heaven and the pillar of fire one man may guide the hosts of Catholic Europe, who are still Christian, out of the engulfing, sterile sensuousness of Rome. Nor does he appear one moment too soon. Already a council is convened to enact articles of faith, which will transcend in their extravagance of presumption even the papal attempt to raise Mary to the nature and dignity of a divine person. The mind of every reader of God's holy word must revolt from that concentrated pride and conceit of the human mind, that would solemnly venture to announce personal infallibility as an attribute of any Bishop or Archbishop on earth. The Scriptures represent such high self-inflation as one of the characteristics of the arch-adversary—that amid sacred surroundings, while sitting upon a seat of God's house, he shall assume an attribute of divinity. That Rome fully contemplates this, we may believe from the advanced rendering of its faith by Archbishop Manning. He doubtless, from an outside point, wishes to prepare Christendom for the blasphemous extravagance which is about to take the form of an article of the Romish faith. On Sunday, October 3, this prelate delivered a discourse in Kensington, London, in the course of which he said:

Could it be wondered at that when the world, with great courtesy sometimes, with great superciliousness at another time, and great menace always, invites the Roman pontiff to reconcile himself to liberalism, progress and modern civilization, he should say: "No, I will not, and I cannot. Your progress means divorce; I maintain Christian marriage. Your progress means secular education; I maintain that education is intrinsically and necessarily Christian. You maintain that it is a good thing that men should think as they like, talk as they like, preach as they like and propagate errors as they please. I say that it is sowing error broadcast over the world. You say I have no authority over the Christian world, that I am not the vicar of the Good Shepherd, that I am not the supreme interpreter of the Christian faith. I am all these. You ask me to abdicate, to renounce my supreme authority. You tell me I ought to submit to the civil power, that I am the subject of the King of Italy, and from him I am to receive instructions as to the way I should exercise the civil power. I say I am liberated from all civil subjection, that my Lord made me the subject of no one on earth, king or otherwise, that in his right I am sovereign. I acknowledge no civil superior, I am the subject of no prince, and I claim more than this—I claim to be supreme judge and director of the consciences of men—of the peasant that tills the field and the prince that sits on the throne—of the household that lives in the shade of privacy and the legislature that makes laws for kingdoms. I am the sole last supreme judge of what is right and wrong."

We consider that a very pronounced statement of the dogmatic programme of the Ecumenical Council. Those who subscribe to such doctrines willingly, consent to be the eternal slaves of death and hell. Under some strong delusion they believe a lie. One could scarcely imagine anything to be so monstrous as a fresh outgrowth of the nineteenth century; but so it is. Sin, in its essence, changes but little; its elements are few, and even its forms are limited; they constantly repeat themselves. The false doctrines of the sixteenth century are revived to-day as a novelty. The Jesuit College of Clermont, in 1661, uttered the sentiments which are now agitating Rome, and which we have just quoted from the Archbishop: "Jesus Christ has granted to St. Peter and his successors, as often as they speak in the chair, (ex cathedra,) the same infallibility which he had himself."

Two manner of people are struggling in the womb of Roman Catholicism, and her time is at hand. The letter we quote below represents one of these, and reveals to the Protestant world what the Spirit of God is effecting elsewhere for the advancement and glory of the Saviour's kingdom.

Rev. L. W. Bacon, at Brooklyn, then read a letter from Father Hyacinthe which he had lately written as a preface to the English translation of a volume of his sermons, which Mr. Bacon is preparing:

"I am grateful as well as surprised at the honor which you are disposed to give to the few discourses I have published in Europe. I should have been glad, I acknowledge, if I had been able to bring to America something less unworthy of the sympathies with which I have here been welcomed and which I shall always reckon among the greatest honors and the purest joys of my life. Such as these are, however, I commit these rough productions to the intelligence of your readers. Frenchman and Catholic as I am, I present them, through your hands, to that great American Republic of which you are a citizen, and to those numerous and flourishing Protestant churches of which you are one of the ministers. I am proud of my France, but I deem it one of its most solid glories to have contributed to the independence of that noble country which it has never ceased to love, and which it shall one day learn to imitate, a people for whom liberty is something more than a barren theory or bloody practice!—with whom the cause of labor has never been confounded with that of revolution; which rears its houses of prayer next to its houses of commerce, and crowns its noisy and productive week with the sweetness and majesty of its Sabbath. I continue faithful to my church and faith, but I have protested against the excesses which have dishonored it, and which seem bent upon its ruin. You may measure the intensity of my love to-day by the bitterness of my lamentation. When he who is in all things our Master, our Example, armed himself with a scourge of cords against the profaners of the Temple, his disciples remembered that it was written, 'The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up.' I am still faithful to my church. I am none the less sensible of the interest which must be felt in the bosom of other churches in what I may say or do within the pale of Catholicism. For that matter, I have never deemed that the Christian communions that have been separated from Rome have been disinherited of the Holy Ghost, and are without a part in the infinite work of the preparation for the kingdom of God.

"In my relations with some of the most pious and most learned of their members, I have experienced, in the very depths of my soul, that unutterable blessing of the communion of saints. Whatever may divide us externally in space or in time, vanishes like a dream in the presence of that which unites us within—the grace of the same God, the blood of the same cross, the hopes of the same Trinity. Whatever be our prejudices, yet under the eye of God, who seeth every hidden thing, who gives his hand which is leading us, we are laboring all in common for the upbuilding of that church of the future which shall be the church of the past in its purity and its original beauty. In the days of his captivity the word of the Lord came to Ezekiel and said to him: 'Take a stick and write thereon, For Judah and for the children of Israel, his companions; and take another stick and write thereon, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel, his companions. Then thou shalt join them one to the other, and they shall form but one stick, and they shall be one in thy hand.'

"To me, likewise, who am the least of Christians, in those spiritual visions which are ever vouchsafed to longing souls, the Lord hath spoken. He has placed in my hand these two sundered and withered branches—Rome and the children of Israel who follow her; the churches of the Reformation and the nations that are with them. I have pressed them together on my heart, and under the outpouring of my tears and prayers I have so joined them that henceforth they might make but one tree. But men have laughed to scorn my effort, seemingly so mad, and have asked of me, as of that ancient seer, 'Wilt thou not show us what thou meanest by these things?' And while I gaze upon that trunk so bare and mutilated, even now I seem to see the brilliant blossom and the savory fruit.

"'One God, one faith, one baptism.'

THE ENEMIES OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The exclusion of the Bible from the common schools of Cincinnati by a vote of its Council is exciting a wide interest in the public press. Writers gravely argue that the objection of the Romanists to the Bible—King James' version—is a reasonable one, and we ought not to expect Catholics to read a Protestant version—as if a change in Bibles would compose these agitators and gain them over to the side of the public school system. After the Bible shall be removed from the schools, as it was in this city, the public will find that these opponents are as unrelenting as before. What now? They answer, that a school without religion is worse than no school; that "mixed popular education is profoundly irreligious;" that it makes "either Protestants or infidels," and is in the interest of both. It is questionable which the priests profess to dislike the more, schools with Bibles or schools without. In fact it is the schools, whether with or without, that they are after. The crime of the public school system, in the eyes of these clerical agitators, consists in two items: first, it is in the way of the Romish schools; next, it has been supported by the State treasury, which support they hope to divert to themselves. The folly of trying to appease men who find fault because they are competitors with you in business, or because you handle money which they wish to handle, has been demonstrated in Louisiana so clearly that all disguise has been abandoned by the Catholic party, and it has avowed itself officially an "unrelenting opponent" to the public school system "to every extremity and under every circumstance."

After such a declaration we can see no use in supposing a case, as a writer in the New York Independent does.

"If, however," he observes, "the Catholic programme be agitation, either for the purpose of breaking up the common school system or for that of diverting a portion of the public funds to the support of private Catholic schools, as a sort of peace offering, then we pronounce the programme utterly insincere in its argument, and just as objectionable in its end. To neither of these purposes would we yield for a moment. The common school system ought to be maintained 'at all hazards,' and against all enemies."

We do not know how much display of a "programme" may be necessary before the public can read it aright, but it occurs to us that after the entire Catholic priesthood, from the diocese of New York to that of Orleans, has been waging war openly for ten years against the schools of the commonwealth, the country ought to understand that it is not religion or the Bible that is really in peril, so much as it is the common school system itself.

If it is important to the well-being of this country that the children of its people should be enlightened, and if a sound citizenship implies and demands an impartial provision for the education of the masses by the government, then just that far these Romanists refuse to be citizens. They are unwilling to bear their part with all other religious denominations in providing means for "mixed popular education." They are willing that taxes should be collected from the public for schools, provided it be for Catholic schools. And the question has already resolved itself to this: Shall the State lay taxes to build up Roman schools, or Lutheran or Presbyterian or Methodist, because those churches insist upon it? Or shall it be satisfied with teaching its children to read, write and cipher? "But are you going to leave out all religion?" asks the Romanist with uplifted horror. Yes, if you mean by "religion" praying every half hour to the Virgin Mary. But if you mean by "religion" an acquaintance with the word of God, no. You would banish the reading of the Holy Scriptures from the public schools, and then cry against them as hot-beds of infidelity! It is evident that you simply seek a ground of quarrel. You are for yourselves and against the State. Surely one need not handle these violent "opponents" as if they were friends of the school system, and only perplexed somewhat upon a matter of conscience. They are after the school money—money to build up Catholic institutions—and they care not a rush if one-half the children of the State go uneducated, provided only they can have the control of the money. How long this Protestant people will suffer officers, municipal, and State, and legislators, to divert the public funds to the use, support and building up of a religious community that fosters and follows implicitly the order and leading of the Jesuits, remains to be seen. These things will and must come to a swift end in this country, as they have of late in Austria, Italy and Spain.

An item from a Cincinnati paper will show what the papists are effecting through State and city officials:

As the result of persistent effort on the part of certain New York politicians, acting in behalf of Romish ecclesiastics, a bill was forced through the New York Legislature, last winter, making grants for the education "of children for whom the public schools do not provide." The grant was of a piece with the usual false pretense of Jesuitism. There were no children for whom the schools did not provide. The provisions in this direction are beyond all applications. The scheme was to put the Pope's hands into the treasury of New York, and draw out money for the education of children in the dogmas of the Romish Church. And it has proved a success. Mr. Nathaniel Jarvis, junior, the commissioner appointed by the Board of Education of the city of New York to distribute the sum appropriated by the Legislature, has just made his report. Fifty-three schools, most of them religious, are allotted a portion of the spoils, and as was designed, and as might have been expected, the Catholics got the lion's share. Out of $214,987 divided among the fifty-three, $153,880, or over seventy-one per cent. goes to the twenty-five institutions of these enemies of our free schools, the twenty-eight Protestant and other schools receiving $61,107.

On Wednesday, November 17, the Board of Aldermen of the city of New York voted $3,500 to the Dominican (Roman Catholic) church on Lexington avenue, and $15,000 to the St. Vincent de Paul (Roman Catholic) Orphan Asylum. They had no right to take the people's money and "donate" it to any one; but as the Council is overwhelmingly Roman Catholic, money is paid from the public treasury at the beck of priest or bishop. If the papists of Cincinnati had the power they would to-day divide the school fund and appropriate the public money, the same as in New York, to any Catholic church of our city that might need or only ask for it. Our free school system is the outgrowth of republican order; but here is an entering wedge for the splitting of the system into numberless sectarian fragments. Will Americans sit still while a foreign foe is busily at work in the attempt to overthrow that which is alike our glory and our defense?

VISITORS.—We are at this time favored with the presence of the Rev. F. Vordenbaumen and Brother Rabe, Southern German preachers who have been laboring in Texas, and are true men. They are here in the interest of our German Methodist churches of that giant State. They bring a good report; and we wish them great success in helping our people here to save something from the last fire. Brother Pauly is over in Texas, engaged in the same great work. The Germans of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in this city are prospering in their bodies, and can afford to say to these representatives of the saints of Texas, "Be ye warmed and be ye filled!" and at the same time to give them "those things which are needful." We like these friendly interchanges. They argue that a spirit of "brotherly kindness" has been added to the original faith.

REST satisfied with doing well, leave others to do better.

A SILVER WEDDING.

Rev. Dr. J. B. Walker, pastor of the Magee Methodist church, on Carondelet street, and his wife were most agreeably surprised last evening by receiving from the members of the congregation a most substantial token of their esteem and affectionate regard. The occasion was the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage, and the testimonial a superb silver tea set, consisting of some twelve pieces, each of which was a chef d'œuvre of mechanical skill.

So quietly and secretly had the whole matter been arranged that neither of the recipients of the costly service was aware that anything of the kind was intended until a large delegation of the congregation, headed by our old friend Thomas Murray, was ushered into the doctor's residence, bearing the plate and the wherewith to make a festival worthy of the occasion. Mr. Murray presented the service in the name of the congregation, and Dr. Walker's brief but feeling response proved how deeply he appreciated this evidence of the love his people bear him. The feast was soon spread, and the numerous company proceeded to enjoy themselves in a most rational manner, the host and hostess, of course, occupying the post of honor at the head of the table.

We noticed among those present, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Murray, Dr. and Mrs. Moss, Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Walmsley, Rev. R. K. Walker, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson Armstrong, Col. and Mrs. Small, Mr. A. Britton, Dr. Bench, Mr. W. W. Carre and Mr. Barrett. Dr. Walker has labored in New Orleans some eighteen years, and for seventeen years has been the pastor of the Magee Methodist church, on Carondelet street, which, mainly through his noble zeal and apostolic eloquence, has grown to be one of the largest and most influential Christian congregations in our city. We trust in common with a large number of his people, that there is no ground for the apprehension that the doctor may be removed from the vineyard in which he has so long and so successfully labored.—N. O. Picayune, Nov. 27.

VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

We publish below two additional items from its recent session, as reported by the Richmond Christian Advocate:

DR. MUNSEY'S FAREWELL.

Dr. Munsey then took occasion to bid farewell to the Conference. He said the Conference was inexpressibly dear to his heart, and he could never forget some of these honored preachers, whose names had for years been household words with him. Many of them were about to pass now on their last battle field. They had fought the good fight, they had kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for them a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, will give them in that day. Many perhaps would never appear again in Conference, but their reward was sure, and their blessed memory would be kept alive in the hearts of generations unborn. He closed with an eloquent apostrophe to the Christian warrior, and described in glowing language his victorious career.

DELEGATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The Conference then proceeded to the election of delegates to the General Conference to be held in Memphis in May next.

The vote was then taken by the clerical part of the Conference. Rev. J. D. Southall and Rev. Joseph E. Potts were appointed tellers. The vote resulted as follows:

Whole number of votes cast, 124. Necessary to a choice, 63. L. M. Lee, 110; J. A. Duncan, 95; J. C. Granbery, 85; W. W. Bennett, 78; Paul Whitehead, 74; John E. Edwards, 65; Peter A. Peterson, 62; A. G. Brown, 42; L. S. Reed, 20; L. Rosser, 17; H. B. Cowles, 10; George W. Langhorne, 27; W. B. Rowzie, 19; Robert Michnels, 15; J. H. Davis, 14. The rest were scattering.

The Bishop declared the Rev. Drs. Lee, Duncan, Granbery, Bennett, Edwards and Rev. Paul Whitehead, elected. It was the prevailing opinion that Rev. P. A. Peterson was also elected, several ballots marked "Peterson" only having been thrown out because the initials were not given. Another vote was taken viva voce, and Mr. Peterson being unanimously elected the seventh delegate, the delegation was announced complete.

Conference then proceeded to the election of lay delegates, with the following result: D'Arcy Paul, Thomas Whitehead, John R. Kilby, William M. Gill, Joseph C. Werning, Asa Snyder and Thomas W. Garrett.

INDIA AND EGYPTIAN COTTON.—Our India advices this week are, from most districts, more favorable. The rain had ceased quite generally, and the bright weather had revived the plants, and removed much of the apprehension felt. Still the outturn will hardly equal the anticipations of a few weeks since. The locusts which, in accordance with cable advices, we referred to early in the month (November 6) as having appeared in several districts, are reported now to have disappeared again without doing much damage. Considerable anxiety was felt on this account throughout Kattywar, Broach, etc., but the only damage done by them, so far as we have yet heard, was to the grain crop.

From Egypt the reports we have received state that, as all apprehension of danger from the rising of the Nile has disappeared, the crop may be looked upon as secured; and, judging from the most reliable accounts hitherto obtained, the opinion is that the total yield will prove about one-fifth more than that of last season. Most of the supplies which have yet arrived at Liverpool, although thoroughly sound stuff and sightly in appearance, are not found to possess the desired merit in point of staple; which fact has induced a rather extensive belief in the scarcity of the finer sorts, and relatively high values for these descriptions. New York Bulletin.

Married.

At Dadeville, Alabama, on the 21st of November, by Rev. L. F. Dowdell, Mr. John R. Nelson to Miss Louisa J. Nomans.

On Thursday, November 18, at the residence of the bride's father, James A. Williams, Esq., in St. Helena parish, Louisiana, Mr. L. M. Tidwell, of Rankin county, Mississippi, to Miss Mattie E. Williams, second daughter of the above.

At the residence of Mr. Hester, near Autangaville, Alabama, November 14, by Rev. William A. Edwards, Thomas Odea to Maria Stoudenmire.

Obituaries.

Died, November 16, 1869, at Berwick City, Louisiana, Mrs. Mary Smith, wife of William Smith, aged fifty-five years.

Mrs. Smith was born in Norway. She came to this country at the age of twenty-four. She was raised a Presbyterian, in which faith she lived and died. Her last moments clearly evinced her faith in God. In her conduct through life she exhibited the true character of a Christian, and commanded the respect of all who knew her. She was a loving wife, kind mother and sympathetic friend. Joseph Knight.

Died, near Dadeville, Alabama, October 29, 1869, David Grantt, in the seventy-eighth year of his age.

He had been a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for forty years. As the time of his departure drew near he expressed himself ready to go. He had been twice happily married, and leaves a wife and several children and grandchildren to mourn his loss. He was a kind neighbor. He was always in his place in the church, and left a full and clear testimony that all would be well with him beyond the flood. About his last work was to assist in rebuilding the church to which he belonged. L. F. D.

Died, in Bibb county, Alabama, on the 12th of August, 1869, Sister Nancy Cox, in her seventy-fourth year.

We visited and worshiped with her often during her long and painful illness. We always found her hopeful, strong in the faith, meekly bearing her afflictions with much Christian fortitude, and perfectly resigned to the will of God. She was a working member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for forty-five years previous to her death. We have reasons to believe that hers was an abundant entrance into the kingdom of God.

C. L. Kirksey.

We are one the less on earth, but one the more in heaven. The first fruits of our little society have been presented to our Lord; and how much our Lord must have been pleased with this pure, rich sheaf.

Sister Loretta Stevens Hawley, daughter of Gideon Stevens and widow of S. J. Hawley, deceased, departed this life on Saturday evening, October 10, 1869.

I fear to write about this excellent woman. To tell the simple, unvarnished truth would seem, to those unacquainted with her, exaggeration. In her life and character were combined all the excellencies of Dorcas, Martha and Mary, of Scripture renown.

New York Methodist please copy.

Alice, eldest daughter of Francis M. Eckford, of New Orleans, Louisiana, was born in Columbus, Mississippi, September 27, 1846, and died near Amite City, Louisiana, October 18, 1869.

Alice was early the subject of religious impressions; was reared religiously at home and in the Sunday school; professed conversion at a joint meeting held in the Methodist churches in Mobile, by Dr. Mitchell and Rev. E. Baldwin, in March, 1860, and connected herself with the church.

She enjoyed the advantages of a liberal education at the Barton Academy, Mobile, and afterward at Centenary Institute, where she completed her course under Dr. R. H. Rivers. She did not, however, consider her education finished, but devoted as much time as she could spare from domestic duties to a course of reading—an acquaintance with the standard authors of English and American literature. She preferred the solid to the showy—the strong to the light. Hence she devoted very little time to works of fiction. But she was not permitted long to pursue that which was so congenial to her tastes. Disease had marked her for its victim. In the winter of 1867-8 she was attacked with pneumonia, from the effects of which she never entirely recovered. A distressing cough, and other symptoms premonitory of fatal results, followed, and she had nothing to do but to prepare to meet the Bridegroom.

The Lord graciously granted her ample time for this. Having moved to a new country home, she would take her Bible and go out into the quiet forest, and spend much time in prayer and communion with her God. In this manner, and by patiently submitting to suffer, her will was brought into complete harmony with the will of her Heavenly Father. So when the final conflict was near her father said to her: "It is hard to see you suffer so, my child." She replied: "I am willing to suffer." She said also: "I had no thought I would feel so perfectly calm at the near approach of death." Her father, perceiving her strength failing, said: "You are almost gone, my child." She said: "All is right; all is right." Her mother writes: "I never saw any one more peaceful and calm, more entirely resigned to the will of God." Thus confidently putting her hand into that of her invisible Guide, she passed over the river into the city of God. Farewell, my dear niece! Upon the banks of "the beautiful river" I trust we shall meet again.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease, Consumption, is anxious to make known to his fellow sufferers the means of cure.

To all who desire it he will send a copy of the prescription used, free of charge, with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, etc. The object of the advertiser in sending the prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable; and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address

TO OWNERS OF HORSES.

Thousands of Horses die yearly from Colic. This need not be. Dr. Tobias' Venetian Horse Liniment will positively cure every case, if given when first taken. The cost is only $1. Every owner of a horse should have a bottle in his stable, ready for use. It is warranted superior to anything else for the cure of Cuts, Wind Galls, Swellings, Sore Throat, Sprains, Bruises, Old Sores, etc. This Liniment is no new remedy. It has been used and approved of for twenty-two years by the first horsemen in the country. Given to an over-driven horse, it acts like magic. Orders are constantly received from the racing stables of England for it. The celebrated Hiram Woodruff, of trotting fame, used it for years. Colonel Philo P. Bush, of the Jerome Race Course, has given a certificate, which can be seen at the Depot, stating that, after years of trial, it is the best in the world. His address is Fordham, New York. No one once using it will ever be without it. It is put up in pint bottles. Sold by the Druggists and Saddlers throughout the United States. Depot, 10 Park Place, New York. de4 4tp

THE MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO.,

WINNERS OF

THE PARIS EXPOSITION MEDAL,

WHO HAVE UNIFORMLY BEEN

AWARDED THE HIGHEST HONORS

AT INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITIONS IN THIS COUNTRY

so that their work is the acknowledged standard of excellence in its department, respectfully announce that, with extended and perfected facilities, and by the exclusive use of recent improvements, they are now producing yet more perfect Organs than ever before—in great variety as to style and price, adapted to all public and private uses; for Drawing Rooms, Libraries, Music Rooms, Concert Halls, Lodges, Churches, Schools, etc., in plain and elegant cases, all of which they are enabled by their unequaled facilities for manufacture to sell at prices of inferior work.

The recent improvements in these Organs have so increased their usefulness and popularity that they are unquestionably the most desirable instruments obtainable for family use, as well as churches, schools, etc., while the prices at which they can be afforded ($50 to $1,000 each) adapt them to the means and requirements of all classes. They are equally adapted to secular and sacred music, are elegant as furniture, occupy little space, are not liable to get out of order, (not requiring tuning once where a pianoforte is tuned twenty times,) are very durable, and easy to learn to play upon.

The M. & H. Organ Co. are now selling four octave Organs for $50 each; five octave Organs, five stops, with two sets of vibrators, for $125, and other styles at proportionate rates.

For testimony to the superiority of their Organs, the Mason & Hamlin Organ Co. respectfully refer to the musical profession generally; a majority of the most prominent musicians in the country, with many of eminence in Europe, having given public testimony that the Mason & Hamlin Organs excel all others.

A circular containing this testimony in full will be sent free to any one desiring it; also a descriptive circular, containing full particulars respecting these instruments, with correct drawings of the different styles and the lowest prices, which are fixed and invariable. Address

WATCH, MOTHER.

Mother, watch the little feet
Climbing o'er the garden wall,
Bounding through the busy street,
Hanging cellar, shed and hall.
Never count the moments lost,
Never count the time it costs;
Where the little footsteps stray,
Guide them, mother, while you may.

Mother, watch the little hand
Picking berries by the wny,
Making houses in the sand,
Tossing up the fragrant hay.
Never dare the question nsk:
"Why to me the weary task?"
These same little hands may prove
Messengers of light and love.

Mother, watch the little tongue
Prattling eloquent and wild;
What is said and what is sung
By the joyous, happy child.
Catch the word while yet unspoken,
Stop the vow before 'tis broken;
This same tongue may yet proclaim
Blessings in a Saviour's name.

A BEAR STORY.

We remember a very comical bear that belonged to Mr. Hammond, and amused with his tricks the mirth-loving people of Paris, in Oxford county, many years ago. He was captured when a little cub, and was brought up by hand as one of the family. He claimed the warmest place on the hearthstone, and nestled in cold weather with the dogs before the fire. None of the pet animals about the farm were tamer than he; and none loved better to climb up in his master's lap and receive his caress, or understood better the whims of his mistress when begging for a choice morsel. His serious countenance always gave great effect to his antics; and he seemed to understand when he caused a laugh among the household. As he was of a prying disposition, and forever peeping into every hole, the family were obliged to lock up everything, even the closets where they kept their clothing. When he took it into his head to make up a nest it was all the same to him whether the articles he heaped together were woolen or fur, cotton or silk. If a hen cackled when the egg was laid, Mr. Bear understood it as well as any of the family or the feathered tribe; and if he was not prevented he would find it and suck it before the cackling fowl had ceased her song.

One Sunday the family went to church and left the bear alone at home. Bruin improved the opportunity and rummaged all over the house in search of fun or something to eat. Unfortunately the good housewife had left the cellar door unlocked and ajar, and it was not long before the bear discovered it and crept down the stairs. Once down in the cellar he espied the molasses barrel, and if there was anything in the house he was excessively fond of, it was molasses or honey. Bruin pawed over the barrel, licked the tightly-driven bung, and was about abandoning it in despair when he espied the spile. Grasping it with his strong teeth he easily withdrew it, and out came the thick molasses in a steady stream, to the great delight of the bear, who slapped his mouth to the hole and sucked away with grunts of self-satisfaction.

The molasses still flowed, and still the bear kept his mouth to the orifice, pausing now and then to take a long breath. At length he was full; his stomach could hold no more; yet his appetite was not satisfied. He squatted on his haunches and viewed the still running stream with disgust, to think that the supply was so abundant, and that, alas! he could hold no more.

The molasses had now run out in large quantity, and had formed a great pool on the floor, but Bruin dove into it, and rolled himself a thousand times in the thick fluid, until his shaggy coat was covered from his nose to his tail, with molasses, dirt and gravel stones.

There he lay in the sweet pool, the picture of self-satisfaction, as cats roll and tumble in a field of catnip herb. All at once Mr. Bear became sick at the stomach; and it was a new sensation to him—something he had never felt before. As he grew worse he thought of his master and mistress, and so crept up stairs to ask for their consolation; but they had not returned from church. Then he crawled up another story and got into the girls' bed, drawing the snowy white sheets over his besmeared form. There he lay groaning and grunting, the sickest bear ever seen in that part of the country.

When the girls arrived they were horrified at the scene, and were going to lay the broomstick over Bruin, when he started on the run for the haymow, with the sheets sticking to his back. It was some time before the bear got well, and still longer before his mistress forgave him.—Our Boys and Girls.

THERE is no eloquence like that of a heart burning with the love of Christ—such a heart speaks in words of flame.—T. Jackson.

The Farm and Garden.

COMMON VS. IMPROVED FOWLS.

It must be apparent to even an ordinary observer that there is much difference between a lean piece of meat and a fat one, and that the difference can often be accounted for in the breed of the animal from which the meat is obtained. Every one who has had the opportunity for observation will acknowledge the superiority of good Southdown mutton over a mongrel carcass, and to which the preference is to be given, whether to short horn bullock or a western steer, the offspring of a hundred generations of mongrel stocks. Almost every farmer of ordinary intelligence will answer the above, and tell you how much more profitable, for every purpose, is the thoroughbred stock over the "natives."

And yet the same persons, be they farmers, citizens or others, are very slow to see or acknowledge that there is any difference between one kind of fowls and another. A chicken is a chicken, whether it weighs two and a half pounds at maturity, or ten pounds; whether it is tender and juicy, or tough, dry and stringy. And an egg is an egg, whether large or small, delicate in flavor, or tough and rank.

You can't tell them anything about fowls. Oh, no! Why? Because they raised fowls before we were thought of. Well, how were they raised? If the truth were told the hens stole their nests in the clumps of elder bushes or blackberry vines behind the house, and managed to raise a few chickens, which were allowed to roost under the hovel or in the wagon shed, dirtying up the tools and carts, and allowing dollars' worth of the most valuable manure on the farm to go to waste. And this they call "raising chickens." Thank my stars that I am not a chicken on such a yard.

Ask them about the chickens, and all the answer you can get is: "Well, I don't know; the women folks look after the fowls." You can't convince them that there is more profit in a pure-bred fowl for stock purposes, costing from $5 to $10 each, than in a dunghill at from fifty cents to $1 each. All the argument in Christendom would be lost on such folks. The only way to approach them is through the pocket, and sometimes it will fail even there. We ask such men, how much money do you make by keeping fowls that lay fifty eggs a year, instead of one hundred and fifty; by breeding fowls that weigh from three to five pounds each, instead of those that weigh from six to eight pounds? This is a practical view of the question. "Don't keep fancy poultry," merely because it is fancy, but because it pays. It is certain that it does not cost any more to keep a good cow than a poor one, and it is just as sure in regard to fowls.

Because a dunghill chicken was good enough for your grandfather, is no reason why it should be good enough for you. Stage coaches were good enough for him in their time, but are they good enough for the present generation? Surely, we don't refuse the benefits conferred by steam, electricity and machinery, simply because our ancestors had no such blessings. You are not satisfied to breed horses that can trot a mile in three or three and a half minutes, because that was the highest speed attained in your grandfather's time; and why not carry the same ideas of improvement into the poultry yard?—Rural New Yorker.

TURKEYS.—Turkeys are poor mothers. They never scratch for their young, are great ramblers, exposing their chickens to the wet grass and all sorts of perils. They seem to have little common sense and tact in managing a large family of young ones, and when they commence with such an one it is usually found that it grows by small degrees and beautifully less very fast. For this reason it is always best to let a hen sit upon the turkey's eggs. She hatches more chickens than the turkey, and takes very much better care of them while young. The hen is a model mother, and can always be trusted to bring up a family well, unless it be a family of ducks. These are altogether too much for her to manage. They will take to the water in spite of her sputtering, and not all her prudish precepts and prim example can take the awkward waddle out of their walk nor the "quack" out of their vocabulary. They will be ducks, notwithstanding their stepmother wastes so much anxious care and wise admonition upon them, all of which make quite as much impression upon their stupid heads as rain drops on their backs. And this is the way stepmothers too often get served by stupid children.—Southern Farmer.

JERSEY COWS, OR ALDERNEY.—A correspondent in Connecticut, S. R. G., speaks in glowing terms of the Jerseys, and thinks the present breeders are improving them so much that they will be Americanized into not alone the useful, but pretty animals, and can show specimens giving sixteen to twenty quarts on ordinary keep, and for quantity and quality of milk and butter, the year round, they will do equal to any. He goes on to say he "will select six or eight Jersey cows to milk against the same number of any other breed for twelve months, the test to be on both milk and butter." We will give full address to any one wishing to try, or we will order. We are for the best strain of milk and butter cattle. He adds he has worked them as oxen, and the cows, when slaughtered, gave five and six hundred pounds of beef, and he has known one hundred pounds of tallow. We have seen too few to know of them, and give the information that our readers may have a choice when they buy.—Southern Farmer.

SHEEP HUSBANDRY.—We give an article from an old Virginia friend who has had experience in the past, and therefore competent to give facts and figures. He has been (and is now) a citizen of Texas, and we believe (without a right to say he will) that he can be induced to handle a sheepfold of one thousand ewes, if a company be raised to procure land and settle down in the southern tier of counties of Mississippi. If it take a capital of $5,000 to put all things going, it would be worth over three hundred per cent. in five years, and the one great thing not considered, one thousand acres of pine land that is now worth perhaps as many dollars, would be in condition to produce nearly one thousand bales of cotton the first year. Old sheep herders affirm one thousand head of sheep will give a good manuring each night to an acre. By proper care of sheep, and of course use of cotton seed meal, such a flock as one thousand to begin upon would, in five years, make one thousand acres rich. We invite scrutiny of our financiers and moneyed men.—Southern Farmer.

PAPER FROM THE REED CANE.

We learn from a Norfolk, Virgina, journal that a company has been formed near that city for the manufacture of pasteboard, etc., from the fiber of the reed cane.

The process by which the fiber is disintegrated, though not new, is interesting, and may not be known to many of our readers.

"The cane, just as it comes from the canebrakes, is put into a cylinder, about twenty-five feet long and twelve or fifteen inches in diameter—steam at two hundred pounds pressure is let into the gun from a boiler close by. After a few minutes the valve at the mouth of the gun is opened by a trigger arrangement, and the steam blows the contents of the gun into the open air. The cane is thereby thoroughly disintegrated; and the effect of the great heat of the steam at two hundred pounds pressure is such that the resin and gums in the fiber are soluble in water without the use of chemicals, and the fiber can be beaten up in a paper-maker's rag engine and run off into coarse paper, suitable for paper for board, without any further treatment. A large part of the intercellular tissue is washed out by the process, so that the cellulose will fall on the machine.

"A bundle of cane four feet by eight feet by the length of the cane (averaging ten feet) yields a ton of steam-blown fiber; the weight of that bundle of cane before it is blown from the steam cylinders is about two tons, about one-half of the weight being water. The fiber, on being blown from the cylinders or guns, becomes quite dry in a minute or two, and is ready for baling. It is somewhat like oakum in appearance.

"The resinous and gummy matter, acid and coloring matter, to the extent of thirty-three per cent. of the weight of the steam-blown fiber, can be washed out by immersing it in water and then squeezing the liquid.

"A battery of ten guns of the ordinary size (twelve inches diameter) will yield fifty tons of fiber per day.

"It has been found at Wilmington that the cost of a quantity of cane sufficient to make a ton of fiber, as disintegrated by the explosive force of steam (Lyman's process) is under $4 a ton, including all expenses and the delivery of the cane at the works. This will be about the expense at Norfolk and Mobile, or at Memphis, Baton Rouge, etc., varying, however, somewhat in each locality.

"The expense of reducing the cane to fiber by a puff of steam is very slight. If coal be used it will take one ton of coal for five tons of the fiber; but in most cases sufficient refuse timber for fuel can be got from the cane region, and being transported to the works by the same means which are used for the transportation of the cane, the cost of wood for fuel is less than that of coal.

"Notwithstanding the great utility of the cane, the cane lands can never become of much value, because they are so vast and inexhaustible. Indeed, except on a few choice spots they will remain of no salable value, even when thousands of tons of the steam-blown fiber shall be used daily in the United States for paper and building materials and other purposes, and other thousands of tons shall be exported daily to Europe.

"When it is understood that it costs five cents per pound to reduce wood to paper pulp by the ordinary chemical processes now in use, and four cents per pound by Voelter's mechanical process, now used extensively in France and in some parts of the United States, the vast importance of the process of disintegration by steam will be at once recognized. It costs less than one-fifth of one per cent. per pound to reduce the cane to fiber by that process, ready for the paper-maker's beating machine. Moreover, the cane is much cheaper than wood.

"For common, coarse articles, such as paper box-board and pasteboard, plain and bituminized, for building purposes, it is impossible to get anything so cheap as the steam-blown cane fiber, and consequently very large quantities of those articles will be worked up by the water power near Norfolk, especially at Richmond and Fredericksburg. Moreover, large quantities of the cane fiber will be exported to the Eastern States, and to England and France."—Scientific American.

THE SECRET OF LONGEVITY.—A Curious Physiological Theory.—A paper was recently read before the British Ethnological Association, by Sir Duncan Gibbs, entitled "An Obstacle to European Longevity beyond Seventy." The writer had previously called the attention of the association to the fact that he had devoted much attention to the position of the leaf-shaped cartilage at the back of the tongue, known as the epiglottis, and that in eleven per cent. of the five thousand people, of all ages, whom he had examined, he had found the position of this cartilage to be drooping, or pendant, instead of vertical. A further prosecution of his inquiries had led to the discovery of the important fact that in all persons over seventy, without exception, its position was vertical. This circumstance he regarded as of the highest moment, bearing, as he believed it did, upon the attainment of old age. Numerous examples were cited in proof of his statement, among which were many well known statesmen who attained to over seventy years of age, Lords Palmerston, Lyndhurst, Campbell and Brougham being among the number. He claimed that the facts presented clearly demonstrated that longevity beyond seventy could not be attained with a pendant epiglottis. His conclusions may be summed up nearly as follows: As a rule, persons with a pendant epiglottis will not live beyond seventy, life verging to a close at or before that period. On the other hand, with a vertical epiglottis, life may be prolonged beyond seventy to the extreme limit of old age.

THE iron ramrod did not supersede the wooden one until 1742, when it was introduced into the Prussian army by Prince Anhalts Dressau. The bayonet was preceded by various contrivances, such as an ax attached to the barrel, then a dagger, etc., stuck into the lattor. But as this was an impediment to the firing a ring was added, about 1791, to the bayonet, whereby the blade, instead of covering the muzzle, came to be flush with its rim. This, however, was still inconvenient for loading, so that at length the bayonet was provided with a neck, as it is now. This was about 1705.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

THE BEST COOKING STOVE FOR WOOD NOW IN USE.

THE FASHION.

We call especial attention to this Stove, which has been produced at great expense, combining all the new and important improvements; also to the extra height of the Oven under the fire chamber, the Patent Air Chamber, Front Doors, and Patent White Enameled Iron Knobs, the improvements in the covers and centre pieces, all of which have been covered by Letters Patent, and are used in no other Stove. They are warranted to stand fire, or others sent free of charge in all cases. We have all sizes of this justly celebrated Stove, both

PLAIN AND EXTENDED BACKS,

the Extended Back with cast Iron Enameled Reservoir and Faucet, Tin Warming Closet, Gridiron Cover, etc. The part of the top supporting the Reservoir is raised so that the fire is above the top plate, instead of below, as is the case in most of the Stoves now used, and the heat is forced directly against the whole surface of the bottom of the Reservoir. The Reservoir, being detached from the pipe, can be removed at pleasure, thereby forming a six-hole Stove—the best in use, as the back holes will heat as well or better than the middle ones. INTERESTING TO LEARNERS OF LANGUAGES.—The other day we had the pleasure of a brief talk with Mr. E. Brey, a many years linguist and teacher, now professor at the St. Louis Institute (formerly Bonham's Seminary,) about what method of teaching languages was, in his opinion, the best. The old gentleman's remarks must be so interesting for every friend of languages that, by their publication, we are sure to oblige many of our readers. His opinion was as follows:

As soon as I had become acquainted with Hamilton's method (literal interlinear translation,) in 1825, having been introduced by him with the co-operation of men of high standing in England, I abandoned the so-called old grammatical system. But the more I became familiar with the former the more I discovered that the objection of superficiality frequently made to it is not quite without foundation, at least at the beginning of instruction, for, after a number of months, the Hamiltonian teaches as much grammar as the adherent to the old system.

As I, however, for a number of years, have gone considerably further than Hamilton did, and teach my students to translate not only word by word, but also by roots and affixes, as the specimen added below* will show, and the student at the very first lesson, by separating the affixes from the root, is directed to lexicological and grammatical forms, I have been, from my many years' experience, most firmly convinced that a person who, knowing the grammar of his or her mother tongue, and possessed of common talents, studies every day at least one hour, partly with, partly without the assistance of a teacher, after the lapse of twelve months, will be, not, it is true, a thorough scholar in a language, but will have progressed so far in any one of the languages publicly taught (Hebrew included) that, without being assisted by a teacher, he or she will be able successfully to continue his studies. Having in this matter a great many educational experiences I am accustomed to tell every one of my (adult) students, that, after twelve months' instruction I grant him the privilege of attending gratuitously any one of my lessons.

With these words the professor closed. We leave it to the philologic part of our readers to weigh these suggestions for themselves.

JOHN PLOUGHMAN'S TALK.—"John Ploughman's Talk, or Plain Advice for Plain People," is a little book containing a wealth of common sense, from the pen of England's noted preacher, Charles H. Spurgeon.

Here are some passages from "Hints as to Thriving:"

"Hard work is the grand secret of success. Nothing but rags and poverty can come of idleness.—Elbow grease is the only stuff to make gold with. No sweat, no sweet. He who would have the crow's eggs must climb the tree. Every man must build up his own fortune now-a-days. Shirt sleeves rolled up lead on to the best broadcloth; and he who is not ashamed of the apron will soon be able to do without it. 'Diligence is the mother of good luck,' as poor Richard says; but 'idleness is the devil's bolster,' as John P. Ploughman says.

"Make as few changes as you can; trees often transplanted bear little fruit. If you have difficulties in one place, you will have them in another; if you move because it is damp in the valley, you may find it cold on the hills. Where will the ass go that he will not have to work? Where can a cow live and not get milked? Where will you find land without stones, or meat without bones? Everywhere on earth men must eat bread in the sweat of their faces. To fly from trouble, men must have eagles' wings.—'Alteration is not always improvement,' as the pigeon said when she got out of the net and into the pie. There is a proper time for changing, and then, mind you, bestir yourself, for a sitting hen gets no barley; but do not be forever on the shift, for a rolling stone gathers no moss. Stick-to-it is the conqueror. He who can wait long enough will win. This, that and the other, anything and everything, all put together, make nothing in the end; but on one horse a man rides home in due season. In one place the seed grows, in one nest the bird hatches its eggs, in one oven the bread bakes, in one river the fish lives.

MEDICINE—MEDICINE.

BRAN NEW LETTERS!
FRESH TESTIMONIALS!
DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.
THE ASTONISHING FAMILY MEDICINE.
Saved from Death!—Read!
MONTGOMERY, ALA., June 28, 1869.
MESSRS. J. DARBY & Co., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: Yours of the 23d is before me, and has attention. It gives me pleasure to say that my belief is that your Fluid, under the supervision of a kind Providence, saved the life of my youngest child, some six years ago, the child being wasted to a skeleton by the effects of teething, and an affection of the bowels therewith. I had never seen any one reduced so low to recover.
Physic had been tried in vain, until the physicians stated it was useless. A friend recommended your Fluid, or Ozone, which he stated was one of the component parts of it. I did so, and the effect was like magic, plainly discernible in one hour in its good effects, producing quiet and sleep almost at once, where irritation and sleepless restlessness had previously possessed the child to nearly entire exhaustion.
I at first administered it in a small way, two and three drops in a spoonful of water, and increased it to six and ten drops. It completely checked the bowels, and had the happiest effect, the child rapidly recovering.
I have tried your Fluid on animals, with the same effect—both horses and cows mingling more or less in water, and letting them drink.
I have no hesitation in saying I believe it a specific for Chronic Diarrhea, or any violent affection of the bowels.
I would not be without it in my family under any consideration. Yours truly,
WILLIAM FOWLER.
Mr. Fowler is a member of the celebrated Banking House of Fowler & Somerville, Montgomery, Alabama.
AND AGAIN!
Read the following letter from Mr. Frank Saunders, a well known citizen, and brother-in-law of the beloved Bishop Pahe, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:
183 BROADWAY, N. Y., July 29, 1869.
MESSRS. J. DARBY & Co., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: About the 10th of June last one of my children was taken with Scarlet Fever, in its most malignant form, and as soon as I could I procured your valuable disinfectant, Darby's Prophylactic Fluid. Although it was several days after the appearance of the disease before I began using the Fluid, still by a free use of it the disease was not only confined to the one case, but the malignity of that case somewhat mitigated.
During the use of the Fluid as a disinfectant in my family it was also tried in a case of headache and one of toothache, the results in each case being instantaneous relief. It was afterward tried in a case of Erysipelas, with almost equal success.
It is due to the merits of this compound, also, to state that the case of Erysipelas in question, being located in the feet, the Fluid, in its application, was brought in frequent contact with a troublesome corn on one of the feet, to the utter discomfiture of said corn, for upon subsequent examination it had disappeared, and though it was sought for diligently, it could not be found.
I hand you this, hoping it may be the means of inducing others of earth's poor sufferers to test for themselves, as I did, the great merits of this great remedy.
Very respectfully yours,
FRANK SAUNDERS.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

J. W. BLACKMAN'S
COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
61 CAMP STREET,
Corner Commercial Place, N. O.
Open day and evening the entire year.
Penmanship, Book-keeping, Mathematics and Languages are practically taught by experienced professors. Persons from twelve to fifty years of age attend. The instruction is private to each student. Persons who have neglected their education can here speedily qualify themselves for good situations in business. Some from the country may obtain board in the family of the principal.
Prof. H. B. Montgomery, of this College, has always won the highest premiums for Penmanship and Pen-drawing, over all competitors, at all the State Fairs held in this city.
A liberal deduction made when three or more enter together. The principal has been a practical teacher in New Orleans since 1851. For circulars, giving terms, etc., address J. W. BLACKMAN,
se11 1y New Orleans.

METHODIST FEMALE COLLEGE,

11. Particular care given to Primaries.
12. Object Lesson System adopted.
13. Discipline thorough and efficient.
14. Literary culture unsurpassed.
MUSIC DEPARTMENT—Dr. S. M. Bartlett, principal.—Dr. Bartlett has been a successful teacher of vocal and instrumental music for nearly twenty years, much of the time in female colleges in Alabama. The Institution has excellent instruments for instruction. Pupils practice under the professor's eye. Vocal music is a gratuitous daily exercise. Vocalization taught thoroughly.
BOARDING DEPARTMENT—Capt. J. H. Pooser, steward; Mrs. E. H. Whitehurst, housekeeper.—The gentleman in charge of this department is late of Marianna, Florida, and is of elevated character and social standing. The President resides in the college, and has charge of the boarders. Young ladies must furnish one pair blankets, one pair sheets, towels, pillow cases, toilet soap and lights. Fees for each term in advance. Four weeks make a scholastic month.
Next year begins September 15, 1869. Two terms, twenty weeks each.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, JACKSON, LA.,
was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.
The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war, but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.
Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually in advance.
Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.
The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution in the Southern States.
The past history of the College is the pledge of its future prosperity.
The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.
The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.
W. H. WATKINS, President.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

With the exception of rather more movement in some branches of the wholesale trade, the general market has exhibited but little variation since our last report. Sugar and molasses have been in good request, and sold at firm prices. Western buyers are holding back, but unless the accounts from the country and from Cuba are illusory, later in the season they may find an advance in prices predicated on scant supplies. Western produce has continued quiet, with operations confined to the local trade, except in flour, for which there is a limited demand for export to Havana.

Nothing of importance has transpired with regard to the crops, the accounts in relation to which are no more encouraging than last week.

The river has risen four inches since our last report, being twelve feet six inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the 26th ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales.. 17916
Lake	220
Arkansas	1312
Mobile	665
Florida	5
Total	20118

On Saturday, under the stimulus of favorable telegrams from Liverpool, and a slight rally in gold and exchange, the movement commenced with considerable animation, at an irregular advance of 1/8 to 1/2c. per pound, and the subsequent accounts being still more encouraging, the demand continued active throughout the day, and 5,350 bales changed hands, the closing rates showing a net advance of 3/8 to 1/2c. On Monday the heavy decline in gold at New York for a time suspended operations in foreign exchange, and when the movement was resumed it was at a decline of 2 3/4c. per cent., equal to a reduction of about 5/8c. per pound in cotton. The market was consequently nearly brought to a stand-still until about noon, after which a limited demand ensued, resulting in sales of 2,600 bales, at an irregular decline of 3/8 to 1/2c. On Tuesday the market opened with only a limited inquiry, and the sales during the morning were confined to a few trifling lots, at about previous rates. Subsequently, however, the demand improved, but still without exhibiting much animation, and the sales did not exceed 3,800 bales. The last dispatches, reporting an improvement at Liverpool, and a decided rally in the New York gold market, were not received until about the close, and our quotations are predicated on the previous business. After the news 23 7/16c. was offered for middling, and neither low middling nor good ordinary could have been had at the inside figures for those grades. The supply was moderate.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 11,750 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 232,826 bales, against 284,690 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 167,414 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 68,543 bales to Great Britain, 20,292 to other foreign ports, while to France there is a decrease of 3,689 bales.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	22 to 22 1/4
Good ordinary	22 1/2 to 23
Low middling	23 1/4 to 23 1/2
Middling	23 3/4 to ..
Strict middling	24 to ..

SUGAR.—The demand is fair, and the supplies sell pretty readily at well sustained prices.

LARD.—The market has continued quiet, but prices are firmer.

MONETARY.—Gold opened at 122 to 122 1/8, (against 122 at New York,) and, after touching 121, (against 121 1/4 at New York,) closed at 122 to 122 1/4, (against 122 3/8 at New York.)

The only transactions reported in silver are a few small sums in American half dollars at 123 1/4.

The fluctuations in gold and stringency of the money market have prevented any movement in stocks, the only sales reported being 150 shares Ship Island Canal at $1 90, and 25 City Railroad at $165.

DR. ROBERT HUNTER,

OF NEW YORK,

Editor of the "New York Specialist and Journal of Diseases of the Chest," and the author of "Practical Letters on the Nature, Cause and Cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma and Catarrh, by Inhalation," has arrived in New Orleans and opened an office at 165 Canal street, for the treatment of affections of the Throat, Lungs and Heart.

Dr. Robert Hunter is the inventor of the Inhaling Instrument and Catarrh Syrup in general use by the profession.

The Inhalation Treatment of Throat and Lung diseases was introduced by him into this country, and for the past twenty years he has devoted himself exclusively to this branch of his profession.

Dr. Hunter has recently patented a Pulmometre for accurately determining the health of the lungs, and to increase the strength of those naturally weak-chested. It can be procured at his rooms.

The following extracts from leading New York papers will show the estimate in which his writings and practice are held in that city:

[From the N. Y. Herald.]—

"No man, we will venture to say, in the whole annals of the profession, has ever introduced a more important innovation on the old system of practice, or gained in a shorter time more converts to his opinions. But the most incontrovertible evidence of the efficacy of Dr. Hunter's system of practice is furnished by the City Inspector's reports. By these it is shown that since the introduction of inhalation the deaths from consumption have decreased upward of thirty per cent. Now we know, from the great number of cases treated and cures effected by Dr. Robert Hunter, that his labors contributed, if not to effect all, at least the greater share of this benefit."

[From the N. Y. World.]

"It is a novelty to see a man of Dr. Hunter's learning and experience engaged in the great work of popular medicinal instruction. All the light that can possibly be thrown on the nature, cause and treatment of consumption—the scourge of our race—will, we feel sure, be gratefully received by the public."

[From the Home Journal.]

"We have repeatedly stated that we regard Dr. Robert Hunter as a public benefactor, and we hope to see his common sense ideas prevail, not only to the extinguishment of consumption, but to the utter breaking down of all stupid deference to old ideas."

[From the N. Y. Express.]

"The fact is now too well established for dispute that the inhalation of medicated vapors, as recommended and practiced by Dr. Robert Hunter, is the most simple, rational and successful treatment for diseases of the lungs yet reached."

Dr. Hunter can be consulted at No. 165 Canal street—office formerly occupied by Dr. Moss.

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR.

An Illustrated Magazine for the Little Ones.

EDITED BY T. S. ARTHUR.

The Children's Hour

is the most beautifully illustrated magazine published.

For 1870 it will exceed in interest and beauty all previous years.

In the Children's Hour for January will be published four original illustrations, on tinted paper, by Bensell, and engraved by Landerbach, of Longfellow's exquisite poem,

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR."

Alice Cary, Virginia F. Townsend, Phoebe Cary, Mrs. M. O. Johnson, T. S. Arthur, Mrs. L. A. B. Curtis, Ada M. Kennicott, Mrs. M. L. Clark, Rosella Rice, Irene L——, Kate Sutherland, and many other gifted authors, write regularly for and will make it for 1870 the most attractive and charming children's magazine in the country.

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR,

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR

is pronounced by the secular and religious press, by fathers and mothers all over the land, by ministers of all denominations, the purest and best magazine for children in the world. Young and old everywhere read with delight and profit. It speaks, through simple form of language, the highest truths; and while the little ones are fascinated by its sweet stories, these heavenly truths drop like good seeds into their minds, to bear fruit in after years.

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

SOUTHERN METHODIST HIGH SCHOOL,

New Orleans.

The exercises of the first session of this institution will commence on Monday, the 4th day of OCTOBER next, in the basement of the German Methodist Church, Dryades st., between Felicity and Euterpe.

In founding this institution our purpose is to supply the desideratum long felt in this city, viz: an acknowledged Protestant School of a high order, in which boys and young men can be thoroughly prepared either for college or the active business of life.

The government of the School will be strict and firm, yet mild and parental in its administration. Thoroughness in the preparation of lessons will be uniformly required of all pupils.

The sons of ministers engaged wholly in the work of their Church will be received at half price, and young men preparing for the ministry without charge.

A Preparatory Department and an Evening School are attached.

In the selection of Teachers the greatest care will be exercised, not only in regard to their mental qualifications, but also in reference to their ability to impart instruction to their pupils.

For further information apply at the School. D. I. RAST, Principal.

READVILLE SEMINARY.

This is a private institution, with its number of pupils limited, and is authorized by the Legislature of Louisiana to confer degrees, diplomas and literary honors. It was in successful operation from 1843 until interrupted by the events of the war in 1862, and reopened January, 1867.

Teachers of a high grade of talent and merit are in charge of the different departments—English, Ancient and Modern Languages, Music, Painting, etc.

Pupils charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session. All pupils received with the understanding that they are to remain and attend the examination at the close of the session in which they enter, and no deduction made on the bills for absence, except in cases of protracted illness, when the loss may be divided between the institution and the patron.

In her outfit each pupil should be provided with toilet boxes, towels, napkins, sheets, pillow cases and blankets or comforts. She should also bring her knife, fork, spoon, cup and napkin ring.

All articles and clothing brought to the Seminary should be distinctly marked, lists of which should be permanently placed on some part of the trunk convenient for reference. The scholastic year commences October 1 and ends in July.

EXPENSE.

Board and tuition per year	$275 00
The Modern Languages a small extra charge.
Music, per year	75 00

Payments due in half session in advance.

Monthly reports of the studies, health and general department of the pupils are sent to the parents or guardians at a distance.

The main Seminary building, recently destroyed by fire, will be replaced by one of ample accommodations, now in process of construction, which will be ready for the reception of pupils at the opening of the next session.

For other information desirable in reference to the school apply to

SEMINARY FOR YOUNG LADIES, LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

E. A. GRANT, LL. D., PRINCIPAL.

This institution occupies the large and elegant building lately known as Grant & Butler's School. The grounds are situated on Sixth street, between Walnut and Chestnut streets, and extend back to Centre street. They are elevated several feet above the street, thus making the large and beautiful lawn a most desirable place for healthful outdoor exercise.

The building, furniture and apparatus of the school are among the most complete and valuable in the West.

Experienced teachers, residing in the institution, will devote their time to the moral, intellectual and physical improvement of the pupils.

ORGAN OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH FOR THE MOBILE, MONTGOMERY, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES

VOL. XV. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1869. NO. 47.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

CHICAGO, Dec. 2.—Mr. Whitson, an Indian agent of Dakotah, says a formidable alliance has been concluded between the northern Sioux and the Crows for war against the settlers in eastern Montana and Wyoming. The Indians are instigated to this by an outlawed half-breed named Renshaw, and they threaten the extermination of the whites.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 2.—The Indians near Prescott and Wickenburg, Arizona, are murdering and plundering the whites.

The superintendent of Indian Affairs for Oregon has succeeded in removing about two hundred Snake Indians to the Klamath reservation. The others will go on their reservation in their own country and nowhere else.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 4.—Mazatlan advices are to November 21.

Political affairs are quiet, and business is unusually dull.

It is stated that Del Placedo Vego has agreed with the principal of an importing house, in consideration of $40,000, pledging himself to make a pronunciamento allowing them a discount of fifty per cent. duties on their cargo to arrive, and keep the town until their goods were disposed of. It is also said that in consequence of this agreement several cargoes have been made up in Liverpool for Mazatlan.

Senora is being devastated by Indians.

Durango has suffered severely from ruins. Three water-spouts destroyed a village of three hundred houses, and filled the mines with water and damaged the fields.

Apaches have appeared at Durango, and penetrated as far south as the State of Zacatecas.

SAVANNAH, Dec. 6.—Cotton—receipts 4,027; exports 1,031.

CHARLESTON, Dec. 6.—Cotton dull and ¼c. lower; sales 350 bales; middlings 23¾c.; receipts 1,981.

GALVESTON, Dec. 6.—Evening.—Election returns come in very slow. McClennan county unofficially reported as having gone for Hamilton, gave Davis a small majority. Davis received majorities in counties as follows:

McClennan 191, Fort Bend 736, Walker 599, Bexar 340, Washington 1,076, Hill 197, Colorado 451, Montgomery 123, Brazoria 166, Bastrop 251, Grimes 1,294, Jackson 140, Victoria 136.

Hamilton has majorities in counties as follows: Bell 360, Ellis 404, Falls 59, Coryell 259, Williamson and Hays (before reported) 700, Travis 205, Caldwell 61.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—The cause of the removal some weeks ago of Special Treasury Agents Bell and Elder was for alleged complication with the revenue frauds of the British brig Oriental at New Orleans.

Senate.—Morton introduced a joint resolution admitting Virginia and for the admission of Senators and Representatives from that State.

Trumbull introduced a resolution making it a penal offense for any member of Congress to recommend any person for office.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—The great Northern mail going South failed to connect this morning on account of storms which prevailed North and South, delaying the trains generally.

A gale prevailed, but no disasters by sea or land have been reported.

The Commissioner of Agriculture in his report to the President estimates the cotton crop at two million seven hundred thousand bales.

Senators and members of the House elect from Virginia, and several members of the Virginia Legislature, paid their respects to the President this morning, and thanked him for the recommendations in his message regarding their States.

The President in reply said he hoped the future conduct of Virginia would justify him. The delegates asked the appointment of Alexander Rives as one of the new district judges.

The Election Committee appointed a sub-committee to consider and report on Louisiana elections.

Mr. Kerr is a member of the sub-committee, and in the consideration of Louisiana cases is virtually made a member of the Election Committee, and can have its privileges regarding minority report.

In the House to-day the topics of the President's message are being referred to the various committees.

That portion referring to Virginia and Georgia goes to the Reconstruction Committee.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—In the Senate to-day a bill was introduced that contemplated the International Exhibition of 1871.

The Senate adjourned while the President's secretary was en route to it, with nominations.

In the House Butler introduced a bill to repeal the tenure of office act.

Stevenson, of Ohio, introduced a bill for the removal of political disabilities, (providing two-thirds of both Houses concur,) upon the adoption of the fifteenth amendment.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—Mrs. Gaines, by the advice of her counsel, will leave for New Orleans on the 10th instant.

In the Supreme Court, to-day, the case of Farmington vs. Saunders, from the district of West Tennessee, was heard, and the decision below sustained the cotton tax, which was imposed under the internal revenue law of 1866.

The case was taken from the Court of Error, the plaintiff in error contending that the tax is invalid because it was unconstitutional, as being a direct tax without an apportionment, and as being a tax on State exportations.

The Committee on Elections reported favorably on the credentials of Heflin, Dox and Sherwood, of Alabama, and they were sworn in.

The Reconstruction Committee will meet on Thursday. The admission of Virginia is expected on Friday or Tuesday next.

MEMPHIS, Dec. 7.—Captain Ford, of the tug Nettie Jones, was acquitted at Helena, Arkansas, yesterday, of the charge of complicity in the destruction of arms belonging to the State of Arkansas, on the steamer Hesper, about a year since.

Samuel Speakes, an old and respected citizen of Arkadelphia, committed suicide last Tuesday.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The city elections to-day are progressing with unusual quietness.

The candidate for alderman in the Twentieth Ward was dangerously shot.

LAWRENCE, MASS., Dec. 7.—City elections were held here to-day. The Democrats elected the mayor of the city, and the council is equally divided.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 7.—The Merchants' Building, corner of Third and Walnut streets, is burning. The chandelier fell within ten minutes after the discovery of the fire. The whole building is in flames.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The Tammany party has swept the city in the municipal elections to-day.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—Cuban letters to the Tribune contain accounts of three engagements on the 11th and 13th of November.

The Spaniards attacked the Cuban position at Macagua in large force, and were repulsed with a heavy loss.

A heavy column of Spaniards were subsequently routed at Auguada Del Santo, near Trinidad, and were pursued by the Cubans to the suburbs of the city.

A detachment of Catalians were annihilated upon the line of the Puerto Principe railroad.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8.—Among other credentials of members elect, referred to the House Committee on Elections, are those of a full-blooded negro from Virginia.

Senator Spencer's bill, amendatory of the civil rights law, introduced yesterday, is designed to abolish, in every part of the country, every known distinction on account of color in every relation of life between whites and blacks, except that it is not proposed to compel the former to select negroes as social companions in their own private houses. The provisions of the bill completely cover every other point where any distinction is now made.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8.—The President nominated to the Senate, to-day, William B. Wood, of Alabama, to be judge of the fifth circuit, under the law reorganizing Federal courts. Wood is an Ohio carpet bagger.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—Good staple cotton is scarce; middling uplands is quoted at 25c.

The gold market is active—quotation, 123¼. This advance is caused by the introduction of the bill to stop Boutwell's sale of gold.

Sterling exchange has declined—quoted at 8½.

Advices from Liverpool report sales at nominal prices.—Picayune.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8.—Senate.—The bill relieving some five hundred persons from political disabilities, which had passed in the House, passed the Senate, and goes to the President for his signature. Among those relieved are Blanton Duncan, of Kentucky, and Judge Ackerman, of Georgia.

The Judiciary Committee have been directed to inquire whether, on the borders of the United States, any of the rights secured by treaty stipulations or the fourteenth amendment were denied to any person.

The House is engaged on the census bill.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8.—The Senate confirmed to-day General Belknap as Secretary of War and Robeson as Secretary of the Navy.

A number of nominations were referred to the various committees, including those for the circuit judgeships as follows: George F. Shiepley, of Maine, for the first; Lewis B. Woodruff, of New York, the second; William B. McKennan, of Pennsylvania, the third; George A. Pearce, of Maryland, the fourth; William B. Woods, of Alabama, the fifth; George A. Yeoman, of Kentucky, the sixth; Thomas A. Drummond, of Illinois, the seventh, and Lorenzo Sawyer, of California, the ninth. No nomination has yet been made for the eighth circuit. The nomination of Charles Clinton for assistant treasurer at New Orleans was also referred.

No appointment has yet been made for the vacancy on the Supreme Bench. The choice undoubtedly lies between Attorney General Hoar and Judge Erskine, of Georgia.

The Spanish minister to-day gave satisfactory assurances to the State Department that the gunboats now detained at New York would not be used against Peru, and in consequence the Peruvian minister is satisfied and no longer insists on their detention. The Secretary of State has therefore directed Attorney General Pierrepont to enter a nolle prosequi in court to-morrow, the result of which will be the release of the Spanish gunboats.

The Virginia Legislative Committee had an interview to-day with General Butler, chairman of the Committee on Reconstruction, with a view to the immediate admission of the State, which will be successful; but it is said the admission will be accompanied by a required pledge that the constitution shall be faithfully carried out.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8.—William B. Woods, of Alabama, has been appointed circuit judge of the fifth circuit, and George A. Pearce, of Maryland, judge of the fourth circuit.

GALVESTON, Dec. 8.—Returns from forty-six counties give Davis, for Governor, 5,489 majority, and Flanagan, for Lieutenant Governor, 8,260 majority.

The counties heard from are in the farming districts, and most of them poll a heavy negro vote.

It is generally believed that additional returns will diminish Davis' majority.

FOREIGN.

MADRID, Dec. 3.—There have been several Carlist conspiracies discovered in various parts of the country, and many arrests have been made.

PARIS, Dec. 3.—It is reported the question regarding the landing of the French cable on American soil has been favorably adjusted.

LONDON, Dec. 3.—Dispatches from Rome announce that the opening conference was held yesterday, when the papal alocution was delivered and oaths were administered to the officers of the Ecumenical Council.

LONDON, Dec. 3.—The Times of to-day says:

Things in Rome are arguing ill for the council. Austrian and German bishops demur to the dogma of the infallibility of the Pope, and discord is apprehended among the Italians. Antonelli shakes his head at the performance, in which he never felt any sympathy. It will be some time before it can become clear whether the council will bring the church peace or the sword.

LONDON, Dec. 3.—The cotton mills in Lancashire are again running on full time.

LONDON, Dec. 7.—The message of the President was published this morning.

The Pall Mall Gazette says, in reference to the Alabama claims, that the Americans are ready to accept an apology in lieu of damages, but England cannot do more than she has already done.

A delegation of Manchester workmen had an interview with the Viceroy of Egypt, who assured them he was making extensive preparations to increase the cotton crop of Egypt.

PARIS, Dec. 7.—The ministry have resigned.

PARIS, Dec. 8.—The Prince of Montenegro protests against Austrian occupation. Prussia sustains Montenegro.

LONDON, Dec. 8.—The correspondent of the London Times has been excluded from Rome.

VIENNA, Dec. 8.—Austria demanded the sanction of the European powers to their troops crossing Turkish territory for the prompt suppression of the Dalmatian insurrection.

ONE of the rare cases where a Mohammedan has embraced Christianity has lately occurred at Constantinople, under the labors of Dr. Koelle, of the English Church Missionary Society. A man who had been a baptized Christian, but had embraced Mohammedanism soon after his father had perished during the massacre at Damascus, had married a Mohammedan woman, by whom he has a son six years old and a girl two years old. On last Epiphany day this family was received into the Episcopal Church, the husband having long been sorry that he had abjured his faith, and the wife having been won by the influence of her husband. But the woman was unable to withstand the threats of her friends, as she was told that fifty people had taken an oath to compel her to return to her religion or else to kill her. She seems to have intimated to them that she would return to them if they would provide for her. Officers came to the house, and, recognizing the law which allows religious liberty, asked her what was her religion. She replied: "Mohammedan."—They then took her away; and when her husband remonstrated, they replied that she was no longer his wife, as Turkish law allowed no Christian to have a Mohammedan wife, though a Mohammedan might have Christian or Jewish wives. The officers then refused to allow the man either of his children, saying that the boy wished to remain with his mother. But three weeks later the woman returned to her husband of her own accord, bringing her children, and resumed her profession of Christianity. The chief of police attempted to take her away, insisting that she was not a Christian, but a Mohammedan; but she remained steadfast, notwithstanding she was offered a house and one hundred and fifty piastres a month from the government for her support. The English embassador wrote a letter to the Pasha, counseling him to allow her choice of religion now as he had before; but he did not venture to act till he had consulted the prime minister, Aali Pasha, who decided: "Let her go where she wishes." This is recognized as a great triumph of religious liberty.—Independent.

A curious idea is started by a correspondent of the English periodical, Land and Water. He proposes that criminals be fed on horseflesh for meat. The advantages would, he thinks, be numerous. The flesh is good, wholesome and cheap. The criminals, as well as most others, have a great objection to eating it, however, and the restriction of the animal diet to this meat would, therefore, be a punishment and a mortification of the flesh without working any real injury to the culprit, while the prospect of having to live upon horse meat would be an excellent deterrent from crime, and the use of it would serve to utilize what is now wholly wasted.

RESTORATION OF AN ORDER OF KNIGHTS.—The order of the Knights of Malta, it is announced, will be reorganized in the Grand Duchy of Baden, under the authorization of the Pope. Eight members recently, at Friburg, gave their adhesion to the rules, which only comprise the vow of obedience, and not the vows of poverty and celibacy. The Grand Master is a Cardinal, and the knights wear a crimson uniform with gold epaulettes, and a Maltese cross on the breast.

WHETHER God choose you to labor or to suffer, you have no reason to complain, especially as he is leading you to glory.

THOUGHTS.—There are people whose good fortune it is never to be deceived or undeceived, save when their interest requires it. The way the right becomes dim or luminous to them is always marvelously opportune.

The great need of many is an interlocutor. They have listened, and then they have spoken, but they have never had an opportunity either to converse or to respond.

Many friendships subsist on the reflection of one. To love deeply in one direction makes us more loving in all others.

The old friendships—safe, genuine and firmly built—for which we take little thought, and which always avail us, are like those good, thick walls of bygone days, which need no repairs and are ever ready for shelter or defense.

There are hearts whose mere kindness sheds more rays than the love of others, as the moon of Naples shines with a softer splendor than many a sun.

To love our friends is often not enough to satisfy them. We must also hate those whom they do not love.

The ideal of friendship is to feel as one while remaining two.

Demonstrations of affection, in this world, are, for the most part, payment in counterfeit money. Yet some counters are better gilded than others.

A vast number of attachments subsist on the common hatred of a third person.

What do we need to make us considerate? Much good sense, and a drop of pity in the heart.

We are amused through the intellect, but it is the heart that saves us from ennui.

The heart has always the pardoning power.

Youth should be a savings bank.

A woman who consecrates her fidelity to a sinful affection is like those workmen who substitute Monday for Sunday.

While we are still young we enhance our youth coquettishly for this world's sake. When we are old we think to deceive death so.

Years do not make sages; they only make old men.

In youth grief comes with a rush and overflow, but it dries up, too, like the torrent. In the winter of life it remains a miserable pool, resisting all evaporation.

A woman in years pleases an old man least of all.

When we are old we may sometimes enlighten, but we can no longer persuade.—Writings of Madame Swetchine.

THE WONDERFUL PRAYER.—Which? Why, that one which your mother taught you. Did you ever think, short though it may be, how much there is in it? Like a diamond in the crown of a queen, it unites a thousand sparkling gems in one.

It teaches all of us, every one of us to look to God as our parent—"Our Father."

It prompts us to raise our thoughts and desires above the earth—"Who art in heaven."

It tells us we must reverence our Heavenly Father—"Hallowed be thy name."

It breathes a missionary spirit—"Thy kingdom come."

And a submissive, obedient spirit—"Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

And a dependent, trusting spirit—"Give us this day our daily bread."

And a forgiving spirit—"Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us."

And a cautious spirit—"Deliver us from evil."

And last of all, an adoring spirit—"For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever and ever. Amen."

Now is it not both a wonderful and beautiful prayer? Jesus, our dear Saviour, taught it; and who could better tell us how to pray to his Father and our Father, to his God and our God?

THE cereal product of Europe in 1868, it is calculated, amounted to 4,754,516,604 imperial bushels, or sixteen bushels to each inhabitant, while that of the United States amounted to 1,405,449,653, or thirty-six bushels per inhabitant. Of the product of Europe, 1,484,437,500 bushels were grown in the Russian possessions in Europe; 764,411,100 in North and South Germany, 717,215,996 in France, 571,254,765 in Austria and Hungary, 380,887,930 in Great Britain and Ireland, 191,662,113 in Italy, 204,876,890 in Spain, 129,446,658 in Roumania, and 120,000,000 in European Turkey.

A GEOGRAPHICAL discovery which will rather astonish the map publishers has been made in this country north of Lake Superior, by a party under Prof. Bell, which has recently been engaged in the geological survey of that region. Lake Nipigon, lying only thirty miles north of Lake Superior, and hitherto considered too insignificant to find a place in American atlases, is announced by Prof. Bell to be larger probably than Lake Ontario or Lake Erie. He had traversed about five hundred miles of its coast line when the approach of winter compelled the party to return to Canada. This lake discharges its waters into Lake Superior by the Nipigou river, a broad and rapid stream.

"THE number of women studying medicine at the University of Munich," says the Pall Mall Gazette, "increases steadily in geometric progression. Four years ago there was but one, the next year there were two, the next year four, last year there were eight, and there are now sixteen. We are assured (it is true, by a partisan of the movement) that none of the inconveniences which it was feared might arise from women being allowed to share the school with men have at present been experienced, the classes are as large as ever, and the Dean reports that the innovation has undoubtedly improved the discipline of the school."

ONE day a poet read a new play before the reading committee of the French Comedy. It was unanimously refused. The poet went up to M. Samson, the well known actor, and said to him: "I have a right to complain of you; you voted against my piece, and yet you slept all the time I was reading." H. Sanson wittily replied: "Sir, in literary matters sleep is an opinion." Is not the rule as applicable to sermons as to plays?

AN ENGLISH CLERGYMAN, on ordering a dinner for a number of clerical friends at a hotel, was gravely asked by the waiter if the party were High Church or Low Church. "Now, what on earth," cried the minister, "do my friends' opinions matter to you?" "A great deal, sir," rejoined the waiter; "if High Church, I must provide more wine; if Low Church, more wittles."

FOR throat diseases and affections of the chest, Brown's Bronchial Troches, or cough lozenges, are of great value. In coughs, irritation of the throat caused by cold, or unusual exertion of the vocal organs, in speaking in public, or singing, they produce the most beneficial results. The Troches have proved their efficacy.

THE hereditary priesthood recently abolished in Russia embraces seven hundred and fifty thousand families, to which the right of officiating as priests was restricted, and the male children of which could not engage in secular pursuits. The effect of this great change will be very considerable on the social and industrial life of the empire.

"GENTLEMEN," in the true sense, are of the Almighty's making, and his alone. The pure ore is very scarce. The run of gentlemen of all ranks are merely plated or washed; give them a rub, put them into a novel situation—into a passion, or any other trying circumstance—and the copper beneath quickly shows itself.

GOETHE, walking through Rome with a friend, said to him: "There is not a relic of primitive Christianity here, and if Jesus Christ were to return to see what his deputy was about, he would run a fair chance of being crucified again."

God has not chosen to flatter our curiosity by any of his revelations. What he reveals to man is the end assigned him and the means of attaining that end. Doctrine and morals constitute an essential part of these means.

A COMMITTEE in England has reported that "women are fast being drawn into the tide of demoralization and drunkenness; and that men go to the public houses more to get away from their wives than from any other cause."

SPEAK GENTLY.

Speak gently: in this world of ours,
Where clouds o'ersweep the sky,
And sweetest flowers and fairest forms
Are ever first to die;
Where friendship changes, and the ties
That bind fond hearts are riven,
Mild, soothing words are like the stars
That light the midnight heaven.

There are enough of tears on earth,
Enough of toil and care;
And e'en the lightest heart hath much
To suffer and to bear.
Within each spirit's hidden depths
Some sweet hope withered lies,
From whose soft, faded bloom we turn
In sadness to the skies.

Speak gently, then, and win the smiles
Back to the shadowed face,
And bid the clouded brow resume
Its fresh and youthful grace.
Thy gentle words, perchance, may guide
A wanderer to the sky,
Or teach some earth-bound soul to soar
Above the things that die.

Lead gently back the erring feet
That love, perchance, to stray;
Thou canst not know how long they strove
Ere leaving virtue's way;
Nor with what desolating power
Despair's dark phantom came,
And, with her sad touch, made the heart
A desert, seared with flame.

Within that desert there is yet
Some pure oasis-spot,
Formed of sweet memories of scenes
That ne'er can be forgot.
For that bright soul, with care now worn,
Bowed down though it may be,
The self-same Saviour died who gave
His priceless life for thee.

LETTER FROM CHINA.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, Oct. 8, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: Being so distant from you no attempt has been made to correct the occasional errors of the press that have crept into some of my published letters; but as I see you labor under a misapprehension, somewhat, in reference to the "get up" of my two Chinese newspapers, I herewith send you a few more copies of each, and beg to avail of this opportunity to say something about Chinese letters, or rather characters, as we call them, and dialects.

In your complimentary notice of the papers (see ADVOCATE of August 7) you state that "one is published in the vernacular and one in the classic letter of the Chinese," which is quite a mistake, if, as I understand, you mean by "vernacular" the colloquial, and by "classic" the literary; and your mistake is still greater if you have conceived any difference between the characters used, for they are all of the same font.

In Chinese books, and on their monuments, coins and carvings, four kinds of "letters" are to be met with—first, the ancient hieroglyphic, which bears a striking resemblance to those of Egyptian origin; second, the "seal character," which is of later date, and appears to be an elaborate modification of the hieroglyphic; it is chiefly used on seals—hence the name—and on title pages; third, the "running hand," or business character, which is almost exclusively used in accounts and in business and other correspondence, but seldom printed, except occasionally in the introduction of some important book; and fourth, the "round hand" or book character, which is now adopted entirely by the China press, whether cut on blocks or cast in movable type. This last is the letter used in my papers, and I suppose may claim to be "classic," inasmuch as it is certainly the only character in which the classics of China are now extant.

As to the dialects of China, there are supposed to be not less than thirteen, which have fundamental idiomatic differences, while those affected and varied by the accidents of tone and pronunciation cannot be less than a thousand. Every province has a marked provincialism, every departmental city its peculiar accent, and every district its humbler dialect or patois, and they are all unintelligible to a stranger from another province, department or district. South of the river Yangtsz, which quite divides the empire in half, the spoken language varies about as much as those used on the continent of Europe. North of that river, however, the dialects appear to be more homogeneous and less affected by accidents, than those south. It is from this region we derive what is commonly denominated the mandarin dialect, or Kwan hwa; also called by some the Tong Shing tih hwa—i. e., current or universal speech, from the circumstance of its having been adopted as the court dialect, and its use made obligatory in all the Yamuns throughout the entire country.

But notwithstanding the vastness and variety of these provincial differences of dialect, no attempt has ever been made by the Chinese to reduce their colloquials to writing or use them in any form of publication, except in rare instances, and then only in connection with the lightest literature.

The mandarin or court dialect, however, appears to be gradually gaining favor. Several minor works have been published in it, but the chief, I believe, in importance is that containing a translation of the "Sacred Edict," which is bound up together with the original, in the Wun-li or purely classic style.

Missionaries have long been attempting to publish and circulate books in the different colloquials, but, though expressed in the best language of the dialects, no teacher or literary man would condescend to notice a book printed in his vernacular. In the case of the mandarin, however, missionaries have had better success, and there is at present a committee at Pekin engaged in rendering the Bible into the best mandarin for use in the northern provinces, where that dialect prevails, and, so far as the results of their combined labors have been made public, with the greatest encouragement, thousands of copies of such portions of Scripture as they have completed having been readily disposed of.

I have learned to discourse in two dialects—that of Shanghai, which is useful to communicate with about ten or fifteen millions of people in and near this city, in the Kiang Soo province, and also the mandarin, which I have found of special value to me since my connection with the government college at Shanghai, which has necessarily thrown me more into the society of mandarins and the higher classes of society, nearly all of which speak it.

But aside from this local and temporary advantage, it would enable me to address viva voce, were such a thing a physical possibility, the more than one hundred millions of people who inhabit the region north of the great river Yangtsz.

Now as my papers are not designed for partial circulation, but to have free course both throughout the empire and Japan, it will readily occur to you that none of these dialects, not excepting the mandarin, could be the medium of reaching a people whose spoken languages exhaust themselves in an interminable jargon fifty or one hundred miles from their native place.

The language adopted, therefore, is not one of the numberless dialects, nor a vernacular, but purely a literary language—a dead language—bearing about the same relation to modern Chinese that Latin did to the dialects of Europe in the days of the scholastics. It is never spoken, nor read aloud to another without a translation, but is readily understood anywhere in the empire and Japan when written. The Chinese call it Wun-li, which may be rendered by our term "classic." Thus you discover that my papers, both of them, as to style and character, are ex necessitate classic.

Yours truly,

YOUNG J. ALLEN.

JUDITH MENDEZ is the name of a lady critic who went to Munich to hear Wagner's "Rheingold," and then wrote to a Paris paper of "notes which trickled down like drops of milk; of the light that trembles over the kettledrums; of the mailed brilliancy of the trumpets of giants whose massive tread reechoes in the double basses of flames that play around the violins; of the gold that glistens in a magnificent tremolo of the cymbals; of a dragon whose horrid voice speaks out of the trombones, of the mysterious atmosphere of the horns," etc.

IT IS wisdom to say but little about the injuries we have received.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

MR. EDITOR: Recently I took a few days' leave of my circuit to visit the home of my childhood and youth—the first visit I have made to the old homestead since the death of my father. And how unlike my former visits! Kind parents were not there to bid me welcome by their cheering smiles. Their work is done, their sufferings ended, and their spirits have gone to the home of the blessed.

My father, William R. Nicholson, was born in Pickens district, South Carolina, July 10, 1800. In 1834 he settled in De Kalb county, Alabama, where he died June 25, 1869. At the time of his death he had been a member of the Methodist Church forty-nine years. He did not regard Christianity as a mere matter of convenience, but as a divine principle to be possessed and realized and enjoyed. This principle being properly enthroned in his heart, it regulated his desires and disposition, and led him in paths of peace and usefulness, and brought the entire man in subjection to the will of God. He had large views of Christianity. He was not a partisan, but was much devoted to the interests of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He was not hasty in arriving at his conclusions, but was firm in his decisions. There was not the shadow of fickleness about him. He was energetic and industrious, but not conformed to the world. He did not let his secular interests interfere with his religious duties. He was just in his dealings, prudent in conversation, upright in deportment, and liberal to the extent of his ability.

He and my mother raised fifteen children, all of whom became pious in early life. Five of their sons are ministers in the Methodist Episcopal Church South. My father was truly a patriarch in his family, and "the ark of the Lord abided in his house." He loved the Bible much, and had read it until he was familiar with its teachings. He could truly say: "Oh, how love I thy law; it is my meditation all the day."

For several months previous to his death he suffered much with hypertrophy, or enlargement of the heart, which terminated in his death. Two months before his death I visited him and found him confined to his room. When I talked with him about dying he said: "With me all is right for the future." His sufferings became severe, but he bore them with Christian fortitude, and realized the truth that God's grace is sufficient for every time of need. Having arranged all his temporal business, he then left a message for his absent children. He said: "Tell them my sufferings are beyond expression, but it is consoling to know that I shall soon be released from them, and join a band of happy ones, who now beckon me to come where pain and suffering are no more, and where the weary are at rest. Oh, how delightful is my change!" He was ready and anxious to depart and be at rest. Frequently he would rise above his sufferings, and contemplate those joys that awaited him in the better land; and he would talk as if he were traveling through regions of bliss, and would speak of that "delightful country," of those "magnificent mansions," and of "the vast concourse of persons there." Occasionally he would be in such ecstacy of joy that he would forget his physical sufferings. Just before his death he gave directions about his burial and the funeral services.

Thus passed from earth to glory one of the best men I ever knew. Those who witnessed his death could truly say: "I saw him after many days, when the time of his release had fully come, and I longed for a congregated world to see the dying saint."

When I visited the family graveyard I knelt by the graves of my father and mother, and thanked God for such parents, who had taught their children "how to live and showed them how to die." My mother lived happy and died triumphantly.

Five weeks after the death of my father, my sister, Mrs. Mary Russell, died in peace. Thanks be to God, who gave her the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

EVAN NICHOLSON.

MARGARET ISABELLA SPENCE, wife of J. A. Spence, departed this life November 11, about ten o'clock, after a painful illness of seven days. Her fatal disease was inflammation of the stomach. Her sufferings were most extreme from the very first—vomiting almost day and night, in consequence of which, and of anodynes, her mind was much disturbed. As I saw death fast approaching I asked her if she knew she was dying. "Yes," she said, "we must all die." I asked her if all was well. "Yes," she replied, "all is well." As the physician was about to administer chloroform, and not knowing its possible effects, she said to me: "If I sink under it, you may be assured that all is right with me."

She was converted at camp meeting, and joined the church in her youth. Previous to our marriage she sought and obtained the blessing spoken of in First John, 4: 18, and illustrated it in her walk and conversation till death. She was religious from principle, ardent in her attachments, strong in faith, decided in her character, and firm and constant in her devotions. She was the daughter of Moses and Christiana Green, and was born in Sumpter district, South Carolina, May 4, 1817. Her memory is blessed.

DISCIPLINE.

BY BISHOP ANDREW.

We say a great deal in these days about the preaching necessary for the times; and we are prone to glorify the preacher who is eloquent—especially if he draw large congregations and add many to the church. He is very apt to be regarded the very man for the times, if the rich and the great throng the house of God to hear his wisdom and his power of persuasion. They hear and are delighted and go away full of the preacher's eloquence, and very many are gathered into the church and are proud that our church competes successfully with any other denomination in reference to talents and popularity. Now, many of these people united not with the living church of Jesus Christ, but with the man in the pulpit, and the result is that they are dead branches and do but little to promote the spiritual welfare of Zion.

It is a good thing to gather the sheep into the fold of the Good Shepherd; but is it not just as important to feed and guide them, so that they will remain there, and grow strong in love and faith? All members of the church ought to be burning and shining lights to guide all inquirers into the good and the right way. Without pastoral oversight they will decline in their first love, and perhaps become a curse instead of a blessing. To make the church what it ought to be, there must be sound doctrine, earnest preaching, and godly and faithful discipline.

Mr. Wesley regarded a faithful administration of discipline as indispensable to the success of Methodism, and if we read his journals carefully we shall be convinced that he regarded discipline as important as doctrine. And the framers of our Discipline have strongly sustained the same views, and hence the great anxiety that our people should read and understand our rules, which they have shown by making it the duty of every pastor to read the rules publicly in the congregation annually, and in each society quarterly. Now let us ask whether this duty is not almost entirely neglected? And yet the Annual Conference takes no note of it. I fear that they rarely take the trouble to ask after this rule. Does it not now, in most instances, stand as a dead letter in our book?

It used to be that if any of our members were complained of as having acted fraudulently in his business, a committee was appointed to examine into the matter, and if there was evidence of fraud, he was dealt with and punished according to his delinquency. But how is it now? Look around you and see how many men rush into debt with no reasonable possibility of being able to pay; and when payment is sought to be enforced legally or otherwise, immediately protection is sought in the insolvent law. And many a man claims to be insolvent—has nothing and can pay nothing—yet nobody can see any difference in his style of living, or if there is any, he lives better than before—rides in as fine a carriage, has as fine a house, his family dresses as extravagantly, attends as many parties, perhaps while the honest creditors have to do their errands on foot, and are not able to educate their children. I am no enemy to the insolvent debtors' act when properly understood and administered. It is properly the honest debtors' insolvent act. It is well in this grasping, griping world to have some source of relief to unfortunate debtors; and if the debtor is really honest, though unfortunate, it is well to grant him the relief which the law provides. But when men use it only to keep dishonestly their ill gotten gains, then in that case it is a great curse. When a man takes the insolvent debtors' oath, although it may save him from prison, and enable him to go forward in business so as to regain his lost fortune, if he is an honest man he will still feel morally bound to pay this indebtedness as soon as he can acquire the means by honest industry to do so.

If the war has wrought the South no further damage, it has loosened the sense of moral obligation to a fearful extent; and we fear that in some instances the church has sometimes permitted cases to pass, to the manifest injury of the cause of God. Now, what is to be the issue?

We have only glanced at one of the violations of one law or the neglect to enforce it. We cannot now dwell longer. At another time, perhaps, we may go further into the subject.—Southern Christian Advocate.

THE SPAN OF METHODISM.

At the opening of the new Book and Mission Rooms of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 805 Broadway, New York, speeches were made by distinguished men of that church. We copy from the New York Christian Advocate the speech of Dr. Jesse T. Peck.

When I first saw this building I said to a friend by my side, it is both a symbol and a prophecy. It is a symbol of the wealth which God has given to the people called Methodists. An edifice for the great connectional purposes of Methodism costing $1,000,000 indicates the progress our people have made from the humblest condition in life to comparative affluence. I rejoice in this. The very genius of Methodism produces industry, thrift, economy, and our Christian edifices reveal the power, in material development, of the spiritual life in the new creation. It is, I affirm, perfectly legitimate that the Methodists should be able to own the grandest public building for evangelical business purposes in the world. (Dr. Durbin said: "I believe that is true." Dr. Peck responded: "Unquestionably it is. I speak considerately.")

It is the symbol of culture—of esthetic development; and this comes as naturally out of the refining power of grace over the masses as increased wealth. This edifice, in its architectural beauty, its fine proportions and massive solidity, indicates that our people are acquiring rapidly a love of the beautiful, which will inevitably place many of them in the first ranks of elegance and refinement. In this department of civilization we move up abreast with the age in which we live. We have been, within my own memory, termed the poor, despised Methodists; but there are no beauties, either of form or color, which we do not drink in; and if there be anything in the glories of art coming to the ages, Methodism is open to receive them. The new creation has formed us to appreciate them and to reproduce them. I know how condescendingly we have been complimented upon our adaptation to the poor. We accept it, sir. God forbid that we should ever forget or neglect the poor; but our brethren have yet to learn that the spirit of Methodism spans the whole distance from the extremes of poverty and wealth. No wise man will drop one good thing to grasp another; but, holding on to the one, he will find it attracting and seizing the other. So does, and must, Methodism hold on to its mission to the poor, which it has in common with the Master, and rise to the highest heights in its process of culture and wisdom and adaptation to the most elevated and refined of the race. This is indicated in our connectional building. To be able to work and provide for but one class at a time would be narrowness unworthy of our vocation, endowments and mission.

It symbolizes spiritual power. Never, sir, let it be said that development of beauty, and taste, and convenience, especially in the means and appliances of evangelism, does of right antagonize spiritual life. Soul-refinement, under the power of the great reformation, produces all these results upon the grandest scale; but, properly guarded and applied, there is not an element nor fact of material progress which does not belong to the most spiritual Christianity. As, therefore, a few scattering rays of Methodistic light are focalized here, they are to radiate in spiritual illuminations everywhere. Behold the symbol of our massive connectional power for the work of the future in the conquest of the world! * * *

I think it right to allude to another item of history. We are today rejoicing in the grand equalizing, healthful power of our General Missionary Committee. Few, I presume, perhaps no one here, knows from whence it came. Let me put the facts into their proper page of history. At the famous General Conference of 1844 I happened to be a member of the Committee on Missions, and of a sub-committee to whom certain proposed revisions of the constitution were referred. During the careful deliberations of this sub-committee, Rev. B. M. Drake, of Mississippi, said: "I have been thinking of a General Committee of one from each episcopal district—as many as we have effective Bishops—who, with the Board and Bishops, shall determine the whole matter of equalization and distribution." It was reported to the General Committee, and then to the General Conference, just as he proposed it. It is a pleasure to me to make this due acknowledgment. Brother Drake was a beloved, gentle, excellent spirited brother, and is, no doubt, now in heaven.

DR. CUMMING AND THE POPE.—Dr. Cumming is not satisfied that the Pope has forbidden him to appear at the council, and as it is evident that the latter reads the Times, the doctor proposes to carry on the controversy through that medium. He has, accordingly, written a second letter to his holiness. The Pope, in his reply, laid the main stress of the issue on the belief that St. Peter is the foundation of the Christian Church. Now, says Dr. Cumming, there is but one passage in the Bible by which this doctrine can be supported in the slightest degree—the well known verse, "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church." In the original text the word "Peter," which means "a stone," is signified by petros, but the word "rock" is denoted by petra, the change of termination clearly indicating, in the opinion of the doctor, a change of persons. Moreover, in the First Epistle to the Corinthians occurs the passage, "Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ." In Revelation is the following: "The wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb." Are these passages, asks Dr. Cumming, in favor of the doctrine that St. Peter is the sole founder of the Christian Church?

The doctor then proceeds to inquire why no priest, prelate nor Pope can marry, when St. Peter, the first Pope, was married; why St. Peter submitted to a rebuke from St. Paul on one occasion, instead of excommunicating the apostle who dared to censure the vicar of Christ; why St. Paul, who in the Epistle to the Romans sends apostolic compliments to sixteen persons, men and women, never mentions his "ecclesiastical superior, Pope Peter;" why St. Peter, instead of calling himself the supreme pontiff, or the vicar of Christ, is content with the title of "co-presbyter." These are only a few of the many knotty points on which "more light" is needed from the council.

FATHER HYACINTHE'S CREED.—The following extract from a discourse delivered by the eloquent French priest may indicate why he finds it impossible to remain in the Church of Rome:

"Salvation in Jesus, by grace alone through faith—salvation in him, known and realized in blessed peace and power, lifts its possessor clean out of the world of superstition and delusion. It raises him above the reign of priestly mediatorship. The one High Priest above does all the proper priestly work for such a one. A thousand bonds are snapped asunder in a moment, when the soul of a poor sinner finds its full rest in Christ. You need not prove to him that pains and penalties, purgatorial fires and priestly indulgences and absolutions, pilgrimages, high masses, and beads and censer, are all empty, needless and vain. No! the vital principle of all these has been called already to the true cross. The principle of them no longer triumphs in his heart. Grace reigns there now. He stands fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made him free, and he rejects every priestly interference that would bring him into bondage. The true Priest—the great High Priest—has emancipated him from the thraldom of every usurper. The snare is broken and the captive has escaped.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1869.

Pressense's Opinion of Father Hyacinthe.

M. de Pressense has just concluded, in the Revue-Chretienne, a series of articles wherein he depicts the chiefs of the two strongly antagonistic parties which now divide the Catholic Church in France. At the close of the last one, which was in type before Father Hyacinthe's celebrated letter was made public, he characterizes this eloquent preacher, and in terms which cannot be suspected of over-laudation, as they were penned when, as yet, there was no reason to hope that Hyacinthe would, in his Christian independence, do more than thousands of his like-minded brother priests will probably do, namely, earnestly protest in words against extreme popery, and yet finish by abjectly bowing the neck so soon as the final word of command is given by official superiors.

After commending the liberal, scholarly and pious Archbishop of Paris—Darboy—and his opposition to the extreme tendencies at Rome, Pressense thus continues: "The boldest step of the Archbishop was to put into the pulpit of Notre Dame, Father Hyacinthe, an orator who had really caught the mantle of Lacordaire, and revived, under the vault of the great cathedral, the brightest days of Christian eloquence. Father Hyacinthe's sermons have been replete with generous inspiration, and an ardent zeal which told on the side of Christian liberty. Born of a family of scholars, trained by profound classic studies, he entered in early life into the Carmelite order. It was soon found that his gifts of speech were of the highest order. His first appearance at Notre Dame was a complete triumph. When he was to preach multitudes crowded to the church doors in advance of the time. And over these crowds he poured those torrents of living words which swayed them as leaves of the forest. His countenance is open and expressive, and his voice thrilling. He seems, as it were, borne up by the intense inward activity of both mind and heart; and, when in his best vein, his words are of incomparable power. His imagination is both chaste and grandiose, and it never has freer wing than when depicting the Oriental associations of primitive Christianity. Thus far he has mainly treated of subjects of a general character—the personality of God, the dependence of morality on piety, the laws of religion and civil society. We are anxious to hear him broach directly the central problems of religion which lead to the very feet of Jesus. A main trait of his preaching is a largeness of heart, which leads him to do ample justice to true piety outside as well as inside of his own church. Another is that it is as slightly sacerdotal as possible, earnestly insisting on the universal priesthood of the heads of families, and bewailing the fact that the fathers and mothers have too much forgotten this sublime privilege.

"The voice of an orator like Hyacinthe is extremely significant; it is like an Eolian harp; it is swayed by the currents about it, is, in fact, the voice of the medium in which it resounds. His stated addresses are not of isolated significance; they are the expression of a widespread spirit which throbs in the church where they were uttered. The very wrath itself which they have excited in such circles as publish the Univers, is another sign of their real value."

So much was written before the great act of faith of Father Hyacinthe. After that event, Pressense appreciates its significance in these words: "This month everything pales into triviality in the face of one of the grandest religious acts of the last three centuries. In view of such an act, all speech is cold and impotent. Our beloved France is not abandoned of God so long as he raises up such witnesses. The only chance that the Christianity of Catholics has of not being confounded with Romanism, lies in protests like this. Eloquent appeals to liberty of thought, caustic assaults on ultramontanism, bitter but half-outspoken words against triumphant Jesuitism, nothing of this kind hinders popery from boastfully claiming to be the sole organ of Christianity, and thus inevitably plunging very many souls into absolute atheism and despair. Honest Catholics who hesitate now are sacrificing the interests of true religion to a culpable timidity. There is no remedy save in that Christian "foolishness" of which we have before our eyes such an eminent example. Blessed is he who can rise through anguish and opprobrium to the sacred height of such daring.

"Let us be understood. We do not over-estimate, by one iota, the magnitude of Hyacinthe's act. We are a thousand leagues remote from the narrowness of looking at the interest of mere Protestantism. The event has a broader significance. It is a reformative initiative which will mightily stir our own stagnant waters. For, as I have often said, no single church will suffice to a general revival of religion. Who does not feel, while reading the simple and sublime letter, the stirrings of a divine breath? Surely those who fail to see God in it, sin against the Holy Ghost! Let the faint-hearted do what they will, let the Pharisees of the Univers and the Monde pour out their invective or indulge in devout raillery, let Rome do what she will—God is there. Every upright conscience has felt it. It is in vain that the Bishop of Orleans, in a letter written in a tone in other respects worthy of him and of Father Hyacinthe, speaks of a grave mistake, and pretends that it is an outrage to Christ to appeal to him alone. This sacred name itself is an answer to all such charges. For, where could one find a more telling example of faithfulness to conscience, and of breaking with a venerable hierarchy, than in the great outcast of the synagogue! Verily to all these reproaches and pious objurgations, from whatever source, to excommunication itself, thousands of prayers will respond. The unbelieving world itself looks on and admires. It is a long while since it has seen anything of the like. We ourselves can only be silent, adore and wait."

Hereditary Class Leaders.—The Rev. William Grimshaw, incumbent of Haworth, sent Mr. Wesley to preach at a village near Todmorden, in 1757. Mr. Wesley says in his journal: "Mr. Grimshaw led us to Gawkshaw, to a lone home, near Todmorden, on the side of an enormous mountain. The congregation stood and sat row above row, in the sylvan theatre." Mr. Wesley preached out of doors. Those lone and majestic mountains captivated him. The locality was in what was called the "Keighley Round," and an old circuit book is kept at Keighley with a list of the members then in that society, dated 1763. There are forty-seven names entered, and among them are "David Lacy, stuff-maker, Longfield." David had been turned out of doors by his father for becoming a Methodist. He next resided with a family at Waterside, and in his leisure made brooms in order to save money to pay his class and ticket money. After he had been a member several years he was made a leader, worked hard during a long life, loved the means of grace, and died a worthy man at the age of eighty-three. At his death his son Thomas, following in his father's footsteps, accepted the leadership of the class in which he had long been a member, and from which not a few of the members had passed in triumph to heaven. When the hand of death had removed all the family but one daughter, Hannah Lacy accepted the leadership of the same class, held in the same place, and continued it, till in the ripe old age of eighty-nine years she went to her reward. Thus was this class conducted by the members of one family from about 1770 to 1852, a period of more than eighty years. It was a class of loving brethren and sisters, seeking to save their own souls, and those around them; the discipline of that class was a rule of love; and heaven only can reveal how much happiness was created by the example of that one godly family. Whilst literary and scientific institutions, with nobility to patronize, and wealth to encourage, and music and oratory to give a charm to them, have to complain of poor attendance and want of interest felt in them, here is a Methodist class meeting, led by a holy man or woman, maintaining its influence, interest and vigor for more than fourscore years. The discipline which prevailed there is available for every Methodist class in the world. "See how these Christians love one another!"

List of Mr. Peabody's Bequests: Of the late Mr. George Peabody the Cincinnati Gazette says:

"An accurate statement of the bequests of Mr. Peabody has never been published. The following is an approach to correctness: For institutes at Danvers and Peabody, $250,000; Peabody Museum, at Salem, $150,000; Newburyport, for a library, $30,000; Memorial church, at Georgetown, Massachusetts, to the memory of his mother, and Free Public Library at same place, $100,000; Phillips' Academy, at Andover, $30,000; Massachusetts Historical Society, $20,000; Harvard College, for museum and professorship of American Archæology and Ethnology, $150,000; Yale College, for Museum of Natural History, $150,000; Peabody Institute, at Baltimore, $1,000,000; Maryland Historical Society, $20,000; Kenyon College, $25,000; Public Library at Post Mills, Thetford, Vermont, $10,000; Southern Educational Fund, $3,000,000; London poor, $1,750,000; his kindred, $1,500,000, and many smaller donations."

There is only one thing worse than ignorance, and that is conceit. Of all intractable fools an overwise man is the worst.

Oriental State Letter.—The way the orientals spread on the complimentary is illustrated by the reply of the Sultan of Zanzibar, to an invitation of M. Ferdinand de Lesseps to his sultanship, to be present at the opening of the Suez Canal. Here is the reply translated from the original Arabian idiom:

The Sultan of Zanzibar to Ferdinand de Lesseps:—In the name of God the Merciful. The most agreeable news that the soul desires, and the most acceptable of mysteries which rejoice the heart, is the offer of a greeting more delicate than the zephyr of morning, and sweeter than the dew which falls on the fields and the groves, on the part of one who unites generosity and perfection; possesses glory and greatness, and who has true ideas and iron thoughts, Ferdinand de Lesseps, the president of the Universal Company of the Suez Canal, bearing the first class of the Imperial Medjidtric decoration. May God accord every happiness to him through life, and preserve him from all evil and trouble. Amen.

At a most honorable moment and agreeable hour the cheerful and pleasing news arrived of the completion of the Suez Canal, uniting the White and Red seas, in November next. I felicitate thee, O friend, who employed the greatest energy and application to complete a work which redounds to the good of mankind and the prosperity of cities. We render thanks to God, the generous Saviour, that you attained your sublime object. The excellent M. de Vienne, French consul, has given us valuable explanations. You say you invite me to assist at the universal fete, at which the princes of the European powers will be present. You will receive my decision after this letter through the medium of the French consul, the worthy M. de Vienne. I pray to God to give you health, preservation, and the highest rewards. From your affectionate friend,

Majed Ben Said Ben Sultan.

The sun's atmosphere, say the scientific men, is in a highly excited condition. A column of magnetic light is shooting out further from the solar sphere, and it is now stretching out forty-five million of miles. In other words, it has accomplished half the distance between us and the sun! The interesting question, and one on which, perhaps, we do not wish any more light of this character, is, how long will it be before it finishes the rest of the distance and bridges the gigantic chasm between the earth and the sun? This column of light at intervals indicates its approach by flashing and coruscating with fresh brilliancy. So decided are its effects that two astronomers, one at London, the other at Oxford, and, neither knowing the experiences of the other, supposed that the dark glass of their telescope had been broken or put out of range, so strong was the flash of golden light upon the vision. It is predicted that before the end of the next year this magnetic light will have got near enough to us to make its immediate and actual influence upon the earth distinctly felt. It is announced that in consequence we may expect to see the greatest phenomena that have ever been seen or known before by the human race.

The Castle church, where Luther nailed the ninety-five theses to the door, is at the further end of the town of Wittenburg. It is very large, but is not attractive, if we except its important connection with the Reformation. In the floor are the graves of Luther and Melanchthon. Quite appropriately, there is no elaborate inscription over them, and their dust is covered by two simple, heavy bronze plates, which are protected by a wooden trap-door; this brings up their place of burial to a level with the floor of the church. During the celebrated triumphal visit of the Emperor Charles Fifth to this church, as he stood at these graves the cruel Alva advised him to take out the dust and burn it publicly. "No," replied Charles Fifth, "we make war on the living, not on the dead!" In the same edifice are the tombs of Frederic the Wise and John the Steadfast, Electors of Saxony, and Luther's stanch friends. Frederic's monument is by Peter Vischer.

The Monde of Paris publishes a communication received to the effect that the term fixed by the superiors of the Barefooted Carmelites for Father Hyacinthe to return to his convent having expired, the chief authority of the Order, by decree dated the 18th of October, has deposed him from all the charges he held in it; declaring him also liable to and in imminent danger of the major excommunicatio, as well as of all the other ecclesiastical censures and penalties declared by the common law and by the statutes of the Order against apostates.

Lake Liemba.—In a letter dated near Lake Bangweola, Southern Central Africa, July, 1868, Dr. Livingstone describes this beautiful creation:

On the northern slope of the upland, on the 2d of April, 1867, I discovered Lake Liemba. It lies in a hollow, with precipitous sides two thousand feet down; it is extremely beautiful, sides, top and bottom being covered with trees and other vegetation. Elephants, buffaloes and antelopes feed on the steep slopes, while hippopotami, crocodiles and fish swarm in the waters. Guns being unknown, the elephants, unless sometimes deceived into a pitfall, have it all their own way. It is as perfect a natural paradise as Xenophon could have desired. On two rocky islands men till the land, rear goats and catch fish; the villages ashore are embowered in the palm, oil palms of the west coast of Africa. Four considerable streams flow into Liemba, and a number of brooks (Scottice "trout burns,") from twelve to fifteen feet broad, leap down the steep, bright red clay schist rocks and form splendid cascades that make the dullest of my attendants pause and remark with wonder. I measured one of the streams, the Lofu, fifty miles from its confluence, and found it, at a ford, two hundred and ninety-four feet (say one hundred yards) broad, thigh and waist deep, and flowing fast over hardened sandstone flag in September—the last rain had fallen on the 12th of May. Elsewhere the Lofu requires canoes. The Lonzua drives a large body of smooth water into Liemba, bearing on its surface duckweed and grassy islands. This body of water was ten fathoms deep. Another of the four streams is said to be larger than the Lofu, but an over-officious headman prevented my seeing more of it and another than their mouths. The lake is not large—from eighteen to twenty miles broad and from thirty-five to forty long. It goes off north-northwest in a river-like prolongation two miles wide, it is said, to Tanganyika. I would have set it down as an arm of that lake but that its surface is two thousand eight hundred feet above the level of the sea, while Speke makes it one thousand eight hundred and forty-four feet only.

The Presbyterians of Missouri.—The annual meeting of the Declaration and Testimony Synod of Missouri was held at Palmyra, Missouri, on Wednesday, October 13. The only question of importance was an overture from two of the Presbyteries praying the synod to take measures for a union with the Southern Presbyterian Church, which was discussed at some length. As the result of the discussion, the further consideration of the overture was postponed until next synod. The Presbyterians of Missouri who adhere to the Declaration and Testimony are, therefore, to remain another year in an independent state. When the various law suits in regard to church property, which are now passing through the civil courts, are ended, the synod will probably find its way into the Southern Presbyterian Church, and so find an ecclesiastical home.

A compulsory vaccination act for Scotland was passed in 1863. In 1864, when, of course, the operation of the new act had not had time to show itself, there was a great mortality from smallpox; but since that the deaths from this disease have in each year fallen very far below the smallest number so arising in any of the preceding ten years. In 1865 they were 175; in 1866, 200; for 1867 they are estimated at 125; for 1868 at 25. The disease has almost died out; could everybody be vaccinated, it seems as if it must die out. The average number of deaths from smallpox in the ten years ending in 1864 was 1,045. Twenty-five deaths instead of an average of 1,045—the saving of a thousand lives every year—that is what Scotland has gained by compulsory vaccination.

The Ecumenical Council.—A Paris paper says it is probable that the 8th of December will be selected for the opening of the council, that being the day of the Immaculate Conception. The roll-call, oath, procession, mass and chants will consume twelve hours. The same journal estimates the number of prelates who will be in attendance at less than eight hundred, there being in the Roman Catholic world at this time only one thousand and nine episcopal sees, of which one hundred and forty are actually vacant. Besides these there are fifty-nine bishops specially exempted from attendance by reason of great age and infirmities. The number of visitors to Rome will add about twenty thousand to its population.

We must tell some people a great deal to teach them a little.

The Farm and Garden.

Cranberry Culture in Virginia.—A Profitable Crop.—Dr. Cullen, of Hanover county, has raised this season twenty-three barrels of cranberries on a quarter of an acre of land. Tribbett, the Richmond confectioner, bought the crop at $10 a barrel. At this rate cranberries would bring nearly $1,000 an acre, and would be the most profitable crop that Hanover and Henrico farmers could plant.

In this connection some facts connected with cranberry culture may be of interest to the country reader. Men in New Jersey and Massachusetts have made fortunes by raising this little sour berry; but the business is yet in its infancy. A marvelous fact about it is that as the supply is enlarged the price grows. Twenty years ago cranberries were sold at $1 a bushel, and the quantity in the market was very small. The supply increased yearly, and the price jumped to $2. Then it rose steadily until now every bushel raised will bring $4 cash. John Webb, of Cassville, New Jersey, lives on the edge of a dismal morass, which has been by his industry converted from a frog pond into a mint, and every year he takes from $5,000 to $10,000 worth of cranberries from a sour, cold, mossy, grassy surface, ten acres in extent. Twenty years ago he was as poor as poverty; today he is a millionaire.

Two sorts of land are found appropriate to this vine, and they are fit for little else. They are known as the savanna swamp and the cedar-muck swamp. They differ more in degree than in nature. The first has a black, sour swamp muck mixed with sand. In the cedar bog there is little or no admixture of sand, the peat being alike in all parts of the bed—black and sour—varying in depth from one to six feet. A savanna hog is more easily put in, but not so sour as the other. The cost of preparing the land the first year is about $50; afterward the annual expense is trifling. If vines are set out in the fall on the following fall a few berries may be gathered. The next year a crop of $25 or $30 an acre may be expected, and in the third year a full crop of from one hundred to two hundred bushels an acre will reward the farmer.

The established price of picking a bushel is fifty cents, and the package in which it is marketed costs twenty cents. For some years the price at which the bulk of cranberries is sold is $4 per bushel, but late in autumn or in winter they often command $5 and $6. The abundance of other tart fruits of course affects the price.—Richmond Dispatch.

Liebig's Extract of Meat.—Chemistry has ceased to be the tool of the visionary or solely the handmaid of science, strictly so called. It has risen to the demands of the kitchen, and has entered the precincts of the cook, and with her apparatus and reagents is shedding light and knowledge on the processes and combinations on which millions depend for happiness and health.

The department of cookery has been left to the management of the most ignorant, and combinations, conditions and materials are brought to our tables as unnatural, and consequently as hurtful as well could be.

The chemist has seen this condition of things for a long time; hence no relief to suffering humanity was achieved. But the scene is changing. The profoundest philosopher and the expertest chemist is devoting his great powers to the correction of the great and fatal defects in the dietetics of society. The world owes much to the labors of Baron Liebig, and, perhaps, for no one thing more than for his Extractum Carnis—extract of meat. This is the pure nutritive part of meat, divested of all other materials. It is concentrated fibrin, albumen and phosphates. We can conceive of nothing more perfectly nutritious. To the young and the convalescent it must be of the highest importance. In cases of weak digestion it lays the least possible tax on the digestive powers of the stomach. When crude food would be hurtful or useless, this extract may be digested and assimilated with greatly invigorating effects. In soups it must be of great value.

We have before us a specimen from J. Milhau's Sons, No. 183 Broadway, who, we believe, are the agents for the United States. It is neatly put up in stoneware jars, and fully protected from the action of external agents. It ought to be on the shelf of every retail grocer.

This extract is manufactured in South America, on the River Uruguay, by a London company, under the management of a representative of Baron Liebig, Dr. Seekamo. Four hundred beeves are worked up each day.—American Grocer.

The process of "canning eggs" in their own shells is something new. It was explained at a meeting of the New York Farmers' Club. When two or three dozen eggs are obtained from the nests place them in a dish and pour scalding water over them, and immediately turn it off. This process is repeated three times, by which means the albumen is fixed or congulated, the pores of the shells closed, and the egg, as it were, canned in its own covering. The eggs thus prepared are then packed in salt, with the apex downward, and they are said to keep perfectly fresh for many months.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

Silver Cake.—One cup of butter, three cups of sugar rubbed up well, whites of eleven eggs, well beaten, two teaspoonsful of cream of tartar, one-half ounce soda in a cup of sweet milk; after the sugar and butter are well worked put in the milk with three or three and a half cups of flour. Bake in a moderate oven.

Jumbles.—One pound of butter, two pounds of sugar, eight eggs, two grated nutmegs, one cup sour milk, two scant teaspoonsful supercarbonate soda, enough flour to make a soft dough. Wash the salt out of the butter, then add the sugar to the butter, then the eggs well beaten. Put in a portion of the flour before adding the soda. Roll out in rings with the hands, and bake in a moderate oven.

Advantages of Crying.—A French physician is out in a long dissertation on the advantages of groaning and crying in general, and especially during surgical operations. He contends that groaning and crying are two grand operations by which nature allays anguish; that those patients who give way to their natural feelings more speedily recover from accidents and operations than those who suppose it unworthy a man to betray such symptoms of cowardice as either to groan or to cry. He tells of a man who reduced his pulse from one hundred and twenty-six to sixty, in the course of a few hours, by giving full vent to his emotions. If people are at all unhappy about anything let them go into their rooms and comfort themselves with a loud boo-hoo and they will feel a hundred per cent. better afterward.

In accordance with the above the crying of children should not be too greatly discouraged. If it is systematically repressed the result may be St. Vitus' dance, epileptic fits or some other disease of the nervous system. What is natural is nearly always useful; and nothing can be more natural than the crying of children when anything occurs to give them either physical or mental pain.—Good Health.

New Baby "Clothes."—The Lancet, the leading medical journal of England, has an article calling attention to the practicability of using bran for the cradles, or rather the nests, of new-born babies. It is assured by mothers who have tried the system that it answers admirably. The plan of action is as follows: An ordinary cradle is filled with common bran; a hair pillow is put in, and then the bran is moved aside with the hands until a "hollow" is formed the size of the child's body. The infant, divested of everything below the waist, and having a little bodice or cape above that, is then placed in the bran, and its body completely covered with it, exactly as may be seen at the seaside, where children play at burying one another in the sand. A light coverlet or counterpane is placed above all, and baby is in bed for the night. This method is pursued from almost as soon as infants are born until they are eight or ten months old. The children, it is stated, do not kick themselves outside the bran, unless it be very hot. The plan is cleanly, as bran absorbs fluid readily, and the wet sinks below the dry. The heat around the baby is equable, and of sufficient temperature. An entirely new supply of bran is required once a fortnight.

The Archbishop of Genoa, a worthy and patriotic man, sooner than take part in the coming General Council, has resigned his diocese, and his resignation has been accepted. This leaves at least one bishop in reserve to inaugurate in due apostolic succession a Reformed Catholic Church of Italy, if such should be decided on by the Italian government.

He who has been legally deprived of his ill-gotten garment should go on his way rejoicing.

A VALUABLE WORK.

We notice that R. J. Harp, of our Depository, 112 Camp street, is agent for the sale of Appleton's great work, the New American Cyclopedia. This is the latest and most complete work of the kind in America, and is published in sixteen large volumes, octavo, averaging eight hundred double-column pages in each volume. It embraces and popularizes nearly every subject that can be thought of, and contains an inexhaustible fund of accurate information on art and science in all their branches. Scarcely any topic is omitted upon which information can be desired. It especially surpasses all other works in the fullness and ability of the articles relating to the United States, and is particularly superior in the department of biography. It is a library in itself, and an absolute necessity for professional men, and for those who are engaged in literature and journalism; while all will find it invaluable for continual reference in acquiring information upon the most useful and practical subjects. The Encyclopedia Britannica is the only work in the English language comparable to it, but is of inferior value to the American reader. The editors, George Ripley and Charles A. Dana, were aided by a numerous corps of writers in all branches of science, art and literature. The publishers, D. Appleton & Co., have spared neither pains nor expense in the publication. It is neatly printed, with readable type, on good paper, and contains a copious index. Styles of binding from extra cloth to full Russia, to suit the tastes of purchasers. The same publishers are issuing a volume annually, called the American Annual Cyclopedia, and Register of Important Events for the Year. This work has reached its eighth volume, and constitutes a valuable supplement to the New American Cyclopedia, and is furnished in the same style of binding.

WHEN two conflicting truths are brought face to face, we must accept neither. We must tell ourselves that there is a third withheld among the secrets of God, which, when it is revealed, will reconcile them.

DRUNKENNESS.

This sin receives prominent notice in the Scriptures, and is one of the most ancient vices. Paul classes it with the worst and most disreputable of transgressions—"Envyings, murders, drunkenness, and such like;" "Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners." In such company does the apostle place drunkards, and among such vices. Evidently it is not a light sin, for the same inspired authority twice declares it as sufficient ground to exclude from the kingdom of God. It is to be feared that even religious opinion is below the apostolical estimate on this subject. The sin of drunkenness is regarded as more respectable than stealing; and of less turpitude than adultery. Paul puts them in the same sentence, and in fellowship with one another. He ranks drunkenness among the most vile and degrading works of the flesh. The conscience of the church has declined in this matter, and this most pernicious and debasing of sins is less severely denounced than others of less enormity.

The opinion of the world is still farther removed from the inspired standard. The inebriate may be exceedingly respectable, and the moral sense of society is scarcely shocked at all by his degrading indulgence, while other vices of inferior guilt, condemn the culprit as an outcast. Public opinion needs to be corrected and elevated, both in the church and out, on this subject. Drunkenness is not recognized as the terrible and destructive sin that it really is. Only the last stages and degrees are commonly reckoned as coming clearly under the head of drunkenness. So long as a man does not stagger on the street, and does not actually fall in the gutter, and so long as he does not become a terror and a curse to his family, he is no drunkard. To call him so would insult him and all of his relatives. He may, however, be habitually stimulated, his system continually under the influence of alcohol, and his brain in an abnormal and unhealthy condition on account of it. The nervous system, constitutional vigor and moral sensibilities are impaired, and the man is the slave of a dangerous and increasing appetite. Such an one may pass for a sober man, a virtuous person, and also for a Christian, but in fact and in the meaning of Scripture he is a drunkard. He may not be a complete sot, the body and mind are not yet drowned in perdition, and he is not yet ripe for spontaneous combustion, but he is guilty of the sin in such a degree as to exclude him from the kingdom of God. Public opinion is so lax that any one who keeps sober till after a late dinner may pass as every way respectable, if not exemplary.

Drunkenness is one of the most deceitful of sins. The subject of it is usually the last to know it. His friends may suspect the danger, the physical marks are plain, the mental indications are unmistakable. Wife, children, neighbors, all know it, while the poor sinner himself seems profoundly unconscious of his state. He is perhaps dying of alcoholism, frequently visited with mania a potu, or goes to bed habitually with a thick tongue and a maudlin brain, and is unfit for the business of the day until well under the influence of the morning drams; but still he regards himself as a sober man! We have known drunkards who were so deluded as to believe themselves Christians, and who kept up such religious duties as family prayer, attendance upon prayer meeting, and constant attendance at public preaching. We have known professors of religion die of whisky, and apparently ignorant of their fearful condition. There is no vice which creeps so insidiously upon its victim, and that so effectually blinds him to the awful perils which surround the deluded soul. Nor is there any vice more inimical to the religious welfare. The brain is saturated with the poison, and the whole mental and moral nature is rendered incapable of serious religious influences. A converted drunkard is as rare as a reformed one, and is perhaps the most difficult achievement of the divine grace. In the earlier stages of the vice a good many altogether have been saved, but in the last degrees passing few are ever reclaimed. The temporal evils of intemperance are indescribable as they are seen in the wreck of character, fortune, and the distress entailed upon helpless and innocent women and children, but the destruction of immortal souls is a catastrophe which rises far above the worst of earthly calamities.

The relation and duties of the church and of Christians to this widely prevailing vice should be prayerfully pondered. It is widely prevalent. Like the frogs of the Egyptian plague, its ugly and repulsive form intrudes everywhere. It gets into the pulpit, it is in the churches, it is seen in the highest places of honor and in every circle of society. Christian public opinion needs to be rectified, and the conscience to be clarified and quickened. The moral sense of religious people is too obtuse with reference to drunkenness. We have duties to perform with reference to the causes of intemperance, and also with reference to its preventives. We believe that total abstinence is the only safe ground—total abstinence carried out consistently in dealing with the cursed spirit of mischief, and in the use of it. Let alcohol in every form, whether in the wine bottle or in the whisky barrel, be restricted to medicinal and mechanical uses. Let wholesale dealers and retailers be alike condemned and dealt with by church discipline, and put upon the same level in society. The testimony of the church should not be ambiguous upon this question, nor should the practice of Christians be in opposition to the only course of safety which has yet been discovered. Total abstinence from the use and traffic can alone clear us of all complicity and guilt. *

SUNDAY INDOLENCE.

The observance of the Sabbath is positive and requires the diligent improvement of the day. While secular labor is prohibited, it is a time for religious work. Every hour should be appropriated to our own spiritual benefit, or employed in ministering to the welfare of others. The Sabbath may be desecrated by simply doing nothing. Absolute rest is not the purpose of the institution; only rest from ordinary labor, in order that there may be time and opportunity to attend to the health of the soul. This, at least, is the chief purpose. The physical and temporal well-being is subserved, and the benefits are manifold in every way, but the religious end is chief. This end cannot be reached by merely refraining from ordinary work and recreation. Activity is needful, and the closest economy in the disposition of this consecrated time is demanded. Whatever deprives us of the spiritual use of the day is to be avoided, whether it be company, business or pleasure.

The sin of indolence, however, is one of the most common and the least thought of amongst those who recognize the obligations of the Sabbath. It may have its place with that frightfully large catalogue of sins which comes under the head of omission. It is a sin, nevertheless, of great turpitude and of alarmingly frequent indulgence amongst those who profess to respect the divine commandments. Multitudes have but little time for religious reading and the public and social means of grace except on Sunday. The week is employed in fatiguing and exhausting labor, which leaves them neither time nor strength for acquiring religious information. The Lord's day is a religious necessity to them, as the only time they have for uninterrupted study, meditation and prayer. Church duties also press upon all on Sunday. It is the set time to work for God. Sunday schools, mission work, prayer meetings, visiting the sick and doing all manner of good, call for our attention. No day can be more busily occupied than the Sabbath if we are disposed to be well and profitably employed. Even where our week day pursuits and circumstances admit of leisure for spiritual improvement, the Sabbath, for many reasons, is peculiarly favorable for the promotion of our own piety and for helping to advance the divine kingdom in the world.

With so many duties to be performed, there can be no justification for the idle and lazy manner in which many Christian people pass their Sabbaths. They do not keep the day holy by making it a day of total inaction, by rising later than usual, and by spending the morning before church in sleep and by dozing away the long afternoons. The listless, purposeless, useless way in which some people spend this precious time is most difficult to be reconciled with their profession of regard for the institutions of religion. One service is all they can endure. The morning service over, and their pious task is done for the day. The remnant of the Sabbath is devoted to eating, lounging and society or sleep. This may be an extreme case, but in different degrees there is much Sunday indolence. Even where we would be shocked by secular labor or week day amusements, it does not seem out of the way to waste the day in the most stupid inactivity of body and mind. Where other forms of desecration are condemned and avoided, this is often prevalent. The command to do no work is perverted so as to authorize absolute idleness, and to encourage the love of ease. In yielding to this indolence Christians neglect the salvation of their own souls, and the duties which they are called to discharge in securing the salvation of the world. *

GREENBACKS.

The government has been trotting over the Wall street track in a very different way ever since the gold earthquake. That prodigious spasm of our legal tender currency engulfed some three hundred millions of capital in the shape of stocks, credit and cash. The result has been a profound quiet, and an attempt, after the style of California, to appoint a "committee on earthquakes," the object being to ascertain the extent of the cracks, deep fissures and actual damage done to capitalists and stock operators. But we suppose that it will take a long time to reveal the number of individuals and firms that went down in that memorable hour. Meanwhile Mr. Boutwell survives. The gold duties enable him to defy all private interests, and to press down the auction rates of the greenback issues until the mercantile, commercial, manufacturing and agricultural interests of the entire North and West are upon the verge of ruin. Within less than three months the currency has gone from sixty to twenty-two! And this is the metre which we have by which to ascertain what calico, corn and gold are worth! We should like to know how any dealer in goods, wet or dry, calculates his losses or profits—in what? Whether he knows when he is buying at a bargain or selling at a profit; if he can approximate what amount of value he really has on his shelves, or if he is quite certain whether to go forward or to stand still, or in fact where he is.

The tremendous extremes at which we find the currency within three days of the same month, or three months of the same year, looks more like the astounding turns of fortune of a company of gamblers at dress play than the sober movements of the vast monetary interests of a nation. Whether these desperate changes are effected by the government or by speculators outside of the Treasury Department, they argue the universal danger of the greenback circulation. If these notes could be presented at the counter for redemption the story might soon be told, if, indeed, anybody survived to tell it. But instead of the counter we have the ingenious contrivance of an auction room at which more greenbacks are offered for sale by the government than any individual can afford to buy. Though it be only a small part of the whole, the sale of these parcels of currency are taken as the real value of the whole issue. The great mass of Treasury notes is held back by the strong arm of the law, and a small amount actually taken in exchange for gold is declared to be the actual worth of the whole! This fiction struggles to maintain itself against the pressure of true values, for truth is at the bottom of trade, as well as of all other sciences. Hence this huge swaying to and fro, which threatens the whole fabric of trade throughout the country. We still say: Stand from under.

PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD.

The Synod of Mississippi, which embraces the presbyteries within the bounds of Louisiana and Mississippi, is now in session at the Presbyterian church on Prytania street, in this city. The synod met on Wednesday night, and after a sermon by the last moderator present, Rev. C. M. Atkinson, the synod was constituted by prayer. The last moderator, the Rev. J. Franklin Ford, of Shreveport, was some months ago called to his reward on high. For many years we knew and esteemed him as a Christian gentleman and minister. His memory will be long and tenderly cherished by his brethren of other denominations as well as his own. After the calling of the roll, Rev. Dr. Hunter, of Jackson, Mississippi, was elected moderator. Rev. A. H. Barckley, of the Tombigbee presbytery, was elected temporary clerk, and Mr. J. L. Power, engrossing clerk. Rev. R. McInnis is the stated clerk. On Thursday morning there were forty ministers present and thirty-five ruling elders. The attendance of laymen is considered as good in proportion to the number of ministers present. We were favorably impressed with the gravity and intelligence of the body, and the good order manifested in the deliberations. The Methodist pulpits of the city have been tendered to the synod, and will be occupied by members of the body on Sunday, both morning and night.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

WILD SPORTS OF THE WORLD. By James Greenwood. With one hundred and forty-seven engravings. We have received this from the publishers, the Messrs. Harper, New York. 1870.

This book is profusely illustrated, and is a fine book for boys. It contains authentic narrations from distinguished hunters and travelers, descriptive of animal life in all parts of the world.

THE CLOISTER AND THE HEARTH. By Charles Reade. Harper & Bros.

Also from Mr. Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street:

HAYDEN'S DICTIONARY OF DATES. Relating to all ages and nations. Edited by Benjamin Vincent, assistant secretary of the library of the Royal Institution of Great Britain. New edition, enlarged. New York: Harper & Bro., 1869. 8vo, pp. 538.

A large amount of information has been compressed into this book—geographical, biographical, literary and scientific. Its chronological tables have been gotten up with great labor and care. One table, may be, is the history of an empire in succinct form. For a book of reference we value it highly; it supplies a want which we suppose every one who seeks general information has seriously felt.

THE MINISTRY OF TEARS, OR THE GARDEN OF SORROWS. By Rev. John Atkinson, M. A. New York: Carlton & Lanahan.

This is the third edition, and is beautifully gotten up, with illustrations, borders and tinted paper, as a gift book for the Christmas season. Some time ago we gave a copy of this book to a friend who was dying with cancer. He found great comfort in its pages. This is as good evidence of its value as any the author could wish.

PERIODICALS.

We have received from Messrs. J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia, the English SUNDAY MAGAZINE for December. Edited by Dr. Guthrie. Contents: Episodes in an Obscure Life; The Companions of St. Paul; Marine Parishes; Upward Glances; Lost and Found; Questions that are always Turning up; The Song of the Sword; The Struggle in Farara; A Visit to Bethlehem; The Strength of Weak Things; The Miracles of our Lord; About Amusements; An Early Morning Walk.

Also, GOOD NEWS FOR THE YOUNG. December number. Edited by Geo. Macdonald, LL. D. This is filled with entertaining matter for boys and girls.

THE HOME MONTHLY FOR NOVEMBER.—Among the contributors to this number we notice the names of Mrs. Caroline Hentz Branch, Rev. A. L. P. Green, D. D., and Rev. R. H. Rivers, D. D. The publisher and editor, A. B. Stark, deserves the patronage of the church, and is entitled to much credit for the successful manner in which he has sustained and improved this magazine. Price, $3. Nashville, Tennessee.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

SMITHVILLE, MISS., December 1, 1869.

EDITOR ADVOCATE: You will please acknowledge, through the ADVOCATE, the liberality of the following gentlemen and friends, for their generous donations for the repairs of the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Smithville, Mississippi:

Baker, Lawler & Co., L. Brewer & Co., A. J. Gillespie, of McIntosh & Gillespie, J. H. Allen, of Allen, West & Co., Smith & Lyon, J. R. Randal, Catholic friend, C. O. Haley, of Mobile, Alabama; Colonel R. C. Clark, of Verona, Mississippi; J. M. Trier, of Comargo, Mississippi.

We take great pleasure in recommending the above mentioned gentlemen as not only liberal Christian gentlemen, but in every way worthy of the confidence and patronage of all who may have business in those cities. We would especially recommend the house of which our friend C. O. Haley is a part, and a very prominent part as regards liberality and worth, and whose business capacity commands the respect and esteem of all who know him.

MEMBERS OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH AT SMITHVILLE, MISS.—J. T. M. GREGORY, PASTOR.

An Interesting Exhibition at London.

An interesting exhibition is about to open in the Dudley Gallery of the Egyptian Hall, in London. The numerous collections of the Palestine explorations in and about Jerusalem, with various antic relics from other parts of the Holy Land, brought home by Mr. McGregor, the gentleman who made the remarkable voyage in the canoe Rob Roy upon the waters of Syria and Palestine, have been arranged for general inspection, with a series of nearly three hundred and fifty photographic views, taken in all parts of the country. The London Telegraph says:

Lieutenant Warren, as is well known, has been industriously uncovering the very roots of the ancient city in the service of the Palestine Exploration Society. His subterranean labors have revealed what may be called stratified Jewish history. He has gone down ninety feet in one spot; and, at the corner of Haram especially, at the depth of eighty feet, he has disclosed the foundation stones of the old temple, standing upon the living rock, besides chambers, walls, aqueducts, cisterns and arches, which begin, after incredible toil, to range themselves into an intelligible plan, revealing to us the real Jerusalem of the past. These excavations have carried back research, indeed, to the days preceding Solomon; for in one spot a water course of masonry has been found passing under the temple wall itself, and there are relics in this exhibition which come from that very place.

The bottom of the Birket Israil, of Pool of Bethesda, also contributes to the collection, as well as the wall of Ophel and the Tyropœum valley; and at the foot of the southeast angle of the great rampart which now sustains the mosques of Omar and Aska, have been unveiled stones bearing letters incised with a chapel or painted in red. These have been studied by Mr. Deutsch, and declared to be construction marks of the Phœnician masons who built the temple. The fac similes of them thus far brought home are very much like the first attempt of a small boy to make figures on his slate; but they are assuredly of immense antiquity, and, no doubt, they represent, as is stated, the actual memoranda of the stone layers of Tyre and Sidon, "who took the contract" from Solomon, the king, to build his temple. From similar mines of archæological wealth, Lieutenant Warren sends us in this exhibition the various kinds hitherto exhumed.

The treasure-trove is, of course, of different epochs and very varying importance. There is a square brick from beneath the Hill of Ophel, which is kiln-baked, and comes from the city as it existed at and before the time of Christ. By the side of that relic are deposited three or four balista balls, roughly chipped out of stone, and weighing from five to fifteen pounds, which were found in the debris of the Tyropœum, and most probably were flung into the city by the besieging army of Titus.

A fragment of mortar and concrete from the bottom of the Pool of Bethesda shows that the water was artificially contained in that receptacle, if, indeed, the Birket Israil be the same.

A specimen of pottery from the cave of Adullum takes us away from Jerusalem, and suggests thoughts at once modern and political; yet, in truth, Saul may himself have used the broken pipkin.

Lieutenant Warren and his party sent us from the vaults below the area of the Great Mosque some fragments of pitchers, and cups which are thought to be true Phœnician. They are singularly like the ceramic ware of the Kabyles in Algera as regards color and ornamentation, but the reds and yellows upon them are the natural earth-dye of all potters, and the lozenge patterns those also which are the easiest to make. None of the articles are perfect enough to allow of a judgment from their shape, which is a surer guide than color or pattern in ancient earthenware. Along with these, however, are some very pretty and neatly finished lecythi of a unique form, which, although very simple, are perfectly true in design, and are rendered positively elegant by their correct shape.

There is an especially striking round-bellied vessel from "Robinson's Arch," discovered at seventy-two feet below the surface, of hard red clay, and almost as thin as biscuit china. It may have held the "flour mingled with oil," or the "drink-offering of wine, the fourth part of a hin," presented when Kore, the son of Immah the Levite, porter toward East, over the precious offerings, in the reign of Hezekiah. With these are mingled some curious little jars of more primitive type—believed to be Sidonian—though as they are exactly the same shade of color, and made of the same clay, they may, as likely as not, have been Jewish vessels to contain oil or essence in religious or domestic use.

Under Mount Sion have been found spindle-shaped vessels, small and possessing the character of "lachrymatories." These remains are very puzzling. Among the most ancient of the number may be noticed a saucer-shaped piece, of good manufacture and perfect glaze, which exactly resembles the articles made in the Punjne to hold camel's milk cheese; it may very well be, for aught we know, the identical "lordly dish" in which Jael, the wife of Heber the Kenite, brought butter to Sisera—preserved in the temple—or one of the "empties" not returned to the Queen of Sheba after her celebrated visit with so many presents to the spot which is here for the first time laid bare after four thousand years.

These objects, at once so old and new, are to be supplemented by and by with a collection of specimens from Mount Sinai, and some additional articles of interest from the same sources, contributed by Sir Henry James.

Mormon Missionaries.—Several Mormon missionaries arrived at Des Moines, Iowa, on November 25, direct from Salt Lake. One hundred and ten preachers and elders were detailed by Brigham Young on Sunday, November 21, to go forth on a mission of two years. They came to Omaha in a body and then separated, taking different roads running east and south. Some fifty of them passed on to Chicago, Cincinnati, Philadelphia, and other points.

Archdeacon Freeman, in a recent speech at Exeter Hall, before the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, expressed a hope that books of a "solid" character were taking the place of periodical literature. "I hate newspapers," said he, "and if there had been newspapers in St. Paul's time he would have hated them too." Strange to say, he believes newspapers to be "the most injurious things possible," not because they contain what is bad, but because they don't contain anything.

A High Church Revival.—A High-Church revival movement in London commenced November 14, in about seventy churches, to last twelve days, during which there are to be special services, sermons and prayer, having for their chief object the conversion of sinners. Very large congregations, in most cases, assembled, and there was some prospect that this remarkable movement will produce great results.

It was an admirable reply which Dr. Arnold, of Rugby, made to some one who inquired why he continued to study his lessons over and over previous to his classes to teach. "Because I prefer that they should be supplied from a running stream, rather than a stagnant pool." This is a hint which may well be acted upon by a multitude of Sabbath school teachers.

Be always receiving or doing good. This will make your life comfortable, your death happy, and your account glorious.

The desire for happiness is natural; the desire for holiness is supernatural.

Married.

By the Rev. S. M. Thames, at the house of the bride's father, at Pushmataha, Choctaw county, Alabama, Rev. E. M. Turner, of the Mobile Conference, to Miss Rannie Gilder, all of Choctaw county, Alabama.

Obituaries.

Little Joseph A. J. Armstrong was born January 12, 1860, and died November 4, 1869, after a severe illness of about twenty-four hours. He was a member of the Sabbath school at Jonesboro; but now his seat will be vacant, for God has called him from the sufferings of this life to be with him.

"The voyage of life's at an end,
The mortal affliction is past."

When those we loved are gone!
How doubly dreary falls the gloom
O'er spots where sunshine shone!"

In Memoriam.

Alma C., daughter, and Preston S., son of Charles C. and Mary E. Dickinson, died September 23, 1869, the former aged four years, seven months and eleven days, the latter three years, five months and twenty-two days.

They were lovely children. They played, and sang "O do not be discouraged" together. They were taken sick the same day, and died the third day afterward. They were buried in the same grave with each other, and now live in heaven with Jesus. May this tender dual cord bind more firmly the parents and family to the "better land!" Wm. A. Edwards.

Samuel Simmons was born in Talliaferro county, Georgia, July 13, 1809; married November 25, 1847, and soon after professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He moved to Louisiana in 1857, and died in Claiborne parish, Louisiana, October 13, 1869.

He was a consistent Christian—a strenuous supporter of Methodist doctrines and usages. He was a kind and affectionate husband, a fond and tender father. In his death the church has sustained a great loss; but none feel it so deeply as his wife and children. He was afflicted for more than a year. I visited him often during his protracted illness. He bore his afflictions with great patience, always expressing a readiness to depart and be with Christ. He would often speak of death as one would of an anticipated journey. His faith was firm to the last. He met death calmly and triumphantly. May the widow's God bless his bereaved wife in this severe trial, and bring her, with their children, to live with him in heaven. John A. Miller.

Minden, Louisiana.

Dr. T. G. Spindle was born in Rappahannock county, Virginia, April 8, 1819, and departed this life at Hazlehurst, Mississippi, October 22, 1869. His remains were brought to Willow Springs, Mississippi, and, after suitable remarks and the service at the grave by the writer, deposited in the family burying ground of Brother Jas. Hutchinson.

Dr. Spindle was married to Miss Mary Hutchinson, of Philips county, Arkansas, December 20, 1853. He was a good physician, a kind husband, and a noble-hearted, high-toned gentleman. Though not a member of any church, he was a believer in the Christian religion. He was brought up in the Episcopal Church, though never confirmed. He leaves behind a devoted wife and many friends to mourn his loss; but there is a hope that their loss is his gain. "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." While death has severed the strongest ties of earth, may hope spring up in the heart of the deeply afflicted wife of a reunion in heaven, for "earth has no sorrows that heaven cannot cure." C. T. French.

Mrs. Elizabeth B. Stanford was born on the Eastern Shore of Maryland in the year 1784. Her maiden name was Freeney. Of her parents I know but little. I learn that few or none of the family of that name are now living. Miss Freeney came with her father's family to Georgia at about ten years of age. Very early in life—say at about fifteen or sixteen years of age—she was converted from sin to holiness, and united with the church of God; and near the same time was united in marriage to Herbert Reynolds, with whom she lived until she became the mother of six children. She was afterward married to Thomas Stanford, and gave birth to five other children. Thomas, the eldest of these, was killed at Resaca, May 15, 1863. William D. was taken prisoner about the same time, and confined at Alton, Illinois. He died at Wayside Home, Salisbury, North Carolina. Out of eleven children three only survive, viz: Dr. Frank Stanford, of Columbus, Georgia, Mrs. Persons, of Auburn, Alabama, and Mrs. Wesson, of Wesson, Mississippi.

From the time that Sister Stanford gave her heart to God she never wavered in her religious life, or faltered with regard to her religious duties. In character she was decisive, and when once her resolutions were made there was no altering her purpose. She moved steadily onward to the goal.

Every Christian duty was studied and performed—strictly conscientious, regular in attention to public and social worship, a lover of private devotion, a constant and careful reader of the word of God, earnest in the training of her children. She was a most useful member of society, a valuable member of the church, and reared a family to be beloved and honored. Some of them are now pillars in the house of God. In pursuing these Christian duties every Christian virtue was developed. Eminently humane, she was ready to feed the hungry, to visit and relieve the afflicted, to defend the weak, and to intercede for the oppressed.

Just and generous, debts were promptly paid, and the Gospel and other interests of the church liberally supported. Benevolence was a prominent virtue in her character, and patience, meekness, gentleness, faith and love shone forth radiantly in her life. She was often happy in the love of God, yet never very demonstrative. Her peace flowed smoothly, noiselessly.

She died at midnight of the 19th of October, 1869, surrounded by children, grandchildren and friends, who had long watched her ebbing life. Toward the close of life she suffered—could not rest at night, had a constant feeling of uneasiness for want of freedom of breathing, and palpitation of the heart. She desired to depart and to be with Christ, freed from pain, but was never impatient. She was at times flighty, but when spoken to she collected her thoughts, and was entirely rational to the last.

She spoke to her daughter at one time, when I had left the room, saying: "Tell Brother J., if I die before his return, that I am ready and willing to go. All is right." She lived to be eighty-five years old, and about seventy of these years were given in service to God. During nearly her whole life she was a member of the church. But a few months ago she walked three or four hundred yards to church, and home again. She loved the house of God always.

Thus lived and died a noble Christian—in the midst of shade or sunshine, poverty or wealth, whether abounding or suffering need, always the same. In her younger days cheerful and happy, after the loss of two sons in the Confederate army she was more sober, rather sad, but patient and hopeful.

Her life and death are a triumph over the world, sin and death by the faith of the Gospel. Greatly beloved, her memory is dear to us all. She fell asleep in Jesus, and we laid her away to rest until our Redeemer shall come to awake her to everlasting life.

TO OWNERS OF HORSES.

Thousands of Horses die yearly from Colic. This need not be. 'Dr. Tobias' Venetian Horse Liniment will positively cure every case, if given when first taken. The cost is only $1. Every owner of a horse should have a bottle in his stable, ready for use. It is warranted superior to anything else for cure of Colic, Wind Galls, Swellings, Sore Throat, Sprains, Bruises, Old Sores, etc. This Liniment is no new remedy. It has been used and approved of for twenty-two years by the first horsemen in the country. Given to an over-driven horse, it acts like magic. Orders are constantly received from the racing stables of England for it. The celebrated Hiram Woodruff, of trotting fame, used it for years. Colonel Philip P. Bush, of the Jerome Race Course, has given a certificate, which can be seen at the Depot, stating that, after years of trial, it is the best in the world. His address is Fordham, New York. No one once using it will ever be without it. It is put up in pint bottles. Sold by the Druggists and Saddlers throughout the United States. Depot, 10 Park Place, New York. de4 4tP

AWARDED THE HIGHEST HONORS

AT INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITIONS IN THIS COUNTRY,

so that their work is the acknowledged standard of excellence in its department, respectfully announce that, with extended and perfected facilities, and by the exclusive use of recent improvements, they are now producing yet more perfect Organs than ever before, in great variety as to style and price, adapted to all public and private uses; for Drawing Rooms, Libraries, Music Rooms, Concert Halls, Lodges, Churches, Schools, etc., in plain and elegant cases, all of which they are enabled by their unequaled facilities for manufacture to sell at prices of inferior work.

The recent improvements in these Organs have so increased their usefulness and popularity that they are unquestionably the most desirable instruments obtainable for family use, as well as churches, schools, etc., while the prices at which they can be afforded ($50 to $1,000 each) adapt them to the means and requirements of all classes. They are equally adapted to secular and sacred music, are elegant as furniture, occupy little space, are not liable to get out of order, (not requiring tuning once where a pianoforte is tuned twenty times,) are very durable, and easy to learn to play upon.

The M. & H. Organ Co., are now selling four octave Organs for $50 each; five octave Organs, five stops, with two sets of vibrators, for $125, and other styles at proportionate rates.

For testimony to the superiority of their Organs, the Mason & Hamlin Organ Co. respectfully refer to the musical profession generally; a majority of the most prominent musicians in the country, with many of eminence in Europe, having given public testimony that the Mason & Hamlin Organs excel all others.

A circular containing this testimony in full will be sent free to any one desiring it; also a descriptive circular, containing full particulars respecting these instruments, with correct drawings of the different styles and the lowest prices, which are fixed and invariable. Address

The Child's Corner.

THE VAIN WOODPECKER.

BY JULIA A. EASTMAN.

"Ho, fellow woodpeckers! Now listen to me!"
A redhead piped out from the top of a tree;
'Twas a leafless old tree, quite apart from the rest,
And its hollow sides sheltered full many a nest.

So every blithe longbill stood still on his perch,
As quiet as though the tall tree were a church:
And redhead's black coat, and his snowy-white vest,
Like a parson, put up there to preach to the rest.

"Now, brethren and sisters, pray why do you wear
Such dingy old garments as yours, ev'rywhere?
There is one ugly gray, and another dun brown,
Like a dried leaf picked up, and put on for a gown.

"Look at me, if you please, with my gay scarlet hat!"
(Here the silly young coxcomb perked this way and that.)
"The land and the water have nothing so bright
Flashing out, like a flame, in the clear morning light!

"Now look!" and the boaster, to let them all see,
Took two or three turns round the leafless old tree;
And a dozen young birds, in gray plumage and white,
With envy were well nigh devoured at the sight.

For brighter carnation there never was seen;
Not the cardinal flower, as it nods by the stream;
Not gorgeous October's most glorious dyes,
Nor tints of the sunset in soft evening skies.

"Ah! dear Mother Gray!" a young woodpecker said;
"Why did you not borrow one egg from redhead?
Just think of the beauty and grace of your son!
The glory that he would most surely have won!"

"Looks are nothing, my child, if you only behave!
A red cap would be a disgrace to a knave!"
And sage Mother Gray fluttered off to her nest,
While redhead yet chattered away to the rest.

And now as the brown coats were picking about,
Of a sudden the clang of a rifle rang out.
From aloft, in an instant, dropped heavily down
Our gay feathered friend with the bright scarlet crown.

The brown of their feathers, the brown of the tree,
Left each of the others as safe as could be;
But the poor little redhead, all stained with his blood,
Lay still on the grass in the edge of the wood!

LETTER FROM CHINA.

TO THE FELICITY ST. SUNDAY SCHOOL.

MY DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS: I will now give you a few more lines about the superstitious notions of the Chinese.

Not long since there was a woman in the country washing cloth, and all at once fell into the creek. She says she saw the "black devil" in the water. Several persons saw her fall, and at once jumped into the water to save her life, and finding they could not save her, they called for others to come and help them. They tried for a long while to get her out of the water. Her head was down under the water, and it was after long pulling they succeeded in rescuing her from a watery grave. When she was brought on shore they asked her why it was she was held down, and required the strength of five or six persons to bring her out. She said the devil in the water held her down, and the people all believed it.

There is a story about the white devil which many believe to be true. This white devil was out walking in the night to buy a few cakes to eat. For a month the cake man sold his cakes to the white devil for seven cash each, and all the while this devil was paying in bad paper money, which he could not use. I send by this mail a sample of this paper money which is given to the ghosts of the dead, and which the Chinese suppose is converted into real money in the spirit world. When the seller of cakes found he had this bad, useless money, he went to the temple and reported to the Buddhist priest how the white devil had taken the advantage of him in the night, and given him money which he could not use. The priest, after consulting with some of his brother priests, went and bought two large and long nails and nailed the white devil down, so that he cannot now walk about. That was said to have happened about six years ago.—Whether they mean the "foreign white devil," or some other devil, I am not able to say. They call all foreigners "white devils."

A short time since there was a man sick, and the Chinese doctor told him he must die, as the devils had begun to gather thick and fast around him. The doctor told him all the medicine he could give him would do him no good, as the devils seemed determined to have him for some offense he had no doubt committed. This made the man very miserable, and he could take no rest. He then sent for a spirit-seeing woman to come and see if she could cure him, or persuade the devils to let go their hold of him. When this woman came she went through a great many forms and gesticulations and cantations. At last she took a candle, lighted it and put it in her mouth, saying: "If the candle goes out you will die very soon, but if it does not go out you will live a long time yet." The candle did not go out, and the man recovered from his sickness. All his friends are convinced that this woman has great power over the devils. The man, when he recovered, made a great feast for the devils, and bowed down to them; after which he and his friends partook of the same repast, and seemed highly gratified and pleased that the wrath of all the devils had been appeased. The spirit-seeing woman, too, had been handsomely rewarded for the part she had performed.

Now, my dear young friends, I trust you do not believe there is any truth in what these poor heathen people have said and done. They believe it, but you do not. The devil, indeed, has possession of the hearts of all these people, and he would prefer to have them believe a lie rather than the truth. The devil is not afraid to take hold of the minds and hearts of the Chinese, because he knows he can make them believe a lie and do as he bids them, and they have no power to resist him. But it is not so with you and all those who have the Bible, and who put their trust in the Lord Jesus. You have the true light—the glorious light of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. If you receive that light, and put your trust in the Lord Jesus, the devil has no power to tempt you. The Chinese have not that light, and therefore they are easily tempted by the devil to do evil and believe in falsehood. What I have written in this letter is to show you how ignorant the Chinese are; and yet thousands, though they hear us tell of the love of God and the love of the Lord Jesus for them, yet they will not believe, because they cannot see. They want some ocular demonstration. They do not believe the holy and unblamable lives of Christians sufficient proof of the holy religion we profess. They often say: "We will believe when we see." Surely the religious state of these people is deplorable in the highest degree. Pray often to God that light may shine upon their hearts, and I trust you may all be filled with true wisdom and with the spirit of God; and I pray that you may ever have an earnest and increasing desire for the conversion of the heathen.

Pray for us all. Believe me, I am your sincere friend,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

MY DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS: Permit me again to thank you for the interest you have taken in the education of the Chinese children. The $25 sent me some months since has been handed over to Mrs. Lambuth in the support of her girls' school. I have just received a note from your kind superintendent saying he had sent $80 to be divided between Brother Allen and myself. I hope you will not object to my appropriating that amount also to the support of Mrs. Lambuth's school. She will give you account of the progress of the girls from time to time. There may be sufficient for me to open a school too. I made frequent efforts to open a school at Naziang, but the people say they are afraid I want to take out the eyes of the children, and also their brain. I shall now see what can be done at Soochow about a school.

My little daughter's name is Nora Kate Lambuth. She is six years and nearly two months old. Reads now in the Third Reader. But the best of all, she reads well in the Bible. She prays every day for all who love the Lord Jesus. She wants to be a Christian. I hope you will all pray for her and her little brother, Robert William, two years and six months old, and for her dear brother, Walter Russell Thornton, now near fifteen years old. We had to send him to America about three months since, on account of his health, and that he might have the benefit of good schools and good Christian society. I send you the photograph of our little daughter. Also some Chinese mock money, which they offer to the dead and to idols.

The strip of paper is sold to all who come and inquire of the idol. It is supposed to contain some words of comfort for the sick, or for those who are seeking a fortune. The round pieces are representations of money which they offer to the dead and to idols. J. W. L.

Mica Brocades---A New Product of Art.

No doubt all of our readers are acquainted with the mica which is so extensively used in doors of stoves. But it may be stated that under this term a whole group of minerals is comprised, either occurring massive or disseminated in rocks. They have all a more or less foliated structure and pearly luster. They are elastic, transparent or translucent, and have a specific weight of 2.7. In Germany mica has recently found application for the production of bronze-like colors which bear the names "brocades," "crystal colors" and "mica bronzes." The mineral is to this end well crushed, boiled in hydrochloric acid, then washed with water, and assorted according to the size of the laminæ. Mica scales thus obtained exhibit a glass-like luster, combined with a silver-white appearance. The advantages of these brocades (which by the way may be colored) over the ordinary metallic brocades are stated to be the following: 1. They do not contain any ingredient injurious to health. 2. They possess metallic luster like the ordinary brocades, and some surpass them even in liveliness of color. 3. Brown, black, blue, green and rose are obtained in remarkable beauty, which is not the case with the metal bronzes. 4. They comport themselves with perfect neutrality toward sulphurous exhalations. 5. Their specific weight being very slight, their yield is consequently correspondingly great. In their application they may be fixed upon all kinds of articles of metal, wood, glass, plaster of Paris and paper board. They are consequently well adapted to the preparation of artificial flowers, fancy papers, sealing wax, in tapestry, furniture making and painting. Theatres may employ them for imitating gold-rain and snow, for which purpose they recommend themselves on account of their lightness and cheap price. In short, they may be used for almost all the purposes to which the ordinary bronze powders have been applied. In fixing these brocades upon articles of any kind it is advisable to paint them first with a color similar to that of the bronze; for silver, a ground of white lead is suitable; for blue, one of ultramarine, etc. They are equally suitable for oil and glue colors, which latter are fixed with a mixture of four parts of glue and one of glycerin. Upon this coat, when hard, the binding material for the brocade is spread, and after one quarter of an hour this latter is sifted over. As binding material a paste, consisting of four parts of boiled starch and one of glycerin, is recommended. If desirable the powder may be finally pressed down with a roller. If the ground is formed by an oil paint the binding material for the brocade should be constituted of a dammar, or pale copal varnish, upon which, when only pitchy, the powder is sifted over. When finally coated with a suitable spirit, dammar or copal varnish, the so prepared articles assume a luster which, in beauty and durability, far surpasses any heretofore obtained with the common bronzes. When small particles of mica silver are spread over articles coated with asphalt varnish the result is a good imitation of granite. The crystal colors are also suitable for calico printing, and fabrics upon which they are applied surpass in brilliancy the heavy bronze and glass-dust fancy fabrics from Lyons. Employed between or on colored gelatin plates they give rise to superb crystallizations, which are used as inlayings for buttons and various other articles. They may be spread over finished porcelain and glassware, if these are heated again to the fusing point of their glazing. According to Dr. C. Ceeh and L. Schneider, in Prague, these brocades may be colored with the following dye stuffs: Rose, with a decoction of cochineal; carmoisin, with the bluish magenta red; bright red, with fuchsine and Havana brown; violet, with Hofman's violet. A solution of Prussian blue in oxalic acid serves for producing a bright blue, and Girard's violet for deep blue; light and dark green are imparted by aniline green and curcuma; gold with curcuma, dark brown with a proper bark extract, and black with litmus and haematoxylin or logwood extract. Silver needs no color. According to Dr. L. Feutchwanger's (vide his popular "Treatise on Gems,") mica is found in this country at Williamsburg, Massachusetts, Hartford, Connecticut, and many other places. The green mica, which is of a beautiful grass-green color, is found in Brunswick, Maine. The rose-red mica, which is also a very beautiful mineral, is principally found at Goshen, Chesterfield, Massachusetts, Acworth, New Hampshire, Bellows' Falls, Vermont, etc. Mica, according to the above named mineralogist, when of good colors, may be used for jewelry and other ornaments. — Scientific American.

OLEOGRAPHY.—This is the name given to the new art of fixing on paper the special forms which a drop of oil assumes when poured on water. These forms, or patterns, vary with every sort of oil, and are exceedingly interesting and beautiful. Oleography may be briefly described thus: Having obtained the oil pattern, lay on it for an instant a piece of glazed surface paper, then take it off and place it on a surface of ink or any other colored fluid in water or spirit. Now wash off any excess of color with plain water; when dry, the pattern is fixed. The paper becomes greasy where the oil is present and thus resists the action of the ink, but it is rapidly absorbed on the blank places.—Septimus Piesse.

A MISSIONARY ICONOCLAST.—Mr. Van Meter, Baptist missionary to the Karens, was requested to break the vessels which have long been used in one of the village temples for sacrifices to the spirits of the "dark world." He was, of course, only too glad to comply, and the ceremony was performed with due solemnity. This village is now a Christian community, and these once venerable vessels were the last relics of heathenism.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

THE BEST COOKING STOVE FOR WOOD NOW IN USE.

THE FASHION.

We call especial attention to this Stove, which has been produced at great expense, combining all the new and important improvements: also to the extra height of the Oven under the fire chamber, the Patent Air Chamber, Front Doors, and Patent White Enameled Iron Knobs, the improvements in the covers and centre pieces, all of which have been covered by Letters Patent, and are used in no other Stove. They are warranted to stand fire, or others sent free of charge in all cases. We have all sizes of this justly celebrated Stove, both

PLAIN AND EXTENDED BACKS,

the Extended Back with cast iron Enameled Reservoir and Faucet, Tin Warming Closet, Gridiron Cover, etc. The part of the top supporting the Reservoir is raised so that the fire is above the top plate, instead of below, as is the case in most of the Stoves now used, and the heat is forced directly against the whole surface of the bottom of the Reservoir. The Reservoir, being detached from the pipe, can be removed at pleasure, thereby forming a six-hole Stove—the best in use, as the back holes will heat as well or better than the middle ones. For sale by ever invented, in the estimation of all who have yet seen it. Patented in 1868.

Complete and Perfect Cooking Stove

FOR BITUMINOUS COAL OR COKE

THE MONITOR,

which can be seen at 62 Camp street. The advantages possessed by this Stove over all the other Coal Cooking Stoves are so numerous, and so patent to every sensible observer, that it is only necessary to examine it in order to be convinced of its superiority.

All of the above Stoves are fitted with extra care, Oven Doors lined with tin, and furnished with William Resor's Patent Air Chamber, sliding front doors, patent centres, covers and White Enameled Knobs.

The operation of every Stove guaranteed. Directions for putting up and using same accompany each Stove.

THE TIMES..... THE TIMES.

THE IMPROVED

LARGE OVEN COOKING STOVE,

with extended Fire Chamber and Feeder Top—one of the best Baking and most economical Stoves made.

The Flues are constructed so as to insure the most perfect draft. The heat of the Oven is so equal that when baking there is no need for removing anything until done.

THE TIMES

Is made of a superior quality of Iron, very heavy, of neat design and fine finish. The Top Plate is put together in sections, to permit of the greatest expansion without cracking.

We invite the attention of Housekeepers to the advantages of this Stove. Remember, we guarantee them to give entire satisfaction. Duplicate parts can be had at all times, at small cost, by which repairs can be made which will frequently save the price of a new Stove. ZABLE & DALTON,

STOVES, GRATES AND HOUSE FURNISHING GOODS.

The undersigned would call the attention of city and country buyers of Cooking Stoves to the following list of Stoves manufactured by Mr. M. L. Filley:

The Philanthropist.

A first class Cooking stove, having all of the latest improvements that have so far been invented. Has a new arrangement for boiling; also an Ash-pan. The casting is heavier than any Stove sold in this market. Sold under a full guarantee in every respect.

The Diamond Rock.

A Stove well known in this market. Thousands of this Stove are in constant use throughout the country, which is a very good recommendation. Sold under a full guarantee.

Besides the above named Stoves, I have on hand the celebrated Cotton Plant, Charter Oak, True Kentuckian, Maid of Orleans, Queen of the South, Delta and others, all of which I offer at a low price.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1869.

A Chinaman on the Chinese Question.

Whatever may be the average intellect of the Chinese, there can be no doubt as to the intellect of the man who made the following speech. The remarks were delivered by Chey Chow, a Chinese merchant, in Chicago:

"Eleven years ago I came from my home in China to seek my fortune in your great republic. I landed on the golden shore of California, utterly ignorant of your people, a stranger to your customs and laws, and in the minds of some an intruder—one of that race whose presence is deemed a positive injury to the public prosperity. But, gentlemen, I found both kindness and justice. I found that above the prejudice which had been formed against us, there flowed a broad stream of popular equality; that the hand of friendship was extended to the people of every nation, and that even Chinamen must live, be happy, succeed, and respected in 'free America.' I gathered knowledge in your public schools; to read and write as you do; to act and think as you do; and, gentlemen, I rejoice to say it is so; that I have been able to cross this vast continent without the aid of an interpreter; but here in the heart of the United States I can speak to you in your own familiar speech, and tell you how very much I appreciate your hospitality; how grateful I feel for the privileges and advantages I have enjoyed in your glorious country; and how earnestly I hope that your example of enterprise, energy, vitality and national generosity may be seen and understood, as I see and understand it, by our government. Mr. Burlingame has done much to promote good feeling in China toward the American nation. He made himself well acquainted with the authorities at Pekin. He won their confidence to a remarkable degree. He is an excellent man, and I believe, if his advice is received and acted upon, China will soon be the cordial friend of all the commercial powers of the earth. Already we are doing something in the way of progress in modern improvements. Steamboat lines have been established on our rivers, and the telegraph will soon connect us with the wonderful sovereignty of the Western hemisphere, where the people rule, and where everything proclaims peace and good will to all. China must brush away the dust of her antiquity, and, looking across the Pacific, behold and profit by the new lessons of the New World.

"We trust our visit, gentlemen, may be productive of good results to all of us; that the two great countries, East and West, China and America, may be found forever together in friendship, and that a Chinaman in America, or an American in China, may find like protection and consideration in their search for happiness and wealth."

VICTIMS OF THE INQUISITION.—A statement derived from an abridgment of Llorent's "History of the Inquisition in Spain," third edition, has been published by the Edinburg Spanish Evangelical Society, giving a summary of the victims of that bloody instrument of Romish intolerance from the beginning, in 1481, down to 1820. The whole number of victims, including those burnt at the stake, burnt in effigy, and sent to the galleys, is 335,497. Closing the record in 1846, since which date only fourteen have been burned, and 248 sent to the galleys, we have a total, in 363 years, of 36,154 burnt at the stake. Just about one-third of the whole awful work was done under Torquemada, in the first seventeen years of the history of the Inquisition, when 10,220 were burned, 6,840 were burned in effigy, and 97,361 were sent to the galleys. It took nearly sixty years to make up another third of the victims of the stake; while a full 100,000 more were hurried to the galleys in the short space of 23 years. After that the work flagged, even under the rule of the three Philips, and two centuries, during which the world was moving into the light of the Reformation, were required to equal the seventeen years of Torquemada. If any one wishes to know whether Spain escaped the influence that went abroad with the Reformation, he need only read the additional fact that 260 persons were sacrificed in the last century of the Inquisition against 114,271 persons in the first seventeen years of its existence; or the fact that in the forty years before the Reformation, 242,650 were destroyed, while in the sixty years immediately following only 60,000 suffered. Humanity stands appalled at the record, and Christianity blushes at the atrocities committed in her name.

God does not always smile, lest We should be careless and presume.

MEDICINE—MEDICINE.

BRAN NEW LETTERS!

FRESH TESTIMONIALS!

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

THE ASTONISHING FAMILY MEDICINE.

Saved from Death!—Read!

MONTGOMERY, ALA., June 28, 1869.

Messrs. J. Darby & Co., 161 William St., N. Y. Gents: Yours of the 23d is before me, and has attention. It gives me pleasure to say that my belief is that your Fluid, under the supervision of a kind Providence, saved the life of my youngest child, some six years ago, the child being wasted to a skeleton by the effects of teething, and an affection of the bowels therewith. I had never seen any one reduced so low to recover.
Physic had been tried in vain, until the physicians stated it was useless. A friend recommended your Fluid, or Ozone, which he stated was one of the component parts of it. I did so, and the effect was like magic, plainly discernible in one hour in its good effects, producing quiet and sleep almost at once, where irritation and sleepless restlessness had previously possessed the child to nearly entire exhaustion.
I at first administered it in a small way, two and three drops in a spoonful of water, and increased it to six and ten drops. It promptly checked the bowels, and had the happiest effect, the child rapidly recovering.
I have tried your Fluid on animals, with the same effect—both horses and cows—mingling more or less in water, and letting them drink.
I have no hesitation in saying I believe it a specific for Chronic Diarrhea, or any violent affection of the bowels.
I would not be without it in my family under any consideration. Yours truly,
WILLIAM FOWLER.
Mr. Fowler is a member of the celebrated Banking House of Fowler & Somerville, Montgomery, Alabama.

AND AGAIN!

Read the following letter from Mr. Frank Saunders, a well known citizen, and brother-in-law of the beloved Bishop Paine, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

189 BROADWAY, N. Y., July 29, 1869.

Messrs. J. Darby & Co., 161 William St., N. Y. Gents: About the 10th of June last one of my children was taken with Scarlet Fever, in its most malignant form, and as soon as I could I procured your valuable disinfectant, Darby's Prophylactic Fluid. Although it was several days after the appearance of the disease before I began using the Fluid, still by a free use of it the disease was not only confined to the one case, but the malignity of that case somewhat mitigated.
Finding the use of the Fluid as a disinfectant in my family it was also tried in a case of headache and one of toothache, the results in each case being instantaneous relief. It was afterward tried in a case of Erysipelas, with almost equal success.
It is due to the merits of this compound, also, to state that the case of Erysipelas in question, being located in the feet, the Fluid, in its application, was brought in frequent contact with a troublesome corn on one of the feet, to the utter disconfiture of said corn, for upon subsequent examination it had disappeared, and though it was sought for diligently, it could not be found.
I hand you this, hoping it may be the means of inducing others of earth's poor sufferers to test for themselves, as I did, the great merits of this great remedy.
Very respectfully yours,
FRANK SAUNDERS.

Never was a medicine so universally esteemed and extolled. It never fails. It may be depended on.

COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,

61 CAMP STREET,

Corner Commercial Place, N. O.

Open day and evening the entire year.
Penmanship, Book-keeping, Mathematics and Languages are practically taught by experienced professors. Persons from twelve to fifty years of age attend. The instruction is private to each student. Persons who have neglected their education can here speedily qualify themselves for good situations in business. Some from the country may obtain board in the family of the principal.
Prof. R. B. Montgomery, of this College, has always won the highest premiums for Penmanship and Pen-drawing, over all competitors, at all the State Fairs held in this city.
A liberal deduction made when three or more enter together. The principal has been a practical teacher in New Orleans since 1851. For circulars, giving terms, etc., address J. W. BLACKMAN,

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, JACKSON, LA.,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.
The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war, but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.
Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually in advance.
Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.
The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution in the Southern States.
The past history of the College is the pledge of its future prosperity.
The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.
The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.
W. H. WATKINS, President.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have no material change to notice in the general market since our last report. There has been more animation, however, in some branches of the wholesale trade, but without any marked improvement.

Sugar and molasses have been in brisk demand, and the receipts, which have been liberal, have met a ready sale, with the advantage on the side of the seller. The movement in Western produce has been of the usual extent and at about previous rates. We notice an engagement for Liverpool of about 5000 sacks of wheat—13,000 bushels—at 10d per bushel. This lot was sold last week but not reported until Monday, when the price was suppressed.

Our accounts from the interior, with regard to the crops, are no more encouraging than last week. With very few exceptions, there is a general complaint of the inefficiency of the negro laborers, which must result in a serious waste of cotton in the field. Nothing new has transpired with regard to sugar.

The river is still at a stand, being twelve feet six inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 3d instant :

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	17432
Lake.....	75
Mobile.....	1351
Texas.....	206
Total.....	19064

On Saturday the movement commenced under the depressing influence of heavy receipts at all the ports, with discouraging telegrams from Liverpool and New York, and during the morning a few hundred bales changed hands, part at previous rates and part at a decline of ⅛c. Subsequently factors evinced more confidence, yet prices finally gave way and closed at an irregular falling off of ⅛ to ¼c, the sales embracing 3600 bales. On Monday buyers came forward with more spirit, and, owing to a material advance in gold and foreign exchange, factors were enabled not only to recover the previous decline, but to establish a further improvement of ⅛c, low middling closing at 23½c, strict at 23⅝c, and middling at 24c. The business, at the same time, was on quite a liberal scale, amounting to 5500 bales. On Tuesday the market opened with decidedly unfavorable telegrams from Liverpool and a decline in gold at New York, but the demand continued active and prices gave way barely ⅛c. Later in the day the advantage was still more on the side of the buyer, but not enough to admit several of the pending orders, which were on the basis of 23½c for low middling, and the sales did not exceed 4100 bales, the closing rates showing an irregular falling off of ⅛ to ¼c from Monday's rates.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 13,200 bales, taken for Great Britain, France and the North.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 282,826 bales, against 318,188 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 179,605 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 88,384 bales to Great Britain, 23,310 to other foreign ports, while to France there is a decrease of 264 bales.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows :

Ordinary.....	22¼ to 22½
Good ordinary.....	22¾ to 23⅛
Low middling.....	23⅛ to 23½
Middling.....	23½ to 23⅞
Strict middling.....	24⅛ to ..

Special Notices.

The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

This committee has not been called together since the meeting of the General Conference, because in the financial state of the office there was nothing it could do. To be able to support an editor was one of the conditions necessary to the electing one. Then the expenses of such a committee should be borne by the office—another question of finance. These are simply the reasons why this call has not been made yearly. There was really nothing to do, or that could be done by the committee. As the Advocate feels somewhat like standing on its legs, or at least like stretching them in a preparatory way, we give notice that there will be a meeting of the Publishing Committee directly after the patronizing Conferences shall have all adjourned—say on the second Saturday in February next.

or its cost, is not much. The Farmer can easily secure it. A little attention to his poultry will produce one egg a week extra. A hunt of a few minutes will find an extra egg, or his boys will. Give them a hen or two, and they will return an extra egg per week as rent. In the household economy of the Farmer, the Merchant, the Mechanic, the Professional man, or of the Day Laborer even, it will be easy to save one egg a week, or the cost of one. (The average price of eggs throughout the country, including cities and villages, is not far from thirty-six cents per dozen. They now sell much higher in New York. Where the price is lower it will be quite easy to produce or save two eggs a week. One poor cigar left unsmoked, and each of several other little nick-nacks omitted, will amount to the same thing.)

It will buy you neat copies of over five hundred beautiful Engravings, that cost over $12,000—many of them very large, splendid Pictures. All of them are pleasing, and very instructive, as they give exact, plain representations of useful implements for the out-door operations—of plants, trees, fruits, flowers, etc. Other pictures illustrate house-work, home-made ornaments, etc. Others furnish pleasing and profitable instruction to Boys and Girls. This is only part of what one egg a week will buy during a year. In addition to the above, one egg a week will buy, during a year, over One Thousand Columns of choice reading matter—not trash, or running stories, or heavy scientific matter, or long theoretical disquisitions; but genuine, instructive reading, prepared by a large force of thoroughly practical, intelligent persons, who devote their whole time and attention to gathering and condensing useful information. This information costs the publishers over $15,000 a year. In this reading matter you will find very much that will please, amuse and also instruct your children; much that will aid your wife in her household labors and cares, and give you a pleasanter, happier home, without any increase of cost; much useful instruction about cultivating the garden, so that with the same labor and expense you will get many dollars' worth more of vegetables, etc. You will find thousands of seasonable hints, telling just what is to be done from time to time, and when to do it.

will also buy much instruction about the proper kinds of flowers and foliage plants for your yards or lots; the best information about crops, the most valuable varieties, and how to cultivate them most profitably; much about domestic animals and how to treat them, and about the best labor-saving implements. A single hint gave a farmer five bushels more of wheat per acre on ten acres, without increasing the cost of cultivation more than $1 for the whole field. Thousands of others have obtained similar results. You will find many practical hints about buildings, with plans for constructing them. Also, over fifty columns of "Walks and Talks upon the Farm," describing the experience and observations of an intelligent, large farmer. (These alone are worth much more than the whole costs.) You will find many chapters from Timothy Bunker, Esq., full of information, told in a way that it will "stick." You will find plain directions laying out the work for each month in a way that will save much forgetfulness and oversight, and thus make your work more effective. You will find many hundreds of condensed items, giving a great variety of useful information. You will find the exposures of a multitude of humbugs and swindlers, whose tricks and plausible statements deceive the great mass of people, even those quite intelligent. You will find useful hints about prices and prospects of what you have to sell or buy. It is impossible that from all this variety you will not find hints, suggestions or direct information that will in the long run yield you in profits or savings many dollars. You can get all this in a single annual volume of the American Agriculturist, a large and very beautiful journal, started twenty-eight years ago mainly as a farm and garden journal, but which has gone on enlarging in size and range of topics until it is now adapted to the wants of every man, woman and child—in city, village or country. The material is gathered from the whole country, and this journal is suited to the wants of the whole country. Its circulation is so large, and the cost of collecting information, printing original engravings, type setting, electrotyping, etc., is divided among so many, that it is furnished to subscribers at about the cost of the printing paper. SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

SOUTHERN METHODIST HIGH SCHOOL,

New Orleans.

The exercises of the first session of this institution will commence on Monday, the 4th day of OCTOBER next, in the basement of the German Methodist Church, Dryades st., between Felicity and Enterpe.

In founding this institution our purpose is to supply the desideratum long felt in this city, viz: an acknowledged Protestant School of a high order, in which boys and young men can be thoroughly prepared either for college or the active business of life.

The government of the School will be strict and firm, yet mild and parental in its administration. Thoroughness in the preparation of lessons will be uniformly required of all pupils.

The sons of ministers engaged wholly in the work of their Church will be received at half price, and young men preparing for the ministry without charge.

A Preparatory Department and an Evening School are attached.

In the selection of Teachers the greatest care will be exercised, not only in regard to their mental qualifications, but also in reference to their ability to impart instruction to their pupils.

For further information apply at the School. D. I. RAST, Principal.

READVILLE SEMINARY.

This is a private Institution, with its number of pupils limited, and is authorized by the Legislature of Louisiana to confer degrees, diplomas and literary honors. It was in successful operation from 1843 until interrupted by the events of the war in 1862, and reopened January, 1867.

Teachers of a high grade of talent and merit are in charge of the different departments—English, Ancient and Modern Languages, Music, Painting, etc.

Pupils charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session. All pupils received with the understanding that they are to remain and attend the examination at the close of the session in which they enter, and no deduction made on the bills for absence, except in cases of protracted illness, when the loss may be divided between the institution and the patron.

In her outfit each pupil should be provided with toilet boxes, towels, napkins, sheets, pillow cases and blankets or comforts. She should also bring her knife, fork, spoon, cup and napkin ring.

All articles and clothing brought to the Seminary should be distinctly marked, lists of which should be permanently placed on some part of the trunk convenient for reference. The scholastic year commences October 1 and ends in July.

EXPENSE.

Board and tuition per year	$275 00
The Modern Languages a small extra charge.
Music, per year	75 00

Payments due a half session in advance.

Monthly reports of the studies, health and general deportment of the pupils are sent to the parents or guardians at a distance.

The main Seminary building, recently destroyed by fire, will be replaced by one of ample accommodations, now in process of construction, which will be ready for the reception of pupils at the opening of the next session.

This institution occupies the large and elegant building lately known as Grant & Butler's School. The grounds are situated on Sixth street, between Walnut and Chestnut streets, and extend back to Centre street. They are elevated several feet above the street, thus making the large and beautiful lawn a most desirable place for healthful out-door exercise.

The building, furniture and apparatus of the school are among the most complete and valuable in the West.

Experienced teachers, residing in the institution, will devote their time to the moral, intellectual and physical improvement of the pupils.

VOL. XV. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1869. NO. 48.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Washington, Dec. 9.—The President has nominated John F. Dillon for the circuit judgeship of the eighth circuit. This closes the nominations for the circuit judges.

Senator Kellogg introduced a resolution, inquiring from the Secretary of the Treasury the condition of the branch mint at New Orleans, and the purpose for which it is used, and whether the interests of the government require a mint at New Orleans.

Senate.—Senator Kellogg, of Louisiana, introduced a bill incorporating the Mississippi Valley Levee Company, according to the plan proposed by the Louisville Commercial Convention.

The District Committee has been directed to inquire into the propriety of repealing the charter of the Medical Society for rejecting negro doctors.

Senator Trumbull reported, with amendments, from the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill relating to the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. The bill, as amended, declares that the judicial power of the United States gives no power to the courts to decide upon political questions, and that it rests with Congress to decide what government is the established one in any State, and it prohibits the Supreme Court from entertaining jurisdiction of any case growing out of the execution of the reconstruction acts until the governments of the late rebellious States are recognized by Congress as valid.

It repeals all acts authorizing appeals to the Supreme Court, and in habeas corpus proceedings the President is directed to hold and proceed with all prisoners held in said States by military authority, without regard to any civil proceedings or authority whatsoever.

Senate adjourned until Monday.

House.—Shanks introdneed a bill to complete the reconstruction of Georgia.

Van Trump presented a joint resolution from the Ohio Legislature, withdrawing the ratification of the fifteenth amendment. Referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Senate.—Nothing of importance doing. The Reconstructiou Committee heard half a dozen speakers regarding Virginia, and adjourned to Saturday, when others desiring to offer arguments must do so in writing.

House.—After an ineffectual effort to investigate the recent gold horror, the question was resumed.

Nashville, Tenn., Dec. 9.—In the Senate to-day the bill forbidding the indictment of soldiers for acts committed during the late war passed its first reading.

Washington, Dec. 10.—The awards made by the Court of Claims for cotton captured by the military aggregate $700,034 in twenty-nine cases. The government has appealed them all to the Supreme Court.

Commodore John Rogers succeeds Admiral Rowen in the command of the Asiatic squadron.

The New York Tribune's dispatches from Cuba confirm the defeat of the Spaniards at San Jose, and also of the account of the sévere punishment of the negroes at Sagua. The number of stripes given to them was from two to eight hundred.

The Diaro de la Marina says the Spanish in the district of Holguin are unable to move for want of reinforcements. Three thousand soldiers are necessary there.

The troops are suffering from severe sickness among them.

Seven sugar estates have been destroyed in the Remedos district, five in Trinidad and three in Cienfuegos.

Colonel Camara, with six hundred men and five pieces of artillery, attacked the Cubans at Vegas del Castellano. The fight lasted four hours, when the Spaniards were repulsed with great loss, leaving forty-seven dead on the field.

The official statistics published at Havana show, from the commencement of the war, that the Spanish loss has been eight thousand killed in battle, five thousand by disease, two thousand deserted to the Cubans, and three thousand now sick.

Thirty-five prominent Cubans were arrested in Havana for supposed sympathy with the Cuban revolutionists.

The Supreme Court to-day dismissed the appeal from Louisiana in the case of the city of New Orleans against the New York Steamship Company.

City of Mexico advices to the 1st instant have been received. Mr. Seward and party had arrived on the 15th ultimo, and were received by Juarez and notables. He was subsequently banquetted by Negrete. Mr. Seward spoke, disclaiming any personal interests in his visit to Mexico. Said his ambition was to inspire Americans with a thorough understanding of the destinies of this continent, which ultimately must be independent of any foreign control.

House.—A protest against the admission of Booker, of the fourth Virginia district, was referred to the Committee on Elections.

The struggle between the Committee on Banking and Currency and the Ways and Means Committee regarding the reference of financial bills is growing. Consideration of the census bill was resumed.

A bill was introdnced prohibiting the sale of coin by the Treasury Department.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs has been directed to inquire into the circumstances attending the landing of the French cable.

A bill was introduced for the removal of the obstructions in Bayon Teche, Louisiana, and also for the repairing and furnishing of the New Orleans custom-house.

The census bill was the subject of discussion all day.

Two efforts were made to consider Cuban affairs, but failed. House adjourned.

Senate.—No session.

Washington, Dec. 11.—The Reconstruction Committee decided to-day to report a bill to admit Virginia to representation in Congress. This action is supposed to have been in some measure produced by a letter from ex-Governor Wells, in which he withdraws opposition to such a course, and declares in favor of general amnesty.

House.—A motion to table Ingersoll's $44,000,000 additional currency bill was defeated, but it was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency instead of the Ways and Means Committee, which is regarded as equivalent to its ultimate defeat, as the Banking and Currency Committee are understood to be hostile to its provisions.

The Committee on Ways and Means has been instructed to inquire into the expediency of relieving the provisiou trade from taxation.

Five members of the Banking and Currency Committee, to which Ingersoll's $44,000,000 additional currency bill was referred, voted to lay it on the table.

The Reconstruction Committee met to-day. A letter was read from ex-Governor Wells, of Virginia, urging the immediate admission, and opposing the exaction of the test oath from the Virginia legislators.

The best opinion on the subject of Virginia's admission is that a bill will be reported from the committee on Tuesday for the restoration of the State, and that Senators and Representatives, with the exception of Booker and McKenzie, whose seats are contested, will be admitted to seats.

The bill will require a pledge from the officials that there shall be no future disfranchisements on account of race or color.

The statements of Govs. Wells and Walker were ordered to be printed.

A sub-committee has beeu appointed to prepare a statement of alleged election frauds, but it will uot be printed.

The voice of the committee is against seriously entertaining the question regarding the fairness of the election.

The Judiciary Committee had another session yesterday on Georgia. A bill was agreed upon for carrying out the suggestions in the President's message.

Governor Bullock was before the committee, and made statements relative to the condition of affairs in that State, which he represented to be little better than it was during the war—that is, so far as the Union men are concerned.

The bill will be reported from the committee next week.

Washington, Dec. 13.—Boutwell's estimate for this year's expenditure of the government exceeds the appropriation last year nearly fifty millions.

Fernando Wood denies the current report that the House Committee on Foreign Affairs will sustain the President's views on Cuban affairs.

Senator Drake made an inflammatory speech in the Senate to-day, in favor of his bill making the Supreme Court and all the Federal courts subservient to Congress. It met with a chilly reception, many Radical members leaving their seats.

Butler quoted scripture in a speech to-day on a disability bill. He said: "There is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repents than over ninety-nine just men made perfect." The words were received with screams of laughter from all parts of the House.—Times.

In the case involving Federal taxation on the circulation of the State banks, the Supreme Court decides the notes are taxable.

On the point that the tax is excessive, the court declares it has no power to restrain the taxing power as regards rates.

The canvass of Congress shows that any action toward Georgia will be withheld until after the meeting of the Legislature of that State, and if the negroes are reseated the matter will be dropped, but otherwise the measures foreshadowed in Carpenter's bill and Martin's amendment will be enforced. Governor Bullock urges immediato action. Senator Trumbull, at the meeting of the Reconstruction Committee, opposed the whole movement. He is alone, however, in this opposition.

The President withdraws the nomination of Daniel D. Snyder for internal revenue assessor of the fourth Georgia district, also that of W. L. Jones for receiver of public moneys at New Orleans.

Justices Davis and Nelson dissented from the opinion of the Supreme Court declaring taxation of State bank notes constitutional.

The State Department has official information that twenty-one States have adopted the fifteenth amendment.

Butler introduced Farnsworth's bill in the House to-day admitting Virginia without qualification.—Paine offered a substitute to the same effect, but reciting that the State must be organized under the reconstruction laws.

Butler also introduced bills declaring that the Virginia constitution was republican in form, with another preamble that pledges have been given that the people of that State will support and defend the Constitution of the United States, and carry out the provisions of the constitution submitted by the reconstruction acts of Congress, and ratified by the people of Virginia in letter and spirit.

Therefore, be it resolved, That the State of Virginia is entitled to representation in the Congress of the United States.

These several propositions were referred to the Committee on Reconstruction, who will meet to-morrow. They were ordered to be printed.

Washington, Dec. 15.—Senate.—Sumner presented a petition from the recent colored laboring convention, praying for a divisiou of the public lands in the South among them.

In opposing the motion to adjourn to the twentieth instead of the fifth of January, Sumner said: "We had Georgia, Virginia and the cable connection with France pressing upon us for consideration." Pomeroy said, "and Cuba." Sumner said, "the least said about that the better."

Brownlow had a long personal explanation read from the clerk's desk. Speaking of Stokes and Butler, he said they were two beautiful pinks to be assailing him; that the rejection of the fifteenth amendment by the Legislature of Tennessee was an act of perfidy.

Carpenter argued against the departure of the Spanish gunboats, maintaining that an actual war existed, and that our proper attitude was absolute neutrality. The Senate, without any action, adjourned.

A resolutiou was offered authorizing Commissioner Delano to offer a reward for parties committing assaults on revenue officers.

A resolution for an adjournment from the twenty-second of December to the fifth of January was concurred in.

House.—A resolution was introduced for the providing of a committee on public safety, who are to take cognizance of steamboat running and other disasters.

The census bill was discussed to adjournment.

FOREIGN.

London, Dec. 8.—The price of Confederate bonds considerably advanced in consequence of the new proposed settlement of the Alabama claims.

Havana, Dec. 9.—A heavy storm from the north has prevailed the last two days.

The President's message creates intense excitement among Cuban sympathizers, who are much disappointed.

A convoy from Mansillo to Los Tunas was seriously harassed during the entire march.

Rome, Dec. 9.—The Ecumenical ceremonies yesterday lasted six hours. The city is perfectly tranquil.

Liverpool, Dec. 9.—Vessels arriving from the South Adriatic report a vast number of icebergs.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 9.—The Emperor Alexander has conferred upon the King of Prussia a grand cross of the Order of St. George as a proof of the cordiality existing between the two sovereigns.

London, Dec. 9.—Letters from Rome assert that a majority of the French and many of the German bishops will oppose a declaration of the papal infallibility.

Paris, Dec. 9.—In the Corps Legislatif, to-day, Rochefort made an offensive allusion to the Emperor, provoking great disorder and eliciting a storm of dissent from a majority of the members.

Many of the French cities were illuminated in honor of the Ecumenical Council.

At Marseilles fifteen hundred men made a violent demonstration against the celebration, and marched through the streets singing the Marseillaise Hymn, and destroying decorations and transparencies. The police dispersed the mob after making sixty arrests.

The Viceroy of Egypt has accepted the Sultan's ultimatum, and submitted to all its conditions.

Madrid, Dec. 9.—The minister of State intimated to the Cortes that strong steps will be taken for the protection of Spain in case the Ecumenical Council should adopt measures hostile to her interests.

Edinburg, Dec. 10.—The Scottsman credits a report that Clarendon will soon open negotiations with the United States for the settlement of the Alabama claims.

Paris, Dec. 11.—The French government has made known to the Ecumenical Council that the infallibility is an inopportune question from a religious view, and politically places France otherwise than assenting to the concordat, and relieves her from the obligations there accepted.

Naples, Dec. 11.—The Anti-Papal Council assembled here to-day. There are two hundred Italian and twenty other delegates present.

Rome, Dec. 11.—The Ecumenical Council adjourned over until after the Epiphany. The Pope said he was sure of the co-operation of the American bishops.

Lisbon, Dec. 11.—Fears are entertained of rebellion in various parts of Portugal; the authorities are active.

Liverpool, Dec. 11.—The American ship Crescent City, which left Savannah, Georgia, on the thirtieth of October, with cotton, sprung a leak at sea and was abandoned.

London, Dec. 11.—A report from the admiralty office says that for a distance of thirty miles the Suez Canal is subject to land drifts, reducing the depth, and the thick fogs are bewildering to pilots.

Paris, Dec. 11.—Senor Miraflores, the intended of ex-Queen Isabella, of Spain, publishes an emphatic denial of the reported story that the Queen had taken the crown diamonds on her retirement from Madrid.

Madrid, Dec. 13.—There is great rejoicing over the release of the Spanish gunboats.

London, Dec. 13.—The government has determined to send five thousand troops to Ireland, and upon the meeting of Parliament a bill will be introduced suspending the writ of habeas corpus.

Paris, Dec. 13.—The annual report of the minister of finances reports them satisfactory.

London, Dec. 15.—The Times says: The rejection by the American Senate of the reciprocity treaty relieves England of an awkward question. If free trade existed between England and the Union, the Canadian trade would discriminate between a direct trade between the Union and England, and Canada would recognize closer commercial interest with the United States than with England; a political is sure to follow a commercial estrangement.

The Times says editorially: While admitting the improved quantity, quality and price of India cotton, it does not consider it possible that it will cause the displacement of American descriptions.

When you send up your prayers be sure to direct them to the care of the Redeemer, and then they will never miscarry.—M. Henry.

NORTHWEST TEXAS CONFERENCE.

Bishop Wightman, writing to the Nashville Advocate, says:

The meeting at Weatherford was one of great harmony and spiritual refreshment. The weather was fine; people came to the Conference room, and attended to all the other exercises of the occasion, in crowds. An excellent missionary meeting was held, and $700, and upward, was raised. Only two applicants were admitted on trial—J. M. Lewis and J. H. Perry. A. Davis was readmitted. Five preachers were continued on trial. The following were elected delegates to the General Conference, viz: Clerical members, T. Stanford and L. B. Whipple; reserves, J. S. McCarver and J. M. Jones. Lay members, J. R. Henry and R. Q. Mills; reserves, N. T. Sneed and B. A. Philpots. There was reported an increase in the white membership of one thousand one hundred and eight during the year.

The Rev. S. D. Akin, in the same paper, gives the following incidents and items:

The Northwest Texas Conference convened here the seventeenth ult. Only two itinerant and two delegated members were absent; this, too, notwithstanding the fact that this is a frontier town, and the Indians are constantly making thieving incursions. Since we have been here, several horses have been stolen from the limits of the town. A young lady was stolen a few miles from here, three weeks since, within a few hundred yards of her residence; yet there are troops here lying on their oars. This is a splendid country, needing only protection to develop immense, yea, boundless, resources. The Bishop arrived on Tuesday afternoon, having had to brace himself against a norther all day.

Wednesday morning, as hearty and cheerful-looking a set of preachers as it has been my lot to see, answered to their names—Bishop Wightman in the chair. Such dispatch, and yet such minute and exact attention to every interest may be rarely witnessed in a lifetime. Our business was all finished, ready for the appointments, before two o'clock on Saturday, and to-night we have received our appointments. We have at this session taken two on trial; ordained no traveling but four local deacons; ordained two elders; located, five; supernumerated, four; lost during the year by death, none; readmitted, one; received by transfer, two, since last fall; the number of effective itinerants is thirty-six; the number of members reported this year, seven thousand one hundred and one; increase, one thousand two hundred and six; being sixteen and eight-tenths per cent. on last year's returns.

SOUTH GEORGIA CONFERENCE.

This Conference met at Cuthbert, Georgia, December 1, 1869. Bishop Kavanaugh presided.

Delegates to the General Conference—Clerical: L. Pierce, S. Anthony, J. E. Evans, E. H. Myers, Joseph S. Key; clerical reserves: J. W. Hinton, J. B. McGehee and O. L. Smith. Lay delegates: James Jackson, A. H. Colquitt, William Green, John J. Jones and Robert W. Lovett; lay reserves: Dr. M. Woodruff, Dr. H. S. Wimberley and T. M. Furlow. The statistics are as follows:

Members, 22,447; increase, 1,587; colored, 952—the majority having transferred to the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church South; local preachers, 210; increase, 9; infants baptized, 860; increase, 139; adults baptized, 1,833; increase, 603; Sunday schools, 289; increase, 33; officers and teachers, 1,965; increase, 150; scholars, 12,210; increase, 1,847. Other items of the report exhibit a gratifying increase in most of the collections of the Conference. The missionary debt so far as assessed to the Conference has been paid off. The exception to this good report was at an unfortunate point; for the "Conference collection" was only $5,310 55—a falling off of about $100—allowing a division of 53 per cent. to claimants—though it should be remembered that last year there was one donation of $1,000 to this fund. The collection for the Bishops' fund, too, was near $25 short of the assessment.

The Committee on Foreign Missions and Missionary Debt reported as paid this year for the debt $1,433 10, and for the aid of Young J. Allen in China, $1,569 88.

It was resolved that the Conference endeavor to raise $2,500 the next year for the China mission.

SOUTHWESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Bible House, N. O., Dec. 10, 1869.

To the Friends of the Bible:

The twentieth anniversary of the Southwestern Bible Society will be held in the Carondelet Methodist Episcopal Church South, on Sunday, December 19, at seven P. M., when the annual report will be presented by the Rev. Dr. Doremus, the general agent; and the address will be delivered by Rev. J. B. Walker, D. D. Friends of the cause are invited to be present.

The annual meeting for business will be held on the Saturday preceding, at seven P. M., at the Bible House, at which patrons, directors and members of the society and delegates from the auxiliary societies are expected to be present.

Chairman Board of Directors.

The Christian Advocate, published at Little Rock, has been discontinued, and the Memphis Christian Advocate has been adopted as the organ of the Conferences in Arkansas. We regard this as a most judicious arrangement for all concerned. The editor of the Memphis Advocate, speaking of the action of the Little Rock Conference, says:

After its adoption, even those brethren most decidedly favorable to the continuance of the Christian Advocate at Little Rock, seemed to be perfectly satisfied with the result; and the editor of that paper having discharged his duty in an earnest effort for its success, expressed himself greatly relieved by the decision in the case, and not only so, but assured us of his purpose to work, as an agent, diligently and faithfully for this paper. After the settlement of the question, Bishop Pierce announced his approval of the action of the brethren, viewing it as most obviously providential and contributing largely to the harmony and prosperity of the church.

To the brethren, clerical and lay, of the Little Rock Conference, and the membership within its bounds, we send greeting—asking their confidence and support in the efforts we may make to fulfill the obligations imposed upon us.

We append here important resolutions adopted by the brethren:

Resolved, That Andrew Hunter, A. R. Winfield and M. H. Wells be and are hereby appointed to represent the interests of the Little Rock Conference on the Publishing Committee of the Memphis and Arkansas Christian Advocate.

Resolved, That we, as agents, make earnest efforts to introduce the paper, as our official organ, into every family in our several charges.

Humiliating.—The report of our missionary treasurer, published last week, is one of the most humiliating exhibitions we have ever seen in the columns of this or any other paper.

We cannot doubt that our preachers and people have looked over it with feelings of sincere mortification. If any have not read it carefully, we beg them to do so, and unite with us in deploring the sad decline of the missionary spirit in our church.

The entire contributions for one year, of thirty-nine thousand six hundred and eleven members, for domestic and foreign missions, reached the sum of $4,675 08—a little more than twelve cents for each member of the church within the limits of the Conference.

But the special reports in the treasurer's exhibit are worthy of mournful attention.

From circuits of three or four hundred members we find the reports to range from sixty-five cents and nearly all intermediato figures to a little over $100.

Some circuits, to which heavy appropriations were made by the Domestic Board, report scarcely anything collected. Now, it does seem to us that those fields which were so generously aided from the scanty fund of the board should have made special exertions to return a fair proportion to the treasury. Richmond Christian Advocate.

THE GOLDEN SIDE.

There is many a rest in the road of life,
If we would only stop to take it;
And many a tone from the better land,
If the querulous heart would make it!
To the sunny soul that is full of hope,
And whose beautiful trust ne'er faileth,
The grass is green and the flowers are bright,
Though the wintry storm prevaileth.

Better to hope, though the clouds hang low,
And keep the eyes still lifted;
For the sweet blue sky will soon peep through,
When the ominous clouds are rifted!
There was never a night without a day,
Or an evening without a morning;
And the darkest hour, as the proverb goes,
Is the hour before the dawning.

There is many a gem in the path of life,
Which we pass in our idle pleasure,
That is richer far than the jeweled crown,
Or the miser's hoarded treasure;
It may be the love of a little child,
Or a mother's prayers to heaven,
Or only a beggar's grateful thanks
For a cup of water given.

Better to weave in the web of life
A bright and golden filling,
And to do God's will with a ready heart,
And hands that are swift and willing,
Than to snap the minute delicate threads
Of our curious lives asunder,
And then blame heaven for the tangled ends,
And sit and grieve and wonder.

LETTER FROM CHINA.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, Oct. 15, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: I have been for ten days visiting some of our out-stations, and preaching the glorious gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ in towns and cities of unnumbered thousands of heathen, who have never heard the gospel until now. While looking aronnd me and seeing those dense crowds which throng every street in these cities, and knowing, too, that they are in ignorance of the great plan of salvation, the work to be done is truly appalling.

In the city of Soochow, which once contained two million inhabitants, but now will not probably number more than one-fourth that number, I have succeeded in renting a house for worship, and have received the approval of one of the high officials of the city, with whom I was personally acquainted in Shanghai, and who has been promoted and transferred to this city. We consider that an important item in China to secure the approval of the officials of these cities. And why? The people are afraid to come near the foreigner unless they know the officials have approved of the course taken by him. Again, they say, the rebels talked about Jesus and his doctrine, and they destroyed the whole country. Wherever I went through the city of Soochow I was called a "foreign devil," by the Soochow people. But I must say, to the praise of the Nankin people, thousands of whom live in the city, that I never saw a more orderly and well-disposed people. They are polite and kind, and never make use of those foul-mouthed expressions to which the natives of Soochow are so much given. While in the city several officials, most of whom were Nankin men, came to hear preaching. Many sick persons came for medicine. Some who had applied on former occasions, and had been benefited, came, bringing some of their friends who were sick. I find many cases of ague among the people, and quinine is becoming a renowned and famous medicine among them. I wish some of our good people would send us a supply of this valuable medicine from the city of San Francisco. Send to me at Shanghai, in care of the P. M. S. S. Company, and I will pay all freight. That and any other medicines will be gratefully received.

We have now a small church in the city of Soochow, and I design opening a school there by the 1st of November. We trust, with the Lord's blessing, to see the number of faithful and earnest followers of the Lord Jesus greatly increased. The funds for this school have been received from the Sabbath school in the city of New Orleans, and some from a Sabbath school of an independent Methodist church in the city of Baltimore. We pray God's blessing upon the work. We have the glorious promise of all needed divine aid. We desire to come with humble hearts, trusting in the Lord for an increase of faith in his divine presence and power. We must expect many difficulties in the way of establishing the Christian religion among the heathen. There are many false religions, and those who uphold them will oppose us at every step. A great struggle must be expected before the field is won. But, thanks be to God, step by step is being gained by those who held up the standard of Christian faith. The tocsin of alarm has been sounded throughout the whole empire by those who despise the name of the Lord Jesus, and in many instances dreadful persecution has followed, but the native Christians have not denied the Lord, and the result has been that a wider door has been opened to the Christian. Hundreds, I may say thousands, are being added to the various branches of the church annually in all this great empire. The Lord will yet be victorious.

We desire an interest in the prayers of all of God's people. Pray that the power of God may be felt in this heathen land, and that there may be a great moving among the dry bones of this great valley, and may all the glory and praise be to him who loved us and gave himself for us.

J. W. LAMBUTH.

P. S.—Bishop Kingsley, of the Methodist Episcopal Church North, has been with us a few days. He is now at Peking, and is expected here in a few days, on his way to Foochow, and thence to India and Europe. When will one of our Bishops pay us a visit in China? Next year, I trust, when they send us more help.

MOBILE DISTRICT MEETING.

The Mobile District Meeting met at Franklin street church, November 12, Dr. Hamilton in the chair.

Reports and addresses were presented and made on the following subjects: Ministerial support, the want of power and aggressiveness in the church and its causes, church literature, ministerial education, and Sabbath schools.

Dr. Andrews, who addressed the meeting on the second of the above subjects, ascribed this want to a lack of that earnestness and activity which our forefathers possessed. Dr. Hamilton thought its cause was the want of a single eye. Many interesting remarks were made on this subject.

A. W. Lampkin, A. G. Moore, G. G. Childs and A. C. Danner were elected delegates to the Annual Conference.

W. L. Baker, Walter Frobos and W. B. Riley were elected alternates.

The reports on ministerial education and Sunday schools were ordered to be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

H. URQUHART, Secretary.

REPORT ON SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

It is quite evident, even to the most casual observer, that the Sunday school has assumed an importance and magnitude, in the estimation of the church, seldom if ever before equaled.

The church, in these Christian lands, has become strangely warmed and aroused upon the subject, and it is manifest that she feels, perhaps, more than ever the duty and privilege of placing both the children and youth of the country whithin the range of Sunday school instructions. New and attractive agents and appliances are being employed to connect the young with the Sunday school, and to secure an ever-increasing interest among all that attend.

A large proportion of the most valuable talent among the laity of the church is being actively employed in this interesting department of Christian labor, and the ministers generally have had their zeal quickened and augmented in this regard. These indications are unquestionably replete with encouragement and hope to every observing and intelligent Christian, and while the church of God is designed to be a fostering mother, not only to ourselves but likewise to our children, it should be a source of much gratitude and rejoicing to know that Zion, in imitation of the example of her spiritual Head, is saying, "Suffer the children to come, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God."

If, indeed, the singularly powerful impetus imparted to the Sunday school movement, amid these latter days, be held under the auspices and control of vital, spiritual Christianity, we venture to affirm that it is quite easy to predict that an almost incalculable amount of aggressive force and prosperity will thereby accrue to the church of God in these lands. Hence we regard it as indispensable to the utility and success of the Sunday school institution that the spiritual element, which is indeed the very life of Christianity, be kept prominently before the mind of all who labor in this lovely department of religious enterprise. Simple Sabbath school machinery, however well and ingeniously the parts may be adjusted, will not answer the purpose. Indeed the most elaborate and well arranged appointments of the Sunday school, above considered, must inevitably demonstrate the fact that no merely human appliances can avail in the accomplishment of great spiritual ends, unless rendered thus efficient by the Holy Ghost.

While, indeed, order, system, etc., are among the requisites of successful effort in this department of Christian labor, let the spiritual force of vital godliness be freely and devoutly invoked, as making up the mainsprings which are to secure proper movement and momentum to all.

As the Sunday school has not inappropriately been termed the "nursery of the church," it can fully establish its claims to the above title by securing such attention to the tender scion as will serve to prepare the way for it to be transplanted into the genial and peculiar soil of the church, there to remain as a fruitful tree. It is, indeed, quite sad and afflicting to think of the large number of pupils that have passed the Sunday school of this one city, without even making a profession of saving faith in Christ, or even assuming a nominal connection with the church of God. Year after year many of the children and youth among us sit under the instructions of the Sunday school teacher, and even reach their physical maturity in the very midst of such association; but, alas! go forth into the active and often dissipating scenes of life with no well defined and decided Christian character, and if subsequently found in the congregations of the Lord's house, they apparently come thither with hearts as hard as the nether millstone, and with the whole moral and intellectual nature (as it respects spiritual religion) in a state of fearful and alarming petrifaction. With such a balance sheet as this, having upon its very face such an alarming and ruinous discount, would it not seem that the hour has fully come in which every Sunday school workman, and every other friend of the young, should repeat and emphasize the question with profound and solemn concern: Why this humiliating and startling revelation connected with the present operations of the Sunday school among us?

The Sunday school itself is surely not chargeable with this process of moral hardening to which reference has been made; but we respectfully suggest that the cause of this melancholy development may be sought for in the mode of working the system. Evangelical repentance, faith in Christ, regeneration by the Holy Spirit, and the like fundamental doctrines and principles of our holy religion, are not, perhaps, as clearly and as fully urged upon the attention of the youth of the Sunday school as might be done; and if these essential features of Christian faith be urged upon youthful attention, unfortunately, in a melancholy number of cases, we instruct and illuminate the head, while the heart may remain unchanged, and possibly untouched! It therefore becomes us, touching this matter, to pause solemnly and devoutly before almighty God, and reverently invoke the transforming and sanctifying agency of the Holy Spirit to accompany and follow up the lessons of the Sunday school.

We meet the children not as cold moral lecturers upon the one hand, nor yet upon the other to attempt to satiate an inordinate taste for the visible display of mere novelty and show. The Sunday school teacher plies his task in the region of the spiritual, hence all means and instruments adopted by him should subserve the grand ends of spiritual culture and development. The children and youth of the Sunday school should be brought, more than ever before, into close contact with the Sabbath preaching of an evangelical ministry; for as the preaching of the word is God's special and ordained instrumentality for the conversion and salvation of man, nothing can legitimately substitute it. If there be, therefore, in the mind of any a tendency to suppose that the exercises of the Sunday school, however well conducted, are in the least designed to supplant the services of the sanctuary by the living ministry, this impression, so fraught with error and evil, should be promptly corrected.

And furthermore, if it can be seen in any instance that the exercises of the Sunday school are being protracted to such a degree as to disqualify the pupil, either in body or in mind, for attending the public services of the sanctuary, the sessions of the Sunday school should be shortened to obviate this evil.

The Sunday school, as a whole, should invariably make up a part of the congregation of the Lord's house, and should be so arranged and seated as to hear the preaching of the gospel. We would respectfully suggest still further: Let the instructions delivered from the pulpit be adapted, as far as practicable, to the comprehension and edification of the youth and children. Let all learned and labored metaphysical disquisitions give place, in the main, to plain yet well digested expositions of the word of the Most High; and if we have ministers among us who complain that they cannot preach to children, we deem it not wholly out of place to suggest that it were high time they were learning, for indeed the adult sinner, in many instances, has heard it thunder so often, as from the very mount of God, that he is, to all human appearances, proof against the threatenings of the law upon one hand, and the wooings and promises of the gospel upon the other. Without controversy, therefore, children and youth make up a widespread and inviting field for Christian and ministerial labor, from which a harvest rich and abundant may be gathered into the garner of God.

We respectfully submit the following for your consideration, viz:

WHEREAS, The Sunday school has, in the estimation of the church, assumed a moral force and power perhaps never before equaled in the experience of the Christian world; AND WHEREAS, We deem it indispensable to the perpetuity and utility of the Sunday school that it be kept under the preserving care of genuine spiritual religion; therefore, be it

Resolved, That as ministers and official members of the church within the bounds of the Mobile district, we faithfully endeavor to cultivate and foster the growth of experimental godliness in all the Sunday schools under our management and control, and that we give greater prominence and emphasis than ever to the cardinal doctrines of our holy Christianity, such as repentance, faith, regeneration, and the like.

Resolved, That as in God's economy the public preaching of the gospel is the ordained instrumentality for the instruction and salvation of both ourselves and our children, that we speedily endeavor to adopt some plan by which the children and youth of the Sunday school be brought within the range of the regular and stated labors of the pulpit on the holy Sabbath.

Resolved, That we cordially and heartily invite the parents and guardians of children and youth of the Sunday school to aid us in carrying out its benevolent and gracious designs.

Resolved, That we devoutly invoke the divine blessing upon our labors in the highly important and singularly interesting field of Sabbath school labor and effort.

Respectfully submitted.

J. BANCROFT.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

MR. EDITOR: I desire to give you some account of God's gracious dealings with the people who worship at Kimball chapel, Quenetortue, parish of Vermilion.

This year this society was detached from any other work, and has for its pastor our presiding elder, Brother J. D. Adams, of the Opelousas district, whose efficient labors, under God, have proved a blessing to the church here. Bro. Adams has given us preaching every other week, excepting upon two occasions, when his duties to the district caused an interim of three weeks. At the first church meeting the number of names on the roll was one hundred and eighty-three. For two years a Sabbath school has been continuously in operation, reporting at that church meeting a superintendent, secretary, sixteen teachers and one hundred and twenty-eight scholars. The average attendance during this year has been about eighty only. This school has only a nominal library—one hundred and sixty volumes, principally pamphlets. This year, as well as last, the school had a public celebration. Both efforts were considered creditable to the school and community. $33 have been expended for the school in necessary books, tickets and prizes.

The spiritual condition of the church at the first meeting was not that desired by every lover of the Lord's Zion. Among those one hundred and eighty-three members there were a faithful few earnestly and prayerfully engaged for God—the little leaven. Many were cold and indifferent—only nominal Christians—and alas! some were acting in a manner disreputable even to respectable circles in the world; discipline was neglected. But by degrees a different spirit was manifested in the church. In addition to the services of our dear pastor, the Rev. Mr. Powell, of Jasper, Texas, while on a visit here to his children, gave us the earnest preaching of one who seemed to say in the pulpit and in social converse: "The love of Christ constraineth me." Some thirteen were added to the church.

At the second Quarterly Meeting the spiritual condition of the church was reported as encouraging; at the third as improving.

On the 5th of September, after Sunday school and before our usual religious exercises commenced, a conference of the most active members of the church was had. The church seemed to inquire: "Saw ye him whom my soul loveth?" The proposition was made and acceded to by the leading members of the church to invite all the members to come to the altar and remain there until God answered their prayers by a manifestation of his presence. Their prayers were heard. God's stately steppings were heard. Souls were converted. The first one of the converts, a young man of promise, since licensed as an exhorter, went to work in the spirit of his Master. The meetings have continued, and are still going on at this writing, attended by the conversion of sinners.

The night of the 19th of September surpassed the power of description. Every space at the railing of the altar was occupied by a penitent. The people of the living God rejoiced and labored with their mourning friends. Conversions were quick and bright. The altar was cleared of penitents, but the young converts had gone to their friends in the congregation. The meeting would have closed, but the altar filled again with penitents, weeping and asking the prayers of the church. Few of those who came to the altar on that night but could say before daylight: "I know that my Redeemer liveth." Yes, on that night we nearly made a Jacob-struggle—not quite break of day, but near four o'clock A. M. Its result, perhaps, in reclamations and conversions, was about fifty. And, bless God, the work goes on at the rate of ten or twelve conversions and reclamations per week.

The last time Brother Adams was with us he received thirty-nine candidates into the church. There are now thirty eight candidates more. Our membership is now two hundred and thirty-nine, and, thank God, nearly all a living membership, a spiritual priesthood. Of the one hundred and eighty-three members on the roll at the first church meeting, we had nine official members, embodying one local preacher, one exhorter, two class leaders, one Sabbath school superintendent and seven stewards. In fourteen officials we have one licensed preacher, two exhorters, eight class leaders, one superintendent and seven stewards.

We are located at the corner of three parishes, and the field of operation chosen by our Bible society embraces all the southern part of St. Landry and Lafayette parishes west of Vermilion bayou, and all of Vermilion parish west of the same bayou. We have a depository of Bibles, with some fifty-five members, and expect to canvass our entire territory, and put God's word into every house, in English or French, where it can or will be received. It is to be lamented that the literature of our church is so much neglected here. Our people are a plain, frugal, and perhaps a parsimonious people; but the pastor will be paid; perhaps something more done in the way of a Conference collection. There is a contribution afloat to paint, repair and fix up the church with a view to the establishment of a church library, as well as the preservation of the house.

Now let us put down, in addition, some figures more explicitly showing the result of the revival to this date: Accessions, fifty-six; candidates, thirty-eight. Perhaps some of the candidates may not come up for reception; but I suppose our strength to be two hundred and seventy. Some time before the District Meeting, in reply to a query of our pastor, it was stated one-fourth of our members were unconverted. From an account of the secretary's list of names the conversions exceed one hundred since July, and there are but few who had retrograded but are now in the enjoyment of religion.

Of course in connection with a revival there are many agencies, under God, to bring about the good work. We can point in the above items to a faithful pastor, to a visiting friend bearing about the marks of the body of the Lord Jesus, to the observance of discipline, to the use of all the means of grace, to the faithful few who were always ready, under all discouragements, to come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty, and most especially to the Sabbath school.

W. S.

ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT.

MR. EDITOR: The revival influence is still spreading and deepening on the Alexandria district. On last Sabbath, at Spring Creek, we had a season of refreshing from the Lord. Eleven persons joined the church.

EFFECTIVE CHRISTIANITY.—In regard to that Christianity which the world most requires to-day Bishop Huntington very truly remarks:

We want in you Christianity that is Christian across counters, over dinner tables, behind the neighbor's back, as in his face. We want in you a Christianity that we can find in the temperance of the meal, in moderation of dress, in respect for authority, in amiability at home, in veracity and simplicity in mixed society. Rowland Hill used to say he would give very little for the religion of a man whose very dog and cat were not the better for his religion. We want fewer gossiping, slandering, gluttonous, peevish, conceited, bigoted Christians.

To make them effectual, all our public religious measures, institutions, benevolent agencies, missions, need to be managed on a high-toned, scrupulous and unquestionable tone of honor, without evasion or partisanship, or over-much of the serpent's cunning. The hand that gives away the Bible must be unspotted from the world. The money that sends the missionary to the heathen must be honestly earned. In short, the two arms of the church—justice and mercy—must be extended, working for man, strengthening the brethren, or else your faith is vain, and ye are yet in your sins.

LITTLE ROCK CONFERENCE.

This body held its annual session in Magnolia, Arkansas, November 24 to 29, Bishop Pierce presiding; Rev. J. E. Cobb, secretary, with Revs. J. R. Harvey and G. E. Butler for assistants. The proceedings were exceedingly harmonious and pleasant, and gave promise of increased activity and prosperity in the coming time. The clerical members generally were present in good health and spirits, after the successful labors of the past year, during which many gracious and extensive religious revivals were witnessed by them — upbuilding believers and gathering happy converts. The lay members, also, were, for the most part, at their posts—names we are forced to omit, as we failed to find a list in the documents furnished us.

Harvey L. Watson, Francis M. Monk, John W. Johnson, Bascom Ward, Thomas Q. C. House, John M. G. Douglass, Isaac N. Pace, were admitted on trial. James A. Anderson, Ambrose D. Jenkins, William H. H. Biggs, N. S. Burnett, George Hare, Leonard M. Chandler, William R. Bayless, remain on trial. Reuben W. Massey was admitted into full connection. James Sandford, William J. Scott and Joseph Turrentine, were readmitted. W. C. Hearn, H. B. Frazee, E. R. Barcus, were received by transfer.

The reports of statistics showed the number of church members, 12,248, and local preachers, 117; infants baptized, 559; adults baptized, 772; Sunday schools, 176; teachers, 758; scholars, 5,793. The amount needed to meet the claims of superannuates and widows and orphans of preachers was $2,850—collected and disbursed to claimants, $1,776 66. The collections for foreign missions, $335 50; domestic missions, $1,920; old debt, $76 75.

The delegates to the General Conference are—Clerical: Andrew Hunter, Horace Jewell, A. R. Winfield. Reserves: R. S. Hunter, M. H. Wells. Lay: W. T. Crouch, J. L. de Yampert, W. W. Leake. Reserves: S. N. Marshall, S. E. Cole.

A public meeting in behalf of the missionary cause was held Saturday night in the Methodist church, under the direction of the Conference Board of Domestic Missions—collection in cash and notes, $736.

MANAGING CHILDREN.

Our children are our mirrors. If we would know ourselves, we have but to study them. They give back the true reflection. Can there be a sadder sight than the one so often seen, of a worn and anxious mother scolding, and shutting up, and whipping, aye, and praying over her bright, wayward child, when, were she but to turn a clear look, unblinded by self-love, inward, she could see that almost, if not all, which causes her so much anxiety and annoyance, and her child so many punishments, is her own fault? But children are not mere reflections. They have inquisitive little minds, and warm little hearts, and if we, through weariness or thoughtlessness, withhold information from the one, or sympathy from the other, they are genuine sufferers. I was once visiting a home, of which a dear little girl was the light. One afternoon she was crying quietly. Her mother's conversation was interspersed with, "Hush, I tell you," "Stop crying," "Do hush," "I'll send you off by yourself," "Hush."

"Mother, what ails the little girl?" I asked at last.

"Nothing at all; she is just a naughty little girl, and I shall have to punish her. I've let her bring all her playthings into the parlor, and isn't she bad to annoy and mortify me so?"

But that little, low, half-suppressed, sobbing cry, and those great round tear-drops, told another story, and I asked:

"Can I talk to her?"

"Certainly, I wish you would."

"Come here, darling," I said, and taking her on my knee and kissing her. "What is the trouble, my little pet?"

"I doesn't means to be bad. I doesn't wants to plague mamma; but Dolly is very sick, and I can get nobody to do nothing for her."

"Bring Dolly to me." Feeling her pulse, "Why she is in a high fever; bring me some paper, and I'll make her some powders; there are three powders, all folded up nicely; now bring me a baby cup and a tiny spoon. I've filled it with air mixture, and you must give her a teaspoonful every time she cries. Now undress her and rub her with a flannel, and then rock her to sleep."

The little girl was happy and singing all the afternoon, occasionally bringing Dolly to me to see how she was, which I enjoyed as much as the child did. At night she kissed me again and again, with "I does love you."

"But the child was crying for nothing." I beg your pardon; the child was crying for love and sympathy, just what you and I cry for, even yet. "But her troubles were only imaginary." So are most of yours and mine, yet we bore all our friends and weary our God with them.

Children not only imitate our faults, suffer by our carelessness, but govern us through our weaknesses. A friend came to visit me, and brought a generous, frank and manly boy of four years old. But he disturbed our whole circle by his constant crying. This habit was not in keeping with the brave, proud, independent character of the child. I therefore felt a curiosity to find the cause. My first discovery was, he never shed a tear.

His mother wished to take a trip, but could not take her boy.

"Leave him with me."

"He'll torment the life out of you."

"I don't think so."

"I will, indeed, be most grateful. You may whip him as often as you please."

"I should not strike a child, except in a most extreme case."

"Then you can do nothing with him."

She was gone. The next morning, after breakfast, Willie asked:

"May I go and play in the yard?"

"It rained last night, and it's too damp now. You may go at ten."

"It isn't damp, scarcely any a bit."

"I think it is. You may go at ten, not before."

"Boo, whoo, whoo"—rest. I kept quietly sewing. "Boo, whoo, whoo," bass. "Boo, whoo, whoo," tenor. I sewed on. "Boo, whoo, whoo," double bass. "Boo, whoo, whoo," falsetto—rest.

"Now may I go?"

"You may go at ten o'clock."

Concert repeated, I silently sewing the while.

"Ain't your head most ready to split?"

"No."

"Mayn't I go out now?"

"Not until ten o'clock."

Concert resumed—rest.

"Ain't you most crazy?"

"No, not at all."

Concert resumed, with the additions of throwing himself on the floor, and knocking his feet up and down. After a while:

"Ain't you most crazy yet? Why don't you shake me, and call me the baddest boy ever was, and send me out doors?"

"Because you are not going out until ten o'clock."

Concert resumed, with the addition of bumping his head, as well as toes—rest; a pause. Then picking himself up, he stood erect before me, with his hands in his pockets.

"Why don't you whip me, and send me off, to get rid of my noise?"

"Because you are not going out until ten o'clock."

He stood a moment.

"If I bump my head, ain't you afraid it will kill me?"

"Not in the least."

"But it does hurt me awfully."

"I am happy to hear it."

He drew a long breath.

"What can I do next? I'se done all I knows how."

"See if you cannot think of something else."

"May I take my blocks?"

"Certainly."

At nine he started up: "Now may I go?"

"That's nine."

He went back to his blocks without a murmur. At ten he went out.

He had been used to kneel by his mother, say his prayers, and hop into bed. I wished him to kneel with me by the bed, and say his prayers slowly, and then I would make a short prayer for him. The arrangement did not please him, so the third night he gave battle. Being tired, my head did feel as if it couldn't or rather wouldn't bear it. Out of all patience, I determined to give him a good whipping. But never having struck a child, I was not quite hardened enough to take my slipper, and couldn't see anything else. As I looked around, a voice—my God—speaking through my conscience, asked; "What! whip, in anger, a little boy, because he cannot govern his spirit, when you cannot govern your own! Another than the boy needs to be prayed for."

And kneeling, I asked my Father to give me his strength, his grand patience with a disobedient, self-willed child. As I kneeled, Willie crawled under my arm, and commenced to say his prayers very slowly, and kept still while I prayed a few words, and then asked:

"Now, mayn't I pray my own self?"

"Yes, darling."

And these were his words: "I'se a real mean little boy. She won't do nothing ugly a bit, and knows I'se made her head most split. Oh, God, don't let me be a mean little boy any more at all."

The splendid little fellow had had a fair trial of strength, and was conquered, and surrendered manfully; and I had no further trouble or annoyance during the seven weeks he stayed with me.

But how nearly I had lost my vantage ground? If we would rule our own spirits, how easy it would be to rule our children and our servants. But, oh, to govern self!—Congregationalist.

THE CAMELEON DIAMOND.

Of late there have been rumors of some very remarkable discoveries of peculiar parti-colored diamonds in Australia, and certain districts of the far interior of our own continent. A few of these jewels are represented as having all the hues of the rainbow, changing, commingling and alternating like the flitting tints on the back of the cameleon.

We are reminded by these discoveries of some interesting facts on the subject of "cameleon diamonds," as they may be called, reported by M. Fignier in his note books for 1866. In that year there was exhibited to the French Academy of Sciences a very singular diamond weighing about four grammes, or twenty carats. It was marked by a most unusual phenomenon. Its general hue was white, slightly tinged with brown, and was ranked as a stone of the first second water. When submitted to the action of heat it assumed a roseate hue. This it would retain for eight or ten days, and then resume its original color. The particular diamond shown to the Academy had been thus tested several times, and hence it would appear that the same experiment might be repeated indefinitely.

Other diamonds of analagous color were similarly treated, but without the same result.

Were the rose-color produced by the action of fire permanent, and were it possible to produce it at will, the process would afford an easy means of increasing the value of jewels of the second water in a high degree. The particular diamond to which we have referred was estimated to be worth 60,000 francs, and could it durably retain the rosy hue imparted to it, this value would be tripled.

Ordinary colored diamonds, it is true, are less esteemed in general than colorless and limpid stones; but that is owing to the deficient sharpness and clearness of their lines. There are diamonds that reflect all the shades of yellow, green, red and blue; diamonds of topaz, yellow, of deep green, of brick red, of pale blue, then brown, darkly clouded and entirely black diamonds; but all of these are more or less opaque, and thus are deficient in beauty and value, since their opacity prevents the play of those reflections that come from the interior mass, and are called the fires of the diamond. However, when the color is clear and pellucid, without any detriment to the transparency of the stone, it augments its value.

One of the most celebrated colored diamonds is the Hope blue diamond, which weighs forty-four carats nine grammes. It unites with the most beautiful shade of sapphire the most brilliant adamantine sheen, and the most varied prismatic hues, and Mr. Hope himself calls it superlatively lovely.

In his excellent "Treatise on Precious Stones" Mr. Barbot hints the suspicion that the last named is but a fragment of the famous Blue Diamond of France, that once weighed sixty-seven carats, was worth 3,000,000 francs, and was stolen in 1792, with other crown jewels. Mr. Hope acquired the one he has for 450,000 francs.

The Saxon Treasury at Dresden has an emerald-green diamond weighing thirty-one carats. The Marquis of Dree has a beautiful rose-colored one of great size and value. The Prince of Riccia had one of an exquisite rosy hue, weighing fifteen carats. The reader has heard that in Europe a diamond weighing over ten carats, or two grammes, is called princely, and is deemed worth fully 20,000 francs. Prices change and fluctuate to some extent, but we name the general average in round figures. A Mr. Bapst, in Paris, had a remarkable jewel called The Dwarf Diamond. It is of the color of tobacco juice, and is valued chiefly for its oddity. It was purchased by Louis the Eighteenth, for the crown, at the price of 25,000 francs, but it was never delivered. It was cut very thin, and its superficial brilliancy was very striking. It was said to have formed part of the Dogni collection.

There are many other very handsome colored diamonds known, and a few of them are in this country, but we have named the most celebrated.

We might, says M. Fignier, add to this list the Great Mogul, one of the bulkiest cut diamonds ever seen, since it weighed two hundred and eighty carats. It was valued at 12,000,000 francs.

The change of hue in the cameleon diamond mentioned at the beginning of these paragraphs is not, by any means, an unparalleled phenomenon. The Messrs. Halphen, the expert Parisian lapidaries who owned it, themselves speak of having seen another diamond which became rose-colored when rubbed, but almost immediately lost that hue again. A yellowish tint also may be imparted to the diamond, but it does not last for any time.

The conclusion to which these singular facts directly lead is that in the atelier of the lapidary there are wonders yet to be wrought out by heat, electricity, friction and chemical combinations, as remarkably varied and captivating to the fancy as any in all the other realms of practical science.

Sometimes the quiet death of a very bad man proceeds from stupidity and want of a just sense of the danger of his condition, and this from want of discipline and instruction in the nature and principles of religion. This tempor looks like courage, because it is fearless of danger; but this fearlessness is founded in great ignorance and want of apprehension; whereas a true courage discerns the danger, and yet thinks it fit and reasonable to venture upon it. Now this stupidity of dying men, who have lived very ill, is commonly the case of such as have been brought up in great ignorance, and have lived in great sensuality, by which means their spirits are immersed and even stilled in carnality and sense; and no wonder if they who live like beasts die in the same manner.—Archbishop Tillotson.

THOUGHTS ON DEEP CULTURE.

Perhaps there is not a proposition connected with the whole science of agriculture more fallacious, or a practice more hurtful in its effects, than that of deep culture. To contend for deep culture is to ignore the very first principles of vegetable life. Roots are the feeders of the plant, through which it receives those chemical elements of the soil necessary for its growth and development. Nature supplies these feeders, just as she furnishes arteries and veins to the animal organism, and precisely for the same purpose. Not a root is ever put forth by a plant that is not necessary for the growth and maturation of that plant, and required during its existence.—Nature does no superfluous work. The roots of the forest oak, that lives for an age, continue during all this time to grow and ramify—permeating the soil, wide and deep, in every direction. The same fact holds in regard to minor plants, such as our annuals, that mature in one season. The little fibrils that spring out as the seed vegetates continue to grow through the season, enlarging and extending themselves to the utmost depth of the pulverized soil. They ramify and spread themselves in every possible direction, and completely occupy the soil. Cut these tender fibrils and you destroy what are destined to be the main supporting roots of the plant during the season of fruiting. You stun the plant—inflicting an injury from which it does not recover during its season.

Time is an important element with our annual cultivated crops. The season is short at best, and crops need to be stimulated instead of retarded in their growth. Tearing up the roots of a plant arrests its growth and shortens its season of maturation. Nature sets to work afresh to supply the loss. This reparative process consumes time, and the second growth of roots is much less vigorous than the original.—Consequently the plant does not recover from the injury, and its crop of fruit is proportionally shortened. The argument that nature more than compensates this less by the multiplied number of roots put forth in lieu of the lacerated ones but proves the extent of the injury and the importance of time in its reparation.

What, then, do these facts teach us in reference to the cultivation of field crops? If corn and cotton require roots, why do violence to the laws of nature by constantly tearing them off? Nature is our best guide. Assist, but never frustrate her designs. In this consists the policy of the planter, as well as the true philosophy of life. This principle holds in the vegetable as in animal life. As we dare not sever an artery or vein with the expectation of invigorating the health of the animal, so we must not lacerate the roots of a plant, expecting to promote its growth. In the one case we would debilitate the animal, and in the other cripple the plant. In both we do mischief instead of good.

The lesson taught us in this study of nature's laws, in their application to vegetation, is unmistakably plain. The soil, properly enriched and prepared, should be given to the planted crop. Let it have undisturbed possession during its season of growth and maturation, that its roots may thoroughly permeate and occupy the soil. They are feeding the plant that is to produce the fruit, and ofttimes run out to a considerable distance in search of the richer spots of earth. Let not the cultivator invade this domain to disturb this quiet process of nature. He need only attack the grass and weeds that spring up on the surface. Having once deeply subsoiled and pulverized the land, it will need no more breaking during the season. The roots of the planted crop will readily penetrate its depth, despite the impacting effects of the heaviest rains. To subsoil it again and again is more than folly. No good can possibly result, and a great deal of harm will be the inevitable consequence; for it is nonsense to talk of plowing corn, cotton or any other crop deep without cutting the roots. It cannot be done. The only rational course left the planter who is disposed to observe the dictates of nature, in this regard, is to adopt a system of surface cultivation—merely keeping under the grass and weeds, and letting his crop grow. He can no more make his corn grow by repeatedly cutting off its roots than the surgeon can make a wound heal by constantly leaving it open. Nature in both cases demands non-interference. She alone can make a boll of cotton or heal a wound, and her dictates should be the guide to all who expect success.

There are other facts connected with this subject that should not be overlooked in estimating the comparative advantages of surface and deep culture. These facts resolve themselves into the proposition: That surface culture husbands the moisture of the soil, and allows it to be appropriated by the growing crop, while deep culture promotes its evaporation and escape.

Turn up the soil with a long straight plow, in a hot summer day, and you expose it both to the action of the sun and wind, which rapidly carry off the moisture by evaporation; whereas, by using the winged sweep, no such exposure is made. The moisture from the rains of winter and spring lies imbedded in the soil, and cannot so readily escape under the conservative operation of surface cultivation. A certain degree of moisture of the soil is indispensably necessary to the growing crop, in dissolving the fertilizing properties of the soil and facilitating their assimilation by the plants. To collect a due supply of water is one of the objects in deep breaking; and to preserve and retain it for the use and benefit of the growing crops is an important desideratum with the cultivator. It behooves him to preserve it carefully. He may need it in the approaching drought. To this end he must use the sweep instead of the shovel—adopt the surface instead of the deep system of cultivation. This is a point of vast importance to the agriculturist, and is the source of more ill success in farming than any other one mistake.

The practice of deep culture is plainly violative of the laws of nature. It is contrary to the principles of reason and common sense, and not sustained by practical experience. It is an error both in theory and practice, and cannot be justified by the liberal construction of any principle in nature.

Let us then, as agriculturists, awake to a proper conception of the magnitude of this error. Let us heed the teachings of nature so long as we are dependent upon her productions. She is our best guide, and when we violate her precepts we may not claim her blessings.—Correspondent of Southern Cultivator.

Family Worship as it Should Be.—A correspondent of the Watchman found this family picture in his vacation wanderings:

After the morning meal is finished all the family gather in a pleasant room, each having a Bible, and with happy, cheerful faces take their seats, the youngest being very near her father that he may watch over her as she reads. To the question from the father: Where are we today? several voices hasten to give the book and chapter, showing that the holy word is being read in course. When all have found the place the father begins and reads slowly and distinctly the first two verses, the mother follows, then each child down to the youngest, who has yet to spell the longer words, and is encouraged when she succeeds and helped if she fails in pronouncing them aright. If any verse of hidden meaning occurs it is explained, simply, clearly. A special promise, precept or command is applied gently, lovingly. Parents and children talk freely (there is the charm) of the words of Jesus. If the chapter be long it is divided; if too short another is read. Then the books are closed, the father begins a familiar tune, usually one of the Sunday school hymns, that the little ones may all join, a hymn that shall have in it something about Jesus. How they sing! with the spirit and the understanding. All kneeling, the father prays, such a simple, earnest prayer—fervent thanks for the mercies of the past night, asking for the needs of each one for that very day—"daily bread," indeed. The trials and temptations of each are remembered, Jesus' aid is asked of them, at work or at play, at home or at school. Personalities are not avoided here. The name of some member of the family is mentioned as special grace is implored in his or her behalf. Nor are others forgotten. The visitors among them feel drawn into closer friendship and love as they hear the supplications for their welfare; while the whole church of God is commended to the care of "him who, watching over Israel, slumbers not nor sleeps." How fervent are the special petitions for any who are sick or in sorrow. Finally, in unison repeating the Lord's prayer, they rise from their knees, feeling that Jesus has been there and prepared them to go forth to the duties of the day with joy and gladness. Such a service has no weariness. It never exceeds an hour; and if a city pastor, with the many calls upon his time and attention, can so conduct his family worship, why may not the merchant and the mechanic?

The Temperance Jug.—Dr. Tyng met an emigrant family going West. On one of the wagons there hung a jug with the bottom knocked out. "What is that?" asked the doctor. "Why that is my Taylor jug," said the man. "And what is a Taylor jug?" asked the doctor again. "I had a son in General Taylor's army in Mexico, and the general always told him to carry his whisky jug with a hole in the bottom, and that's it. It is the best invention I ever met with for hard drinkers."—New York Tribune.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The preachers and lay delegates, on their arrival at Shreveport, will please report themselves at the office of Brother Trippett, in the rear of the Methodist church, where they will be assigned to homes during the Conference.

R. S. TRIPPETT, P. C.

HALF FARE TO CONFERENCE.

The following boats have generously offered to take members of the Louisiana Conference at half rates, to and from the Conference which meets at Shreveport, January 12: Kouns' Red River line, embracing the following boats: Grand Era, Selma, Era No. 9, Era No. 10, Twelfth Era. The Lotus No. 3, Captain D. D. Dannals, and the Fleta. This arrangement embraces all members of the Conference going and returning, from whatever points they may take passage. We presume that other boats will be willing to make similar arrangements, but the above mentioned can be depended upon. Some of them will leave New Orleans and Shreveport at times to meet the convenience of the members of the Conference. For information of preachers at a distance we mention that half fare from this city to Shreveport will be from ten to twelve dollars each way.

SINGING CLASS.

We are informed that Mr. A. B. Chase has been engaged to open a class for instruction in vocal music, at the Felicity street church. The class met for organization on Wednesday night, the fourteenth instant, at seven o'clock. The course of lessons will occupy three months, and will be thorough. This is an excellent opportunity for our young people to receive lessons from a most competent instructor, and we sincerely hope that many will become members of his class. We think that the whole church should awake to this important interest, and that all should give special encouragement to this effort to improve this important part of divine worship.

THE attention of our readers is called to the advertisement of J. W. Blackman, principal of Blackman's Commercial College. It will be seen that the mathematical department has been intrusted to the care of Mr. W. Walker, son of Rev. J. B. Walker, of this city.

Mr. Walker is a gentleman of education, and his position in the institution will contribute to its efficiency and success. We heartily commend this school to the public.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

This venerable body met here (Jackson, Mississippi) on the eighth of December, 1869, in its fifty-fourth session. The Bishop being absent, the Rev. J. B. Jones was called to the chair, and was subsequently elected president. The Conference was then opened by the reading of the fourth chapter of Second Timothy, the singing of the two hundred and seventy-second hymn, and prayer by the president. The Rev. C. G. Andrews was elected secretary, and Revs. J. A. B. Jones and H. J. Harris assistants.

"And are we yet alive?"

A large proportion of the members appear to be present—among them men illustrious for devotion to the church and arduous labors in the cause of Christ. But the greater part of the pioneer heroes of the body have "fallen on sleep." In looking over it one calls up the language of St. John: "I have written unto you young men because ye are strong." With a considerable number of gray heads, yet the general expressiou is that of a company of men in the prime of their manhood, whose ripe experience, intellectual force, moral qualities and spirituality can impress any community to which, by God's providence, they may be sent.

The usual standing committees were appointed.

In answer to the question, "Who are received on trial?" one of the oldest presiding elders answered that for the first time since he had been in office he had no recommendation to present. This scarcity of recruits must tell seriously upou the church. The four years of the war and the four years since, as the lean corn of Pharaoh's dream, threaten to swallow up the harvest of years which have preceded. The prayer of God's people is needed at this point. Has the Lord of the harvest determined to withhold from us laborers?

SECOND DAY.

Bishop McTyeire is in the chair—was detained by a railroad accident. He is in good health. No matter who the president elect of a Conference may be—how experienced a competent—it is a great relief to see the Bishop at Conference. He is much more than a presiding officer. He represents the whole connection, and is the living link between the Annual Conferences, and between ministers and members. He is set up for government, and therefore has an authority and dignity that cannot be represented by another. On this morning, ont of one hundred and ten preachers, sixty-eight were present; and of the thirty-six lay members, fourteen were present.

In entering upon the examination of character, the importance of this usage was well set forth by the Bishop. Many pleasant as well as important things transpired during this important inquiry. The world is fulsome in its praise or excessive in its depreciation of others, but godly men "rejoice in the truth," and that truth is in itself beautiful enough when it concerns the trials, spiritual growth and triumphs of men wholly devoted to God's work. The venerable Thomas Nixon called up before us the first session of this body. The names of that little company were repeated—Samuel Sellers, John Lane, Ashley Howitt, Thomas Owens, Peter James, James Dixon, Elijah Gentry. Their memories were precious as the beginning of a strength that has increased to the eight or ten Annual Conferences now in the Southwest.

The whole of this morning's session has been spent in the consideration of the work and the character of the elders. An improvement in many fields of labor was reported.

THIRD DAY.

The morning has been taken up in listening to statements from the presiding elders and preachers in charge, in regard to the year's work and its present state. The reports were encouraging. Churches are being rebuilt in place of those which had been destroyed during the war, and in some instances parsonages; the country is filling up with people again; schools, levees and the affairs of peace are being restored. The new state of things is regarded by these thoughtful, practical men as more hopeful than the old. Much time may be required to fully realize it, but the result is looked to with confidence. Some complaints of not going to an appointment were made. After due consideration of the difficulties, financial and other, which have presented themselves the past four years in the way of straight-out itinerantcy, the parties were excused; but it was understood that as money is now flowing back into its old channels, such delinquents would hereafter be held to a rigid reckoning. Neglect in taking up the widows' and orphans' collection, and that for the Bishops' support, was reported "not once or twice." This occurs to us as a very serious omission. In some instances these collections were merged in the usual one for the expenses of the circuit, and as the last fell short the two others fell through. They perished after the way the Chinese have of taking hold of hands and walking abreast into the sea. It is suicidal to tie collections together. As a special grace is required for each kind of collection, the same person may be quite ready to answer to one sort and quite deaf to another. Though a godly man should be ready for every good word and work, it is notorious that many persons are only capable of giving once a year, and that to one thing.

A brother was complained of for rebaptizing one who was dissatisfied with her baptism, because at the time of her first baptism she was not converted. The Conference passed his character, but immediately introduced a resolution requesting the General Conference to frame a law expressly declarative of the doctrine of the church upon the subject. Pending this there was a good deal of discussion as to original church usage and the importance of the principles involved in it, when, by motion, the question was laid upon the table subject to call. There would be as much propriety in regarding the decision of a candidate for initiation into any benevolent order or society as to what should be the method of such admission to its benefits. The minister representing, upon the one side, the church of God, and the candidate, on the other, himself, are the two parties about to enter into mutual covenant by a solemn overt act. Shall the church or the candidate determine the way in which this covenant is to be ratified? And how often shall this solemn act be repeated which is performed in the name of the Holy Trinity? If the minister is satisfied with the method of the ratification the candidate ought to be, for it is the covenant that the candidate is after and its benefits, not the baptism. Whatever, therefore, satisfies the high contracting Party secures that object. Let the man who represents the church of Christ, the minister, say what is baptism, and not ask the probationer what he thinks it should be, or how often it should be applied.

Afternoon session.—As Sabbath draws nigh the Conference room is filling up with members, clerical and lay. Examination of character proceeds.

FOURTH DAY—SATURDAY.

During the morning the Conference proceeded in the usual minute business. The name of one of the preachers called up the condition of the colored people among whom he had labored; upon which the Bishop took occasion to urge the greatness of this work upon the Conference; that the previous labors of our church in this field were not to be wasted, but carefully looked after; that but for the missions of the Church South among them the South would have been an Hayti or St. Domingo during the war. Other churches had developed no new powers or preachers among the colored people of the South; that they were returning with confidence to their old friends, and that this field was ripe for the harvest. The preachers in charge of that work gave some cheering accounts of their successes. On one district some four or five hundred members had been added to the church. It was emphatically stated that wherever men of energy had been at work there had been uniformly encouraging results.

At night the missionary meeting was held. The report of the treasurer was meager—only some $1,564 10. The Bishop delivered an excellent speech on the whole subject; when, after some other exhortation, the collection was taken up, and amounted to about $450.

SABBATH.

The morning of this feast-day opened with a sunrise prayer meeting, conducted by Rev. J. M. Pugh. After the breakfast hour the Sabbath schools were addressed by the Revs. W. E. M. Linfield and C. G. Andrews. At the eleven o'clock service the Bishop preached a sermon upon the Call to the Christian Ministry—a subject involved and not easily denued. Its treatment was comprehensive, exact and profoundly satisfactory. Every hearer was instructed and warmed. After the sermon the following persons were ordained deacons—Traveling: E. W. Simmons, C. B. Galloway; local: Irvin Miller, Joseph Graves, John J. Larenby, Joseph Hardgroves.

In the afternoon a sermon was preached by Rev. J. G. Jones on the subject of Faith in Christ the one Condition of Salvation. After the sermon the following persons were ordained elders—Traveling: Andrew B. Stewart, James K. Hamblen; local: William T. Ashford, Jacob H. Holland, William H. Mullins.

We could be but at the one place—the Methodist Church but heard a good report from the several churches, Presbyterian and Baptist, white and colored, whose pulpits were filled by members of the Conference. The weather was delightful. At night, in the Methodist church, after preaching, the sacrament of the Lord's supper was administered. The house was filled with the Saviour's friends, and HIS presence was not wanting.

MONDAY MORNING.

The Rev. Charles F. Gillespie, fraternal messenger from the Mississippi Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, was introduced to the Conference. The following ministers were addressed by the Bishop, asked the disciplinary questions, and were received into full connection: Levy P. Meador, E. W. Simmons, Alexander W. Campbell.

The important matter of electing delegates to the General Conference came up this morning. There were present seventy ministers and twenty-one laymen. These two classes voted separately, and each class elected five members to the General Conference, to wit:

Ministers: H. H. Montgomery, W. H. Watkins, C. K. Marshall, W. P. Barton, R. Abbey. Reserves: H. F. Johnson, C. G. Andrews, J. G. Jones.

Lay delegates: Thomas Reed, O. J. Moore, M. L. McGuire, Stephen Johnson, J. E. Watts. Alternates: E. G. Cook, R. D. Howe, T. L. Nugent, L. K. Barbour, J. C. Kittrell.

Afternoon session.—The Conference was addressed by the Rev. Charles F. Gillespie, of the Methodist Protestant Church. He presented the fraternal greeting of his Conference. The body he represented was ready for union between the two churches. We were already one in faith, in purpose, and he trusted soon would be one in action.

The Conference appointed the Revs. H. F. Johnson and W. Harrington as messengers to the next meeting of the Mississippi Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, and the Rev. R. J. Jones, jr., as alternate.

TUESDAY MORNING.

The important affairs of the ADVOCATE came in review. The Conference passed a resolution highly complimentary and encouraging to those of us who are at work in the office. The prospects for a highly successful year are flattering. The preachers promise to rally with fresh zeal to its support and circulation.

Next came up the report on education. The various institutions of the Conference were shown to be in a hopeful condition. A special resolution was offered in support of Centenary College. It was determined by the several preachers to afford every facility which may be asked for the collection of funds necessary to repair the buildings and to put that institution in complete working order.

We here insert the names of those who have been received on trial: David A. Givens, James W. Weems, Simon Carley, Jacob H. Holland, William K. Simmons, George W. Chatfield.

The report upon the Sabbath school cause was well supported by remarks from Brothers Howe and McGuire, lay members. It was suggested that there should be a simultaneous Sunday school reunion throughout the bounds of the Conference.

The Joint Board of Finance reported forty-nine per cent. as the dividend for the Conference claimants.

Afternoon session.—The report on temperance was read, and concluded with the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the rule of our Discipline in reference to the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage should be properly but firmly enforced.

Resolved, That all such social temperance organizations as the Sons of Temperance, Social Circle and the Friends of Temperance, are entitled to and shall receive our warmest support, and that, as ministers and laymen, we will use our best endeavors to banish from the social circle and the festive board all use, as a beverage, of every sort of intoxicating liquors.

The Rev. Dr. Marshall supported this report in a speech of remarkable brilliancy and point. "We ought," said he, "to take high, very high, ground on this subject. The graveyards are full of men who, but for their love of strong drink, might have carved their names upon the scroll of fame, and among them are hundreds of ministers. Nine-tenths of the young men of the land are turning their hearts to the bottle rather than to the cross. The thing is growing to an extent that is absolutely shocking. I have been told of preachers who required a strong glass to enable them to get through with a sermon. We must go to work on this subject and take a firm stand as Methodist preachers. Our church is of itself a sufficient organization, but if there is any society that a man might go into, it is a temperance society."

The report of the committee, appointed at the last session to inquire into the propriety of dividing the Mississippi Conference, was read. It recommended that it was advisable and desirable to divide, and that the line of division be the Vicksburg and Meridian Railroad; giving Vicksburg to the northern portion and Jackson to the southern.

After some discussion this report was laid upon the table by a vote of forty-four to twenty-seven.

The place for holding the next Conference was determined to be Crystal Springs.

At this stage of the session we were compelled to leave, in order to reach Selma in good time for the Mobile Conference. The rest of the proceedings and the appointments will be forwarded by another. During the Conference we have been delightfully entertained by Mrs. C. S. Tarpley, and in company with several brethren beloved we have spent a week under a roof which has ever been famous for its hospitality to Methodist preachers.

SEVENTH DAY.

(FURNISHED BY REV. MR. DRAKE.)

The characters of the superannuated preachers were taken up, and the names of the following brethren were passed after affectionate mention from members of the Conference: J. J. E. Byrd, Thomas Clinton, G. T. Vickers, J. G. Diskin, J. B. Higginbotham. H. Copeland, L. Pearce and W. R. Rainey were granted the superannuated relation. Rev. A. Day was passed and took an effective relation. J. W. McNeil and W. G. Millsaps were granted the supernumerary relation. J. W. Jones, R. Norsworthy, R. T. Hennington and R. A. New were located.

A resolution was offered by C. K. Marshall to appoint a committee of five ministers and five laymen to investigate the subject of forming a society for the education of orphans throughout the Conference, which was adopted and a committee was appointed accordingly.

A resolution, that every preacher should take up a collection in his circuit to defray the expenses of delegates to the General Conference, was offered and adopted.

The treasurer of the Missionary Society was instructed to forward to J. W. Lambuth the $100 raised to assist in buying property for the orphans' school, and one-half the other collections and subscriptions taken up at the missionary meeting last Saturday night.

W. Harrington was appointed trustee of the Van Houton fund, to fill the vacancy of Brother Lusk, located.

A resolution from Woodville District Conference, memorializing the General Conference to incorporate district meetings in the Discipline, was offered by J. A. Godfrey and adopted.

A resolution, from the same body, requesting the Bishops to hold our Conference sessions in February, was tabled.

A resolution from the Brookhaven District Meeting, requesting the Conference to instruct the presiding elders to be more strict hereafter in seeing that the undergraduates attend diligently to their course of study, was presented by G. F. Thomson, and adopted.

Brother J. Nicholson moved the resolution bearing on the subject of rebaptism be taken from the table. Motion lost.

The Conference ordered that instead of a Conference sermon next year, C. K. Marshall should deliver a lecture on the life of John Wesley.

A resolution was adopted requesting Dr. J. C. Keener to publish in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE the sermon which he preached last Sunday evening.

Votes of thanks were then passed to the people of Jackson, and to the railroads which had favored the members of the body in traveling, to Captain Leathers, and also to the Masons for the use of their lodge.

A resolution relating to the payment of the debt on Whitworth College was adopted, and B. Jones was reappointed agent.

Missionary appropriations were then read, and the Board of Finance was appointed as follows: Clerical, W. E. M. Linfield, H. F. Johnson, C. Chamberlin, H. Brown, E. H. Mounger, W. B. Lewis, W. W. Hurst, G. D. Wade, R. A. Davis, F. M. Williams; lay, J. E. Jagers, H. Foote, F. M. Applewhite, O. J. Moore, Captain Stevens, J. McVea, W. L. Nugent, R. W. Millsaps, S. Johnson, A. G. Mayers.

After a sound talk to the preachers the Bishop read the appointments, and adjourned the Conference with the doxology and benediction.

A SERIOUS LEAK.

The British Wesleyans, according to the estimate of the London Watchman, lose by removal from one circuit to another as many as thirteen thousand members annually. The Watchman says:

We do not dwell upon the number of new members required every year to fill up the place of those who are taken away by death and those who take themselves away by backsliding; probably not fewer than fifteen thousand are required every year to make good the loss arising from these two causes; but after filling up, name for name, every blank made by death and declension, the remaining new members ought to count as increase. But instead of this, out of the eighteen thousand new members thus remaining, we have to take thirteen thousand and use them to fill up the place of thirteen thousand old members who have lost their way and are lost to Methodism in removing from one circuit to another. This is as the case stands: after supplying losses which are inevitable, we have a surplus of eighteen thousand new members; we report, on an average, about five thousand increase, and for an explanation of this anomaly we are referred to losses by removals.

The Christian Advocate of New York, commenting on this extract from the Watchman, estimates the loss of the Methodist Episcopal Church from this source as sixty thousand annually. The Advocate says:

In the Methodist Episcopal Church no statistics indicating the number of removals or the number received from other charges are reported. Hence we are without the data for determining our losses in this direction. If they are as large in this country in proportion to the membership as in Great Britain (and we believe the proportion here is rather larger than smaller,) then our net annual losses arising from removals reaches the total of forty-two thousand. There are in our church about twelve thousand pastoral charges. Now, if we place the average net loss by removals at five for each charge, we have the large total loss from that source of sixty thousand. This estimate is probably not too great. The average number of deaths in the membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church is about twelve thousand.

The loss of our own church from this cause is doubtless as great in proportion to membership as those of the British Wesleyans or of the Northern Methodists, and amounting to as many as twenty thousand a year. This is a leak that ought to be attended to, and that ought to be studied well by our pastors. What becomes of these thousands of precious souls who fall away from our church by removing from one pastoral charge to another? Some make it the occasion and opportunity of uniting with other denominations. Various influences prevented it while they remained among their earlier associations. But when severed from these and thrown among strangers, who never knew them as Methodists, a change in church relationship is effected without embarrassment. This is the most hopeful disposal of some who make up the total of the estimated loss. Another class, removing without their church letters, after being some time adrift, are received informally without certificates or upon profession of faith as new members. A pretty large number are saved to the church in this way, as we have reason to know by a tolerably extensive experience in the pastorate. But after deducting as many as we reasonably may for those who are received into other churches and for those who ultimately get back into our own, there are still many thousands annually who go back to the world as backsliders and apostates.

A change from one circuit or station to another is to many attended with great danger. Even where the letter has not been forgotten, the newcomer is surrounded by strangers, the welcome is without warmth or there is neglect on the part of pastor and people. The sojourn is perhaps expected to be temporary, and for this reason the letter is not handed in. The neglect may be unintentional at first, but the result is loss of grace, and at length all thought of a religious profession is given up. The already backslidden member may avail himself of the change to sever a connection which has for some time been only nominal in its character. The result of these removals is not merely this large loss of members to our church, but it is a frightful loss of immortal souls! The lost sheep of the house of Israel are very numerous in nearly all of our large cities, and they are scattered over the whole country. The changes and migrations in the South since the war have been great, and our church has sustained heavy losses in this way. About fifteen hundred people a week are passing through New Orleans at this season on their way to Texas from the older Southern States. Many of them are members of the church, but how many of them will be gathered into the fold in their new homes?

A vigilant pastorate can do something toward lessening this evil by remembering these wanderers in their sermons, and by devoting particular attention to them in their pastoral visiting. Preachers should warn their flocks of this particular dangor, insisting that members coming into their bounds shall hand in their letters as speedily as possible, and that those leaving shall take their certificates with them. The disciplinary descriptions of the duties of preachers enumerates this among others: "To warn all from time to time that none are to remove from one circuit or station to another without a note of recommendation from the preacher of the circuit or station in these words: 'A. B., the bearer, has been an acceptable member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in C.;' and to inform them that without such a certificate they will not be received into the church in other places." In the performance of this duty might not our preachers take occasion to warn the people against those dangers which are peculiarly incident to removal from one pastoral charge to another?

BISHOP EARLY.—We find the following in the report of the proceedings of the Virginia Conference. The whole church will unite in these expressions of sincere and prayerful sympathy:

Rev. A. G. Brown announced the receipt of a letter from Bishop Early, stating that he would not be able to realize his hope of being present at this Conference. In view of this fact Mr. Brown offered the following:

WHEREAS, We regret to have heard that the failing health of our venerable father and Bishop Early has prevented his attendance upon this session of our body; therefore,

Resolved, That we assure him of our warmest sympathies in his affliction, and offer the fervent prayer that he may be abundantly sustained and comforted by the glorious gospel which he has so long and ably preached to others, and which finds so beautiful an illustration in his laborious and successful life.

The Bishop expressed his regret at learning that Bishop Early would not be present, and proposed that the resolution not only be adopted, but that the Conference join in prayer with Rev. Dr. McFerrin for the absent father.

The resolution was adopted by a rising vote, and the Conference was then led in prayer by Dr. McFerrin. St. Louis Christian Advocate.

THE General Conference delegates elected by the North Carolina Conference are—Clerical: N. F. Reid, B. Craven, R. S. Moran, W. H. Bobbett and W. Barringer—reserves: C. F. Deems, L. S. Burkhead and W. Closs. Lay: T. M. Jones, local preacher, W. M. Robbins, S. D. Wallace, J. C. Pinnix and J. W. Leak—reserves: J. C. Slocumb, W. A. Darden, Jr., and T. H. Shelby.

FOOLISH, COWARDLY AND WICKED.

BY MRS. SARAH E. HENSHAW.

FOOLISH.

Never tell lies!
It is unwise
To try to deceive your neighbor;
For without doubt
You'll be found out,
And then you'll have lost your labor.

COWARDLY.

Never tell lies!
Always despise
The meanness and cowardice of lying!
Do not evade,
Don't be afraid,
And the truth never think of denying.

WICKED.

Never tell lies!
God will arise
In judgment against the deceiver!
False lips and tongue,
In old or young,
Will be banished his presence forever.

A NOBLE BOY.

Mrs. Simms was a widow, and poor. But poverty could not crush her, for she felt that the owner of all things was her Father, and he would withhold no real good.

It took more than a needle, and twist, and wax, to degrade her in her own esteem, for she knew that she was fulfilling, as far as in her lay, her calling, as under the eye of her Master, and that a queen could do no more. It was the one desire of her heart to rear up her son to be a good and useful man; and to this end she toiled—"stitch, stitch, stitch"—often far into the night, to buy his books and to keep him at school. In return, Ned did most of the simple domestic work; and for this act of filial love, more than for anything else, he was made a byword. His mother, however, encouraged him to bear nobly all this, saying: "We must either bend or break under our trials, my boy; this may be the very thing to make a man of you—teaching you to control your spirit, and to love those who hate and despise you. You have God's promise to the fatherless, my son, and that is worth more than all their father's riches. Bow yourself before the storm, and it will not harm you."

One day, as Ned was walking to school, three of these boys approached; when one called out, "Hallo, Ned Simms, run up to our stable and tell Patrick to saddle Flash, and bring him to the school house at four o'clock."

"I would oblige you, Sam," he replied, "if I could without being late; but you see there is but seven minutes before the bell rings."

"You miserable, disobliging fellow!" cried Sam Lent; "what if you are late? This master don't whip."

"But he expects us to be faithful," replied Ned.

"Faithful!" shouted Sam, in an angry tone. "Come, go, I want to race round the pond with Bill Hunt here. He says his Clipper will outrun my Flash, and bets his gold pencil on it. Go, and I'll give you sixpence; for I don't want to climb the hill."

"I cannot," said Ned resolutely; and passing on, heard Sam cry: "Why not go for sixpence? That would save your mammy an hour's stitching."

Ned felt his ears and cheeks grow very warm at these words; but he set his teeth closely together to keep the unruly member still lest he might sin against God; and entered the yard, the boys following close upon his heels.

"Good afternoon, Betsey!" cried Bill Hunt; "I caught you last night taking clothes off the lines, didn't I?"

"No," shouted Ned. "You did not catch me; I didn't run. I looked straight in your face as you rode past, to let you see that I was not ashamed to help my mother."

"My lord is brave indeed!" cried Sam Lent. "Are you going to iron the clothes!"

"Yes," cried Ned, turning and facing them, "if mother wishes me to do so. I have ironed clothes, and washed dishes too; and I expect to do both again."

"He gets dismissed sometimes to hang the tea kettle on," said Bill Hunt, winking at his comrades; but the bell now rang, and Sam Lent had only time to say: "I'll pay you for your impudence to me, you beggar boy."

This last was almost too much for the brave boy, but he bore it meekly, and like a Christian. Years rolled on. These boys became men. Ned was blessed and prospered. He was honored and wealthy, and able to provide a comfortable home for his dearly-loved mother in her old age. The time came when Sam Lent and Bill Hunt, who had squandered the property their fathers left them, were glad to receive favors from the man whom in boyhood they had so badly treated. God has honored Ned because he returned good for evil; and he has proved in his experience the truth of that proverb of Solomon: "He that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city;" and he has received the blessing promised to those who honor father and mother.

THE GOLDEN GUINEA.—There was a little boy of seven, or thereabout, who, his mother hoped, had found the religion of Jesus; for whereas he had been willful, disobedient and selfish, he had grown lamb-like in his temper and conduct.

"Mother," said the child one day, standing by her side, "it seems to me I love the Lord Jesus. He shines in my heart so; and I love everybody. Mother, I would give him anything. I would give him my rocking horse."

"Will you give the Lord Jesus your gold guinea, Herman?" she asked. He looked into her face for a moment, and his eye fell. He slowly crept behind her chair, then stole to the open window, then down stairs, without saying a word. She knew he thought much of his beautiful gold guinea. Was he ready to part with his little "all" for his sake? It was a hard question.

Two days passed away, and she was afraid Herman had forgotten it. That evening he came to her and said, with a sweet seriousness:

"Mother, I give my guinea to the Lord Jesus; here it is. What shall be done with it?"

"What should you wish to have done with it?" she asked.

"May it buy Bibles to bring the heathen children to Jesus with?" he said. And, as he slipped it into her hand, a happy smile overspread her face. "Mother," said he, "I am glad I have got a gold guinea to give to Jesus; but I was not ready when you first asked me. I am now."

Herman gave up his all. And was he not happy?

O, yes, very happy; for, child as he was, he has found the kingdom of heaven, which is better than a world full of gold.—The Well Spring.

THE TRUE TEST.—I stopped on my way down stairs last evening to speak to Jennie Barnes, who had just gone to bed in her little cozy room. I bent over to kiss her.

"Jennie," said I, "do you love Jesus?"

"Oh, yes," she answered.

"Are you sure? How do you know?"

"Why, of course I know," said she. "Don't I feel it all over inside?"

"That's good," thought I. "I wish every one had that same consciousness of love; there wouldn't be so many fearful, trembling Christians."

"Do you think that Jesus knows that you love him, Jennie?"

"Why, of course," she answered again. "Don't he look right down into my heart and see it there?"

"Well, Jennie," I continued, "how shall I know it? I can't look into your heart?"

Jennie sprang instantly to her feet.

On the wall at the side of her bed hung a large picture sheet containing twelve scenes in the life of Christ, and a number of short texts, his own dear words, were printed here and there around the gaily-colored border. Putting her tiny finger on one of these, without speaking, she turned around and looked triumphantly up into my face. I put up the gas and read the words, "If ye love me keep my commandments."—Protestant Churchman.

PRAY WITHOUT CEASING.—When you sit down at table, pray; when you take your bread, thank him who has given it to you; when your are satisfied, bless the liberal hand that has provided for your subsistence; whilst you are putting on your garments, elevate your grateful heart with love to him who furnishes you with means to defend yourself against the inclemency of the seasons. At the close of the day, render thanks to this same providence, who has placed the sun in the midst of the firmament to give you light for your diurnal labors, and who has created the stars to dissipate the darkness of the night. When your eyes are raised to heaven to contemplate the beauty of those stars that decorate it, adore the universal Creator, whose wisdom is manifested in all his works; and when night has wrapped all nature in silence and repose, celebrate, by your praises, the divine benevolence which sends us sleep, even in despite of ourselves, to suspend our cares and repair our strength. Pray, then, without ceasing; not in mere words, but in so living united to God, in your affections and thoughts, that your life shall be one long and continued prayer.—St. Basil the Great.

THE officers of the Baptist Bible Union say: "This very week a version of the New Testament for aborigines of our own continent is pressed upon our benevolent attention; but we have not the pecuniary means to put it into type." And yet they have spent hundreds of thousands in getting up an immersionist version, whose translation shall give the lie to the very name of their denomination.—New York Independent.

Scientific.

THE USE OF FLUXES IN THE REDUCTION OF IRON ORES.—The principle upon which the use of all earthy fluxes is based, is that, practically, no earth is fusible alone; argillaceous and silicious earths together are infusible, so with argillaceous and magnesian, so with silicious magnesian; but when calcareous earth, lime or limestone is added to any mixture of the other two, all will combine and run into glass, which will become thin, with the same heat, according to the skill in proportion and treatment.

M. D'Arcet, a French chemist, made this experiment: He put into three crucibles, respectively, a ball of clay, a quartzose, or silicious sandstone ball, and a limestone or chalk ball, and exposed them to heat so great that the chalk ball fused slightly, where it had touched the sides of the crucible. They were unmelted. He then mixed them, and, in the same fire, they ran into a thin and transparent glass.

Kirwan found that argillaceous and magnesian, argillaceous and silicious, and silicious and magnesian earths would not melt in any proportion, but that silicious and calcareous earths, argillaceous and calcareous, by very strong heat, would vitrify, but not perfectly. When the earths are calcareous, argillaceous and magnesian, it requires a double proportion of the calcareous to make a glass. No glass can be made if the clay earth or magnesian predominate. It has been found that the calcareous earth, argillaceous and silicious earths, or calcareous, magnesian and silicious can be brought into perfect fusion, if the calcareous somewhat predominate. With a strong heat, argillaceous, silicious and magnesian earths may form a glass without lime, and this is the only combination he tried that would thus produce glass without lime.

The metallic oxides (iron, of course, included) aided the fusion. Note, that common clay sometimes contains one-half or more of its weight of sand intimately mixed. If clay predominate in the iron ore the flux indicated is limestone, and if the iron be, on the contrary, mixed with limestone, the proper flux is not limestone, but clay.

Herein consists much of the practical knowledge in mixing ores so that they may flux one another, which are with difficulty fluxed alone.

Hence the necessity of a knowledge of the composition of ores to prevent the loss of fuel, of time and of iron, by the iron becoming entangled in the scoria, or in a thick unyielding slag.—Osborn's Metallurgy of Iron.

STEAM ON COMMON ROADS.—In England steam begins to be used on the common roads. A gentleman writes to the Times stating that he has received a visit in the dead of the night from a friend, who with four members of his family arrived in a steam wagonette. The reason for selecting that unearthly time for the visit was the existence of a law forbidding the use of steam carriages on the public thoroughfares except between the hours of ten at night and six in the morning, also limiting them to a speed of two miles an hour, and requiring them to be preceded by a man sixty yards in advance bearing a red flag. The writer suggests that these precautions are unnecessary, and that steam locomotives should be allowed the use of the roads at all hours, with no other precaution than a limitation of speed to twelve miles an hour. On this the Pall Mall Gazette remarks:

"If steam wagonettes are coming into general use, we earnestly hope that there may be some modification of the law referred to, but only for the sake of the visited. We are all delighted to receive morning visits from our friends, but there are cases in which we should be more delighted to be let alone, and we tremble to think what will be the effect of a host of visitors arriving in the early hours of the morning in steam wagonettes at the rate of two miles an hour, preceded by heralds with red flags. Why not transfer these restrictions from steam carriages to wagons, which are the cause of most of our street accidents? It would be an admirable plan to limit the speed of these vehicles and insist on their being preceded by a signal of danger.

THE military department of the Swiss government has given notice that it will pay a premium of 10,000 francs for a fuse which will possess the following qualities—a full-sized model being required. The fuse must be a time and percussion fuse. The adjustment as to time should be manageable entirely by hand; the time of burning should be at least ten seconds, and admit subdivision of one-half and one-fourth seconds, the latter being also the time for the shortest adjustment. The fuse should be so constructed that it can be made ready for firing only by uncovering and time adjustment; the jarring motion of the carriage should not be able to produce accidental ignition; the fuse should be adaptable to the hollow projectiles which are used in the Swiss army. The construction should be sufficiently solid so that no premature discharge in the barrel can take place. The composition of the fulminate should be well enough protected against atmospheric influences, that after a number of years no material variation in the time of burning can be perceived. The method of construction should not be laborious and expensive, and the correctness of the process be easily regulated.

THE NEW SUSPENSION BRIDGE AT NIAGARA IN A STORM.—At Niagara Falls, during the late storm, the waters were higher than they were ever known to be before, and the rapids looked almost like a level sheet. At the new suspension bridge there was for a mile the wildest excitement, and it was supposed the structure would be swept away by the wind. The bridge is a quarter of a mile in length, and besides its immense and well anchored cables it is supported by guys, also well anchored in the rocks on either shore; it is also strengthened by innumerable shrouds which, attached to the cables, support the road bed and keep it steadily in its place. The wind roared through the shrouds, making a noise like thunder. The bridge vibrated, and in the center rose and fell fully two feet, giving to the entire structure a motion similar to that of a snake, shaking it to its very foundations, and snapping one after another of the guys until more than half of them were gone. Every one expected to see the bridge a total wreck, but it stood the storm, and finally the wind suddenly changed, removing all danger. The people of Niagara Falls are very proud of this bridge, and in future will have perfect confidence in its safety.

WOLFE, surgeon for the Royal Infirmary, Scotland, reports curing several cases of cancer by applying caustic arrows, which he inserted in deep, broad punctures into the diseased part. As many as five arrows were used at one time. This acid destroyed the vitality of the morbid growth in three days, when it came away. The wound should be treated by water dressings. The treatment is comparatively painless.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

THE BEST COOKING STOVE FOR WOOD NOW IN USE.

THE FASHION.

We call especial attention to this Stove, which has been produced at great expense, combining all the new and important improvements; also to the extra height of the Oven under the fire chamber, the Patent Air Chamber, Front Doors, and Patent White Enameled Iron Knobs, the improvements in the covers and centre pieces, all of which have been covered by Letters Patent, and are used in no other Stove. They are warranted to stand fire, or others sent free of charge in all cases. We have all sizes of this justly celebrated Stove, both the Extended Rack with cast iron Enameled Reservoir and Faucet, Tin Warming Closet, Gridiron Cover, etc. The part of the top supporting the Reservoir is raised so that the flue is above the top plate, instead of below, as is the case in most of the Stoves now used, and the heat is forced directly against the whole surface of the bottom of the Reservoir. The Reservoir, being detached from the pipe, can be removed at pleasure, thereby forming a six-hole Stove—the best in use, as the back holes will heat as well or better than the middle ones. which can be seen at 62 Camp street. The advantages possessed by this Stove over all the other Coal Cooking Stoves are so numerous, and so patent to every sensible observer, that it is only necessary to examine it in order to be convinced of its superiority.

PLAIN AND EXTENDED RACKS,

All of the above Stoves are fitted with extra care, Oven Doors lined with tin, and furnished with William Resor's Patent Air Chamber, sliding front doors, patent centres, covers and White Enameled Knobs.

The operation of every Stove guaranteed. Directions for putting up and using same accompany each Stove.

THE TIMES.....THE TIMES,

THE IMPROVED

LARGE OVEN COOKING STOVE,

with extended Fire Chamber and Feeder Top—one of the best Baking and most economical Stoves made.

The Flues are constructed so as to insure the most perfect draft. The heat of the Oven is so equal that when baking there is no need for removing anything until done.

THE TIMES

is made of a superior quality of iron, very heavy, of neat design and fine finish. The Top Plate is put together in sections, to permit of the greatest expansion without cracking.

We invite the attention of Housekeepers to the advantages of this Stove. Remember, we guarantee them to give entire satisfaction. Duplicate parts can be had at all times, at small cost, by which repairs can be made which will frequently save the price of a new Stove. ZABLE & DALTON,

STOVES, GRATES AND HOUSE FURNISHING GOODS.

The undersigned would call the attention of city and country buyers of Cooking Stoves to the following list of Stoves manufactured by Mr. M. L. Filley.:

The Philanthropist.

A first class Cooking stove, having all of the latest improvements that have so far been invented. Has a new arrangement for boiling; also an Ash-pan. The casting is heavier than any Stove sold in this market. Sold under a full guarantee in every respect.

The Diamond Rock.

A Stove well known in this market. Thousands of this Stove are in constant use throughout the country, which is a very good recommendation. Sold under a full guarantee.

Besides the above named Stoves, I have on hand the celebrated Cotton Plant, Charter Oak, True Kentuckian, Maid of Orleans, Queen of the South, Delta and others, all of which I offer at a low price.

THE IRISH PRIEST.

It may be once for all understood that the Irish priest is simply the cottier in black gaiters; that in nothing save the thin lacquer of a Maynooth civilization is he different from Thaddy who is earthing the potatoes, or Tim who is stacking the turf; that his thoughts, his instincts, his wants, are theirs; and that, save in the scowling expression of his brow and the dirty black of his raiment, there is not a feature to distinguish him from the peasants around him. I am far from saying that, because he is a man of lowly birth and humble belongings, he should be left houseless, if it be your policy or convenience to endow him with a house; but I do insist upon it that you ought not to confound this man's wants and daily requirements with those of men totally removed from him in station. The "suitable residence" of an Irish priest might very well be a room or two rooms in a farm-house. In nineteen cases out of twenty his earlier years had not accustomed him to even such humble comforts as these; and there would be nothing in the habits and the lives of his neighbors to wound his sensibilities or shock his prejudices. Englishmen who associate the suave and soft-toned ecclesiastic with all the petits soins of a French abbe, or the more dignified but not less subtle monsignore they have met at Rome, with the vulgar exterior, the coarse manners and the ostentatiously avowed insolence of the Irish priest, make a great mistake. But it is the old story, always recurring in our annals. Whenever we make one blunder, we outdo it tenfold by our attempt at reparation. We began by starving the troops in the Crimea, and we ended by sending them potted meats from Fortnum and Mason's, and pates de foie gras from Strasburg. In like manner, from some impression that you have not treated your Irish Catholics very generously or very handsomely, by a tremendous spring in reaction you are going to overwhelm them with benefits. Now, I tell you flatly, your mixed pickles and smoked salmon for your soldiers at Balaclava were not a whit more absurd than your notion of "manses for the priests." A ration of mess beef for the one, and a mud cabin for the other, would have met all the requirements of the situation. Neither Corporal Casey nor the curate had been reared with fastidious tastes, and by subjecting them to this temptation you run a far greater risk of corrupting than of civilizing them. If you insist on building glebe houses for these people, you must nominate a commission to teach them how to live in them. Like Paddy who snuffed the candle with his fingers, and deposited the snuff in the snuffers, observing that it was a mighty pretty "convanancy," these men will live in a corner congenially dirty and disorderly, and regard the house as a 'pretty convanancy," and no more. It took you some time to discover that curry powder and Scotch marmalade were not the most suitable rations for an army in the field; but you found it out at last, especially when you heard that the objects of your solicitude were laughing at you; and I suppose you will one of these days admit that it was a mistake to install a man into a house, all whose ways and habits are accommodated to a cabin; and that you no more brought the priest to your side by your ill judging munificence than you stimulated the soldiers' courage by your piccadilly and potted mangoes.—Blackwood's Magazine.

THE ART OF RECEIVING.—To receive well necessarily requires much art and tact in the lady. When she introduces one person to another she should, of course, instantly engage the introduced persons as rapidly as possible in conversation in which all may join, to avoid embarrassment. She will never talk in an aparte or undertone. She will avoid politics and religion. She will not talk, as the Spaniards say, of the "halter to a person whose father has been hung." If she has visitors of a modest condition she will not talk of fetes and festivities, and expensive habits and fashions of dress, in which they are not able to share. She will try to make the conversation as general as possible; she will not endeavor to retain any person about to depart, but simply say: "Deja!" When visitors have left she will not allow anything unpleasant to be said of them; she will give people to understand that her roof is not a retreat for scandal—that civilized hospitality respects with generosity all who confide themselves to its amenities; and that to be witty or sarcastic at the expense of the absent is both wrong and ill-bred.

MEDICINE—MEDICINE.

BRAN NEW LETTERS!

FRESH TESTIMONIALS!

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

THE ASTONISHING FAMILY MEDICINE.

Saved from Death!—Read!

MONTGOMERY, ALA., June 28, 1869.

MESSRS. J. DARBY & Co., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: Yours of the 23d is before me, and has attention. It gives me pleasure to say that my belief is that your Fluid, under the supervision of a kind Providence, saved the life of my youngest child, some six years ago, the child being wasted to a skeleton by the effects of teething, and an affection of the bowels therewith. I had never seen any one reduced so low to recover.

Physic had been tried in vain, until the physicians stated it was useless. A friend recommended your Fluid, or Ozone, which he stated was one of the component parts of it. I did so, and the effect was like magic, plainly discernible in one hour in its good effects, producing quiet and sleep almost at once, where irritation and sleepless restlessness had previously possessed the child to nearly entire exhaustion.

I at first administered it in a small way, two and three drops in a spoonful of water, and increased it to six and ten drops. It completely checked the bowels, and had the happiest effect, the child rapidly recovering.

I have tried your Fluid on animals, with the same effect—both horses and cows—mingling more or less in water, and letting them drink.

I have no hesitation in saying I believe it a specific for Chronic Diarrhea, or any violent affection of the bowels.

I would not be without it in my family under any consideration. Yours truly,

WILLIAM FOWLER.

Mr. Fowler is a member of the celebrated Banking House of Fowler & Somerville, Montgomery, Alabama.

AND AGAIN:

Read the following letter from Mr. Frank Saunders, a well known citizen, and brother-in-law of the beloved Bishop Paine, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

189 BROADWAY, N. Y., July 29, 1869.

MESSRS. J. DARBY & CO., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: About the 10th of June last one of my children was taken with Scarlet Fever, in its most malignant form, and as soon as I could I procured your valuable disinfectant, Darby's Prophylactic Fluid. Although it was several days after the appearance of the disease before I began using the Fluid, still by a free use of it the disease was not only confined to the one case, but the malignity of that case somewhat mitigated.

During the use of the Fluid as a disinfectant in my family it was also tried in a case of headache and one of toothache, the results in each case being instantaneous relief. It was afterward tried in a case of Erysipelas, with almost equal success.

It is due to the merits of this compound, also, to state that the case of Erysipelas in question, being located in the feet, the Fluid, in its application, was brought in frequent contact with a troublesome corn on one of the feet, to the utter discomfiture of said corn, for upon subsequent examination it had disappeared, and though it was sought for diligently, it could not be found.

I hand you this, hoping it may be the means of inducing others of earth's poor sufferers to test for themselves, as I did, the great merits of this great remedy.

Very respectfully yours,

FRANK SAUNDERS.

J. W. BLACKMAN'S

COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,

61 CAMP STREET,

Corner Commercial Place, N. O.

Open day and evening the entire year.

Penmanship, Book-keeping, Mathematics and Languages are practically taught by experienced professors. Persons from twelve to fifty years of age attend. The instruction is private to each student. Persons who have neglected their education can here speedily qualify themselves for good situations in business. Some from the country may obtain board in the family of the principal.

William Walker, a late graduate of the Southern University of Alabama, and son of the Rev. Dr. J. B. Walker, of New Orleans, has charge of the Mathematical department. TERMS—Ten to twenty per cent. less than other colleges in this city.

A liberal deduction made when three or more enter together. The principal has been a practical teacher in New Orleans since 1851. For circulars, giving terms, etc., address

J. W. BLACKMAN,

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, JACKSON, LA.,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war, but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution in the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge of its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

W. H. WATKINS, President.

TRINITY HIGH SCHOOL, FOR YOUNG MEN AND BOYS,

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have again to notice a moderate degree of animation in several branches of the wholesale trade, without any activity. From others we hear reiterated complaints of continued dullness.

Sugar and molasses have been in brisk demand, and the receipts, which have been liberal, have met a ready sale at stiffening prices. Western produce has shown but little animation. The supplies are moderate and the sales mostly confined to the local trade. Flour, however, is wanted for export, and large sales of wheat could be effected at prices which would leave shippers to Liverpool a reasonable margin.

Our accounts from the interior with regard to the crops are no more encouraging than last week. With very few exceptions there is a general complaint of the inefficiency of the negro laborers, which must result in a serious waste of cotton in the field. Nothing new has transpired with regard to sugar, but it is now apprehended that the yield will not reach 80,000 hogsheads.

The river has risen since our last, and is now ten feet eight inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the tenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi....bales..	17137
Lake	103
Mobile	1063
Florida	27
Texas	415
Total	18745

On Saturday the movement commenced with a fair inquiry, but operations were checked by the stringent pretensions of factors and only a moderate supply. Later in the day parties came together more freely, but prices continued buoyant, and the sales summed up 4,800 bales at figures showing some irregularity, but with the advantage manifestly on the side of the seller. Low middling closed at 23⅝ to 23⅞c. On Monday, although the receipts had been liberal, the supply continued moderate, but with a still more active demand. 5,000 bales changed hands, part at previous rates and part at an improvement of ⅛c; low middling closed at 23¾ to 24c, while the lower grades showed no improvement, good ordinary, in fact, in some cases ruling more in favor of buyers. On Tuesday the market opened with a moderate inquiry and the movement restricted both by a light supply and factors asking a fraction above the views of buyers. Later in the day, however, more samples were opened, and the former met the demand freely at figures indicating a decline of ⅛c in good ordinary and low middling, but only a slight falling off in middling. Low middling sold at 23⅝ to 23¾c and strict at 23¾ to 23⅞c. The sales summed up 5,150 bales.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 15,150 bales, taken for Great Britain, France, Spain and the North.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 345,435 bales, against 357,284 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 183,886 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 101,344 bales to Great Britain, 27,792 to other foreign ports, while to France there is a decrease of 1,235 bales.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	22¼ to 23¼
Good ordinary	23 to 23¾
Low middling	23¾ to 23¾
Middling	24 to 24¼
Strict middling	to 24¼

Special Notices.

The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

This committee has not been called together since the meeting of the General Conference, because in the financial state of the office there was nothing it could do. To be able to support an editor was one of the conditions necessary to the electing one. Then the expenses of such a committee should be borne by the office—another question of finance. These are simply the reasons why this call has not been made yearly. There was really nothing to do, or that could be done by the committee. As the ADVOCATE feels somewhat like standing on its legs, or at least like stretching them in a preparatory way, we give notice that there will be a meeting of the Publishing Committee directly after the patronizing Conferences shall have all adjourned—say on the second Saturday in February next.

or its cost, is not much. The Farmer can easily secure it. A little attention to his poultry will produce one egg a week extra. A hunt of a few minutes will find an extra egg, or his boys will. Give them a hen or two, and they will return an extra egg per week as rent. In the household economy of the Farmer, the Merchant, the Mechanic, the Professional man, or of the Day Laborer even, it will be easy to save one egg a week, or the cost of one. (The average price of eggs throughout the country, including cities and villages, is not far from thirty-six cents per dozen. They now sell much higher in New York. Where the price is lower it will be quite easy to produce or save two eggs a week. One poor cigar left unsmoked, and each of several other little nick-nacks omitted, will amount to the same thing.)

It will buy you neat copies of over five hundred beautiful Engravings, that cost over $12,000—many of them very large, splendid Pictures. All of them are pleasing, and very instructive, as they give exact, plain representations of useful implements for the out-door operations—of plants, trees, fruits, flowers, etc. Other pictures illustrate house-work, home-made ornaments, etc. Others furnish pleasing and profitable instruction to Boys and Girls. This is only part of what one egg a week will buy during a year. In addition to the above, one egg a week will buy, during a year, over One Thousand Columns of choice reading matter—not trash, or running stories, or heavy scientific matter, or long theoretical disquisitions; but genuine, instructive reading, prepared by a large force of thoroughly practical, intelligent persons, who devote their whole time and attention to gathering and condensing useful information. This information costs the publishers over $15,000 a year. In this reading matter you will find very much that will please, amuse and also instruct your children; much that will aid your wife in her household labors and cares, and give you a pleasanter, happier home, without any increase of cost; much useful instruction about cultivating the garden, so that with the same labor and expense you will get many dollars' worth more of vegetables, etc. You will find thousands of seasonable hints, telling just what is to be done from time to time, and when to do it.

will also buy much instruction about the proper kinds of flowers and foliage plants for your yards or lots; the best information about crops, the most valuable varieties, and how to cultivate them most profitably; much about domestic animals and how to treat them, and about the best labor-saving implements. A single hint gave a farmer five bushels more of wheat per acre on ten acres, without increasing the cost of cultivation more than $1 for the whole field. Thousands of others have obtained similar results. You will find many practical hints about buildings, with plans for constructing them. Also, over fifty columns of "Walks and Talks upon the Farm," describing the experience and observations of an intelligent, large farmer. (These alone are worth much more than the whole costs.) You will find many chapters from Timothy Bunker, Esq., full of information, told in a way that it will "stick." You will find plain directions laying out the work for each month in a way that will save much forgetfulness and oversight, and thus make your work more effective. You will find many hundreds of condensed items, giving a great variety of useful information. You will find the exposures of a multitude of humbugs and swindlers, whose tricks and plausible statements deceive the great mass of people, even those quite intelligent. You will find useful hints about prices and prospects of what you have to sell or buy. It is impossible that from all this variety you will not find hints, suggestions or direct information that will in the long run yield you in profits or savings many dollars. You can get all this in a single annual volume of the AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST, a large and very beautiful journal, started twenty-eight years ago mainly as a farm and garden journal, but which has gone on enlarging in size and range of topics until it is now adapted to the wants of every man, woman and child—in city, village or country. The material is gathered from the whole country, and this journal is suited to the wants of the whole country. Its circulation is so large, and the cost of collecting information, producing original engravings, type setting, electrotyping, etc., is divided among so many, that it is furnished to subscribers at about the cost of the printing paper. SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

SOUTHERN METHODIST HIGH SCHOOL,

New Orleans.

The exercises of the first session of this institution will commence on Monday, the 4th day of OCTOBER next, in the basement of the German Methodist Church, Dryades st., between Felicity and Euterpe.

In founding this institution our purpose is to supply the desideratum long felt in this city, viz: an acknowledged Protestant School of a high order, in which boys and young men can be thoroughly prepared either for college or the active business of life.

The government of the School will be strict and firm, yet mild and parental in its administration. Thoroughness in the preparation of lessons will be uniformly required of all pupils.

The sons of ministers engaged wholly in the work of their Church will be received at half price, and young men preparing for the ministry without charge.

A Preparatory Department and an Evening School are attached.

In the selection of Teachers the greatest care will be exercised, not only in regard to their mental qualifications, but also in reference to their ability to impart instruction to their pupils.

For further information apply at the School. D. I. RAST, Principal.

On the 13th of JANUARY, 1870, the Spring Session begins, and closes on the 8th of June following, which is Commencement day.

The next Fall Session opens on the 18th of the succeeding August.

LOCATION.

Unsurpassed in healthfulness, quiet and freedom from temptations to vice.

BUILDINGS.

Thorough repairs have been made of dormitories, lecture rooms and halls, so that our accommodations have never been heretofore so desirable.

FACULTY.

The chairs are all filled with men of tried ability and success as disciplinarians and educators.

TERMS.

One Hundred and Fifteen Dollars, payable in advance, will meet the charges for tuition, board, fuel, room-rent, washing and contingent fee for five months.

REFERENCES.

We ask those seeking a school where thorough collegiate training is given to consult the Faculty of the Virginia University and Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, as well as our alumni, students and patrons.

READVILLE SEMINARY.

This is a private institution, with its number of pupils limited, and is authorized by the Legislature of Louisiana to confer degrees, diplomas and literary honors. It was in successful operation from 1843 until interrupted by the events of the war in 1862, and reopened January, 1867.

Teachers of a high grade of talent and merit are in charge of the different departments—English, Ancient and Modern Languages, Music, Painting, etc.

Pupils charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session. All pupils received with the understanding that they are to remain and attend the examination at the close of the session in which they enter, and no deduction made on the bills for absence, except in cases of protracted illness, when the loss may be divided between the institution and the patron.

In her outfit each pupil should be provided with toilet boxes, towels, napkins, sheets, pillow cases and blankets or comforts. She should also bring her knife, fork, spoon, cup and napkin ring.

All articles and clothing brought to the Seminary should be distinctly marked, lists of which should be permanently placed on some part of the trunk convenient for reference. The scholastic year commences October 1 and ends in July.

EXPENSE.

Board and tuition per year	$275 00
The Modern Languages a small extra charge.
Music, per year	75 00

Payments due a half session in advance.

Monthly reports of the studies, health and general deportment of the pupils are sent to the parents or guardians at a distance.

The main Seminary building, recently destroyed by fire, will be replaced by one of ample accommodations, now in process of construction, which will be ready for the reception of pupils at the opening of the next session.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—The banking bill offered in the House by Pollard is the same introduced by him in March last. It provides for the issue of coupons or registered bonds to the amount of one thousand millions at thirty and fifty years, the former to bear four per cent. interest, the latter four and sixty-five hundredths. The bonds are to be exempt from taxation, and to take the place of the present outstanding bonds. Also provides for reducing the outstanding treasury notes to one hundred millions. All banks are to deposit new bonds in place of the old as security for circulation. Thirty days after, the Treasurer begins to pay in coin all banking associations, and he entitled to receive circulating notes in the manner now provided by law.

An expedition has sailed from New York, consisting of two well armed boats, for the purpose of blowing up the Spanish gunboats with torpedoes. Three hundred determined men are engaged in the adventure.

Fish has reopened negotiations on the Alabama claim and he will proceed on the basis laid down in Sumner's speech. It is thought, however, that the Alabama claims have been thrown away by letting the Spanish gunboats go.—Times.

The Tennessee delegation, with the exception of Senator Fowler and Representative Hawkins, are engaged in preparing a protest against the legality of the Tennessee election, and praying Congress to set the same aside.

A private dispatch from Paris says: "The expatriation of the Jews from Russia had commenced."

The President nominated to-day ex-Secretary Stanton to the vacancy on the Supreme bench, vice Grier, and he was confirmed at an executive session of the Senate by a vote of 46 to 11.

Wells R. Bryce was nominated as surveyor of customs at Selma, Alabama.

The Spanish correspondence published is very voluminous, but there are no new facts gleaned.

The Supreme Court decides (Charles E. Field)—Miller dissenting—that where a State Legislature grants a franchise to a corporative body, and in consideration of the corporation's establishing the enterprise contemplated, it exempts the corporation property from taxation; a contract is created between the corporation and the State which no subsequent Legislature or change of State constitution can impair.

It is stated that General Canby has written a letter adverse to Virginia's admission without stringent restrictions.

The executive session lasted four hours, and was mainly occupied in discussing the President's refusal to send the documents called for by the Judiciary Committee.

It is stated on good authority that the Alabama claims negotiations will be reopened in Washington.

Senate.—A bill was introduced exempting canned fish from duties.

Mr. Trumbull, from the Judiciary Committee, reported a joint resolution declaring that Virginia was entitled to representation in Congress.

A bill was introduced for the adjustment of the French spoliation claims.

House.—A bill distributing the number and rank of government employes among the several States and Territories passed.

The Georgia bill was taken up. The vote will be taken at three o'clock to-morrow.

There were several amendments proposed, all of which Butler, who championed the bill, opposed, on the ground that while the bill was not in all respects satisfactory, the amendments would cause a delay. Bingham will oppose the bill. There will be a night session for debate only.

Butler stated the committee had postponed the Virginia bill, because it had not yet sufficient evidence. Farnsworth moved to suspend the rules, and pass a resolution that Virginia was entitled to representation. The House refused to suspend the rules by a vote of 63 to 106.

The Speaker decides that the Georgia bill is open to amendments, and that a motion to postpone will be entertained.

Beck's amendment requires that the day for the reassembling of the Legislature shall not be less than thirty nor more than sixty after the Governor's proclamation had been issued ordering an election to fill the vacancies, and inserting the word "voluntary" in lieu of "direct physical force," and in the oath, the person taking it to declare he had not been engaged in the rebellion.

Wittemore introduced a bill calling upon the Virginia Legislature to impose the test oath, and give seats to those having the next highest vote, where the majority candidates were ineligible.

At the regular call of States the Georgia bill will be put on the Speaker's table, and an attempt will be made to pass it without reference to the Committee on Reconstruction. The committee heard Bullock and Tift on Georgia reconstruction. The discussion was mostly personal and somewhat bitter.

MEMPHIS, Dec. 19.—The Appeal's San Francisco special to-night says General Walker and Major Rhea leave to-morrow with three hundred Chinese laborers, destined for the Southern States. They are the first lot sent under contract, and will be distributed through the South. Major Rhea will be at the St. Charles Hotel January 10.—Times.

MEMPHIS, Dec. 20.—On last Tuesday Samuel Whittey, of Henderson county, while in a fit of insanity, threw two of his children down a well, and jumped after them. The children were drowned, and Whittey fatally injured.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—A number of Republicans spoke against the Georgia bill last night, and Bingham speaks against it to-day.

Senate.—Warner introduced a bill to provide for more equally distributing the currency.

Committee doing nothing.

House.—Voorhies is arguing in opposition to the Georgia bill. Dawes, of Massachusetts, asked questions which indicated his intention to vote for it.

NEW YORK, Dec. 21.—The steamship Bienville, from New Orleans for this port, met the Spanish gunboats at sea. They were sailing finely.

The scheme to blow up the Spanish war steamer Pizarro was frustrated by Saturday night's storm.

WASHINGTON, December 21.—The speeches of the Democrats in the House on the Georgia bill took the ground that Congress had no right to constitute itself an appellate court to pass upon the acts of the State Legislatures.

Bingham, of Ohio, announced to the House that the President never intended that test oaths should be imposed on the people of Georgia.

A letter from General Canby is now before the Reconstruction Committee of the bitterest character. It denounces the masses of the people in unmeasured terms, and charges them with hostility to the Union and government. It is believed the letter will be made a plea for keeping Virginia out, and but for the compromising action of the Legislature in adopting the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments it would result in ordering a new election, with the application of the iron-clad and other test oaths to State and Federal officers.

The plot against Tennessee is working. It is probable that she will have to undergo further reconstruction.—Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—The correspondence in relation to the Alabama claims sent to the Senate is very voluminous. Clarendon's letter to Thornton, November 6, 1869, instructs him to say to Fish that after the unexpected rejection of the Johnson treaty, the British government could not be expected to make further propositions. It was disposed, however, to discuss the matter, and come to any arrangement that could be made consistently with the honor of both countries, and indicated a willingness to enter into a convention for the purpose of bringing about a modification of the rules governing the policy of nations in similar cases, to be binding hereafter on all nations who participate in the conventions.

Sumner's Virginia bill was introduced to-day. It is more oppressive and proscriptive than the Georgia bill. It provides for upsetting all that has been done and applying the test oath to the members of the Legislature, and the readoption of the fifteenth amendment before admission, with conditions that the State Constitution shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive citizens, or any class of citizens, of the right to vote, hold office, sit on juries, or equal participation in school privileges.—Times.

Hoar's nomination was laid on the table, which is equivalent to its rejection.

At the last moment the objections to Wood's confirmation were withdrawn, and he was confirmed.

The Georgia bill was signed by the President.

The Alabama claims correspondence has been published in England, and that government consents to the transfer of negotiations to Washington. Secretary Fish's concludes as follows: "At the present stage of the controversy, the sole object of the President is to state the position, and maintain the attitude of the United States in the various relations and aspects of this grave controversy with Great Britain."

The Senate has confirmed all the nominations for the circuit judges, but those of Messrs. Woods, Pearce and Sawyer, and that of Eckerman, United States district attorney for Georgia; Jennings, internal revenue assessor for the fourth Georgia district; White, internal revenue assessor for the fourth Virginia district; Shelby, postmaster at Rome, Georgia; Henderlight, collector eighth Virginia, and Beverley B. Botts, collector sixth Virginia district.

Senate.—The Senate is discussing the bill regulating Chinese immigration. There is a wide diversity of opinion expressed respecting it.—Howard, Pomeroy and Conkling oppose many of the restrictions of the bill.

The committees did nothing to-day.

A bill was introduced to repeal so much of the statutes as prohibits the State of Georgia from organizing a militia force.

The Committee on Military Affairs were instructed to consider the propriety of increasing the number of lieutenant generals to three and decreasing the major generals to three.

Williams explained that the object of the bill regulating immigration was to break up the business of Koopmanchap and other coolie contractors.

Without action, after a short executive session, the Senate adjourned to January 10.

House.—Dawes held that it was equally in Wisconsin and Massachusetts, as in Georgia, the duty of Congress to maintain a Republican government, and Congress was the judge of the facts and of the occasion.

Without business the House adjourned to the tenth of January.

RICHMOND, VA., Dec. 22.—Over four hundred colored men have left this vicinity within the last week to go to work in Louisiana and Mississippi. It is estimated that four hundred have left this State within the last month for the South.

FORTRESS MONROE, Dec. 22.—The Spanish gunboats reached the capes and anchored in Lynn Haven Bay.

FOREIGN.

ROME, Dec. 20.—Cardinal Mathieu takes a message from the Pope to Napoleon.

A committee of bishops have been instructed to draft a plan for checking the growth of infidelity, in accordance with the papal allocution.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—It is reported that Franco is urging the great powers to disarm, and offers to set the example; but the Berlin journals discredit the report.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—A number of the Spanish Republicans have been banished for intermeddling with the French revolutionists.

Rochefort said in the Corps Legislatif, "You have only one fear—it is the Republic—she is near at hand [illegible] avenge the wrongs of Frenchmen and Spaniards."

Forcade, replying, threatened that the moment the Republicans exchanged speech for action, the government would reduce them to impotence.

REV. THOMAS ALLEN, who was the first minister of the church in Pittsfield, Massachusetts, settled in 1764, was at the battle of Bennington, and carried a musket. Once, when asked whether he actually killed any man at Bennington, he replied that he did not know; but, observing a flash, often repeated from a certain bush, and that it was generally followed by the fall of Stark's men, he fired that way and put the flash out.

THERE is not a grace that can adore the Christian character, but you will have need to appear in at some time or other; therefore seek the whole, that you may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God.

THE man who can make his own fire, black his own boots, carry his own wood, hoe his own garden, pay his own debts, lives without wine and tobacco, need ask no favor of him who rides in a coach and four.

THE CHRISTMAS OF HEARTH AND HOME.

BY GRACE GREENWOOD.

Within a temple vast and grand,
St. Peter's mighty shrine, at Rome,
This day is kept with solemn pomp,
Beneath a mimic heaven—its dome.

There great lights on the altar flame,
There incense floats in fragrant clouds,
While joyful silver trumpets peal
High o'er the heads of kneeling crowds.

While bows the Pontiff, stoled and crowned,
And kings praise God in this great way—
While England's grand cathedral bells
Ring in the blessed Christmas day;

How shall we, neither priests nor kings,
Rejoice in Christian faith with them?
How shall our new-world hearts receive
The mystery of Bethlehem?

Ah! not with pomp and splendid rites
Keep we the birthday of the Lord—
Not with the organ's mighty joy,
Or chimes that peal in sweet accord;

But hearth-fires, pure as altar-lights,
Shine forth on scenes of sinless mirth:
In many a home a service glad
Commemorates the Saviour's birth.

The service of o'erflowing hearts,
In giving and forgiving, blest—
The holy Mass of childhood's joy,
Unconscious praise, He loveth best.

If far and dim the picture seems,
The manger, and sweet Mary's face,
The wondrous babe—the wise men brought,
Star-marshalled, to that humble place.

Yet simple household loves and griefs
And deeds of cheerful sacrifice
May bring it near—bring back the Christ,
Till Palestine around us lies.

The mother of a new-born babe,
Who thanks and loving worship gives,
With smiles, and tears, and murmured prayers,
For her the blessed Mary lives.

The little one whose sunny head
Long on its pillow tossed in pain
Lies still at last—ah! very still!
For him the Christ-child comes again.

All gracious souls who on this day
Do help and comforting afford
To God's poor children, in their need,
Bring birthday offerings to the Lord.

Though worship wanes—though we should lack
The forms and creeds of other days,
Dear Lord, accept our love as faith,
Accept our Christmas joy as praise.

THE BOY TO SUCCEED.

A few years ago a large drug firm in this city advertised for a boy. Next day the store was thronged with applicants, among them a queer looking little fellow, accompanied by a woman who proved to be his aunt, in lieu of faithless parents, by whom he had been abandoned. Looking at this little waif, the merchant in the store promptly said: "Can't take him; places all full; besides he is too small." "I know he is small," said the woman, "but he is willing and faithful." There was a twinkle in the boy's eyes that made the merchant think again. A partner in the firm volunteered to remark that he "did not see what they wanted of such a boy—he wasn't bigger than a pint of cider." But after consultation the boy was set to work. A few days later a call was made on the boys in the store for some one to stay all night. The prompt response of the little fellow contrasted well with the reluctance of others. In the middle of the night the merchant looked in to see if all was right in the store, and presently discovered his youthful protege busy scissorizing labels. "What are you doing?" said he. "I did not tell you to work nights." "I know you did not tell me so, but I thought I might as well be doing something." In the morning the cashier got orders to "double that boy's wages, for he is willing." Only a few weeks elapsed before a show of wild beasts passed through the streets, and, very naturally, all hands in the store rushed to witness the spectacle. A thief saw his opportunity, and entered at the rear door to seize something, but in a twinkling found himself firmly clutched by the diminutive clerk aforesaid, and after a struggle, was captured. Not only was a robbery prevented, but valuable articles taken from other stores were recovered. When asked by the merchant why he staid behind to watch when others quit their work, the reply was: "You told me never to leave the store when others were absent, and I thought I'd stay." Orders were immediately given once more: "Double that boy's wages; he is willing and faithful." To-day that boy is getting a salary of $2,500, and next January will become a member of the firm. Young men, imitate his example.—Hall's Journal of Health.

THE present tendency of the Episcopal Church toward a pronounced hierarchy in government, and toward ritualism in ceremony, is a striking example of the old truth that history is ever repeating itself. Just two hundred and forty years ago a similar movement was going on in England, under the powerful stimulation of Archbishop Laud—a movement the reaction from which sent the Puritans by the thousand into New England. As a specimen of the frantic character of the ritualistic revival in the first half of the seventeenth century, take David Masson's description of the manner in which Laud administered the sacrament at the consecration of St. Catherine Creed church, in London: "As he approached the communion table he made several lowly bowings, and, coming up to the side of the table, where the bread and wine were covered, he bowed seven times; and then, after the reading of many prayers, he came near the bread, and gently lifted up a corner of the napkin wherein the bread was laid; when he beheld the bread he laid it down again, flew back a step or two, bowed three several times toward it; then he drew near again; and opened the napkin, and bowed as before. Then he laid his hand on the cup which was full of wine, with a cover upon it; which he let go again, and lifted up the cover of the cup, looked into it, and, seeing the wine, let fall the cover again, retired back, and bowed as before. Then he received the sacrament, and gave it to some principal men." How remarkably this is like some of the solemn, grotesque mummery which is once more coming into fashion in London and New York. It was the outburst of this High Church and ritualistic spirit in Laud's time which disgusted young John Milton, and wrenched from him his purpose of going into the ministry; and in some of his prose writings we find the most caustic denunciations of ritualism anywhere to be met with. In his "Reason of Church Government urged against Prelaty," published in 1641, occurs a passage upon priestly fopperies and masquerading which it would be wholesome to republish entire in 1869. "Now for their demeanor within the church, how have they disfigured and defaced that more than angelic brightness, the unclouded serenity of Christian religion, with the dark overcasting of superstitious copes and flaminical vestures? Tell me, ye priests, wherefore this gold, wherefore these robes and surplices over the gospel! Do not, ye churchmaskers, while Christ is clothing our barrenness with his righteous garment, to make us acceptable in his Father's sight; do not, as ye do, cover and hide his righteous verity with the polluted clothing of your ceremonies, to make it seem more decent in your eyes! Ye think by these gaudy glisterings to stir up the devotion of the rude multitude; ye think so because ye forsake the heavenly teaching of St. Paul for the hellish sophistry of papism." Ferocious controversy was the fashion of Milton's time; and the great poet had no idea of boxing with gloves on. Yet the severity of the ridicule and invective with which he assaulted the sacerdotal pretensions and the ceremonial fooleries of the Laudian party may show to us how great should be the revulsion of Christian simplicity against the same things to-day, even though this revulsion do not manifest itself in language so harsh and so stinging.—New York Independent.

THE MENTAL INDOLENCE OF WOMEN. One reason for the intellectual narrowness of women, and their extreme subjection to prejudice and slavery to custom, is mental indolence. Because things have always worn a certain aspect to them, and they have not troubled themselves as to whether there might not be any other way of looking at them, they conclude that no other can exist. In fact, with some women, mental exertion has come to be considered decidedly unfeminine. A woman who tries to understand what is going on around her, and to see the reasons for the serious and exciting contests in which men engage, and which she hears are of importance to the welfare of the whole world, is bidden, not unfrequently, to be ashamed of herself for caring about things "which do not concern women." So, sometimes, women who desire to shake off the fetters of their mental bondage are unable to do so on account of the utter want of sympathy which they experience from their mentally indolent sisters. Partly, too, the mental indolence of women is forced upon them by the supercilious manner in which the majority of men treat the efforts of women after knowledge. Women, unless, indeed, they are of a very unusual energy, cannot but give up making efforts when they find that their endeavors are looked upon as of no possible avail to redeem them from ignorance. Moreover, if women are always taught that they are not to decide for themselves, that it is out of their province to become highly cultivated intellectually, and so forth, the mental indolence which in greater or less degree is natural to all human beings is not likely to be by such means lessened in them.—The Queen.

DEPARTURE OF FATHER HYACINTHE. Father Hyacinthe, the distinguished French priest, sailed on Saturday last on his return voyage to Paris. His departure was much earlier than was expected, and has taken many of his friends by surprise. It is whispered that its suddenness was caused by dispatches from Paris suggesting possible important movements in the French Catholic Church, growing out of the prospective decisions of the Ecumenical Council.

Father Hyacinthe has been in this country about six weeks. He remained until the sensation attending his presence had nearly died away, and was summoned home just as he began to enjoy the quiet rest which he came to seek. While here he was visited by many representative Protestant ministers, all of whom he cordially greeted, and on leaving expressed the very great satisfaction which their visits had afforded him. He goes with greatly modified and highly appreciative views of the elevating and ennobling influence of the liberty of thought and conscience in this country. He promises to return at no distant day and make a more extended tour of observation among us. His visit has intensified rather than diminished the interest of Protestants in his public career, and they will watch his future with no little solicitude.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.—Postmaster General Creswell presents an admirable report. Our space affords only a brief reference. Receipts for year ending June 30, 1869, $18,344,510 72; expenditures, $23,698,131 50; excess of expenditures, $5,353,621 88. There was an increase of expenditures last year over those of the previous fiscal year, $976,538 85, and of receipts, $2,051,909 92. The estimates for the current fiscal year are: Receipts, $20,878,961; expenditures, $25,581,093; deficiency, $4,702,182. The Secretary mentions, with special emphasis, the success of returning misdirected letters and the money order system, each of which, it is claimed, have proved very successful, and each of which needs enlarged facilities. He expatiates on the great evils of the franking privilege, and invites attention to the unsatisfactory postal relations between this country and France.

ILLUMINATING THE SEA.—On the eastern coast of Scotland a successful experiment was recently performed, which promises to be of immense value to the shipping interest. This was the illumination of a sea-beacon, placed about three-quarters of a mile from land, by electricity passed through a submarine cable connected with the shore. The flashes from the beacon were extremely vivid, while the beacon can be made to burn from forty to fifty hours consecutively at a cost of nine cents per hour, and can be regulated to send from four to six hundred flashes in any manner which may be desired, and the capacities of the principle are such that a warning may be set up anywhere in the most perilous situation for the safety of seamen. No expensive erections in the shape of lighthouses are necessary. The light may be raised to any altitude on the summit of a rod, which neither the wind nor the water would be likely to overthrow. The commissioners of the Scotch lighthouses, who witnessed the experiments, are about recommending it for adoption by the government and the Trinity House.

AN ARTICLE OF TRUE MERIT.—Brown's Bronchial Troches are the most popular article in this country or Europe for throat diseases and coughs, and this popularity is based upon real merit, which cannot be said of many other preparations in the market which are really but weak imitations of the genuine Troches.

The Christian Advocate.

THE NEW JERUSALEM.

BY HORATIUS BONAR, D. D.

Bathed in unfallen sunlight,
Itself a sun-born gem,
Fair gleams the glorious city,
The new Jerusalem!
City fairest,
Splendor rarest,
Let me gaze on thee!

Calm in her queenly glory,
She sits all joy and light,
Pure in her bridal beauty,
Her raiment festal white!
Home of gladness,
Free from sadness,
Let me dwell in thee!

Shading her golden pavement,
The tree of life is seen,
Its fruit-rich branches waving,
Celestial evergreen.
Tree of wonder,
Let me under
Thee forever rest!

Fresh from the throne of Godhead,
Bright in its crystal gleam,
Bursts out the living fountain,
Swells on the living stream.
Blessed river,
Let me ever
Feast my eye on thee!

Stream of true life and gladness,
Spring of all health and peace;
No harps by thee hang silent,
Nor happy voices cease.
Tranquil river,
Let me ever
Sit and sing by thee!

River of God, I greet thee,
Not now afar, but near;
My soul to thy still waters
Hastes in its thirstings here.
Holy river,
Let me ever
Drink of only thee.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERE'E REPORTS.

REPORT ON RELIGIOUS LITERATURE.

The committee to which was referred the subject of religious literature beg leave to report: That in consideration of the much that has been already said, we deem it unnecessary to make an elaborate statement of the merits and claims of our several church periodicals. We beg leave, however, after commending in a general way all our church literature, to call particular attention to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Its editorial resources, as well as its local advantages, are such as to demand the patronage of all who are alive to their individual and general religious interests. And while we recognize with gratification the increased circulation of our ADVOCATE, we would press upon the members of our Conference the importance of making its merits more prominent before their charges. It is our own paper, and we should do our church and people the service to make it stand forth in its bright and pure light before the world.

Allow us also to mention, and favorably to mention, the Sunday School Visitor as a useful agent in disseminating religion and building up the church of Christ.

We recommend the appointment of Rev. W. P. Barton as one of the Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, vice Rev. G. H. Clinton, transferred to the St. Louis Conference.

Respectfully submitted.

W. H WATKINS,
E. H. MOUNGER,
W. F. GLENN,
Committee.

REPORT ON EDUCATION.

Centenary College.—This is the most important educational institution in our bounds. It originated in the fund collected at the close of the first century of Methodism; began its existence at Brandon Springs, Rankin county, under favorable circumstances, but it became involved in debt and in want of means. It was then removed to Jackson, Louisiana, where the buildings and apparatus and cabinet of the State College of Louisiana were purchased for the sum of $10,000. This sum was not paid, but commuted by an agreement to educate ten State students.

One large additional building was erected at a cost of $76,000. Many of our first young men were educated at this college; and if we could estimate moral and meutal worth in dollars and cents, we should find that the college has already paid back all it cost us. The buildings are now in need of repairs, which will cost thousands of dollars. The Board of Trustees has resolved to repair, and Dr. Keener is now successfully asking aid for that purpose.

We commend this college to the earnest attention of our people, hoping that they will contribute liberally of their means to repair, and send their sons to be educated at this college. The college has a full faculty, and its pupils are fully taught. We recommend that our licentiate preachers, who may be selected as beneficiaries of the educational fund of this Conference, be sent to Centenary College of Louisiana. We cannot consent to see this college longer continue in want of means and patronage without an effort, long continued, in its behalf.

Your committee also recommend that Dr. Watkins be continued as president of Centenary College.

Whitworth Female College.—This institution has belonged to the Conference since 1866. During this time about $6,000 have been subscribed, much of which has been collected and expended in paying claims against the college, and in reroofing and repairs. Rev. H. F. Johnson, the president, has during this fall had erected a large, fine wooden building, one hundred and eleven feet long, forty-eight feet wide, with six basement rooms, four recitation rooms, etc. On this Bro. Johnson has paid all except about $300 cash, and the lumber, which was furnished by Whitworth & Hoskins.

The college is fully officered, with one hundred and thirty pupils, ninety-eight of whom are boarders. An excellent apparatus, made to order, is employed for illustration. And now, with suitable buildings, apparatus, books, president and faculty, the success of this institution of learning hitherto is worth our attention.

The growth of the college, under the circumstances, is surprising. The public school of the town drew off many of the pupils. Some of its friends became discouraged. Our people were poor, and hardly able to bear the expense of educating their daughters, and yet it grew steadily on, until it is now in full tide of prosperity. The last commencement was a complete success. Brother Linfield preached the sermon. Dr. Walker delivered an address on education. The pupils were thoroughly examined. We had music and compositions. The graduating class read most excellent essays, and everybody that we heard from was favorably impressed. We recommend this school, with hearty earnestness, to all who desire thoroughly to educate their daughters.

Your committee also recommend that Rev. H. F. Johnson be continued as president of Whitworth Female College.

Sharon Female College.—We have reports both from the Board of Trustees and the Visiting Committee. The greatest want of this school seems to be of suitable buildings for boarders. Success in imparting instruction has crowned the efforts of the accomplished president, Brother Hunnicutt, and faculty. The examination of pupils at the last commencement was more than satisfactory, and the number of graduates was sufficient to encourage us to hope for future success.

We recommend that the attention of the Confereuce be given to this institution. It was began in prayer, with pure motives of good, and though adversity has fallen upon the school in the burning of its buildings, and though its first supporters are scattered, and though it is not on any great thoroughfare, yet there is need for this seminary now, and there will be more need for it in future; and we are in favor of holding all we have, and of extending our limits to all beyond.

We recommend that Rev. J. M. Pugh be continued as its president.

Woodville Female Seminary does not belong to us, but it is under our patronage. We have no reports from trustees or visitors, but learn from the president, Dr. Sullivan, that the school is well organized and well taught. The number of pupils is forty-five. Last year the Visiting Committee made a most complimentary report of this institution, and we have no reason to believe that it is less efficient now than then.

We know not why it is not more prosperous, why the number of pupils is not greater, nor have we any means of satisfactorily determining. Dr. Sullivan, we learn, has tendered his resignation to the trustees, to take effect in February next, and that the board still desire our aid, and intend to continue the seminary under our patronage.

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy has been tendered to this Conference as Conference property. Mr. A. J. Wright has resigned the presidency, and moved into the country seven miles. Mr. R. J. Ricketts and Rev. J. A. B. Jones are teaching a day school of forty-five pupils in the buildings. There are now no boarders in the institution, and no one there to take them. Immediate attention is necessary to reinstate this once prosperous school in the affections and patronage of the people. The buildings are good, but if neglected will soon need expensive repairs.

Some of the trustees have sent their daughters to Kentucky to school, because the academy is not prepared to take boarders. We hope this Conference will at once take charge of Port Gibson Collegiate Academy, and make it a first rate school.

In conclusion we offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That a collection for ministerial education be counted among our regular Annual Conference collections.

Resolved, That we will endeavor to collect an average of ten cents from each member of our church annually, to be applied to the education of young ministers of our church.

B. JONES, Chairman.

RESOLUTIONS ON THE ORPHANS' EDUCATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF THE MISSISSIPPI ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

WHEREAS, The sufferings and necessities of orphanage have in all ages claimed the sympathy and tender care of the church of Christ;

AND WHEREAS, The number of orphans in our land, and within the borders of our church, appeals with touching emphasis to the Christian charities of all good and Christian people;

AND WHEREAS, We deem the ordinary method of collecting great numbers of orphan children into massive, solitary, gloomy and expensive buildings, unwise and contrary to the best interests of the orphans and of society, inasmuch as such children are unavoidably subjected to an unnatural and often most painful course of life, under which character cannot be formed upon a high standard, and the cheerfulness of childhood is lost; therefore,

Resolved, By the Mississippi Annual Conference, that a committee of ten be formed, five of whom shall be members of this Conference and five of them laymen of our church, who shall be charged with the business of investigating the subject of orphanage among us, and, if practicable, to devise such methods of providing for those who need relief as in their wisdom they may deem most advisable.

Resolved, That we regard it as desirable, in undertaking the accomplishment of this work, that the committee should consider the propriety of organizing a system of general supervision over orphans, so that they may be domiciled in families, and be supported, educated and trained up in home and family relations, and thus rendered happy and useful.

Resolved, That should any legislation be deemed necessary to the success of such plan, the committee be authorized to take such steps and adopt such measures as may be considered essential to attaining the object in view.

Resolved, That the committee be and they are authorized to put into operation such plan for the relief of orphans as early as practicable, and that they report to the next ensuing Annual Conference.

Resolved, That the Bishop presiding be requested to appoint said committee.

C. K. MARSHALL, Chair'n.

REPORT OF JOINT BOARD OF FINANCE.

The Joint Board of Finance beg leave to congratulate the Conference upon the success attending the financial plan recommended at its last session. This is shown by the increased receipts of the Conference fund and the payment of the Bishop's salary, as well as in the salaries of the preachers themselves, nearly all of whom have been almost paid, and some entirely where the plan has been fully worked. They have no new plan to present, but would recommend the same for the coming Conference year; and where it cannot be carried out strictly, that it be enforced in such of its provisions as are practicable in each place.

Let a plain and full exhibit of the demands of the church be made at the commencement of the year, and our word for it the response of the membership will be satisfactory. Small payments at short intervals on the principle of "pay as you go," will accomplish great results.

Certain facts appear, from the reports we have received, to which we would call special attention:

First. The smallest district in the Conference is third in the rate of returns. On that district the financial plan recommended by this board and adopted by the Conference was fully carried out.

Second. In several instances the returns of collection for Bishop's salary were made by presiding elders. In these cases the reports are altogether satisfactory. But this strange fact appears: that the amounts returned by the preachers for the Conference collection fall below, though assessed at a much higher rate than the Bishop's claims. The territory yields a harvest to one reaper, and but a paltry handful to others.

Third. In some instances the preachers have reported one-half, three-quarters and even full receipts on their salaries of $500 and upwards, but not a cent for the collections. Is this doing the whole duty of a Methodist preacher? Besides, if the Conference plan of finance was used on their respective works, they owe a per cent. upon their receipts. If they did not use that plan, then they should feel themselves accountable for the proceeds of a better plan.

In other instances preachers have reported a small amount for one collection and nothing for the other. Such discrimination is without authority, that we know of, is unfair to the claimants upon these collections, and if persisted in must destroy that uniformity of proceeding upon which we make our calculations to meet the respective claims with which this board is charged.

This board is fully persuaded that if each preacher would present upon its merits, to each congregation they serve, the claims and collections ordered by this Conference, we should no longer suffer the mortification of reporting a deficiency in the amount required of us for the Bishops, and so small a per cent. upon the claims of the superannuates, widows and orphans of this Conference.

We have received on account of superannuates, widows and orphans, $1,737 03, and on account of Bishops' salaries, $1,206 70, as follows:

District.	Sup., W. and O.	Bishops.
Woodville	$193 85	$172 00
Vicksburg	279 85	96 05
Jackson	313 70	204 45
Yazoo	218 45	390 00
Greenville	226 50	92 00
Starkville	156 48	47 00
Brandon	62 25	41 00
Paulding	113 00	31 00
Brookhaven	147 95	95 50
Clinton	25 00	23 70
Total	1,737 03	1,192 70

Distributed as follows:

Paid to Bishop McTyeire	$1,085 70
Remitted to Dr. Redd	107 00
	1,192 70
On deficiency of last year	14 00
Total	1,206 70

The board recommend the following assessment for the ensuing year:

District.	Conf. coll.	Bps' coll.
Vicksburg	$750 00	$225 00
Jackson	500 00	225 00
Yazoo	1,000 00	225 00
Starkville	500 00	100 00
Brandon	300 00	150 00
Paulding	250 00	85 00
Brookhaven	500 00	125 00
Woodville	500 00	135 00
Clinton	250 00	80 00
Greenville	250 00	80 00

The board desire that the Conference, in addition to the order authorizing these two collections, take such further action as to impress upon the minds of our preachers that they are not at liberty to neglect presenting to the people the claims of this Conference upon them for the means of meeting the salaries of our Bishops, and the superannuates, widows and orphans. We submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is expected of each preacher receiving an appointment in this Conference, either himself to take up the collections ordered by this Conference, or see that the claims are provided for by the stewards of the church; otherwise, in case of failure to make returns upon these claims, the Conference will hold such preacher responsible upon the examination of his character.

W. E. M. LINFIELD,
Chairman Board of Finance.

Joint Board of Finance.—Clerical: W. E. M. Linfield, H. F. Johnson, C. Chamberlin, H. Brown, E. H. Mounger, W. B. Lewis, W. W. Hurst, G. D. Wade, R. A. Davis, F. M. Williams. Lay: J. E. Jagers, Hayward Foote, I. M. Applewhite, O. J. Moore, John Stephens, J. McVea, W. L. Nugent, R. W. Millsaps, S. Johnson, A. G. Mayers.

MISSIONARY APPORTIONMENT.

The presiding elders make the following missionary appropriations for the year 1870, and recommend the brethren to use proper means to make collections large enough to meet the appropriations:

Clinton district	$200 00
Livingston mission	150 00
Ponchatoula mission	100 00
Covington mission	100 00
Mount Carmel district	200 00
Okolona mission	50 00
Black Creek mission	50 00
Columbia mission	100 00
Brandon district	100 00
Decatur mission	100 00
Starkville district	100 00
Plattsburg mission	50 00
Brookhaven district—Bogue Chitto mission	100 00
Total	1,400 00

Resolved, That the treasurer of our Conference Missionary Society is hereby instructed to forward to Brother Lambuth, in China, the $100 raised to assist in the buying of property for his orphan school boys, and one-half the amount of the other collections and subscriptions taken at the anniversary of the Missionary Society on last Sunday evening.

REPORT ON SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

The committee to whom the subject of Sunday schools was referred feel constrained to congratulate themselves and the Conference on the exalted position and widening influence which the Sunday school has attained, not only in our own church, but among all the churches of God throughout the world. At different periods of the past providence has seemed to introduce and designate some single agency as then best adapted to the necessities of the church as an auxiliary to the great work of the pulpit in the evangelization of man. Such an instrumentality were class meetings in the days of the Wesleys, and camp meetings during the earlier history of American Methodism, and such now is the Sunday school, the very idea of which seems to be a divine inspiration which is constantly deepening and widening, and is destined to pervade all Christendom. It is unquestionably the field which invites the most active labors of the church, and promises the most abundant harvest. Never did the church so much need the aid of such a helper as now; not because the gospel has in any degree lost its sufficiency, or the ministry its efficiency, but chiefly, we think, because of the peculiar educational and social surroundings of the young. This is not only an age of great intellectual activity, in which "many run to and fro and knowledge is increased," but an age in which Satan seems to use unprecedented arts and efforts to ruin our race through the instrumentality of education itself. The Bible, always too much neglected in our common schools, has been deliberately expelled from the public schools of some of the principal cities of this country, and the same step is being gravely discussed in others, and that, too, when the experience of multiplied years has furnished perpetually accumulating evidence of the fact that simple education has no sanctifying power; that mere intellectual development, without the implantation of divine grace in the heart, makes men only accomplished sinners or polished fiends. At such a juncture in our educational history the work of the Sunday school, which is specifically to teach the Bible to the young, is most imperatively demanded, not only as an antidote to natural corruption, pre-occupying the ground where weeds of wickedness would grow and forestalling Satan's earliest plans, but as a needed guide and regulator to that increased power which intellectual culture always imparts. It is Sunday school instruction alone that can and must leaven the whole lump of education. The Sunday school is the school of the present age. The past had nothing equal to it, and the present has nothing superior to it as an agency for good. Better would it be that all the colleges in the land should cease to exist than that biblical instruction should be withheld from childhood and infancy. If these views are correct the question arises: How shall we best secure to the church the abundant results for good which this institution is calculated to accomplish? We answer: Let all the officers and teachers of our Sunday schools cultivate such personal piety as duty and consistency require of those who would teach others the doctrines of godliness. The responsibility of those who would teach in Sunday schools is greater than that of other teachers, by as much as the issues of eternity transcend the interests of time. While we earnestly commend fervent piety in all who have supervision in our Sunday schools, we would not fail to recommend a proper regard for the peculiar mental characteristics and tastes of childhood, by a judicious use of tickets, prizes, premiums, celebrations and other suitable means of exciting in the young a greater interest in the Sunday school, and of promoting a cheerful piety, a happy Christianity among the children of the church.

Your committee, believing that the highest efficiency of the Sunday school can only be secured by maintaining the most intimate and harmonious relations between it and the church, by making it an antechamber or a primary department of the church, recommend that a larger number of hymns suitable for Sunday schools be incorporated into the next edition of our church hymn book.

There are reported to be within the bounds of the Mississippi Conference one hundred and twenty-three Sunday schools, having seven hundred and forty-eight officers and teachers, four thousand two hundred and twenty-seven scholars, twelve thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine volumes in libraries, and taking nine hundred and eighty-one copies of the Sunday School Visitor, and having expended $1,632 30 for Sunday school purposes. There are also reported to us two hundred and seventy-three pupils of Sunday schools who have been received into the church during the year. As supplementary to the strictly proper matter of this report, allow us to say: We rejoice to see that the church is awaking to a proper sense of the importance of retaining baptized children in the church, and hope that the ministry will bestir themselves to a more faithful discharge of their duties to baptized children, as prescribed on page one hundred and two of the Discipline. The neglect of these duties has cost us the loss of thousands of members. We wish that the relation of baptized children to the church was more clearly defined in the minds of both our membership and ministry. We believe that the Discipline recognizes children baptized by Methodist ministers as members of our church, and solemnly disapprove the suicidal practice, too much in vogue, of ignoring, neglecting and virtually expelling them.

Your committee are of the opinion from their observation and experience, that our people, particularly the youth of our families, are not sufficiently impressed and taught the high and noble position we as church hold, not only in these United States, but almost in every quarter, every section of the earth. Methodism is less than one hundred and fifty years old, and yet in this short time it is extended and has filled the world over, and has increased from a small handful until now numbers its membership by millions—that it is a power on earth, and yet a power, we trust, for good everywhere—and whilst contemplating this wonderful and unexampled growth, not excelled by the rapid growth of Mohamme sided by the sword though it was, in humble thankfulness we can but reiterate the words of Wesley: "What has God wrought for us." We would ask: Are these thoughts, are the labors of our fathers, is their godly life and extraordinary success taught and exhibited to our youth in a way to make them appreciate the privilege? Yes, the honor of being numbered in such a church, so blessed by almighty goodness. We should talk of these things to our children when we rise up and when we sit down, at home and abroad; but especially would we recommend the assembling of our membership once a year with all their children sitting together as families, presenting themselves and "the children God has graciously given them before the Lord." Your committee think they have Scriptnre example for such an assembly. Let these addresses be made by persons selected beforehand, whether clerical or lay, upon the origin, progress and present condition of Methodism, together with local history of Methodism in each particular place. Let this be called the Annual Social Festival of Methodism. Your committee beg leave to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That we will hold, on the first Sunday in June of each year, "The Social Festival of Methodism," inviting thereto all the families, as families, appertaining to the station, and, as far as practicable, on the circuit belonging to our church, for the purpose of rehearsing the wonderful history of Methodism, and to stimulate thereby one another to renewed exertion, and our children to reverence, love and cherish the church of our fathers.

REPORT ON TEMPERANCE.

Your Committee on Temperance report: Intemperance in the use of ardent spirits is unquestionably a great and growing evil in the world and in the church. It is the fruitful source of innumerable woes, and a great impediment to the growth of the church.

As a Conference we declare our unqualified opposition to this evil, and dare not withhold our indorsement of every movement, in the church and out of it, which contemplates, by the employment of moral suasion and the correction of public opinion, the suppression of intemperance; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the rule of our Discipline, in reference to the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, should be properly but firmly enforced.

Resolved, That all such social temperance organizations as the Sons of Temperance, Social Circle and the Friends of Temperance, are entitled to and shall receive our warmest support, and that as ministers and laymen we will use our best endeavors to banish from the social circle and the festive board all use, as a beverage, of every sort of intoxicating liquors.

Respectfully submitted.

RAINBOW AT NIGHT.

Mr. Editor: I was sailing on the "Gulf of Dolce," on the night of the twenty-second of September, latitude about sixteen degrees, when I beheld the beautiful scene, a rainbow at night. We had been "beating" our way down the coast all day against heavy headwind and rough sea, and for some time had been followed by clouds and rain on our right. Awhile after dark the rain passed on ahead of us, clouds still in our rear and on our left. The moon rose a little north of east, nearly ahead of us, and was something more than an hour high, and shone out brightly between the clouds ahead of us, when the bow appeared in the clouds behind us, a little southwest of us; it was a perfect arch clearly defined, as perfect a bow as I ever saw in daylight. The color was a whitish yellow, a little inclined to pink and blue toward the upper edge. It was the first I ever saw; I called the doctor's attention to it; he said it was the first he ever saw. We had but little time to observe it, for our little craft was on a very rough sea, some three to five miles above the old Spanish Fort San Philippa. The bow remained perfect, I think, for about fifteen minutes. Yours truly,

H. Copeland.

Are Doctors Responsible for Drunkenness?

NUMBER ONE.

Does the question surprise and startle you, reader? You will, we think, be more surprised and startled by the answer we shall give. It is contained in a report made to the "Medical Society of Pennsylvania," at its twentieth annual session, held at Erie, June, 1869, by Hiram Corson, chairman of a committee to report on the following resolution, which was offered the year before:

"Resolved, That the present terrible practice of stimulation, which sends its victims daily by thousands prematurely to the grave, and which fills our land with drunkenness and crime, cannot much longer maintain itself in the confidence and esteem of the reflecting members of a great and learned profession. A modified, improved, regenerated practice, based upon common sense and a sound clinical observation, must take its place, and thus carry healing and blessings upon its wings to the nations of the earth."

We shall give all the important points and passages in this able and exhaustive report, and ask for it the careful and thoughtful attention of our readers. If doctors are indeed responsible for drunkenness, it is time the people knew it and were on their guard. Let one of their number speak.

Dr. Corson, referring to the above resolution, says:

As the language of that resolution was the sober, earnest utterance of Prof. Samuel D. Gross, of the Jefferson Medical College, before an audience of thousands of his fellow-citizens, a man who weighs well his words, and whose lengthened life and great medical experience entitle his declarations to profound respect, we feel bound to consider it carefully. The declaration, if true, is appalling; if erroneous, it should be corrected. That the use of alcoholic stimulants does send its victims daily, by thousands, prematurely to the grave, and fills the land with drunkenness and crime, no one doubts. The query then arises: Are physicians responsible for this? The medical profession is one of great antiquity, of high honor and commanding influence over the opinions and habits of the people, in all that regard favorably, or unfavorably, their health or length of life. In all ages and in all countries the "medicine man" has controlled the minds of his people in relation to the safety or danger of all their articles of food or medicine. The profession is spread over every foot of the civilized world; its members are welcome visitors in every family; their teachings are medical gospel, received in the fullness of faith and acted out on the principle that self-preservation is the first law of nature. Does the physician say the health of the infant or its mother demands that it should be taken from the breast, "though 'tis joy to yield it as 'tis joy to sip," she makes the sacrifice. Does he say a journey to and residence in a distant and foreign country are essential to the restoration of the health of the diseased and enfeebled wife, she separates herself from her home and all its idols to gain the precious boon. * * * * *

In times when cholera, or typhus or typhoid fever, or smallpox, or malignant dysentery prevails, no man will take food or drink said by his physician to be harmful. Half a century ago, and even now, in some districts of country, no mother would allow her child, afflicted with measles, to take a single swallow of cold water, although the little suffering creature plead in most pitcous tones for a drink to cool its parched and burning mouth. Why did she refuse it? Because the doctor said "it would make the measles strike in and kill the child." Even here, where the physician was wrong, the faith was whole. * * *

If, therefore, physicians were united on the subject of the deleterious effects of alcohol, would it not be utterly abandoned? We venture to affirm that in less than half a century, when those whom we have fatally indoctrinated into the belief that it is warming, cooling, strengthening, tonic and stimulating; that it calms the restless, enlivens the dull, invigorates the body, gives strength to the intellect, enlivens the fancy and brightens the imagination; that it prevents sickness, and is a sovereign remedy in disease; we repeat, when those thus deluded shall have passed away, the new generation, whose minds had not thus been poisoned by error, but who had listened in blank astonishment to the wondrous recital of the miseries which its reputed moderate, judicious use had brought upon mankind, would instinctively turn with horror from contact with an evil so fearful.

Every writer on the diseases of the human system has testified to the direct agency of alcoholic stimulants in producing a large number of diseases, and predisposing, by its use, to nearly all others, or at least to making the system less able to resist the action of deleterious agents. Do we hear you say: Even if such are its effects, can its almost universal use be charged upon the profession? Let facts answer.—Every physician whom we know personally—all of whom we have heard—use and recommend the use of alcoholic liquors in some form in their practice. The great majority use them freely, in trifling as well as in grave cases; in drunkards as well as on the total abstinence people; on the child of a day and the parent of threescore and ten. They prescribe them in diseases of the kidneys, lungs, heart, brain, stomach and every other organ, and yet they know full well that the diseases of those organs have been produced thousands of times by these very agents. They also recommend them to be taken by the weak, the dyspeptic and the valetudinarian; the aged because they are aged, the young because they are young; the nursing mother because of the drain on her system (natural though it be and healthful;) to those who are given up as hopeless, because they are dying; and to the convalescent, because they are convalescing, and they cannot forego the glorious opportunity to show them how porter or ale, or whisky, will "build them up." The effect of such a course is to impress the community with a high opinion of the valuable medical, life-giving properties of the various alcoholic drinks, of which wine, in its varieties, brandy, gin and whisky make up the common stock.

You must all have observed that persons leaving home, to spend the summer in the country, or at the sea shore, or in the Jersey pines, or on the mountains, or at mineral springs, or at a country home, are invariably found to have brought with them, by direction of "my physician," some "good brandy," or "real Holland gin," or a few dozen "brown stout," or some of the fine "old port." Many who take none at home, now, "by advice of our doctor," bring it along to keep off chills, to prevent the deleterious effects of change of water, to take a little morning and evening on account of the dews, or a little at noon to help digestion, and it is truly painful to a thinking, conscientious man to see what confidence they have in the preservative and remedial qualities of these articles so carefully stowed away in the trunk. The parent who at home would shudder to see his child take a little brandy at each meal, now, under the advice of his physician, deals out to every member of his family this life-preserver, this disease-defier. He is still more impressed with the value of these remedies from the fact that while the doctor was so careful to urge the importance of taking the alcoholics along, he said not a word about the necessity of taking some medicines, so called, valuable in attacks of pain, or vomiting, or diarrhea, or loss of appetite, or chills, or fever, or headache. In this omission the patient sees a tacit acknowledgment that the stimulants in his bottles are substitutes for them, and better than them all. Who can estimate the amount of injury thus brought upon society? * * * *

If, then, this picture be true, and not one can gainsay it, that in every house in the land, on board every railroad car, and on every ship that sails or steams the ocean, this agent is used by advice of the profession, as preventive and curer of disease, should it astonish those who know the cravings of appetite and the force of habit, that this terrible practice, in the language of the resolution, sends thousands daily prematurely to the grave, and fills the land with drunkenness and crime? Look into almost any of the approved works on the Practice of Medicine, and you will find that alcoholic drinks are named as one of the causes of almost every disease, and yet in the recent works these same deleterious agents are lauded as remedies above all others. Some recommend them only in convalescence; others in exhausted conditions before convalescence has begun; and yet others from the beginning to the end of the malady. With them they treat the cold stage, the stage of excitement, the period of depression, delirium, coma, sleeplessness, and every other condition that may arise. Now they are given to arouse the energies, then to allay excitement, here as a supporter of combustion, there as food for the nerves; one day to build up the system by promoting nerve-force, the next to pull it down by increasing the waste of tissues, or, in fashionable language, destructive metamorphosis. With their worshipers they fulfill every indication, they combat every symptom, and, though they fail to conquer, they are still on hand to be in at the death.—Among all our acquaintance we know of no physician who does not prescribe and recommend them more or less. The time was, and many of you can remember it, when they were recommended by teachers in medicine only in weak states of the body, and to be used with extreme caution; now, when the brain is overpowered by sunstroke, when the man falls prostrate with apoplexy, in the first as in the last days of illness, in spotted, typhus, typhoid or yellow fever, in every variety of diarrhea and dysentery, in rheumatism, in pleurisy, in pneumonia, in the shock by injury from violence, in mania-a-potu, and delirium tremens, in the sleeplessness brought on by the use of alcohol, wine or brandy, gin or whisky, or malt liquors, or one or more of the various tinctures or bitters, strong with alcohol, is prescribed and urged with an earnestness which testifies to the faith reposed in them by the physician, and which allays the repugnance of the patients to the use of an agent which they had seen filling the land with drunkenness and crime. Does a child suffer from croup, or scarlet fever, or diphtheria, the building up process must not be neglected—disregard the inflammation, keep up the strength. It is a blood poison, says authority, and while you send the iodides, the bromides or chlorides through the body to wrestle with the poison, give brandy toddy, whisky punch, wine and beef tea to keep up the strength, and as the poor child, with a plug in its windpipe which prevents access of air to the lungs, struggles for breath, pour down the brandy, wine or whisky. For what? The answer comes not, for reason and experience have none to give. But a short time since a friend of ours, a gentleman of Philadelphia, told us that a son of his of ten years of age, attended by two of the first physicians of that enlightened city, in a case of diphtheria, had so much brandy urged upon him, when the membrane had invaded the windpipe, that during the last few hours of his life, as he lay on his bed, he would throw up his arms and cry, "Father, hold me, I am swimming; I will fall out of bed." He was drunk from brandy, when all that he needed was the removal of the plug from his windpipe. Should any doubt this statement, we refer them to a case published in the American Journal of the Medical Sciences, at page 24 of the number of January, 1869, by a physician of honored name, himself the author of a treatise on the Diseases of Children. The patient, a child of ten years, was well till the evening of the ninth of April. Next morning complained of sore throat and loss of appetite. In the afternoon Dr. M. saw him with symptoms of coming scarlet fever or diphtheria, as yet so illy defined as to leave doubt. And now less than twenty-four hours from health, and when a febrile condition was just beginning to manifest itself, comes the physician with salts in one hand and brandy in the other—ten grains of sulphite of magnesia and milk punch every two hours. Next morning all the symptoms were aggravated—the inflammation of throat and skin intense; but still the salts in one hand and milk punch and beef tea, a wineglassful of each of the latter alternately every two hours, in the other. And so on, day after day, till the dry and inflamed throat would not permit a drop of those life-preservers to pass. But nothing daunted, the beef tea, brandy and sulphite of magnesia are forced up the rectum; the ice which surrounds the throat, now that the fiery liquid is kept away, soon cools it, relieves the inflammation, and the throat again becomes the channel to the stomach. For eleven days this terrible treatment went on—milk punch, or brandy and beef tea every two hours—and then resulted in a condition from which the little sufferer barely escaped with life.

I mention this case as the type of the present popular stimulant treatment, and because the publication of it will cause a similar treatment to be applied to thousands of little sufferers. The case will be read at home and abroad, and the name of the eminent physician and author will be a sufficient guarantee (to those who are convinced by high authorities of the correctness of a practice) that brandy was useful in this case; and, as a consequence, every child that falls in their way, sick with scarlet fever or diphtheria, must be dosed with brandy.

* * * One more case. Two weeks since a gentleman gave us the following history: Last December his daughter, of about twenty-one years, was taken with pain in the side, and as he had lost three daughters within a few years of consumption, he, after the second day's illness, left his home, eight miles from Philadelphia, and moved to the city, and placed her under the care of a physician of some eminence. He diagnosed pneumonia, and at once put her on the use of beer, ale and whisky. She died in the early part of May, after great suffering, and in despite of twenty-four quarts of the best old rye whisky and an abundance of beer and ale. As the sister who died one year before only took ten gallons of wine during her illness, it was hoped that a heavier stimulation by stronger liquor might prove more successful; hence the substitution of whisky. We mention these cases because they show the present terrible practice of stimulation, and not to throw discredit on those who conscientiously treated them.—Arthur's Magazine.

Religious Movement in Bohemia.

The religious question to which the Huss Festival gave rise appears to be gathering weight and volume. The Bishops of Bohemia are now on their way to Rome, with the exception of one who is kept back by age and infirmity, and they are not likely to be wanting in expressions of thorough-going loyalty to the holy see. But they leave behind them just such tokens of a gathering storm as three centuries and a half ago heralded the approach of the German Reformation. Throughout the country the benefieed clergy are uttering furious tirades against Huss, apparently unconscious of the fact that they may succeed in convincing their flocks that he who would be a patriot must needs be a heretic also. The Bohemians are very indifferent in religious matters, and if they are only let alone they are not likely to feel any very ardent desire for ecclesiastical reform; but if they are forced to choose between orthodoxy and patriotism, it is orthodoxy which will have to go to the wall. This indifference of theirs was touched upon at the very interesting meeting which took place not long ago at Malin. There a number of Bohemians assembled in order to discuss the question whether it would not be better to have the services of the church performed in the vernacular rather than in Latin. All who were present appeared to be of the opinion that the coldness and indifference manifested by the people toward these services, and the want of religious zeal about which so many complaints were made, were, to a great extent, attributable to the unintelligible nature of the language at present employed in the churches. Eventually a resolution was passed, embodying the opinions expressed by the different speakers, and proposing that a petition should be drawn up and forwarded to Rome, praying that the services of the church might be performed for Bohemians in the Bohemian language. We can imagine with what fate such a petition will meet, but it is not so easy to calculate the effect which the mere mooting of such a question may produce upon the popular mind, especially if the government interferes in the matter. A society—the English Bible Society, we believe—wished to be allowed to give away Bohemian Testaments at Hussinetz on the occasion of the Huss festival. Leave was refused by the government, and the consequence was that the people bought up every copy upon which they could lay their hands, and would probably have done the same even if the price had been more than a nominal one. Until a short time ago the clergy were, for the most part, on the national side, not so much because they loved their country as that they hated the liberal sentiments of the present Austrian ministry with respect to religion. The church endowments of Bohemia are very rich, amounting, it is said, to seven hundred millions of florins, and besides these there is an educational fund valued at about twenty millions more. All this money is supposed to be looked upon with longing eyes by the ministry of Vienna, especially by Giskra and Herbst, and therefore the Bohemian clergy, with the Cardinal Archbishop of Prague at their head, have opposed them for some time vigorously. But the alarming unorthodox tone of the Young Czech party has turned these allies into foes. It remains to be seen whether their enmity is as much to be dreaded as once was their friendship.—London Globe.

Jephtha's Daughter.—Wherever I have seen or heard the vow of Jephtha alluded to, it has always seemed to be a settled conviction in the writer or speaker's mind that the fulfillment of that vow involved the real sacrifice of his daughter as a burnt offering; and I had long since learned to accept this as a fixed fact in Scripture history.

But recently, by the simple and faithful reading of this interesting story, in the English version of the Polyglot Bible, with marginal readings and references, these conclusions have been somewhat disturbed. Jephtha said: (Judges 11: 31,) "Whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, shall surely be the Lord's, and I will offer it up for a burnt offering." In the margin I find the word or substituted for and; from which may be inferred that one of two sacrifices should be made.

Again, in the fortieth verse, we read: "That the daughters of Israel went yearly to lament the daughter of Jephtha, the Gileadite, for four days." In the marginal reading I find the words "to talk with her," substituted for "to lament." Now, how could they talk with her, if at the end of two months her father had offered her as a burnt offering?—New York Observer.

A negro, after gazing at the Chinese, exclaimed: "If de white folks is dark as dat out dore, I wonder what's de color ob de nigger!"

More Trouble among the Mormons.—A letter from Salt Lake City brings reports of additional embarrassments just now falling upon the head, if not the heart, of the Mormon chief. Brigham Young has directed that the dividend of twelve per cent. recently declared by the directors of the Co-operation Association should not be paid over immediately, but that the amounts should be merely passed to the credit of the stockholders for the present. To this the latter demur. Some of the wealthy merchants declare that they will no longer submit to being swindled out of their rightful funds. One of them boldly demanded the money in a meeting in which Brigham was present. The latter grew exceedingly angry, and declared that any shareholder desiring the immediate payment of his dividend must be looked upon as having "lost the Spirit of the Lord." Some of the shareholders have already withdrawn from the Mormon Church.

Another troublesome matter is also just now on the wings of rumor in the Mormon camp. The notorious William Hickman, a refugee from Salt Lake, was taken dangerously ill some time ago in Nevada, and while expecting death declared that the various murders he committed in Utah were none of them on his own account, but all (about four hundred in number) at the instigation of Brigham Young!

Young's policy has hitherto been to rid himself of "dangerous or uneasy men" in his church. Some of them are banished as apostates, others are sent to distant countries as "missionaries." The latter class is said to be largely composed of persons whose presence at home has become disagreeable to Young. Of the hundred propagandists recently dispatched to other countries, several were recognized as sympathizers with the late heretical movements in Utah. Hickman was not regarded as a safe man for the foreign work, hence, when he became restless, he was driven "out of camp." His story, told under the fear of an impending judgment, is now repeated in the home of the Mormon settlers.—New York Christian Advocate.

Sublime Heroism.—The following is an account of the loss of the bark Naomi in the recent gale on Lake Michigan:

The bark Naomi, from Erie, Pennsylvania, loaded with coal, and bound for Milwaukie, became helpless in the gale, and went ashore three miles north of Manistee. Soon after daylight her last boat was carried away, and drifted high on the beach, and one of the crew, Dennis Driscoll, volunteered to go for help, jumped overboard, and was seen no more. Until near noon the crew clung to the rigging, with the waves dashing over the ill-fated ship, often thirty feet high.

At an early hour the captain, James Carpenter, had lashed his wife to the mast, and fastened himself by her side. But the cutting winds and dreadful exposure soon rendered her insensible, and she died early in the day. The wreck was discovered, and by noon help arrived at the scene of disaster; brave hearts and stout hands were found to man the yawl that had drifted ashore, and in the face of this awful gale they made the ship and took off a part of the crew. The captain refused to leave the body of his wife, and by the time the boat returned for the balance of the crew, his eyes were set in death. His body was lashed fast—they could not pull it loose; the waves were fast filling their boat, and to save themselves and the rest they were obliged to leave them there—the dying hero with the dead wife.

They were both Methodists, and when in Erie were connected with Simpson church, where on the Sunday before their death they attended services together, meeting in their class for the last time. Death came to them in a fearful shape, but they met the summons in the tranquil spirit of their firm Christian faith.—New York Methodist.

Pretty, Very.—In passing up a street the other day we met two little girls of some seven or eight summers who seemed to be enjoying vacation finely, and all to themselves. Passing through the street, unmindful of what was going on, they seemed as happy as two larks, and looked as beautiful as they seemed happy. Stopping at one of our candy shops one of them made a purchase of candy, a large, nice-looking stick, and breaking it, gave her little companion half, saying as she did it with the utmost simplicity imaginable, "Here, Mary, you may have the largest half, as you are the smallest." Dear, artless child, what a lesson of unselfishness was contained in thy simple words! God bless you, and enable you through life to manifest the same gentle and sweet spirit. "Here, Mary, you may have the largest half, as you are the smallest." What teachers children sometimes are!

NEWSPAPER NOTICE.

We have received the specimen number of "a literary and religious weekly newspaper," the Baltimore Christian Advocate, published and edited by Rev. Dr. Thos. E. Bond and Rev. Robert A. Holland. The regular publication will begin in January, 1870.

The doctor, in his article redevivus, indicates that certain writers were rather precipitately and prematurely in at the death. The lion, in fact, was not dead, as supposed—only in a temporary comatose state, still retaining claws, teeth and voice; in short, every inch a lion. He means to roam and roar just as of yore. The doctor intimates that his eclipse was not a night in which "all the beasts" may safely "creep forth." Not at all; it is morning—high noon. So the smaller beasts may "lay them down in their dens;" the old lion is abroad.

Drs. Bond and Holland are to be the editors. The Sunday school department is to be under the charge of a competent lady. We may expect Dr. Bond to represent Jachin and Boaz—strength and stability—and Dr. Holland and the lady, like Aaron's sacerdotal robe, for glory and for beauty. The paper is twelve by sixteen inches, most tastefully and beautifully gotten up, and is in a form most convenient for preservation—four pages of advertisements and twelve pages of reading matter. We bid the Baltimore Christian Advocate a hearty welcome, and wish it a long, prosperous and useful life. Terms, $4 per annum.

W.

WE HAVE received an invitation to be present at a dinner to be given by the proprietor of the Mobile Register, to the employes of his paper, at the Battle House, Mobile, on Christmas day. We hope all present will have a merry Christmas.

FAITH is the blessed tree which produces the noble and the divine fruits of wisdom, virtue and true felicity. But it is of so fine and delicate a nature that it will not grow in the cold and barren soil of man's heart without his incessant care and industry.—Howe.

MOBILE CONFERENCE.

SECOND DAY—THURSDAY.

We lost the first day of its session—were moving very cautiously along the railroad from Jackson to Selma. It is an admirable arrangement for fretting down any undue hurry one may have to get through the world; yet we much prefer going safely to going swiftly—though one could have gathered whortleberries by the way.

Twenty years or more had elapsed since we were last in Selma. It already has the proportions of a city. Its location upon the Alabama, and near to the great iron and coal fields of Shelby county, open to its enterprising population a great commercial and industrial future. Many of the residences are built after the Italian villa style, with grounds and gardens smiling as if the spot had never known the blighting tread of war. Shade trees and verandas are on every side; the streets run at right angles to each other, upon a uniform level of surface, and afford beautiful vistas in every direction. There are several Artesian wells in full play in the streets, and afford an abundance of good water. Each denomination has a church building here quite respectable in size and architecture.

We found Dr. Hamilton in the chair. Bishop Paine has not as yet appeared in the Conference room, though he has arrived in town this morning.

During the day a tribute was paid to the memory of the Rev. Thomas W. Derman and the Rev. W. H. Carter, who died during the year. Each of these useful and godly men left a clear testimony of their triumphant faith in the Saviour.

There are a goodly number of veterans in this body, who, by their services in the cause of Christ, have endeared themselves to thousands of our people. The presence of such venerable men gives weight and authority to its deliberations. May they long be spared to aid and adorn this Conference by their counsels and example!

THIRD DAY.

Bishop Paine presides. He is looking extremely well. We have never seen him looking better. The postponement of the time of the Montgomery Conference disturbed connections all round, and was the cause of his detention.

The report of the general book agent was read, and is highly encouraging. He is certainly the right man in the right place. The prospect is that at the General Conference the Publishing House will be out of debt. A resolution to define more accurately the questions and business of a Quarterly Conference, with certain additional items for securing the general collections of the church, was presented for approval and reference to the General Conference. It was resolved that the delegates of this Conference be authorized to present it as a memorial to that body.

FOURTH DAY.

Bishop Paine in the chair. The following persons were received on trial:

Charles B. Dubose, Clarence J. Nugent, Charles L. Farrington, U. B. Phillips, T. A. S. Adams.

None were received into full connection with the Conference. This remarkable fact is worthy of the serious consideration of all true friends of our Zion. It is an argument of great weight in support of our high schools and colleges, and it addresses itself to every Methodist in Alabama as a call for fasting and prayer that God would send more laborers into his vineyard. We heard it stated that the Conference is smaller than it was the first year after the war by thirty members. A State that is advancing in every industrial art, and in all material prosperity, needs a large annual increase in the ministry of a church that, more than any other, labors among the people. It augurs disastrously for her that there should be a dearth of preachers just at this time, when iniquity abounds. Yet we know of no men more laborious and spiritual, or of better report, than those who compose this Conference. It may be that the wretched condition of the finances of Methodism during the past three years has driven some out of the regular work, and has prevented others from entering it. As change for the better has come, let us hope to see the effect of it in a more liberal support of the gospel.

The election of delegates to the General Conference is now going on. We dislike all elections, whether in Church or State. But they are among the necessary evils. The organic reconstruction of our church has largely multiplied this element. It troubled the circle immediately about the Master, and has disturbed every remoter one from that hour until this. That will be a grand clime where, upon each shining front and form, shall be written those heavenly qualities which should alone determine order and rank. The delegates are:

Ministers: J. Hamilton, A. S. Andrews, T. O. Summers, A. H. Mitchell. Reserves: J. T. Heard, T. C. Ware.

Laymen: W. M. Bird, W. W. Lampkin, W. L. Lipscomb, Joseph R. Johns. Alternates: W. Bailey, S. A. Brown.

MONTGOMERY CONFERENCE.

This body of ministers and lay delegates assembled at Union Springs, in southeastern Alabama, on the eighth instant, Bishop Paine presiding. Union Springs is known as a "live town," being a place of great business activity. When thirteen miles more of the road now building from Montgomery to Eufaula are completed it will be in communication with the South and West, as it now is with the East and North, by the Gerard and Columbus Railroad, which passes through it. The population is small but select. The members of the Conference, clerical and lay, with all visitors, were entertained with most ample, bountiful and elegant hospitality.

The attendance of the members, lay and clerical, was large. The business of the Conference was done with Methodist preacher-like dispatch and thoroughness. The greatest harmony and good feeling characterized all the proceedings. Bishop Paine, since his recovery from his long and prostrating attack eighteen months ago, seems to have renewed his youth. He has never labored more than the past year, being the fifty-second of his ministry. In all he was only at his home six weeks during the past year. He does not say, "Go to the front," but, seizing a standard, he shouts with his leonine voice:—"Come with me to the front." Then he is so gentle, so paternal. God bless him! May he long live to go in and out before us, a burning and a shining light.

All the interests of our Zion in Montgomery Conference indicate hopeful and encouraging progress. The increase of the membership would no doubt have been much larger but for the great loss sustained by the heavy tide of emigration now setting from that region toward Texas.

The missionary anniversary was held on Saturday night. Able and satisfactory reports were read by the treasurer and secretary, after which Dr. Evans, of Georgia, the writer, and Brother Mathews delivered addresses. The occasion was pleasant and the collection respectable.

The preachers, after an admirable and well-timed address from the Bishop, received their appointments with cheerfulness and hope. They are an intelligent and vigorous body of men, ranging between twenty-five and forty-five years of age. There are but few hoary heads among them.

We expect statistics from the secretary, and a list of the appointments for publication in their "official organ."

W.

DURING the last fiscal year seven hundred and sixty millions of letters passed through the mails of the United States, being an increase of forty millions over any previous year. This is about twenty letters per head for every man, woman and child in the United States.

WE SHOULD abandon ourselves to God most entirely when he seems to be abandoning us.

SOUTHWESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.

We copy the following from a city paper:

The twentieth anniversary of the founding of the Southwestern Bible Society found, on Sunday night, the nineteenth instant, the Carondelet street Methodist Episcopal Church thronged with a congregation of various Protestant denominations. The ceremonies opened with an anthem by the choir, after which the following exercises took place:

Reading of Scriptures by Rev. C. S. Hedges, D. D. Hymn. Prayer by Rev. T. R. Markham. Hymn. Annual report by Rev. J. D. C. Doremus, D. D., general agent. Hymn. Address by Rev. J. B. Walker, D. D. Hymn. Dexology. Benediction by Rev. J. T. Sunderland.

The annual report by the Rev. Mr. Doremus gave a history of the earliest establishment of a Bible society, the first organization being entitled the New Orleans and Lafayette Bible Society, which was succeeded by the present institution, established in 1849. The report gave assurance that the society was in a prosperous condition.

The discourse of the Rev. Dr. Walker, the pastor of the church, embraced a wide survey of the benefits derived by circulating the Bible, in promoting religion, morality and Christian civilization.

Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!—to see Presbyterian, Episcopal, Baptist and Methodist men leaving behind them, for the nonce, their denominational peculiarities, but without surrendering any essential principle, and meeting together as Bible men. Surely all who profess and call themselves Christians ought to unite in loving the Bible, and laboring to send it in all languages, without note or comment, to all men. The general agent, in his able and rather historical and biographical report, did due honor to the pious and venerated dead, who in their "day and generation" had contributed of their means and influence to advance the interest of the Bible cause in the Southwest—on the roll of honor calling the name of the good and gallant Bishop Leonidas Polk, of the diocese of Louisiana, who used, by his presence, his counsels and his gifts, to express his lively sympathy. The Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible, contains the religion of the Protestants. Let it spread like sunshine to earth's remotest bound, and clothe the darkest land in light.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE STATISTICS. The statistics of the Conference shew an aggregate of white members, 15,922; colored members, 1,005; local preachers, 75; local deacons, 30; local elders, 47; adults baptized, 1,006; infants baptized, 666; number of Sunday schools, 123; officers and teachers, 748; scholars, 4,407; volumes in library, 11,769; amount raised for missions and tracts, $2,204 50; allowance for salaries of preachers, $49,144; receipts on salaries of preachers, $37,637 45; amount raised for superannuates, widows and orphans, $1,640 03; amount raised for support of the Bishops, $1,145 70.

There is a net increase over last year of white preachers and members, 1,456. The colored members have mostly been reported to the Colored Conference. An increase in adult baptisms, 448; of infant baptisms, 145. Increase in amount collected for missions and tracts, $775; increase in amount raised for superannuates, etc., $794 53; increase in amount raised for support of Bishops, $453 30; increase in salaries paid to the preachers, $11,292 45. There is a decrease of 5 Sabbath schools, of 94 officers and teachers, and 6 scholars. This is doubtless because so many schools are entirely unreported.

REV. JAMES E. COBB.—The editor of the Memphis Christian Advocate makes the following remarks concerning the editor of the late Arkansas Christian Advocate:

Brother Cobb carries with him the esteem and love of his brethren, and it is proper here to add—referring to his peculiar opinions of church union, which he avers have been misunderstood—he declared publicly and privately, at the Little Rock Conference, his faithful adherence to Southern Methodism as the church of his choice, from which he will not be separated except by expulsion or death. It is expected Brother Cobb will soon be transferred to the Louisiana Conference, arrangements being in progress to secure his services as president of Homer College. May heaven's blessings attend him in his new field of labor.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

JENKINS' VEST POCKET LEXICON. By Jabez Jenkins. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1868.

A convenient book, and such as most vest pockets will hold.

FROST'S LAWS AND BY-LAWS OF AMERICAN SOCIETY. A condensed but thorough treatise on etiquette and its usages in America. By S. A. Frost. New York: Dick & Fitzgerald, publishers. Bound in paper. 173 pages.

The author instructs everybody how to behave, everywhere and under all circumstances.

HOW TO COOK AND CARVE. New York: Dick & Fitzgerald, publishers. Paper binding, 12mo, 130 pages.

A most important subject, with which few people are acquainted. The volume is of convenient size, and contains more than most people will ever learn about the kitchen and the table.

THOUGHTS THAT CLUSTER ROUND OUR HOMES. Philadelphia: Mrs. J. Hamilton Thomas.

A little volume of poems, tastefully selected and elegantly printed. The title fairly indicates the subject of many of the poems. The book is a little gem.

LESSONS ON THE LIFE OF CHRIST. By Robert Mimpriss. In two volumes. Grades two and three. Also, TEACHERS' MANUAL and THE LIFE OF CHRIST. New York: M. W. Dodd, No. 506 Broadway.

Here are altogether three books that may be called volumes, and two little paper covered tracts, say five books, containing a system of Sunday school lessons and teaching. The system of Mimpriss has been highly commended by the Sunday School Times and other journals. Pastors and Sunday school teachers will do well to examine the plan, as they will gain many valuable suggestions, even where it is not adopted. It strikes us as rather complicated for general use. For ourselves we should prefer Dr. Summers' Question Book and Commentary. We are glad, however, to see this and all efforts to improve in our Sunday school teaching. The above books of Mimpriss are for sale by R. J. Harp, at our Methodist Depository, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

UNCLE JOHN'S FLOWER GATHERERS. A companion for the woods and the fields; with illustrations. New York: M. W. Dodd. 12mo, 316 pages, in superior binding.

A work on flowers, adapted to interest and instruct the young. This would be a suitable gift book for the approaching holidays. For sale by R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street.

MY ENEMY'S DAUGHTER. A novel. By Justin McCarthy. New York: Harper & Brother, publishers. 1869. From George Ellis, New Orleans.

LOST IN THE JUNGLE. Narrated for young people. By Paul Du Chaillu. New York: Harper & Brother, publishers, 1870.

This book is a 12mo of 260 pages, richly bound and illustrated, written by the celebrated French explorer and author. Du Chaillu is not as reliable as holy writ, even when he presumes to state facts, and he is particularly gifted with the faculty of seeing the wonderful, and of describing it. This work, with its graphic descriptions and exciting pictures of adventures among savage men and animals, will make ten-year old boys shout and open their eyes. For sale by George Ellis, opposite the post office, New Orleans.

LAMPS, PITCHERS AND TRUMPETS. Lectures on the vocation of the preacher. By Edwin Paxton Hood. New York: M. W. Dodd, No. 506 Broadway. 1869. 12mo, pp. 450.

The author gets the title from the history of Gideon. There are nine lectures, which were originally delivered to the students of Mr. Spurgeon's Pastoral College. The work is dedicated to Mr. Spurgeon, and is Spurgeonish in style and matter. It is not a dull book by any means, but readable, instructive and refreshing. Preachers will find in it many valuable hints, and all readers will be surprisingly entertained, probably for the first time in their lives, by a work on preachers and preaching. For sale by R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

Mr. George Ellis, bookseller and stationer, No. 7 Old Levee street, New Orleans, sends us the following from the press of Messrs. Harper Brothers, New York:

THE ODES AND EPODES OF HORACE. A metrical translation into English, with introduction and commentaries. By Lord Lytton.—With Latin text from the editions of Orelli, Macleane and Yonge.

The type, paper and binding are most satisfactory. This has doubtless been a labor of love with Lord Lytton. All readers of his books have long since remarked his fondness for Horace, who, like himself, was a graphic delineator of men and manners.

OLD TESTAMENT SHADOWS OF NEW TESTAMENT TRUTHS. By Lyman Abbott, author of "Jesus of Nazareth: His Life and Teachings." With designs by Doré, De Laroche, Durham and Parsons.

A most beautifully gotten up and elegant book—a nice and appropriate book for a Christmas present.

And from the same prolific press:

BOUND TO JOHN COMPANY; or the Adventures and Misadventures of Robert Ainsleigh. With illustrations.

A novel, scene laid in England. Whether good or bad we cannot say, as we have not read it.

Mr. Ellis sends us, further, three books from the press of Messrs. Hurd & Houghton, New York:

RED AND WHITE. A narrative of a life among the Northwest Indians.—By Helen C. Weeks, author of "Ainslee Stories" and "Grandpa's House." With eight illustrations by A. P. Close.

This is a book for boys; full of adventures and Indian life. It is mechanically a well-looking book, and no doubt would delight a boy about a winter fireside.

AN AMERICAN FAMILY IN PARIS. Fifty-eight illustrations of historical monuments and familiar scenes.

An elegant book, beautifully brought out, and most richly and attractively illustrated. We have not had time to give the work more than a brief glance, but from the table of contents we think it must be an interesting book. The illustrations are fine.

STORIES FROM MY ATTIC. By the author of "Dream Children" and "Seven Little People and their Friends." With illustrations.

These "Stories from my Attic" seem to be well written and interesting. The book is on good paper, clear type and handsome binding. All these books are on sale at Mr. Ellis', No. 7 Old Levee street, opposite the post office.

THE NEW ECLECTIC MAGAZINE. December, 1869. Baltimore: Turnbull & Murdoch.

This Southern periodical is deserving of all patronage. The present number has an attractive table of contents.

BURKE'S WEEKLY FOR BOYS AND GIRLS. November, 1869.

The numbers of this unsurpassed Southern publication for November have been received, and duly appropriated by our young folks. Burke's Weekly is published in Macon, Georgia, is racy of the soil, and should be in the hands of our Southern boys and girls.

THE HOME MONTHLY, A. B. Stark, editor, Nashville, Tennessee, is on our table, with an appetizing bill of fare.

THE SOUTHERN FARM HOME, W. M. Browne, editor, Macon, Georgia, is before us, with a promising table of contents, adorned with beautiful illustrations.

ARTHUR'S HOME MAGAZINE for January, 1870, appears in a new dress for the new year; looks fresh and hopeful as a strong man to run a race.

ONCE A MONTH, a magazine of good reading for the people, for January, 1870, is on our table. The contents are varied and attractive. The editor promises the finest productions of the best writers for periodicals on both sides of the Atlantic.

A holiday number of LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE, with handsome illustrations and a tempting table of contents, especially adapted to the holiday season, has been received.

THE LITTLE CORPORAL for January, 1870. This magazine for children is filled entirely with articles written especially for it. Ninety thousand copies are issued for January, 1870.

OUR SINS are as far transcended by the divine pity as the innumerable by the infinite.

LITTLE ROCK CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: I have just returned from the Little Rock Conference, held at Magnolia. Bishop Pierce presided, and for some months has been traveling and preaching throughout the bounds of that Conference. The people and preachers are all endeared to him, and the prospects of Methodism were never more promising and prospering in the State. District Meetings have been vitalized, and all the interests of the church awakened. The actual presence of one of our Bishops among us in the country, on the circuits, in the family, is what we have long needed in this section. These flying comet trips to Conference and back, east of the Mississippi river, may do well enough to keep our Annual Conferences together, but the church and the preachers need and demand more. No District Meeting in the bounds of the Louisiana Conference has ever had the presence of any one of our Bishops, unless it were somewhere in your district, and then they were not needed so much as in this hill country.

The entire claims of the Bishops on the Little Rock Conference were met, and more would have been paid if necessary. The collections were generally good. The Conference was remarkably harmonious throughout, and well attended by preachers and people. The preachers received their appointments in the spirit of olden times, ready and willing to work anywhere, notwithstanding most of them had been moved, some to new and untried fields far away.

The writer presented the claims of Homer College, and hopes that the services of the Rev. J. E. Cobb have been secured as its future and permanent president. Resolutions adopting and recommending the college were passed, and with Brother Cobb as its permanent president, the college will prove an honer to Methodism and a blessing to the country. The Conference wisely determined to pass no resolutions or recommendations to our coming General Conference, leaving all matters of church interest in the hands of a wise and godly delegation. The lay element worked well. It was a wise and safe policy to adopt it in our economy. The only danger is that it may be injured, perhaps ruined, by "tinkering and trying to make it better." Let it alone. More anon.

Yours in love,

W. D. Shea.

Minden, La., Dec. 3, 1869.

Minutes of the Montgomery Conference.

Mr. Editor: The Montgomery Annual Conference convened in Union Springs, Alabama, December 8, and adjourned at eleven o'clock on Tuesday night, December 14. Bishop Paine presided.

The following resolution was adopted in reference to the publication of the minutes:

Resolved, That for the purpose of defraying the expenses connected with the publication of the minutes of this Conference, there shall be in future an advertising department connected therewith.

To carry into effect the above resolution the following committee of nine was appointed to procure advertisements:

J. R. Rogers, Union Springs, Alabama; M. B. Locke, Union Springs, Alabama; W. S. Baker, Mobile, Alabama; W. F. Joseph, Montgomery, Alabama; J. B. Gordc, Montgomery, Alabama; J. H. Swearingen, Opelika, Alabama; William Lowther, Columbus, Georgia; W. W. Wilkinson, Greenville, Alabama; S. H. Dent, Eufaula, Alabama.

There will be four thousand copies published for gratuitous distribution. These will be sent to every member of the Conference, both clerical and lay, and be distributed by them.

All good business men will readily perceive what an admirable opportunity this is to advertise their business, and thus bring it prominently before an intelligent public, in a permanent form. These minutes will be read and preserved for future reference.

Send in your advertisements promptly, before the first day of February next.

The cash must, in every instance, be paid in advance, at the following rates:

One page, 4x7 inches	$25 00
Three-quarters of a page, 4x7 inches	20 00
One-half page, 4x7 inches	15 00
One-quarter of a page, 4x7 inches	10 00
One-eighth of a page, 4x7 inches	5 00

No advertisement will be inserted for less than $5. We solicit advertisements from each and every State in the Union.

Persons living at a distance will please address the undersigned at Union Springs, Alabama, or any other member of the committee, if more convenient. Respectfully,

J. R. Rogers,
Union Springs, Alabama.

N. B.—Each member of this committee is expected to make known this opportunity to the enterprising men of his acquaintance, collect the money in advance, and forward both money and advertisement to me or to John W. Mathews, secretary of the Conference, promptly.

The School Question.—Frank Confession.—The Freeman's Journal (Roman Catholic) of New York, in a brief paragraph, tells the whole story as to the opinion and purpose of Roman Catholics in regard to the grave questions now agitating the public mind with reference to the public schools. It says:

"The Catholic solution of this muddle about Bible or no Bible in schools is, 'hands off!' No State taxation or donations for any schools. You look to your children, and we will look to ours. We don't want you to be taxed for Catholic schools. We do not want to be taxed for Protestant, or for godless schools. Let the public school system go to where it came from—the devil. We want Christian schools, and the State cannot tell us what Christianity is."

We admire this frankness of confession. Of course no intelligent observer of Roman Catholic politics doubted that the aim of the priesthood was against, not the Bible, but the public school system. It is well that the war on the question be open and clearly defined. Nobody should be deceived.

Since the above was written we have noticed an article on the question in the Boston Advertiser, written by "A Catholic Priest." The writer plainly says:

"Catholics would not be satisfied with the public schools even if the Protestant Bible and every vestige of religious teaching were banished from them. * * * They will not be taxed either for educating the children of Protestants, or for having their own children educated in schools under Protestant control."

With such bold and persistent demands pressing upon the politicians in a certain direction, how long will it be before there will be an organized political party having for the main plank of its platform the destruction of the public school system of the country? The friends of that system may as well prepare for the defense. The battle is at hand.

My Lambs.—If there are two words in the world that should make a Sunday school teacher feel at once his responsibility and his privilege, they are those we have put at the head of this tract. Christ's lambs! O, weary-hearted teacher, tired of dullness, tired of indifference or antagonism, look at your class through these spectacles! You are teaching for Christ. He is Master, Owner; you the under shepherd. These children are Christ's—the Christ that loved you so. Tiresome this work cannot be if you will let in the light of these words upon it. Behind these scholars is Christ, saying: "Inasmuch as ye have done it to one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me." Take heart and hope, then; your work is Christ's; your scholars are Christ's. Can you neglect the work? These are Christ's lambs that go unfed. Refuse to teach, with Christ's own solemn injunction in your ear? No! Will you neglect your preparation? Let us rather watch over them as those that must give an account.—E. Eggleston.

For an irritated throat, cough or cold, Brown's Bronchial Troches are offered with the fullest confidence in their efficacy. They have been thoroughly tested, and maintain the good reputation they have justly acquired. As there are imitations, be sure to obtain the genuine.

A "sum" in arithmetic, worthy of examination, will be found in an advertisement on our last page. The quality, character and price of the journal advertised are excellent "proofs" of the correctness of the arithmetical showing.

To believe that aught can be needful which God denies, is a most stupid error.

American Chinese Treaty.—Good News.—Minister Burlingame has received official assurance from China that the important treaty arranged by him between the United States and the Chinese government has been ratified by the latter power. This is important and most grateful news. The treaty throws open the doors of progress to China, while it secures to us great commercial advantages. Under it citizens of the United States are to enjoy freedom of travel and residence, such as is accorded to the most favored nation. A fair participation in the construction of internal improvements of the Celestial empire, and a fair share in its commerce, are also accorded to American citizens. Entire religious freedom to our people, with the right to establish schools at those places where foreigners reside, are also among the boons conferred by the treaty. We presume that the ratification of similar treaties between the other great Christian nations and the Chinese government will soon follow.

Fight hard against hasty temper. Anger will come, but resist it strongly. A spark may set a house on fire. A fit of passion may give you cause to mourn all the days of your life. Never revenge an injury.

Obituaries.

Mrs. Julia Elizabeth Armistead died at Clifton, Choctaw county, Mississippi, Sunday morning, November 20, 1869.

The deceased, a native of Chatham county, North Carolina, and daughter of James and Rebecca Gains, was born January 1, 1796. She was married to John K. Armistead, September 24, 1817, with whom she removed in 1835 to Wilcox county, Alabama, and in 1841 to Choctaw county, Mississippi, where she died.

A woman of more than ordinary mind, Sister Armistead was respected wherever she was known. She was decided and outspoken in her opposition to wrong doing; she was intelligent in the Scriptures and a conscientious Christian; she diligently sought to instill in her children the love of truth, honesty and all virtue; she often doubted her acceptance with God, and was never sanguine in her feelings. But she continued the life of prayer, seeking to conform herself to the divine requirements. When told by her son, Dr. William Armistead, that she must soon die, instead of being alarmed she was altogether tranquil. In full possession of her mental faculties, and pursuant to her usual carefulness, she gave instructions about her burial, made some requests, and in happy assurance resigned herself into the hands of her Saviour, whom she evidently felt to be near. Her last words were, "He is come."

TO OWNERS OF HORSES.

Thousands of Horses die yearly from Colic. This need not be. Dr. Tobias' Venetian Horse Liniment will positively cure every case, if given when first taken. The cost is only $1. Every owner of a horse should have a bottle in his stable, ready for use. It is warranted superior to anything else for the cure of Cuts, Wind Galls, Swellings, Sore Throat, Sprains, Bruises, Old Sores, etc. This Liniment is no new remedy. It has been used and approved of for twenty-two years by the first horsemen in the country. Given to an over-driven horse, it acts like magic. Orders are constantly received from the racing stables of England for it. The celebrated Hiram Woodruff, of trotting fame, used it for years. Colonel Philo P. Bush, of the Jerome Race Course, has given a certificate, which can be seen at the Depot, stating that, after years of trial, it is the best in the world. His address is Fordham, New York. No one once using it will ever be without it. It is put up in pint bottles. Sold by the Druggists and Saddlers throughout the United States. Depot, 10 Park Place, New York. de1 1tr

The Child's Corner.

THE LITTLE ARMIES.

There are two littles armies
On the world's great battle-field;
Though unnoted oft by mortals,
To the eyes of God revealed.
Though we hear no shouts of triumph,
Though we see no fearful fray,
Those little armies battle
For the right or wrong each day;
The right or wrong each day.

They must fight; no ground is neutral;
And watch the sides they take;
One little army chooses
To fight for truth's dear sake;
The banner floating over it
Rises grandly up to view;
And I read this glorious motto:
"Fighting for the good and true,
The beautiful and true."

How brave that little army;
What a halo o'er it shines!
And even angels welcome
Every soldier to its lines;
How sweet the stirring music
Of the tramp of little feet,
That in God's holy highway
Swiftly onward, upward beat;
Onward and upward beat.

Alas! the other army,
'Neath a gloomy flag unfurled,
Marches with the ranks of evil;
Trends the dark ways of the world;
Not for the true and beautiful
Does it grow brave and strong;
For lo! upon its banner
I read: "Fighting for the wrong;
Old surly-hearted wrong."

—Little Corporal.

"I Have Made One Heart Happy."

"Mother, mother, I have made one heart happy to-day," said little Willie, as he came bounding in from school one lovely summer afternoon, and threw his arms about her neck, imprinting a sweet kiss upon her palo cheek. "Yes, mother, I have made one heart happy to-day"—and his little bosom heaved with an honest pride and delight, which caused his bright eyes to sparkle, and a rosy smile to play upon his dimpled cheek.

Little Willie was a bright, active boy, on whose lovely countenance seven summers had smiled, leaving new beauties as their visible impress, and a reward for the warm heart beating beneath. His widowed mother, on whom the whole care of his training from infancy had devolved, was called to exercise great discretion properly to curb his naturally hasty temper, and to bring it into subjection to wholesome restraint, and thus mold it for the accomplishment of some noble end in life—to love rather than hate—to do good rather than evil. And well had the mother done her task. He was a child of many prayers and much faithful instruction; and the good seed thus sown unsparingly, and watered with a mother's tears, had fallen in good soil, and was just beginning to spring up with a promise of an abundant harvest. The oft repeated counsel, that he ought always to try to make some heart happy each day, had for once been heeded, and inwardly thanked her heavenly Father that she had lived to see her darling boy so loving and so dutiful as he had been of late and especially that happy day.

"Are you sure, Willie," she said after a pause, "you have made one heart happy to-day?"

"Yes, mother, she said so, and thanked me, oh, so many times!"

"Who was it you made so happy? and what did you do for her?"

"It was aunty, mother—Aunty Wilson, who lives in the little house by the brook. I went in there when I went to school, and she said she had been looking out of the window to see the beautiful flowers and little children plucking them, but she was old and lame and she couldn't pick them as she used to, and as she had now no little boy or girl to get them for her, she had to be content with looking at them from her window. So at noon I went and got all the prettiest ones I could find, and carried them to her; and she was so glad, and said God would bless me, for I had made one poor heart happy; that the flowers were very sweet; but she was going to a land where there are far sweeter flowers that never fade. Did she mean paradise, mother?"

"Yes, my dear."

"May I get flowers for her every day, mother, and some of those nice ones from our little garden, that I may make her happy again?"

"Yes, my child, as often and as many as you wish; and I trust the remembrance of this day may cause you ever to strive to make some heart happy daily, and then it cannot be said you have lived wholly in vain."

"I will try, mother," he said, and his blue eyes filled with tears, tears of mingled sympathy and joy, sympathy for the disconsolate and suffering, and joy that even he could be of some service—little boy that he was—in making earth's weary and lonely hearts happy. Yes, and it was a blessed privilege. He had made one heart happy that day; and not one only, for the simple story of that little act of childish thoughtfulness and kindness had made a mother's heart happy also. Did not the brightening eye, the sweet smile, and the earnest recital, tell his fond mother that his own heart beat lighter, and was happier that night for the little act of kindness he had done? Yes, that simple handful of flowers, gathered in the field and by the roadside, had made three hearts happy that day. The flowers which caused it might wither, but before that happened, one more unfolding flower was blossoming in three hearts, and sweetening—life with its precious fragrance.

Blessed privilege, indeed, to make one heart happy each day! Is there one that cannot or will not strive to do it? There is sunshine enough—there are flowers enough—there is perfume enough, in this world of ours, to make every heart happy, and sweeten every bitter cup, if there be always ready some kind word or act to unlock the avenues there and open them to the reception of these blessed gifts. If every one would live for this, what a blessed world earth would be! a little heaven below—every house a temple of praise, and every heart an exhaustless fountain of joy!

Let all live, then, so that each night they may say: "I have made one heart happy to-day."—Congregationalist.

The Farm and Garden.

Grasses and Grains in Mississippi.

In your paper of the thirtieth ult. you call on me for information in reference to raising timothy and herds grass; also as to wheat and oats.

In reply I would state that I sowed about thirty acres, some fifteen years ago, in a piece of low wet land, which was too wet to cultivate in cotton or corn, and was so wet that it was with difficulty that it could be put in grass, being almost equal to a quicksand. One-half I sowed in timothy and the balance in herds grass, mowing it every year since, and after the first year I have saved not less than two tons to the acre, from about twenty-five acres, the balance being neglected and permitted to grow up in briars and bushes. This year I saved at least seventy-five thousand pounds of as good hay as ever you saw, from about twenty-five acres. The seed should be sown in October or the first of November. A gallon of timothy seed, when they are well cleaned, will be sufficient for an acre, and some two gallons of herds grass, because they cannot be cleaned so well as timothy. The land should be well plowed, and all of the wild grass killed in the meadow when sown. I am fully persuaded that timothy and herds grass will do in any bottom land, such as is too wet to produce anything else but grass. The reason that there is no grass raised in the South is that as soon as it comes up and can be seen the stock is turned in on it, and it is trampled down and eaten up before it has had time to form a root, and it is said to be worthless. It should have at least one year before stock is put on it.

I raised the rust-proof oats this year, and I think they are the best oats I have ever seen for the South. They can be sown with the certainty of making a crop, being what their name implies, rust-proof. They were sown on some of the best land I had, and produced about forty bushels to the acre.

The large white wheat which I obtained from Georgia, in 1867, produced from five pounds, sown in November, one bushel, and that sown in October, 1868, produced twenty-one bushels to the acre. I sowed with the wheat some twenty bushels of cotton seed to the acre. I sowed a bushel of white wheat, called White Mediterranean, or London Clubhead Rough Chaff, which I had obtained by the pound from the Patent Office at Washington, in 1867. I think it a fine wheat; but it is not so early as the Georgia, but was freer from rust than any wheat that I have raised for years. I sowed a bushel of the Norway oats, but I did not like them as well as the rust-proof oats. They had the rust and fell down. They had the largest stem and blade of any small grain that I have ever seen growing, and grew to the height of six feet. I think them a good oat if they would not take the rust.—Correspondent of Aberdeen (Miss.) Examiner.

A SINGULAR tiger story is told by the Bombay Gazette. A Portuguese saw two tiger cubs playing in the road in a village near Corla, and, thinking they were dogs, went after them with a stick, when the mother sprang upon him, and wounded him severely on the head, arm and breast. Having contented herself with knocking him down, the tigress went to look after her cubs, and the Portuguese escaped.

"MY BOY," said a clergyman, "don't you know that it is wicked to catch fish on Sunday?" "Guess I ha'n't sinned much yet," said the boy, without taking his eye from the cork; "I ha'n't had a bite."

DISCOVERIES IN THE SUN.

Astronomers are busy in all parts of the world studying the nature of the sun's surface and atmosphere, the wonderful discoveries of the spectroscope having given a new impulse to this branch of inquiry. Mr. Janssen's method of studying the "red protuberances," which were formerly supposed capable of being seen only in time of eclipse, is now practiced daily in many observatories.

By this method Mr. Lockyer, an English spectroscopist, has discovered that the solar protuberances are local accumulations of a gaseous envelope, which completely surrounds the sun. He finds this to be marvelously regular in its contour, and to have a thickness of about five thousand miles. To this envelope he has given the name of the sun's chromosphere. It lies immediately contiguous to the bright surface of the sun. It consists chiefly of hydrogen, while the protuberances that break up the continuity of its outline are vast masses of incandescent hydrogen and other vapors, ejected from time to time from the luminous mass of the sun into the chromosphere.

The beautiful halo, called the corona, seen to encircle the sun in total eclipses, was also observed by spectroscopists during the last two eclipses. In the eclipse of last year, when the spectroscope was directed on the corona, only a faint continuous spectrum was observed, without bright or dark lines. But during the late eclipse some of the American observers noticed one or more lines. Prof. Young, of Dartmouth College, speaks of three as being visible in his spectroscope; and, what is worthy of special notice, one of these lines precisely in position with a bright line that had previously been found to belong to the light of the aurora borealis.

In connection with this important discovery, another, made by Augstrom, should be mentioned. It is that a bright band which he had several times observed in the spectrum from the light of auroral arches, was also to be detected in that from the zodiacal light, the substance of which is known to pervade the entire space between the sun and earth. We are thus led to infer that the same substance is present in the immediate vicinity of the sun, where the radiations of the corona are seen, throughout the fields of space that lie between the sun and earth, and in the upper regions of the earth's atmosphere where the auroral fires are kindled.

It is now pretty generally admitted that the corona is not the proper atmosphere of the sun, that this does not in fact extend more than a few thousand miles from the sun's bright surface, while the corona streams forth into space, in some directions, to the distance of a million miles. The theory that the corona is essentially a solar aurora appears to find more favor with the observers of the late eclipse than any other which has been advanced. Prof. Mortou, in the report of the observations of his party, advocates it, and adduces strong arguments drawn from the result of the observations in its support.—New York Evening Post.

USES OF ALCOHOL.—Alcohol dissolves many organic substances, such as the vegeto-alkalies, resins, essential oils, and hence is of use in chemical analysis and in the arts. It is used to make varnish and French polish. The perfumer dissolves essential oils in it to form his scented waters, such as lavender water. In pharmacy it is used to form tinctures, essences, spirits, ethers and chloroform. The anatomist employs it to inject his subjects and preserve his specimens. The practical chemist uses it as fuel in his lamps, as it gives heat without smoke; and he employs it as a solvent, a precipitant, and for other purposes. It is, without question, of considerable service in these and many other ways; and if men would learn to use alcohol instead of learning to drink it, it would really be entitled to be called one of the good creatures of God. It is often said that the abuse of anything is no argument against its use. We fully recognize the soundness of this principle, and look upon the alcohol in our laboratory with as much satisfaction as we do upon our sulphuric acid, nitric acid, arsenic, or other things used in our operations. But we do not introduce any of these things into the stomach. That is a laboratory of a different kind, formed for a different purpose. We believe that the chemistry of life can be properly performed without the aid of alcohol, and hence we confine its employment to what may be called its useful and legitimate applications in science and art. One simple way of ascertaining which is the right way of employing anything is by the effects produced. We have seen the results produced by the use of alcohol in the manufactory and the laboratory. We have also seen the effects produced by taking alcohol into the human body, and these effects have convinced us that the tendency of alcohol imbibation is to produce physical and moral evil, and that the use of alcoholic liquors is the chief cause of idleness, poverty, disease and crime.—Weekly Record.

THE GRAVES OF THE DEAD.—Ministers have often said in substance, by way of a rhetorical flourish, that the earth has been dug over to find graves for the millions by whom it has been inhabited; and infidels have affirmed that if all the dead were raised the world would not hold the people. Are such declarations true?

The world is said to contain nine hundred million inhabitants, and supposing the average length of life to be twenty-five years, this would give us at the close of the first six thousand years, two hundred and forty generations, and an aggregate population of two hundred and sixteen billions.

As nine square feet, on an average, would be sufficient for a grave, it follows that the present and past population of the earth might be buried in single graves, in less than seventy thousand square miles. All, therefore, who have ever lived upon the earth might be interred in the single State of Texas, and there would be left in that State a graveyard twenty times larger than the entire State of Massachusetts. Buy the truth and sell it not.

A SHOEMAKER with one eye complained that one of his lamps did not burn. One of his shopmates, who is a genuine son of the Emerald Isle, with astonishment exclaimed: "Faith, and what do you want with two lamps? You haven't but one eye!"

A STUMP SPEAKER exclaimed: "I know no north, no south, no east, no west, fellow-citizens!" "Then," exclaimed an old farmer in the crowd, "it's time you went to school and larnt jography."

AN OLD LADY not accustomed to traveling, complained that "she could no more rest in a sleeping car than she could in the middle of a torpedo." She evidently meant a tornado.

GOD'S promises are as certain as his actual performances.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

THE BEST COOKING STOVE FOR WOOD NOW IN USE.

THE FASHION.

We call especial attention to this Stove, which has been produced at great expense, combining all the new and important improvements; also to the extra height of the Oven under the fire chamber, the Patent Air Chamber, Front Doors, and Patent White Enameled Iron Knobs, the improvements in the covers and centre pieces, all of which have been covered by Letters Patent, and are used in no other Stove. They are warranted to stand fire, or others sent free of charge in all cases. We have all sizes of this justly celebrated Stove, both

PLAIN AND EXTENDED BACKS,

the Extended Back with cast iron Enameled Reservoir and Faucet, Tin Warming Closet, Gridiron Cover, etc. The part of the top supporting the Reservoir is raised so that the flue is above the top plate, instead of below, as in the case in most of the Stoves now used, and the heat is forced directly against the whole surface of the bottom of the Reservoir. The Reservoir, being detached from the pipe, can be removed at pleasure, thereby forming a six-hole Stove—the best in use, as the back holes will heat as well or better than the middle ones. SATURDAY, DECEMBER 25, 1869.

UNITING WITH THE CHURCH.—Witness-bearing for Christ is a broad, far reaching phrase, as the Saviour employed it. He said: "Whoso confesseth me before men, him will I confess before my Father which is in heaven." When Christ gives conversion, he demands confession. He demands a cordial, fearless, outspoken acknowledgment of him as the redeemer and ruler of the heart. We firmly believe that every true penitent believer should at once become a witness for Christ; conversion should be followed by immediate public confession of the new-born faith in Jesus. Delay of this duty is not warranted by the Scriptures; it leads often to doubt and distrust, and encourages a self-righteous spirit of trying to make one's self better before coming out for Christ. Every month spent without a public profession of faith is commonly lost; and a timid convert who postponed her union with the church for five years in order to gain more assurance, frankly acknowledged to me afterward: "I feel as if five whole years had been wiped out of my short life." A converted soul should obey at once its first instinct. "Lord, what wilt thou have me do?" is the first question of a changed heart. The answer: "Confess me before men; ye are my witnesses." The person who has a genuine trust in Jesus for salvation, and yet fails to make an open acknowledgment of Jesus, loses the opportunity to do good, loses self-respect and the respect of others, and risks the loss of his favor who has said: "Whoso is ashamed of me, of him will I be ashamed in the presence of my Father and the holy angels." In nearly every congregation there are more or less of halting, irresolute persons, like Bunyan's Mr. Fearing and Miss Much Afraid, who have a sweet faith, and yet they never come out openly as his witness-bearers. They expect Christ to acknowledge them in heaven, and yet they shrink from acknowledging him on earth. They may be Christians at heart, but the world is not allowed to know it. They are, certainly, not shining lights, but rather are they dark lanterns. No one is the better for their clandestine religion, no one hears their testimony or reads a "living epistle" in their cowardly conduct. This is a miserable method of living—this concealment of one's colors in the presence of the enemy—this following along in the rear of Christ's army corps with a vague hope of being counted in among them when the celestial crowns of victory are awarded to the faithful soldiers. We do not say that church membership is essential to salvation, or that one cannot be a sincere Christian outside of the church. But the Bible warrants us in saying that whoever hopes to be acknowledged by Christ in heaven and yet refuses to acknowledge him before men, is disobeying Christ's orders, and cannot expect his blessing.

A GOOD IDEA.—Old Brother C—— used to say "that a fire never could be kindled so long as the sticks were scattered. You must get the chunks together and then they will not only kindle, but will retain the heat. Just so," he reasoned, "you must get the members of the church together. Let them scatter over the house, keeping out of the 'amen corner,' and they will take fire very slowly; and even when kindled it will soon die out." There is good sense in the suggestion. When a Christian takes a seat near the door or among the unconverted, the chilling associations around him will keep cool all the warmth of feeling the sermon may be likely to produce. He will silence the rising "amen," and keep back the gathering tear, while the eye of the ungodly is upon him. Around the altar he will not only feel more freedom, but the power of sympathy will stir the deep fountains of his heart. A preacher of the Cincinnati Conference was troubled by this disposition of his members to get near the door. He adopted a novel but effectual experiment: Supplying himself with some strips of plank, and, with the assistance of the sexton, nailed up all pews next to the door. This brought the members up. As feeling deepened the congregation increased, and, seat by seat, the strips were taken off, and when the house was filled his members were where he wanted them—around the altar. If members knew how much these little things influence the preacher they would not only be at church, but in the right place in the house every Sunday.—Texas Christian Advocate.

THE following was posted on the door of the Ludlow church in Hertfordshire, some time back: "This is to give notice that no person is to be buried in this churchyard but those living in the parish. Those that wish to be buried are desired to apply to me, Ephraim Grub, parish clerk."

MEDICINE—MEDICINE.

BRAN NEW LETTERS!

FRESH TESTIMONIALS!

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

THE ASTONISHING FAMILY MEDICINE.

Saved from Death!—Read!

MONTGOMERY, ALA., June 28, 1869.

MESSRS. J. DARBY & Co., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: Yours of the 23d is before me, and has attention. It gives me pleasure to say that my belief is that your Fluid, under the supervision of a kind Providence, saved the life of my youngest child, some six years ago, the child being wasted to a skeleton by the effects of teething, and an affection of the bowels therewith. I had never seen any one reduced so low to recover.

Physic had been tried in vain, until the physicians stated it was useless. A friend recommended your Fluid, or Ozone, which he stated was one of the component parts of it. I did so, and the effect was like magic, plainly discernible in one hour in its good effects, producing quiet and sleep almost at once, where irritation and sleepless restlessness had previously possessed the child to nearly entire exhaustion.

I at first administered it in a small way, two and three drops in a spoonful of water, and increased it to six and ten drops. It completely checked the bowels, and had the happiest effect, the child rapidly recovering.

I have tried your Fluid on animals, with the same effect—both horses and cows—mingling more or less in water, and letting them drink.

I have no hesitation in saying I believe it a specific for Chronic Diarrhea, or any violent affection of the bowels.

I would not be without it in my family under any consideration. Yours truly,

WILLIAM FOWLER.

Mr. Fowler is a member of the celebrated Banking House of Fowler & Somerville, Montgomery, Alabama.

AND AGAIN!

Read the following letter from Mr. Frank Saunders; a well known citizen, and brother-in-law of the beloved Bishop Paine, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

189 BROADWAY, N. Y., July 29, 1869.

MESSRS. J. DARBY & CO., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: About the 10th of June last one of my children was taken with Scarlet Fever, in its most malignant form, and as soon as I could I procured your valuable disinfectant, Darby's Prophylactic Fluid. Although it was several days after the appearance of the disease before I began using the Fluid, still by a free use of it the disease was not only confined to the one case, but the malignity of that case somewhat mitigated.

During the use of the Fluid as a disinfectant in my family it was also tried in a case of headache and one of toothache, the results in each case being instantaneous relief. It was afterward tried in a case of Erysipelas, with almost equal success.

It is due to the merits of this compound, also, to state that the case of Erysipelas in question, being located in the feet, the Fluid, in its application, was brought in frequent contact with a troublesome corn on one of the feet, to the utter discomfiture of said corn, for upon subsequent examination it had disappeared, and though it was sought for diligently, it could not be found.

I hand you this, hoping it may be the means of inducing others of earth's poor sufferers to test for themselves, as I did, the great merits of this great remedy.

Very respectfully yours,

FRANK SAUNDERS.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

J. W. BLACKMAN'S

COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,

61 CAMP STREET,

Corner Commercial Place, N. O.

Open day and evening the entire year. Penmanship, Book-keeping, Mathematics and Languages are practically taught by experienced professors. Persons from twelve to fifty years of age attend. The instruction is private to each student. Persons who have neglected their education can here speedily qualify themselves for good situations in business. Some from the country may obtain board in the family of the principal.

William Walker, a late graduate of the Southern University of Alabama, and son of the Rev. Dr. J. B. Walker, of New Orleans, has charge of the Mathematical department. TERMS—Ten to twenty per cent. less than other colleges in this city.

A liberal deduction made when three or more enter together. The principal has been a practical teacher in New Orleans since 1851. For circulars, giving terms, etc., address J. W. BLACKMAN,

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, JACKSON, LA.,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war, but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution in the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge of its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have again to notice a fair degree of animation in most branches of the wholesale trade. Country merchants and planters are buying freely, and the local trade is participating in the general activity. Sugar has been in less demand, and sold at lower rates, but molasses has moved off freely at full prices. We have only a moderate movement to notice in Western produce. Flour and wheat are the only articles of which there is a sufficient supply to invite foreign orders, but operations in the former are restricted by holders refusing to sell subject to inspection, which the recent large receipts of negligently or fraudulently packed renders more than ever necessary, and in the latter by holders asking 5 to 7½c. per bushel above the limits of Liverpool orders. The sales of other articles are mostly confined to the local trade.

Our accounts from the interior present no new feature. No doubt serious losses have been suffered from the inefficiency of the negro laborers, but to what extent cannot yet be determined. Nothing has transpired to indicate that the sugar crop will exceed 80,000 hogsheads.

The river has risen since our last, and is now nine feet eight inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the seventeenth instant:

	bales.
Louisiana and Mississippi	21680
Arkansas	1549
Lake	64
Mobile	686
Florida	209
Texas	676
Total	24864

On Saturday a slight decline at both Liverpool and New York, together with a reduction of ¼ to ½ per cent. in foreign exchange, compelled factors to give way ⅛ to ¼c., but even these concessions failed to impart any spirit to the demand, and the sales were confined to 2,500 bales, low middling closing at 23⅝ to 23¾c. On Monday only a part of the heavy receipts having been sampled, the supply was moderate until after meridian, and the business during the morning was partly at a further falling off, and partly at previous rates, but later in the day, buyers still holding back, factors were compelled to make further concessions. The demand, nevertheless, continued slack, and the business was again of moderate extent, embracing only 4,000 bales, low middling ruling for a part of the time at 23⅝ to 23¾c., but closing at 23½ to 23⅝c. On Tuesday the market opened completely unsettled by the late heavy receipts, the decline in foreign exchange, and the unfavorable tenor of the New York and Liverpool dispatches. The sales amounted to 2,900 bales.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 9,500 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 386,771 bales, against 389,206 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 206,357 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 101,514 bales to Great Britain, 24,227 to other foreign ports, while to France there is a decrease of 9,921 bales.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	22 to 22¼
Good ordinary	22¾ to 23
Low middling	23¼ to 23½
Middling	23¾ to 23¾
Strict middling	to 24¼

Special Notices.

The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

This committee has not been called together since the meeting of the General Conference, because in the financial state of the office there was nothing it could do. To be able to support an editor was one of the conditions necessary to the electing one. Then the expenses of such a committee should be borne by the office—another question of finance. These are simply the reasons why this call has not been made yearly. There was really nothing to do, or that could be done by the committee. As the Advocate feels somewhat like standing on its legs, or at least like stretching them in a preparatory way, we give notice that there will be a meeting of the Publishing Committee directly after the patronizing Conferences shall have all adjourned—say on the second Saturday in February next.

To the Members of the Mississippi Conference.

Dear Brethren: Your committee has decided to publish the Minutes in Jackson. It is just as cheap and more convenient. The work will go forward at once. One thousand copies are to be published for $100. Only $80 have as yet been paid in. Please send your orders and the money immediately to me, at Jackson, Mississippi, at the rate of ten cents per copy, stating how and where you want them sent. If they are to go by mail, allow something for postage. C. G. Andrews.

The best thing every one can do just now is to secure a beautiful, highly illustrated, very useful, very practical, very reliable magazine or journal, one of the best, and the CHEAPEST DOG in the world—one that YOU WANT and YOUR WIFE WANTS, and one that YOUR CHILDREN WANT.

It is the cheapest, because, having an immense circulation, the publishers can furnish it at a very low rate. With only one office and one set of editors to pay for; with only one setting of type, one electrotyping, one series of engravings to make for 160,000 subscribers, the publishers can supply vastly more to the reader than they could if they had only 5,000 to 10,000 subscribers, which is usually considered a very large circulation. (See the 'sums' below.) This is just why the AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST is the cheapest as well as the best journal in the world. Its publishers made it a first rate journal for everybody; that brought many subscribers, which, in turn, enabled them to give a still better paper for the same money. This, of course, brought more subscribers still; and thus this doubling process has gone on, and is going on. This paper was started twenty-eight years ago, for a Rural Journal, as its name indicates; but it has gone on enlarging in its size and range of topics until it is now adapted to the wants of city, village and country, South as well as North, and West as well as East. It is largely taken and approved everywhere.

Here are two 'sums' which show that, while reckoning subscriptions at $1 50 a year, a circulation of 10,000 leaves only $5,000 for all office expenses, collecting information, making engravings, etc., after allowing $1 each for printing paper, mailing, etc.; while a circulation of 160,000 gives 16 times as much, or $80,000 to be expended in increasing the size, collecting the very best information, making beautiful engravings etc. So it is very clear that a paper like the American Agriculturist can and does give an immense amount at a low price.

	A "SUM."	ANOTHER "SUM."
	10,000	160,000
	$5,000 00	$80,000 00
	5,000 00	80,000 00
	($0.50	(0.50

The AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST is just the journal needed by YOU, reader. Every volume contains over five hundred excellent Engravings, that are both pleasing and instructive. These cost over $12,000, and are alone worth many times the whole subscription price. But, in addition, every reader gets over a Thousand Columns of practical, useful, choice reading, prepared by experienced men and women, who collect and condense all the useful, reliable, practical information they can crowd into these columns—such reading matter as you want, your wife wants, and your children want. No one can read the American Agriculturist a year without getting hints and suggestions that will be worth directly or indirectly a great many dollars. TRY IT A YEAR. It costs less than three cents a week. One Egg a week extra, produced or saved, or one cigar saved, or one-fourth pound of meat per week economized, will pay for it.

A few weeks ago an intelligent gentleman came on from Louisiana to see about getting up a paper adapted to the South, or to have part of the matter in the American Agriculturist changed to suit the South; but after looking over several numbers, he said "he could find nothing to omit or change, for everything in the paper was wanted in his region and everywhere else;" and he went home, doubtless, to advise his friends all to take this journal. The same report comes from every section of the country, and a large number of copies are taken in foreign lands.

The interesting and instructive stories for Boys and Girls, by the distinguished "Carleton," one of which appears in the next number of the American Agriculturist, are alone worth more than the whole subscription price. So are the many other pleasing and instructive stories, pictures, etc., for children and youth. So is the large amount of practical articles, hints and suggestions for every Housekeeper. (Tens of thousands of families in cities and villages, who don't own a foot of ground, take this journal for the Household and Children's Departments alone.) The five hundred Engravings, which are beautifully printed, and are both pleasing and instructive, are alone worth many times the subscription price. So are the Garden and Floral Departments. So are the "Walks and Talks upon the Farm," giving a farmer's actual and constant experience and observations. So are 'Squire Bunker's humorous, telling and practical Talks. The Calendar of Out-door and In-door Work to be done each month, and the "Basket," containing a multitude of current notes, answers to all sorts of queries, practical hints, etc., are each alone worth the whole subscription price. So are the Exposures of Humbugs and Swindlers through the mails and otherwise, which have saved money to tens of thousands of people. In short, the American Agriculturist is packed full of useful and interesting information and instruction, prepared by a large corps of the best practical writers, who speak from experience and observation.

* * * * * * *

LET EVERY ONE TRY THE PAPER. It will PAY, and it costs only $1 50 a whole year, or Four copies for $5, or Ten copies for $12, paid in advance. Single copies, fifteen cts. The twenty-ninth annual volume is just commencing, and now is just the time to subscribe. ORANGE JUDD & CO.,

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

SOUTHERN METHODIST HIGH SCHOOL,

New Orleans.

The exercises of the first session of this institution will commence on Monday, the 4th day of OCTOBER next, in the basement of the German Methodist Church, Dryades st., between Felicity and Entèrpe.

In founding this institution our purpose is to supply the desideratum long felt in this city, viz: an acknowledged Protestant School of a high order, in which boys and young men can be thoroughly prepared either for college or the active business of life.

The government of the School will be strict and firm, yet mild and parental in its administration. Thoroughness in the preparation of lessons will be uniformly required of all pupils.

The sons of ministers engaged wholly in the work of their Church will be received at half price, and young men preparing for the ministry without charge.

A Preparatory Department and an Evening School are attached.

In the selection of Teachers the greatest care will be exercised, not only in regard to their mental qualifications, but also in reference to their ability to impart instruction to their pupils.

For further information apply at the School. D. I. RAST, Principal.

Circulars can be had at the ADVOCATE office. oc2 1f

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE, VIRGINIA.

On the 13th of JANUARY, 1870, the Spring Session begins, and closes on the 8th of June following, which is Commencement day.

The next Fall Session opens on the 18th of the succeeding August.

LOCATION.

Unsurpassed in healthfulness, quiet and freedom from temptations to vice.

BUILDINGS.

Thorough repairs have been made of dormitories, lecture rooms and halls, so that our accommodations have never been heretofore so desirable.

FACULTY.

The chairs are all filled with men of tried ability and success as disciplinarians and educators.

TERMS.

One Hundred and Fifteen Dollars, payable in advance, will meet the charges for tuition, board, fuel, room-rent, washing and contingent fee for five months.

REFERENCES.

We ask those seeking a school where thorough collegiate training is given to consult the Faculty of the Virginia University and Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, as well as our alumni, students and patrons.

READVILLE SEMINARY.

This is a private institution, with its number of pupils limited, and is authorized by the Legislature of Louisiana to confer degrees, diplomas and literary honors. It was in successful operation from 1843 until interrupted by the events of the war in 1862, and reopened January, 1867.

Teachers of a high grade of talent and merit are in charge of the different departments—English, Ancient and Modern Languages, Music, Painting, etc.

Pupils charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session. All pupils received with the understanding that they are to remain and attend the examination at the close of the session in which they enter, and no deduction made on the bills for absence, except in cases of protracted illness, when the loss may be divided between the institution and the patron.

In her outfit each pupil should be provided with toilet boxes, towels, napkins, pillow cases and blankets or comforts. She should also bring her knife, fork, spoon, cup and napkin ring.

All articles and clothing brought to the Seminary should be distinctly marked. lists of which should be permanently placed on some part of the trunk convenient for reference. The scholastic year commences October 1 and ends in July.

EXPENSE.

Board and tuition per year	$275 00
The Modern Languages a small extra charge.
Music, per year	75 00

Payments due a half session in advance.

Monthly reports of the studies, health and general deportment of the pupils are sent to the parents or guardians at a distance.

The main Seminary building, recently destroyed by fire, will be replaced by one of ample accommodations, now in process of construction, which will be ready for the reception of pupils at the opening of the next session.

For other information desirable in reference to the school apply to

SEMINARY FOR YOUNG LADIES, LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

E. A. GRANT, LL. D., PRINCIPAL.

This institution occupies the large and elegant building lately known as Grant & Butler's School. The grounds are situated on Sixth street, between Walnut and Chestnut streets, and extend back to Centre street. They are elevated several feet above the street, thus making the large and beautiful lawn a most desirable place for healthful outdoor exercise.

The building, furniture and apparatus of the school are among the most complete and valuable in the West.

Experienced teachers, residing in the institution, will devote their time to the moral, intellectual and physical improvement of the pupils.
